CHILDS et al. v. DE LAVEAGA. (S. F. 3,956.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1907. Rehearing Denied Feb. 15, 1907.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE — STOCKHOLDER'S LIABILITY.

A creditor of an insolvent bank cannot maintain an action against the executors of a deceased stockholder for his proportion of the bank's indebtedness after a final decree for the distribution of his estate, though appeals from such decree so far as it determines the distributees, are pending.

2. SAME.

A judgment for defendant, in an action against an executor of a deceased stockholder of a bank, for the stockholder's proportion of the bank's indebtedness will be affirmed on appeal, on it appearing that the executor has been discharged on the entry of a decree finally distributing the estate of the stockholder.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by C. W. Childs and others against M. A. de Laveaga. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

R. J. Welch, for appellants. Timothy J. Lyons, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. Plaintiffs, as assignees of certain depositors in and creditors of the Union Savings Bank of San José, a corporation (now insolvent), brought this present action against the executors of the will of Jose V. de Laveaga, deceased, to recover a money judgment for an amount alleged to be such proportion of the said bank's indebtedness to plaintiffs' assignors as 100 shares of the capital stock of said bank, alleged to have been held by said de Laveaga, deceased, at the time of his death, bears to the whole capital stock of said bank. Judgment went in the court below for defendant, and from this judgment, and also from an order refusing to change the conclusions of law, etc., plaintiffs appeal. There has also been submitted by respondent a motion for an order of this court "dismissing the appeal of the appellants herein or affirming the judgment appealed from," which motion will hereinafter be considered.

The main facts of the case are these: The said Jose V. de Laveaga, deceased, died testate on August 14, 1894, leaving a considerable amount of property, which included 100 shares of the capital stock of said Union Savings Bank. The executors named in the will immediately qualified and commenced the administration of the estate. On October 2, 1894, they caused notice to creditors to be published calling for creditors against the estate to present their claims within 10 months thereafter. The time for the presentation of claims expired August 2, 1895; and thereafter on August 26, 1895, the court in which the administration was pending made and entered judgment adjudging that due and legal notice to creditors of the said decedent had been given and made. Thereafter the executors presented their final account, and on February 3, 1896, the court made an order settling, allowing, and approving said account "as and for a final settlement in the matter of said estate and the administration thereof." No appeal was ever taken from this order. Afterwards, on the petition of Maria Josefa Cebrian and others, claiming to be distributees of the estate, the court, on June 4, 1900, entered a final decree of distribution in said estate. By that decree the estate was distributed as follows: "The one-quarter thereof to said Maria Josefa Cebrian; the one-quarter thereof to said Maria Concepcion de Laveaga; the one-quarter thereof to said Miguel A. de Laveaga; and the one-quarter thereof to said Anselmo Jose Maria de Laveaga." In the decree it was adjudged that the account of the executors had been settled, and further: "That all the debts of said decedent and all claims against the estate of said decedent had been fully paid, satisfied and discharged before the filing of said petition for distribution of the said sisters of the said decedent, and all expenses and charges of administration up to the filing thereof had been fully paid, and all expenses and charges of administration up to the present time, and all taxes upon said estate, have been fully paid, satisfied and discharged." No appeal from this decree has ever been taken by the appellants in the case at bar, or by any person asserting a claim against the estate. An appeal was taken by the three first-named distributees, Maria Josefa Cebrian, Maria Concepcion de Laveaga, and Miguel A. de Laveaga, from that part of the decree which awarded one-fourth of the estate to the said Anselmo Jose Maria de Laveaga; the said appellants claiming that the trial court erred in distributing any part of the estate to the said Anselmo, and that the whole estate should be distributed in three equal parts to the said three appellants. There was also an appeal by one Dolores A. de Rivera, who claimed that she was entitled to distribution in the estate, and that the court erred in not so deciding. The original transcript in the case at bar shows that said two appeals were pending in the appellate court, and had not been disposed of when the present action was tried. At the time of the death of Jose V. de Laveaga the said bank was apparently not insolvent; indeed dividends were afterwards declared. And at the time of the death of said Jose plaintiffs and their assignors were not depositors in and creditors of said bank. They did not become such depositors and creditors for several years afterwards, to wit, "between December 29, 1897, and January 30, 1899." The bank became insolvent on January 30, 1899. The assignors of plaintiffs did not present any claim to the executors of the said estate within the time allowed therefor. They commenced the present action on January 2, 1901, which was after the said final decree of distribution above stated.

A number of questions are discussed by counsel, as, for instance, whether under any view plaintiffs herein could recover without having presented a claim within the 10 months allowed for that purpose; whether at the time the plaintiffs' assignors became creditors of the bank the said estate was liable for a proportionate share of the indebtedness of the bank to plaintiffs, or whether the heirs and devisees of the said deceased Jose were then the owners of the stock and liable for such proportion. But these and other questions raised are not necessary to be determined because, under our view, this action could not be brought and maintained after the said final decree of distribution. The estate was then closed so far as any claims against it are concerned. The appeals above noted merely attacked that part of the decree which determined who were the rightful distributees; and no matter how those appeals might be determined, the rights of the contesting distributees as to the proper distribution of the estate between them were the only matters involved. We think therefore that the judgment should be affirmed upon the original transcript. As before stated, the respondent moved for an order dismissing the appeal or affirming the judgment upon grounds stated in the motion. It appears from the papers filed on said motion that afterwards, on the appeal of said Dolores A. de Rivera, the appeal was dismissed; that on the said appeal of said Maria Josefa Cebrian and others the appellate court held that the court below erred in distributing one-fourth of the estate to said Anselmo, and reversed the judgment for that reason; and that after the remittitur went down the trial court made an amended decree of distribution by which the whole estate was distributed in three equal parts to the said three appellants. This decree was made and entered on the 25th day of March, 1904. It appeared further that the executors Thomas Magee and Daniel Rogers, had both died leaving M. A. de Laveaga as sole executor, and that on June 6, 1904, the court made an order releasing and discharging the said remaining executor, M. A. de Laveaga, and his sureties, and the estates of the deceased coexecutors, Thomas Magee and Daniel Rogers, from all liability to be thereafter incurred, and decreeing that "the said estate is fully distributed, and the trust of administration, and of said executors, is settled and closed." No appeal has ever been taken from this decree of final distribution or the said order discharging the executor. It appears, therefore, that there is no executor of said decedent nor any administration of the estate pending, and that no relief asked for by appellants could be made applicable or be enforced. We think, therefore, that the motion that the judgment be affirmed should, also, for the reasons set up in the motion, be granted.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

UNION SAV. BANK OF SAN JOSE v. DE LAVEAGA et al. (S. F. 3,924.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 1, 1907.)

1. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATES.

An insolvent bank cannot maintain an action against the executors of a deceased stockholder for an assessment on the stock necessary for liquidation levied after a final decree for the distribution of his estate, appealed from only so far as it determines the distributees.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 1744.]

2. SAME.

A judgment for defendant, in an action against an executor of a deceased stockholder of a bank, for an assessment on stock necessary for liquidation will be affirmed on appeal, on it appearing that the executor has been discharged on the entry of a final order of distribution not appealed from.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 1744.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by the Union Savings Bank of San Jose against M. A. de Laveaga and others, as executors of J. V. de Laveaga, deceased, From a judgment for defendants, entered on sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. M. Rea, for appellant. Timothy J. Lyons, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered upon demurrer sustained to the complaint.

The complaint alleged, among other things, that the plaintiff was an insolvent banking corporation in liquidation, heavily indebted and unable on June 7, 1901, to pay its indebtedness, and that an assessment on the capital stock of said corporation was necessary for purposes of liquidation; that on April 1, 1891, J. V. de Laveaga, deceased, subscribed for 100 shares of the capital stock of plaintiff corporation, of the par value of $100 each, and that a certificate for that number of shares was then issued to him; that said J. V. de Laveaga had in his lifetime paid but $30 to plaintiff on his subscription to said capital stock, and was indebted for the balance of $70 per share; that said J. V. de Laveaga died on August 14, 1894, leaving a last will which was duly admitted to probate, and the defendants were appointed and qualified as executors thereof; that said executors duly published notice to creditors, and that on February 1, 1896, the time for presenting claims against said estate had expired; that on June 7, 1901, the directors of plaintiff levied an assessment of $50 per share on the capital stock of said corporation, such assessment to become delinquent July 12, 1901, and that the assessment levied on the stock for which J. V. de Laveaga, deceased, had subscribed was $5,000, and was unpaid, and that the plaintiff had elected to recover the entire amount of the assessment by action. A demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court below on the ground, as is conceded by both parties, that no claim against the estate of de Laveaga, deceased, had been presented by the bank to the executors. While respondents contend on this appeal that the ruling of the court in that respect was correct, and that the judgment should be therefore affirmed, they have also presented a motion for an order of this court, dismissing this appeal or affirming the judgment, upon the ground that appellant here is no longer a party or person interested in the estate of said Jose V. de Laveaga, deceased, or a claimant against said estate or the assets thereof or otherwise; that the administration of said estate has been final and definitely settled and closed; and that there is no executor of said decedent, or any administration of said estate, to which any relief asked for by appellant could apply or be made applicable or be enforced.

As a basis for the motion, it is shown that a final decree of distribution of said estate has been entered and the executors of the will of said deceased discharged and the estate closed. A motion similar to this was made in the case of Childs et al. v. M. A. de Laveaga et al., executors of the said J. V. de Laveaga. Both the Childs case and the present Union Savings Bank case involved a claim of liability on the part of the estate of J. V. de Laveaga, arising out of ownership by deceased in his lifetime of this same 100 shares of stock. In the Childs Case the action was by certain depositors of said Union Savings Bank to recover on the proportionate liability of said J. V. de Laveaga, deceased, and there, as here, the suit was brought against his executors. The motion was granted in the Childs Case, and must be also granted in this case. This action was not commenced until April 24, 1903. It appears from the documents filed in aid of the motion that prior to the commencement of this action, and on June 4, 1900, in the matter of said estate of J. V. de Laveaga, deceased, the superior court before which it was pending entered a decree of final distribution of the estate whereby all the estate was distributed to four distributees. The only appeal taken from the decree was by some of the distributees dissatisfied as to the portion of the estate awarded them. This decree of distribution was reversed by this court, and subsequently, on March 24, 1904, the superior court entered an amended decree of final distribution. Originally there were three executors of the will of deceased, two of whom died pending administration, leaving M. A. de Laveaga as sole executor. On June 6, 1904, the superior court made an order discharging the surviving executor and the estates of his deceased coexecutors, and decreed that the estate was fully distributed, and the trust of administration and of the executors settled and closed. No appeal was taken by any one from either the amended decree of final distribution or final discharge. The distribution of the estate and the discharge of the executors (the only persons sued in this action) is terminative of any right of action or right to a judgment by appellant in this case; there is no estate nor executors to represent it, and the further prosecution of the action cannot be of any avail or advantage to the appellant. See the opinion in Childs v. De Laveaga (filed on the 18th ult.) 89 Pac. 82.

Upon the showing made of the futility of any further prosecution of this action by the appellant, we think the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

WOLF v. BOARD OF SUP'RS OF SANTA CLARA COUNTY et al. (S. F. 3,850.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 18, 1907.)

Stipulations — Operation — Injunction — Dissolution—Equity—Jurisdiction.

Where plaintiff obtained a preliminary order restraining supervisors of a county, from passing any ordinance granting certain franchises and privileges to another defendant, etc., and thereafter, on the trial of the cause, it was stipulated that the entire matter should be submitted to the court as a whole—pleadings, motions, orders, and the evidence—and that the court should declare what the rights respectively of the parties were, the court was empowered of its own motion to make an order striking out from the preliminary order that part thereof enjoining defendant board from refusing to pass an ordinance necessary to grant such franchises and privileges to plaintiff.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; S. F. Leib, Judge.

Action by E. Myron Wolf against the board of supervisors of the county of Santa Clara and others. From an order of the superior court modifying a preliminary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

E. Myron Wolf, in pro. per. J. H. Campbell, Dist. Atty., and C. W. Cobb, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from an order of the superior court modifying a preliminary injunction.

The material facts are these: It is averred in the complaint that the defendants, the board of supervisors, received bids for two proposed electric railroad franchises, the preliminary proceedings leading up thereto having been regular and in accordance with the statute on the subject; that plaintiff was the highest bidder and one Dunlap, who was the only other bidder, the lowest bidder in each case; that the said board accepted each of Dunlap's bids, and refused to accept either of the plaintiff's bids; that they refused to pass any ordinance awarding said franchises to plaintiff, and threatened to pass an ordinance awarding the same to Dunlap. The prayer of the complaint is that the board "be enjoined and forbidden from passing any ordinance or ordinances granting said petitions for franchise privileges to the said George T. Dunlap, and that they be required to desist from refusing to pass ordinances to grant said franchises and bar privileges to the plaintiff herein, and for such other and further relief," etc. The supervisors filed a demurrer to the complaint, and also an answer, in which they denied that they intend to grant the said franchises to said Dunlap, or to any other person, but have determined that they will not award said franchises to any person because the bids are not at all commensurate with the value of the franchises, and intend to readvertise said franchises for sale, etc. To this answer the plaintiff filed a demurrer. Neither of said demurrers has been decided by the court. After the filing of the complaint the court made the following preliminary order: "It is hereby ordered that, until further order of this court, said defendants, their agents, and servants, be restrained, and said defendants are hereby, and each of them is and their agents and servants are, and each of them is, hereby forbidden and restrained from passing any ordinance or ordinances, granting the petition of George T. Dunlap for the franchises and privileges mentioned in the complaint of plaintiff on file herein, and from refusing to pass the ordinance necessary to grant said franchises and privileges to E. Myron Wolf, the plaintiff herein." The bill of exceptions contains the following: "That thereafter the said cause came on regularly for hearing upon the demurrer and trial of the cause." And: "It was then, there and in open court, stipulated and agreed by and between the said parties, that the entire matter should be submitted to the court as a whole—pleadings, motions, orders, and the evidence—and out of and from the same the court should deduce and declare what the rights, respectively, of the parties hereto might be." And that: "Defendants' demurrer was argued, and evidence was then taken, and the cause was duly submitted to the court for its decision." After this submission, but before having finally decided the case, the court made the following order: "It is ordered that the following words, clause, and matter, to wit, 'and from refusing to pass the ordinances necessary to grant said franchises and privileges to E. Myron Wolf, the plaintiff herein,' be and the same are hereby stricken from the writ of injunction heretofore issued herein, and said writ of injunction is modified to the extent of striking out said words, clause, and matter therefrom, and said injunction is to that extent, alone, dissolved." This is the order appealed from.

The sole ground upon which appellant claims a reversal is the contention that the court has no jurisdiction to make the said order on its own motion because, as appellant contends, after a court has granted a preliminary injunction, it can be dissolved or modified only under section 532, Code Civ. Proc., which provides that: "If an injunction be granted without notice, the defendant at any time before the trial may apply, upon reasonable notice to the judge who granted the injunction, or to the court in which the action is brought, to dissolve or modify the same." Whether this action is to be construed as merely giving to a defendant the right to, himself, move to dissolve or modify a preliminary injunction, and not touching the power of the court to dissolve or modify without any motion of defendant, or whether, as contended by appellant, it excludes all right of the court to so dissolve or modify except upon motion of defendant, is a question which, under our view, need not here be definitely determined. It may be said, however, that, while our attention has not been called to any decision of this court on the subject, there are strong reasons for holding that an ex parte order not in its nature permanent, and, as expressed on its face, to continue only "until further order of this court," may be dissolved or modified by the court on its own motion, whenever it becomes satisfied that the order was improvidently or erroneously made. And this has been held to be the law in other jurisdictions. We will notice one leading case. In Conover v. Ruckman, 33 N. J. Eq. 303, the vice chancellor had "of his own motion" dissolved a preliminary injunction, and the plaintiff had appealed. It seems that section 86, page 120, of the statutes of New Jersey contained a provision very similar to section 532 of our Code, relied on by appellant. The appellate court in the New Jersey case said: "The appellant assigned, as one reason for reversal, that the order dissolving the injunction was irregular, in that it was made without the eight days' notice of a motion to dissolve, prescribed by the eighty-sixth section of the chancery act. Revision, p. 120. This reason cannot prevail. If the equity judge has allowed an interlocutory injunction which afterwards clearly appears to him to have been improperly allowed, he may, of his own motion, recall it at any time. Inasmuch as it was in his discretion, in the first instance, to refuse the injunction, he may, in his discretion, set aside the allowance of it, if he is satisfied that it should not have been allowed. The section referred to has reference to applications to dissolve made by a party."

But, while we are inclined to agree with the court in the case above cited, we are of the opinion that the part of the bill of exceptions above quoted leaves no room, in the case at bar, for the said contention of appellant. It is there stipulated that "the entire matter should be submitted to the court as a whole—pleadings, motions, orders, and the evidence." This was a clear submission by the parties of all matters involved in the case, including among the "orders" the one granting the preliminary injunction.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

BROWN v. CROWN GOLD MILLING CO.

(S. F. 3,995.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 29, 1907.)

1. WORK AND LABOR—COMPLAINT.

A complaint, in an action to recover for services, that states that plaintiff performed certain services for defendant, alleges their reasonable value, that they were rendered at the special instance and request of defendant, and were unpaid, is sufficient to warrant a recovery on quantum meruit, and an allegation of an express promise to pay plaintiff is surplusage which would not vitiate the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Work and Labor, § 41.]

2. SAME — EVIDENCE — INVALIDITY OF CONTRACT.

In an action to recover the reasonable value of services performed, that a contract claimed to have been entered into between the parties was so indefinite that it could not be made the basis of a recovery is immaterial, where evidence as to the contract was introduced to show the terms and nature of plaintiff's employment, and together with proof of its breach, was to be used as a basis of recovery of reasonable value.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT — DISCHARGE OF SERVANT—COMPENSATION—ACTION—RECOVERY OF VALUE.

Where an employé is discharged without cause during the term of his employment, he may regard the contract as rescinded, sue on a quantum meruit, and recover the reasonable value of his services as if the special contract of employment had never been made, whether the contract was valid or invalid.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 50, 52.]

4. CORPORATIONS—DE FACTO MANAGER—AUTHORITY—EVIDENCE.

Evidence, in an action to recover the value of services rendered a corporation, considered, and held to show that the person engaging plaintiff's services was defendant's de facto manager.

5. SAME—RATIFICATION OF CONTRACT.

Where the majority of the directors have knowledge of the terms under which plaintiff is in the employ of the corporation, and do not promptly disaffirm the action of the person hiring him, their failure to act is a ratification of the contract of employment.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT—COMPENSATION—ACTIONS—EVIDENCE—CONTRACT.

In an action to recover for the value of services rendered a corporation, evidence of a statement made about four months after plaintiff's employment by defendant's manager who had employed plaintiff, concerning the terms of plaintiff's employment, is admissible, as tending to show a contract and its terms.

7. SAME.

In an action to recover the value of services rendered a corporation, under an agreement making compensation conditional on the success of the company, evidence that the company had not made expenses, and owed large amounts, was inadmissible, where plaintiff's contract was that he was to remain with the company until it was determined whether the business was a success, and plaintiff was discharged, and defendant did not undertake to show that its business was a failure.

8. EVIDENCE—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONTRADICTORY WRITINGS—RECEIPTS IN FULL.

Receipts in full may be explained by parol evidence showing the purpose for which they were made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 1829, 2082.]

9. MASTER AND SERVANT — COMPENSATION — —ACTIONS—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action to recover the value of services rendered in exploiting a machine manufactured by defendant, an instruction that if plaintiff rendered services outside the sphere of his employment at defendant's request he was entitled to recover a reasonable compensation for such services in addition to his specified salary is applicable to the evidence, where it is shown that plaintiff was engaged to show and explain the machine to visitors and answer criticisms in the press, and that, in addition to those duties, he acted as correspondent for defendant, classified ores, revised assays, wrote scientific articles, and acted as engineer and metallurgist for the company.

10. SAME — ADDITIONAL COMPENSATION — AGREEMENT.

An employé has a right to additional compensation for services rendered on request outside the sphere of his employment, although there was no express agreement to pay therefor.

11. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action to recover the value of services by a discharged employé, instructions that if defendant agreed to pay plaintiff a stated sum per day until defendant could pay more, defendant had no right to discharge plaintiff without cause, and if he was discharged, he was entitled to the reasonable value of his services while in defendant's employ, and that where an employé has been wrongfully discharged or when his term of service is otherwise closed by defendant's action, he may sue on quantum meruit, do not take from the jury the question whether plaintiff's discharge was wrongful.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by J. C. Brown against the Crown Gold Milling Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Bigelow & Dorsey, for appellant. J. J. Scrivner and Thomas M. Diviny, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought by plaintiff to recover from defendant the reasonable value of certain services performed for it from August 1, 1900, to December 14, 1901. The case was tried before a jury, a verdict rendered for plaintiff for $2,955, and from the judgment entered thereon defendant appeals; the grounds urged for a reversal being presented upon a bill of exceptions accompanying the appeal from the judgment.

At the close of plaintiff's case defendant moved for a nonsuit, which was denied. This is the first error assigned, and, in order to properly discuss it, it is necessary to state portions of the pleadings and of the evidence offered under them by plaintiff. The complaint, after enumerating the various services performed by plaintiff at the instance and request of defendant, further alleged "that such services were so rendered and performed at the special instance and request of said defendant, and said defendant then and there promised and agreed to pay the plaintiff a reasonable compensation for the same," followed by an allegation of their reasonable value. The answer admitted the performance of the services as alleged, but averred that plaintiff had agreed to perform them for $15 per week up to August 3, 1901, and for $20 per week thereafter during the time claimed, which amounts had been paid him weekly and for which he had given receipts. The evidence on the part of plaintiff showed that the defendant was a corporation organized to exploit a patented machine for the concentration of ores, and was endeavoring to make the patent a success. It had a shop in the city of San Francisco where the machine was manufactured, operated, tested, and shown to those interested in such processes, and it was in connection with the exploiting of this machine that the plaintiff was employed. The plaintiff had been engaged in mining for over 30 years, his specialty being smelting—working in base metal ores which require concentration and smelting. He had acted as manager for mining corporations, understood the duties of one acting in a general advisory capacity as an engineer or metallurgist of such corporations—classifying ores, exploiting machines, composing and writing scientific articles, revising assays, and operating concentrators.

The agreement under which plaintiff entered into the services of defendant was claimed by him to have been made with L. B. Doe, at the time a director and vice president of the corporation, and, as plaintiff testified, its general manager, and to have been arrived at after negotiations between them taking place at different times. Plaintiff's testimony on the subject was, that he was sent for by Mr. Doe in June, 1900, for the purpose of writing a technical article to appear in a scientific paper setting forth the value of the defendant's concentrator above all others in the market. He prepared this, and at the request of Mr. Doe he wrote also an article on the merits of the machine—a prospectus—for presentation to possible stock buyers, and for general circulation, and delivered it to Mr. Doe at the office of the company. At that time Mr. Doe stated to him that the articles he had written were satisfactory and the suggestions made as to their process were invaluable; that the company would have to have some one to explain the machine; that none of the members of it were able to do so; that people came in and offered technical objections that they could not meet, nor could they describe the machine as the plaintiff had described it in his articles; that it was a new enterprise just starting in; that the company did not have a great deal of money and were not able to pay large salaries; that the company expected as soon as their plant was in operation that they could show it and explain it and extoll its virtues to visiting mining men; that they expected thereby to do a large amount of business, and expected it would increase the value of the capital stock, so that they could find a market for the treasury stock, and said that he would like to arrange for plaintiff to come there and explain the operation, merits, and advantages of the machine, and wanted to know what he would charge for such services. Plaintiff said he would consider the matter and let him know the next day. As to what occurred next day plaintiff testified: "The next day I called there, and, after some general conversation about the machine and the articles, and the best method of doing business, I told Mr. Doe that I had thought over the matter; that I was a speculative fellow, and liked to take chances of that kind; had made a great deal of money by taking chances of that kind in mining companies; and, considering the condition of the corporation, as he had stated to me, that I was willing to come there and only draw down enough money to live on. He wanted to know what that figure was, and I told him $75 a month; that I would come there and draw down in cash $75 a month, * * * and a call on a certain amount of the stock for the difference. Mr. Doe said to me, 'I don't think that the company would like to alienate any of the stock at the present time.' I said, 'Well, when the company succeeds—sells its treasury stock, then I can draw the other.'" Nothing was decided at this meeting, and plaintiff agreed to call next day. On the next day he went to the office of the company, when he and Mr. Doe resumed their negotiations. As to these further negotiations, the plaintiff testified: "Mr. Doe said to me he had talked with his partners, as he expressed it, and they thought that they couldn't afford to allow me more than $15 a week for the present as compensation. I hardly liked the word, and I said, 'Mr. Doe, a plain understanding hurts nobody. I am a thousand times obliged to you for making an opening. Now, I would like to know what my duties are going to be.' He said, 'Your duties will be to meet visitors coming in, explain the machine to them, meet their arguments against it, and answer any technical objection that they may bring out, and, if we need any—if there are any criticisms in the press, we will expect you to answer them, and things of that character.' 'All right,' I said. 'The duties are not onerous, but they require a wide field of knowledge to perform them, and I want you to understand as plainly as I can that $15 is not my compensation for doing this work.' 'Mr. Brown,' he said, 'why, I know that. That is no pay at all. That is no salary at all for a man of your ability. I know that, and,' he added, 'as soon as we sell our treasury stock or get any of our machines established—our business established—we will furnish you with a position as long as you live. We will see that you are amply compensated for the value of the services that you will render.' I said, 'Mr. Doe, that is perfectly satisfactory to me.' We walked over to the desk where Mr. Wood [a director and general manager of the manufacturing department of defendant] was working before a window, and he called Mr. Wood over to him and said: 'Mr. Wood, I have arranged with Mr. Brown to come here. He is to draw down $15 a week.' 'That is satisfactory,' said Mr. Wood, and he turned his back and walked away." In this last conversation, Mr. Doe stated that it would take the company about six months to get into a condition to sell their stock, at which time the company was to fix the salary of plaintiff, and he was then to be paid the difference between the amount he was to draw and what would be a handsome remuneration for his services, considering the circumstances under which he went into the company's employment; that this salary, when fixed, was to date from the time plaintiff went to work, the company to be credited with the amount drawn by plaintiff for living expenses; that the plaintiff was to remain with the defendant until it was proven whether the enterprise was a failure or not; if the company was unable to establish its business—if it was an absolute failure—then the plaintiff could claim nothing against it. The plaintiff went to work under these terms, but, finding that $15 per week was insufficient to support himself and family, applied to the company for $20 per week, which was allowed him; his salary, however, was never fixed, although he often demanded that it should be; and, after remaining with the defendant for the period alleged in the complaint—some 16 months—he was, without cause, discharged by the defendant.

We have stated the testimony of the plaintiff with reference to the terms of the contract only to illustrate the points made on motion for the nonsuit. This motion was based, first, upon the claim that there was a material, fatal variance between the allegations of the complaint and the proof; that the complaint alleged an unconditional positive promise to pay plaintiff a reasonable compensation for his services, while the evidence showed that such promise was not unconditional, but contingent upon the sale of treasury stock of the defendant, or the success of the corporate enterprise. There is nothing in this point. If it shall appear that in law plaintiff, on a complaint stating a common count, was entitled to recover under the agreement shown to have been made with him by the defendant, we think the complaint is unobjectionable for that purpose. The claim of appellant is that the complaint states an express promise to pay plaintiff a reasonable compensation for his services. But, as the complaint states that plaintiff performed certain services for the defendant, alleges their reasonable value, that they were rendered at the special instance and request of the defendant, and were unpaid, it states all the facts that were required to be stated on quantum meruit. From these facts, which were all that were necessary to be alleged, the law raised a promise to pay. It was not necessary to allege any promise, and such an allegation was a mere conclusion of law from the facts stated. The allegation of an express promise was surplusage, and that surplusage will not vitiate a pleading is elementary. Wilkins v. Stidger, 22 Cal. 236, 83 Am. Dec. 64; Abadie v. Carrillo, 32 Cal. 173; De la Guerra v. Newhall, 55 Cal. 21. Appellant relies upon the cases of Owen v. Meade, 104 Cal. 179, 37 Pac. 923, and Nichols v. Randall, 136 Cal. 426, 69 Pac. 26, in support of its contention; but these cases are not in point. In Owen v. Meade, the complaint alleged an express agreement to pay $1,000 as attorney's fee in a certain action. The proof was that the promise of defendant to pay was not unconditional, but contingent. This was held to be a fatal variance, and properly so, because, as the court said: "There is a wide and essential difference between the two contracts, and proof of one will not support a finding that the other was made. The plaintiff's allegation of an absolute promise was not sustained by proof of the contingent promise, and evidence in relation to such contingent promise was not relevant to the issues made by the pleadings." Neither has Nichols v. Randall any relevancy. In that case the plaintiff alleged that he deposited with the defendant certain moneys to be loaned by defendant for him, and that defendant guarantied him 9 per cent. interest upon said money; that defendant did not loan said money, but used it in his own business, and subsequently repudiated the trust. The evidence on the part of plaintiff tended to show that defendant had sold lands which he held in trust for plaintiff, and fraudulently misrepresented the price obtained and appropriated the proceeds. As a special contract, to wit, that the money was deposited with defendant to be loaned by defendant was pleaded, the evidence introduced had no tendency to support this allegation, and hence there was a material variance. The pleadings and proofs in both cases were radically different from those in the case at bar. In the cases particularly referred to, the actions were brought on an express contract, and sought to be sustained by proof of a contingent or implied contract. Here the action is brought, not upon an express contract, but upon a quantum meruit to recover the reasonable value of services. The contract, which was shown by the evidence of plaintiff to have been made, was not proven for the purpose of recovering upon it, but for the purpose of showing that it was entered into between himself and the defendant, its terms, and a breach of it on the part of defendant by discharging him without cause, for the purpose of recovering on a quantum meruit the reasonable value of the services he performed under it prior to its breach. This disposes of the point relative to the alleged variance between the allegations and the proof urged as a ground for a nonsuit.

In addition, it was urged upon said motion that there was no evidence in the case to sustain plaintiff's alleged cause of action. In this regard it is insisted that the contract claimed to have been entered into between plaintiff and defendant was so indefinite and uncertain in its terms that it could not be made the basis of a recovery. But this is not an action upon the contract. It is not an action for specific performance of the contract, or for damages for its breach. The complaint here, as we have said, is upon a common count for the recovery of the reasonable value of services performed. Evidence of the making of the contract was for the purpose of showing the terms and nature of plaintiff's employment under it, supplemented by proof of its breach by defendant as a basis for the recovery of the reasonable value of his services. Reynolds v. Jourdan, 6 Cal. 108; Castagnino v. Balletta, 82 Cal. 250, 23 Pac. 127. Under such circumstances it is immaterial whether the contract is void for uncertainty or not. As plaintiff is not suing upon it, these infirmities are of no moment.

Now, as to the law upon this subject. It is the general rule that where an employé is without cause discharged by his employer during the term of his employment, he may regard the contract as rescinded, and sue upon a quantum meruit, and recover the reasonable value of his services, as if the special contract of employment had never been made. 2 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 1011, note; Reynolds v. Jourdan, supra; Adams v. Pugh, 7 Cal. 151; Hartman v. Rogers, 69 Cal. 643, 11 Pac. 581; Castagnino v. Balletta, supra. This he may do when no question could arise as to the validity of the contract, and, independent of the other remedies, he has, namely, to regard the contract as broken and immediately sue for damages for its breach, or to treat the contract as still subsisting, and, at the expiration of the term, bring suit for the entire sum agreed to be paid. Where, however, the contract between the employé and the employer is void for indefiniteness or uncertainty, or for other reasons, neither of the last two remedies was available to him because they can only exist where there is a valid contract, and where there is not his only remedy is to sue upon a quantum meruit. It is held that such an action will lie where services have been rendered upon a contract which was void under the statute of frauds. Patten v. Hicks, 43 Cal. 509. And by parity of reasoning the same rule must be applied where the contract is void for uncertainty. That it is so applied is supported by the authorities generally, but attention need only be particularly called to the recent case of Davidson v. Laughlin, 138 Cal. 320, 71 Pac. 345, in support of such right of recovery. In the case cited the contract was to employ the plaintiff as defendant's agent at a reduced salary during the construction of a building, in consideration of a promise to employ him as agent in its management at a stipulated increased salary after its completion. After the building was completed, plaintiff was discharged and brought suit to recover the reasonable value of his past services. The point made on appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff was that no recovery could be had because the contract was indefinite. This court said: "As to the questions of law involved in the case, it seems clear that as the agreement of appellant to employ respondent as agent of the building after its completion, at the agreed compensation, was the consideration of the latter's agreement to take $60 per month for his previous services, the failure of appellant to so employ respondent was a breach of the contract which released the latter therefrom, and authorized him to treat it as rescinded, and to recover for his services what they were reasonably worth. This, of course, is the general rule applicable to such a case, and it is too elementary to need reference to authorities. It is contended, however, that the rule does not apply in the case at bar because the contract for permanent employment was only for an indefinite time; that it cannot be specifically enforced, and that it could be terminated by either party upon reasonable notice. But this is not an action to compel a specific performance of the contract for employment after the completion of the building, nor to recover compensation for his services after such completion, nor to recover future profits which respondent might have earned after that time if appellant had complied with his said promise of future employment. The action is for services rendered prior to the time when the future employment at $150 was to commence. It is based upon the theory that appellant's promise of the future employment was the consideration of respondent's promise to do the previous work for a compensation much less than its real value; that each of said promises was part of the contract, and that appellant's refusal to perform his said promise abrogated the contract and entitled respondent to recover the reasonable value of his past services. This theory is well founded in legal principles, as it is in consideration of justice and fair dealing." In the light of this authority, we think the contention of appellant needs no further discussion. It is true respondent contends that the contract is not subject to the charges of indefiniteness and uncertainty urged against it. This matter we do not discuss, because, within the rule stated, even if indefinite and uncertain, and for that reason void, plaintiff would not thereby be precluded from recovery for the reasonable value of the services rendered by him under it. This disposes of the alleged error in denying the motion for a nonsuit.

Upon the further points urged. Various specifications are made of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the verdict. Among others, it is contended (and this is the only one requiring consideration) that there was no evidence that L. B. Doe was the general manager of defendant, or had any authority or power to make any contract with the plaintiff. It is true that at the time plaintiff was employed there was no resolution or record of the board of directors by which Mr. Doe, or any one else, was constituted manager of the corporation, or by which any one was authorized to employ or discharge men. Mr. Wood at that time had been appointed manager of the manufacturing department, but his duties had not been defined. Mr. Wood was patentee of the process, and engaged in constructing the machines. He was not the general manager of the company, but only manager of this department. As testified to by Mr. Hockett, the secretary of the board: "The resolution appointing Mr. Wood manager of the manufacturing department is the only resolution on record concerning Mr. Wood. There was no resolution passed appointing him general manager or manager of the testing and sampling department." It was in the testing and sampling department that plaintiff was employed; a department distinct from the manufacturing department. If Mr. Doe was not the general manager when plaintiff was employed, the company had none until Mr. Miller was appointed, or rather his appointment approved after Mr. Doe retired from the defendant. It is conceded law that in order to bind a corporation by his acts, it is not necessary that any resolution should be passed appointing a general manager. It will be sufficient if it be shown that he was manager de facto, and we think there was sufficient evidence in the case from which the jury might find that at the time plaintiff was employed, Mr. Doe was such manager. There is nothing in the point made in this connection that the contract of plaintiff was made with Mr. Wood, manager of the manufacturing department. Plaintiff was not employed in his department, but in the testing and sampling department. Under the evidence, the jury were warranted in viewing the conversation with Wood, after plaintiff was employed by Doe, as merely a statement to him by Doe, because all the parties were in the office, and as also explaining to Wood why, thereafter, the plaintiff would be found employed there. Aside, however, from the evidence warranting the jury in finding Mr. Doe was the de facto general manager of defendant when the contract with plaintiff was made, there was also in the case sufficient evidence from which the jury could find that the majority of the board of directors of the defendant were advised of the terms under which the plaintiff was in its employment under his agreement with Doe. As they had such knowledge, it was their duty promptly to disaffirm the action of Mr. Doe, if it was unauthorized. Not having done so, they are deemed in law to have ratified it. The majority of the board having knowledge of the facts, it was not necessary to conclude the corporation in favor of plaintiff, that his employment should be ratified at a regular meeting of the board. It was sufficient that the majority of the board individually were advised of the terms of the employment of plaintiff by Mr. Doe, and took no measures to disaffirm as directors that employment. Pixley v. W. P. R. R. Co., 33 Cal. 184, 196, 91 Am. Dec. 623; Crowley v. Genessee Mining Co., 55 Cal. 273, 275; Gribble v. Columbus Brewing Co., 100 Cal. 69, 72, 73, 34 Pac. 527; Scott v. Superior Sunset Oil Co., 144 Cal. 140, 77 Pac. 817.

The next error assigned is upon a ruling of the court on the admission of evidence. A witness called in chief for the plaintiff, testified that he had a conversation with Mr. Doe, some four months after the employment of plaintiff, in which Mr. Doe stated that if everything turned out all right with the company, that plaintiff had a life position with it; that defendant proposed to take care of him, give him a life position, and make up for the services he was then performing. It is claimed that the defendant could not be bound by the statement of Doe. But Doe was the general managing agent of defendant when this conversation was had; the employment of plaintiff was a continuous one; the statement of Doe was with reference to the services of plaintiff as he was then performing them, and the evidence was at least admissible, as tending to show that an agreement with reference to such employment of plaintiff was made between Doe as manager and plaintiff, as the latter claimed it was, and also to show the terms of such agreement. It is claimed, too, that the court erred in rejecting testimony offered upon behalf of defendant. Inquiry was made of certain witnesses for the purpose of showing that defendant, in the conduct of its business, had not made money; that it had not made expenses; that there were certain outstanding notes of the company in large amounts which had not been paid. Objections to these questions were sustained, and appellant claims erroneously. We do not see that these matters were relevant to any issue in the case. The agreement with plaintiff was that he should remain with the company until it was determined whether the business enterprise in which it was engaged was or was not an absolute failure. Under the contract, plaintiff could not be discharged so as to defeat a claim for compensation, unless for cause, or in the event that the business enterprise was in fact a failure. Defendant did not undertake to show that the business was a failure. On the contrary, the evidence on its part showed that the company was still pushing the enterprise and expected to make it successful. The evidence offered and excluded could only tend to show that the business had not yet reached a profit-making stage. This was not material. The business might have been on a fair way to success or be established, and the company not yet making money, or be heavily indebted. A showing as to defendant's financial condition could not defeat plaintiff's claim. It could only be done by showing that the enterprise was a failure, and as the evidence offered had no tendency to show that, it was properly rejected.

We now approach a consideration of certain instructions, the accuracy of which are challenged by appellant.

As to the first complained of: Upon the trial the defendant offered in evidence various receipts given by plaintiff to defendant. They were each for one week's salary as plaintiff was receiving it, either $15 or $20, and recited that they were "in full for above account." Defendant asked for an instruction telling the jury, in effect, that each receipt must be regarded as a deliberate admission that the rate of compensation stated therein was the rate expressly agreed on; that the acceptance of the amount specified in such receipt was equivalent to an express contract fixing his compensation at the rate actually paid him. The court refused to give such instruction, and instructed the jury: "That a receipt is never conclusive; it is always open to explanation, and the purpose for which it is given may be shown." No error was committed by the court in refusing to give defendant's instruction, and in instructing the jury as it did. The evidence of plaintiff showed that these receipts were given for his living expenses under his contract with defendant, whereby he was to receive a larger compensation when a successful stage in carrying on the business of defendant was attained. Appellant's instructions were framed on the theory that payment to plaintiff as evidenced by these receipts was in full for all services rendered during each week. This, however, ignores the other part of the contract claimed by plaintiff, that such payments were only to be in full in the event that the business enterprise of defendant should turn out to be a total failure. Otherwise he was to be paid more per week. The terms of a receipt are to be construed by a consideration of all the circumstances under which it was given. What was intended by giving it, and what its effect is, are matters to be determined by the jury from all the evidence on the subject. The general rule is that receipts in full (as those in question were) may be explained by parol evidence showing the purpose for which they were given. Winans v. Hassey, 48 Cal. 635; Simmons v. Oullahan, 75 Cal. 508, 17 Pac. 543; Cowan v. Abbott, 92 Cal. 100, 28 Pac. 213; Hardin v. Dickey, 123 Cal. 513, 56 Pac. 258.

In the next instruction complained of, the court told the jury, in effect, that if they believed from the evidence that the plaintiff was employed by defendant for the sole purpose of exploiting a certain specific machine—that is, explaining it and its mode of operation, and the results produced by it, to persons inquiring concerning it, and meeting arguments and objections made against it—and also find from the evidence that these services were to be rendered at a specified sum per week, which was paid, still if they found that during the term of his employment plaintiff, at the request of defendant, rendered certain services outside the sphere of his employment, he was entitled to recover a reasonable compensation for such services, although there was no express agreement to pay therefor. No exception can be taken to the instruction as embodying a correct principle of law. It is claimed, however, by appellant, that it had no application to the facts in the case at bar; it being insisted that the extra services which plaintiff claims to have performed were all in connection with the operation and success of the machine relative to which he was employed. But whether these services which were claimed to have been extra were so, or were in the line of plaintiff's employment, were matters for determination by the jury, and their verdict must be deemed conclusive on the subject. The plaintiff testified that the services he was engaged to perform were to explain the concentrating machine to visitors, meet arguments and technical objections against it, and answer any criticism in the press. This was admitted by Mr. Doe. In addition to this service, it is alleged in the complaint, and admitted by defendant in the answer, that plaintiff acted as correspondent for the defendant, and made official statements, classified ores, composed and wrote scientific articles, revised assays, and acted in a general advisory capacity as the engineer and metallurgist for the company in the construction and operation of its dry milling and concentrating sampling plant. Notwithstanding that the performance of these services were admitted, they were testified to upon the trial by plaintiff, and it was further testified to by him that they were services rendered outside of the sphere of his particular employment, and rendered almost on every occasion at the express request of the defendant. The defendant did not attempt to show that the performance of these services was embraced within plaintiff's employment of explaining its concentrating machine. The jury might well find from the evidence that, in their nature, these services were without the sphere of plaintiff's employment, and, so finding, the plaintiff would be entitled to an award of a reasonable compensation therefor. An employé in a particular service has a right to compensation for services rendered on request outside of the sphere of his employment, although there is no express agreement to pay therefor. 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 19.

It is next insisted that the court erred in instructing the jury, in effect, that if they found the agreement between plaintiff and defendant was that plaintiff should go to work for $2.50 per day until the company was in a condition to pay more, or until it got in a more prosperous condition, "then the defendant had no right to discharge the plaintiff without cause," and the plaintiff is entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services while in the employ of defendant, and erred also in an instruction "that where a servant has been wrongfully discharged during the term of his service, or where the term of service is otherwise closed by his employer's action, the employé may treat the contract as rescinded and sue on a quantum meruit for the reasonable value of the services performed." The principal criticism as to the accuracy of the first instruction referred to is in the use by the court of the words "then the defendant had no right to discharge plaintiff without cause"; that this was an assumption by the court that plaintiff's discharge by defendant was wrongful, and that it took away from the jury the question as to whether it was or not, and, in any event, assuming that it was intended as declaring a principle of law, it was erroneous. But the instruction does not pretend to be an assumption of anything. It was intended to lay down a rule of law, and, as announced, did not take from the jury the question whether the defendant's discharge of plaintiff was wrongful or not. Jurors are supposed to have in mind the evidence and the questions at issue in a case before them, and to apply the instructions of the court to that evidence and those issues. Without discussing whether there was any evidence showing that any reasonable cause existed for discharging plaintiff for misconduct, under respondent's claim that there was not, and conceding that there was, that matter was undoubtedly in the minds of the jury and they applied the instruction to the subject. The instruction informed them that if they found the other facts stated by the court as to the contract to be true, and that plaintiff was wrongfully discharged, they should find in his favor. The reasonable view antithetically which the jury must have taken of the instruction was that if they found that plaintiff was rightfully discharged, as claimed by defendant, they should not return a verdict in his favor. As the jury by their verdict necessarily found that the plaintiff was wrongfully discharged, that is, that he was not guilty of the misconduct which the defendant claimed warranted it, we do not see how the defendant was injured because the court did not make its instruction more specific in terms. It was subject to a reasonable application by the jury to the evidence, and if defendant wanted it more clearly and definitely stated, it should have asked the court to make it so. The same reasoning applies to the other instruction complained of in its use of the language "wrongfully discharged during the term of his service." Nor do we perceive any valid objection to the use in this last instruction of the expression "or when his term of service is otherwise closed by the employer's action," when considered in connection with the words quoted immediately preceding. This meant, and the jury must have so understood it as meaning, that where an employer, for any other reason than for cause, prevents an employé from discharging his duties under his contract with his employer, such employé may treat the contract as rescinded, and sue on a quantum meruit for the reasonable value of the services performed. This we have seen is correct as a proposition of law. It is claimed that the court erred in rejecting some and modifying other instructions tendered by defendant. We have examined them, and think that no error was committed regarding them.

This disposes of all grounds urged for reversal which merit consideration. No error appearing in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

MILWAUKEE MECHANICS' INS. CO. v. WARREN et al. (S. F. 3,603.)

1. APPEAL—OBJECTIONS NOT RAISED IN LOWER COURT.

Where, in an action to recover on a bond, an order appointing a referee to make an accounting and take evidence and report the same to the court was made, and an account was rendered by the referee subject to instructions of the court as to certain matters, the parties, after going to a hearing upon the understanding that the report of the referee was before the court as making a prima facie case, and that further evidence was being heard for the purpose of confirming or setting aside the particular items of the report, could not object that, as the referee never stated a final account, there was no evidence whatever before the court, and nothing upon which a finding could be predicated.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 1328.]

2. INSURANCE—PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—CONTRACTS—CONSTRUCTION.

Where defendants were appointed general agents for the term of one year by plaintiff insurance company, under an agreement providing that, as compensation for their services, they were to receive 35 per cent. of the gross premiums received by the company in their territory "after deducting all return premiums, rebates, and reinsurance," defendants were chargeable with 35 per cent. of return premiums on policies written during the agency and paid by the company after the termination thereof.

3. SAME—BONDS—PRINCIPAL AND SURETY.

Such commissions on return premiums were chargeable against the sureties on the defendants' bonds as well as against defendants.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by the Milwaukee Mechanics' Insurance Company against A. M. Warren and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

E. W. McGraw, for appellant. Reddy, Campbell & Metson (Campbell, Metson & Campbell, Edward K. Taylor and Thomas H. Breeze, of counsel), for respondents.

SLOSS, J. On March 10, 1894, the plaintiff, an insurance corporation, entered into a written agreement with the defendants A. M. Warren and J. B. Lanktree, whereby said Warren and Lanktree were appointed general agents of the company for the Pacific Coast from April 15, 1894. One of the conditions of the appointment was that the agents should give to the plaintiff a bond in the sum of $20,000 to secure the due performance of their duties, and such bond was accordingly executed and delivered by A. M. Warren and

J. B. Lanktree as principals and J. D. Maxwell, A. A. Warren, and Wm. P. Jones as sureties. The agency terminated on May 1, 1895, and this action was brought on the bond to recover $12,976.07, claimed to have been collected by Warren and Lanktree for the plaintiff and to be due from them upon the termination of the agency. The defendant A. M. Warren was served, but did not appear, and his default was never entered. The defendant A. A. Warren was never served. The defendants Lanktree, Jones, and Maxwell appeared and answered, denying that Warren and Lanktree had failed to account for and pay over to the plaintiff any moneys received by them for it. Findings and judgment went in favor of the defendants who had appeared. The plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and now appeals from the judgment and from the order denying its motion for a new trial.

On the appeal from the judgment the plaintiff contends that some of the findings are insufficient in form, and that there is a failure to find upon one material issue. In the view which we take on the other appeal we consider it unnecessary to pass upon these points.

The motion for new trial was based on the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings, to the effect that the defendants Warren and Lanktree "did account for, pay over, and deliver to said company and its authorized agents all of the money that came into their hands which belonged to the said company, and every part and portion thereof, over and above all commissions and allowances due to them, said Warren and Lanktree, and over and above all payments made by them for said plaintiff," and "that said Warren and Lanktree did not collect, receive, or retain, and that they do not retain, and did not at the time of the commencement of this suit retain, the sum of $12,976.07 of the moneys of plaintiff, or any sum or moneys whatever belonging to said plaintiff." An examination of the statement on motion for new trial convinces us that these findings have no substantial support in the evidence.

The agreement under which Warren and Lanktree were acting for the plaintiff, after stating that said Warren and Lanktree have been appointed by the said Milwaukee Mechanic's Insurance Company as its general agents and supervisors for its Pacific Coast Department, contained the following stipulations: "(2) All agents' commissions, salaries, clerk hire, office, traveling, and adjusting expenses, rents, and telegrams to be paid by said Warren and Lanktree, excepting taxes, board fees, costs of litigation, and all company blanks, policy registers, expressage for supplies to agents only, and other supplies necessary to the business, which are to be paid and furnished by the said company and which are to remain the property of said company. (3) As compensation for such services as general agents and supervisors, the said Milwaukee Mechanics' Insurance Company agrees to pay to or allow Warren and Lanktree to retain 35 per cent. of the gross premiums received by said company in the territory hereby denominated the Pacific Coast department, after deducting all return premiums, rebates, and reinsurances. (4) The said Warren and Lanktree agree to * * * keep accounts of agents, collect and remit all balances of accounts, as collected, and for moneys received by them, to the company by draft. Said Warren and Lanktree to give a good and sufficient bond with approved sureties for $20,000 thereby securing the said company for all premiums reported and moneys received in their department. No premiums to be left uncollected and unpaid for a longer term than ninety days from the first of the month following the month in which they were written. (5) A contingent commission of 5 per cent. of all the net profits realized by said company from business done within the territorial limits and places aforesaid; said net profits to be ascertained by deducting from gross premiums on policies and certificates of insurance underwritten for said company on property located within the territorial limits and places aforesaid, the amounts paid out and allowed by said company for losses, commissions, return premiums, reinsurances, cancellations, licenses, taxes of any kind, and all other local and general agency expenses. The said contingent commission shall be computed and paid on the 15th day of October, 1895. If this contract shall not be renewed, the contingent commission then due on the above date shall be computed by said company by charging up to loss account 50 per cent. of the premiums upon policies then in force, and at the expiration of all policies of insurance in force, after deducting for any losses and return premiums, the balance, if any, shall be paid to Warren and Lanktree. This contract to remain in force for the term of one year, to wit, from the 15th day of April, 1894, to the 15th day April, 1895, with the privilege to either party hereto to terminate the same at any time by giving sixty days' notice." The bond sued upon was in the sum of $20,000, and, after reciting the appointment of Warren and Lanktree and their duty to keep true and accurate accounts of the property of the company coming into their hands, and of their receipts and disbursements on account of the company, provided that if "the said A. M. Warren and J. B. Lanktree shall well and truly perform all and singular the duties of general agents of said company, and shall account for and pay over and deliver to the treasurer of the said company, or to such other person as the said company, or its authorized agent, may direct, all such moneys, property, documents, supplied books and papers, and stationery of the said company, as shall come to and be in their possession, or actual control at the time, and in the manner which may now or hereafter be provided by charter or rules of the said company, or by direction of its board of directors, or of the president or acting president of the said company, * * * then this obligation shall be void, otherwise of force."

From the statement on motion for a new trial it appears that, when the case came on for hearing, the plaintiff offered in evidence the deposition of G. W. Mansfield, superintendent of agencies of the plaintiff company. Mr. Mansfield testified that he came to San Francisco in the early part of April, 1895, to examine the condition of the company's affairs and its general agency. Up to the 15th of May he was endeavoring to secure from Warren and Lanktree a statement of their accounts with the company. On the 17th of May, on arriving at the office of Warren and Lanktree, he was informed that the vault of that firm had been entered during the night, and the books of account had been cut and multilated to such an extent as to make it impossible to state an accurate account from them, and no complete statement of account was in fact ever given by Warren and Lanktree. The witness produced copies of the monthly accounts which had been sent to the company at its home office by Warren and Lanktree during the continuance of the agency. These accounts showed the total amount of business written, the premiums due on the same, the commissions credited to Warren and Lanktree upon the basis of the total business written, and the expenses chargeable to the company. They did not show the amount of premiums actually collected. Plaintiff then called as a witness one Thomas, bookkeeper for Warren and Lanktree, who testified to some extent regarding the mutilated books, pointing out in detail the pages that had been removed from such books. At this point in the trial the court made an order appointing George W. Reynolds referee, "to make an accounting and take evidence and report the same to the court." This order was made on May 12, 1898. No further proceedings appear to have been had in court until January 21, 1901, when, as appears by the statement, the hearing was resumed, and there was presented and read to the court a report of the referee. This report points out at considerable length the difficulties encountered by the referee in the making up of an account between the parties; such difficulties arising from the mutilation of the books and from a loose method of keeping the accounts of Warren and Lanktree. Accompanying the report the referee submitted to the court several tabulated statements showing the condition of the accounts between the plaintiff and Warren and Lanktree, so far as the referee was able to trace them. These statements, however, were declared by the referee not to be final, but to be subject to the instructions of the court as to certain points involved in the taking of the accounts. As they stood, the statements of the referee showed that Warren and Lanktree were indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of something over $9,000. Thereupon the referee was questioned at great length by counsel on both sides and by the court, and at the close of his examination other witnesses were called and the case was finally submitted to the court.

The contention of the respondent is that inasmuch as the case was referred to the referee to state an account, and as he never did state a final account, there was no evidence whatever before the court and nothing upon which a finding in favor of the plaintiff could be predicated. Probably it would have been better practice, in view of the fact that a reference had once been made, for the court to either resubmit the matter to the referee, with instructions to make a final report based upon such directions as to the manner of making the accounts as the court might see fit to give, or if the court decided to hear the matter itself, to vacate the order appointing the referee, and proceeed to take testimony. Neither of these steps was taken. What seems to have been done was that the referee made his partial or qualified report, and then testified as a witness regarding the items of his account, and that upon this testimony and that of other witnesses the court made its findings. If this procedure was irregular, we think the respondents are in no position to take advantage of such irregularity. No objection was made by them to the course followed. All of the parties in the lower court appear to have proceeded upon the theory that the referee's statements of account attached to his report were to be taken as a prima facie showing of an indebtedness of some $9,000 due from Warren and Lanktree to the plaintiff, and that further testimony—i. e., that of the referee himself and of other witnesses—was to be taken to increase this apparent balance or reduce it, as the case might be. After the referee had submitted his report a colloquy took place between court and counsel; the court stating in effect that the report of the referee made out a prima facie case in favor of the plaintiff to the extent of $9,000, and that counsel for defendants could take up, one by one, the items charged against Warren and Lanktree, and seek, by eliminating some of them, to reduce or extinguish this apparent balance. The only answer made to this by counsel for defendant was a request for a continuance before commencing the examination of the referee. The continuance was granted, and, when the hearing was resumed, the referee was cross-examined on the lines indicated by the court. At a later period in the proceedings the court repeated substantially the same suggestion without dissent from either party. And still later the court said to counsel for plaintiff: "Now, Mr. Reynolds has presented his report, and he has made a prima facie case for you to an amount that I understand is satisfactory. Now why not let Mr. Campbell [counsel for defendants] have him as a witness?" No objection was made by counsel for the defendants to any of these statements of the court. He acquiesced in them and proceeded to examine the referee and the other witnesses on the lines suggested. There can be no question that the case was tried in the court below upon the theory that the report of the referee was properly before the court, and that the written statements of the referee, as well as his oral declarations in court, were evidence in the case. The defendants, having permitted the trial to proceed and the case to be submitted for decision upon this theory, are bound by it, and cannot be permitted to raise for the first time on appeal an objection which could have been obviated if made in the court below. It has often been held by this court that where both parties have in the trial court treated a certain question of fact as being in issue, and offered evidence regarding it, the point that there was no such issue presented by the pleadings is waived, and cannot be raised on appeal. Horton v. Dominguez, 68 Cal. 642, 10 Pac. 186; Murdock v. Clarke, 90 Cal. 427, 27 Pac. 275; Klopper v. Levy, 98 Cal. 525, 33 Pac. 444; Burnham v. Stone, 101 Cal. 164, 35 Pac. 627; Illinois T. & S. Bank v. Pacific Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 285, 47 Pac. 60; Barbour v. Flick, 126 Cal. 628, 59 Pac. 122; Willey v. Crocker Woolworth National Bank, 141 Cal. 508, 75 Pac. 106. The principle governing these cases is applicable here. Strictly speaking, the referee's partial report and his explanations regarding it may not have been proper as evidence, but they were admitted without objection, and were treated by both sides as evidence in the case. If the defendants had excepted to the report of the referee when it was presented, or had made any objection to the referee being examined as a witness to establish any of the items in the account, or had asked that the matter be resubmitted to the referee, with instructions to report a full account, the plaintiff could have protected itself by taking steps to have the hearing proceed in a manner conforming completely to the proper practice. After both parties have gone to a hearing in the lower court upon the understanding that the report of the referee was before the court as making a prima facie case, and that further evidence was being heard for the purpose of confirming or setting aside the particular items of that report, it would be the height of injustice to permit the respondents who assented to that procedure to now claim that the method pursued was not the proper one, and that there was in fact nothing before the court. 21 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 664.

It appears from the record that in a number of instances, where policies had been written by Warren and Lanktree, return premiums were paid by the company after the termination of Warren and Lanktree's agency. In making up his statements of account, the referee charged to Warren and Lanktree 35 per cent. of these return premiums, and there was a good deal of discussion in the lower court as to the propriety of this charge. Under the contract, it is clear that Warren and Lanktree were chargeable with these payments. The agreement under which they were appointed general agents provided that as compensation for their services they were to receive 35 per cent. of the gross premiums received by the company in their territory "after deducting all return premiums, rebates, and reinsurances." The term of their agency was one year. It is a matter of common knowledge that most policies of fire insurance are written for a term of not less than one year, many extending over three years. In the natural course of business, therefore, policies written after the day upon which the agency commenced would extend beyond the duration of the agency. The insured had a right to surrender their policies at any time prior to the expiration of the period of insurance, and to receive a return of a proportion of the premium corresponding with the unexpired term. Civ. Code, § 2617. In Warren and Lanktree's own accounts and in those of the referee they had been credited with 35 per cent. of the full amount of the premiums on insurance written by them. Under the terms of their contract they were, however, entitled to this 35 per cent. only, on the amount of the premiums "after deducting all return premiums, rebates, and reinsurances." Certainly it was never understood by the parties that, if Warren and Lanktree wrote a policy on the day before the expiration of their agency, they would be entitled to retain 35 per cent. of the entire amount of the premium, even though on the day after they ceased to be agents the policy was canceled by the insured and the company compelled to return the greater part of the premium. It was necessarily in the contemplation of the parties that return premiums might be payable after the termination of the agency, and the right of Warren and Lanktree to retain 35 per cent. of the premiums on any business written by them was always subject to the contingency that the policy might be canceled, and that they might, therefore, be liable to the company for 35 per cent. of the amount refunded by the company upon such cancellation. See American Steam Boiler Ins. Co. v. Anderson, 6 N. Y. Supp. 507, 57 N. Y. Super. Ct. 179. If it be said that under this construction there could be no final settlement of account on the termination of the agency, it may be answered that the contract plainly shows that such immediate settlement was not within the purview of the parties at the time the contract was made.

Under paragraph 5 Warren and Lanktree were entitled to a contingent commission on the profits of the company, to be computed and paid on the 15th day of October, a number of months after the termination of the contract. Again, by paragraph 4, they were allowed 90 days within which to collect premiums. Clearly then it was in the contemplation of the parties that their relations should not be capable of final adjustment immediately upon the close of the agency.

These commissions on return premiums are chargeable against the sureties on the bond, as well as against the principles. It is true that by the terms of the undertaking the sureties made themselves liable only for the payment by Warren and Lanktree of such moneys, etc., of the said company "as shall come to and be in their possession or actual control." They could not be charged with premiums earned, but not collected. But, where premiums had actually been collected, the proportion of them that belonged to the company was to be determined by the contract of agency, and, as we have seen, such proportion was to be computed by deducting, as commissions of the agents, not 35 per cent. of the gross premiums, but 35 per cent. of the balance remaining after payment of "return premiums, rebates and reinsurance." While the sureties were liable only for moneys actually received by Warren and Lanktree during their agency, the amount payable by Warren and Lanktree out of such moneys could not be ascertained at the termination of the employment, but might be increased by subsequent cancellations, and consequent reduction of the commissions apparently earned.

In this view of the rights of the parties under the contract and bond, the statements and testimony of the referee, together with the testimony of the other witnesses, make it clear, and that without any conflict, that Warren and Lanktree were indebted to the plaintiff in a considerable amount for money actually received and unaccounted for. Just what that amount was it is not proper here to attempt to state, since upon this appeal we can go no further than to order a new trial. It is sufficient here to say that the careful analysis of the evidence presented by the appellant in its brief shows that under any view of the testimony there was an indebtedness of several thousand dollars due from the defendants to the plaintiff. The respondents do not attempt to point out any error in these calculations, but content themselves with the claim, heretofore disposed of, that there was no evidence at all before the court, and argue as to the actual figures presented by the referee and other witnesses that the statements presented were so confused that no conclusion could be reached from them. With this view we cannot agree. The court had before it statements of all of the transactions of Warren and Lanktree as agents, and these statements, if examined in the light of the contract and the bond, were sufficient to enable the court to arrive at a determination of the amount due from Warren and Lanktree and their sureties to the plaintiff. That some amount was so due is, as we have said, clear, and is practically not disputed by the respondents. The court below, therefore, erred in finding that Warren and Lanktree had fully performed the conditions of their contract, and that there was nothing due from them. Upon a new trial the state of the account between the plaintiff and Warren and Lanktree should be determined in view of the construction which we have herein given to the contract.

Something may be said regarding other points which may arise on a new trial. As to reinsurances, we think only those effected during the agency of Warren and Lanktree should be considered as operating to reduce their commissions, and, as we understand appellant's brief, it claims no more than this.

Under the terms of the bond the defendants were not chargeable with premiums on business written by Warren and Lanktree, where such premiums were not collected by Warren and Lanktree, but came into the hands of their successors. Under the contract of agency, however, Warren and Lanktree were entitled to a credit of 35 per cent. of such premiums; i. e., of so much of said premiums as might remain to the company after deducting return premiums, whenever paid, and premiums paid for reinsurances effected by Warren and Lanktree.

There appears to have been a good deal of discussion at the trial regarding commissions paid by Warren and Lanktree to subagents. We see no reason why this item should be taken into account at all. Under paragraph 2 of the contract the subagents' commissions were to be paid by Warren and Lanktree. Where a subagent acting for them wrote a policy and remitted to them the premium, deducting his commission, such agent was acting not as the agent of the company, but as the agent of Warren and Lanktree, and, as between the latter and the company, Warren and Lanktree were chargeable with the whole premium, and were to be credited with 35 per cent. of the whole. The commission of the subagent was a matter between Warren and Lanktree and such subagent, with which the company had no concern. Where, however, in closing up business written by Warren and Lanktree, the premiums for which had not been collected prior to the termination of their agency, the company collected not the full premium, but so much of it as remained after deducting the commissions of the subagents due them by their agreement with Warren and Lanktree, such commissions were properly chargeable to Warren and Lanktree as one of the items of expense which, under paragraph 2 of the contract, they were to pay.

By proceeding in accordance with the views herein indicated, we think it will be possible on a new trial, notwithstanding the mutilation of the books of Warren and Lanktree, to state and prove an account which will show with substantial exactness the relation of the parties.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

In re PAINTER'S ESTATE. (S. F. 4,436.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1907.)

1. WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—SPECIFIC DEVISE.

Testator gave land described by street and number and by boundaries to his brothers, and other land similarly described to his sons. By a codicil he revoked the devise to his brothers and gave the property to his children, "together with all the real estate I may hereafter accumulate, as well as moneys at interest, etc., not otherwise appropriated." Held, that the devise to the children of the lands described was a specific devise, and not chargeable with the payment of general legacies, under Civ. Code, §§ 1357, 1359, 1360, 1362, defining specific devises, especially where, at the time of the making of the will, the testator had sufficient personal property to satisfy the general legacies.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 1805, 1936–1938.]

2. SAME.

A testator gave to his sons real estate described, and provided that a part of the income should be paid to a brother and sister until his sons became of age. The sons were of age at the death of the testator. Held, that the gift to the brother and sister did not take effect.

3. SAME—SUIT TO CONSTRUE WILL—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBLTY.

In a suit involving the construction of a will, a paper dated prior to the execution thereof and in the handwriting of the testator, which purports to contain a statement of the assets and liabilities of a partnership of which he was a member, is admissible as a declaration of testator's belief as to the status of the business.

4. APPEAL — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE — REVIEW.

Where no exceptions were taken to the admission of evidence, the action of the court cannot be reviewed on appeal.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

Petition by J. Milton Painter and others, as legatees under the will of Jerome B. Painter, deceased, for an order requiring the executor and executrix to make payment of their legacies; and petition by the widow and sons of the testator, asking for a partial distribution to them of property belonging to the testator. The application of the first petitioners denied, and application of the widow and sons granted; and the first petitioners appeal. Affirmed.

Pringle & Pringle, for appellants. M. B. Kellogg and Francis J. Heney, for respondents.

SLOSS, J. Jerome B. Painter died on the 6th day of February, 1883, leaving a will and codicil, which were admitted to probate by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco on the 13th day of April, 1883. The administration of the estate has been pending in said court ever since the last-mentioned date. In March, 1898, J. Milton Painter, Theodore P. Painter, Adaline Mininger, Grace Mininger, J. Milton Painter, as executor of the will of Margaret Painter, deceased, Josephus Painter, by his guardian, J. Milton Painter, and Thomas B. Cochran, claiming as legatees under the will, petitioned the superior court for an order requiring the executor and executrix to make payment of their legacies. The executor and executrix answered, setting up certain grounds of opposition to the prayer of this petition. At the same time the widow and sons of the decedent filed a petition asking for the partial distribution to them of certain real property belonging to the decedent. This petition was opposed by the parties who had asked for the payment of their legacies, and a hearing was had upon both applications together. The court made findings, and upon them denied the application of the first petitioners for payment of the legacies to them, and granted the application of the widow and children for partial distribution. From both these orders, appeals are now prosecuted.

Jerome B. Painter's will was executed on the 11th day of March, 1864, while the codicil bore date March 11, 1874. The provisions of the will, so far as material to the present controversy, are as follows:

"(1) I give and bequeath to my brothers, J. Milton Painter and Theodore P. Painter, all my share, right, title and interest of, and in and to, the copartnership of Painter & Co., the stock thereof, its business, good will, and all interests of whatsoever nature connected with them as partners (except real estate), debts due us, and moneys out at interest, for their own use and benefit, upon the express condition that they assume all debts standing against the concern, and pay off that certain mortgage on property southwest corner of Washington and Sansome streets.

"(2) I also give and bequeath to them, my brothers, J. M. Painter and T. P. Painter, aforesaid, that certain building and lot of land in which our business has been conducted, known as Nos. 510 and 512 Clay street, and more particularly described as being on Clay street, commencing on the north side 73 feet west from Sansome street, thence west 15.9x91.8 feet deep, with the proviso, that a certain mortgage on the same property, given by me to Miss Charlotte Rhodes for $5,000 as part of the purchase money, bearing interest at seven per cent. per annum, will be assumed by them, both interest and principal, and paid as they may become due.

"(3) I give and bequeath to my sons, Albert and Walter, that certain building and lot of land on Clay street, known as Nos. 318, 320 and 322, and more particularly described as follows: [Here follows a particular description.] The property to be kept fully insured and in good repair from the moneys received from the rents thereof, and the building to be rented or let to the best advantage, as well for the revenue to be derived from it as for the future safety and well condition of the building and property. The balance of the rents, after paying the above necessary expenses, to be apportioned as follows: One-sixth to be regularly sent to my mother, as her share, so long as she may live; and one-sixth to my sister Adaline and brother Josephus, to be equally divided between them, so long as they may live, but should either die, then the sum apportioned to revert to my wife, as long as she remains my widow; but should she again marry, then to revert to my children, Albert and Walter. Should either of my children die, the whole of this property, and rents as apportioned, to go to the remaining one. The balance of the rents, viz.: two-thirds to go to my wife, as long as she remains my widow, to be used for her support and maintenance, and that of my aforesaid children, and they to be properly educated with the best of a good English education. * * * The total rents of this property to revert to my children, as each becomes of age, namely, twenty-one years, to be used by them for their own particular benefit and free use, with my very particular injunction that they never see or know that their mother, aunts, uncles—more particularly their grandparents, or their uncle, my brother Josephus—is in want of any of the necessaries, comforts, or even ordinary luxuries of life, without their cheerfully and cordially administering to their wants. * * *

"(4) I give and bequeath to my beloved wife, and mother of my children, all my remaining property, as per schedule annexed, or which may be remaining, not in the schedule annexed, but unbequeathed, for her sole use and benefit.

"(5) I give and bequeath the sum of one thousand dollars each to the San Francisco (Protestant) Orphan Asylum, and the Ladies' Relief and Protection Society of San Francisco; also, one thousand dollars to my uncle, John H. Pearsol, of Lancaster, Pennsylvania; and one thousand dollars to my niece, Grace (daughter of my sister Adaline), the latter sum to be placed out securely until she attains her lawful age (together with the interest accruing on the same) when she shall receive the said sum, principal and interest, for her sole use and benefit; but, in case of her death, the same to go to her mother, my sister Adaline. I also give and bequeath to my mother and sister Adaline, and brother Josephus, one thousand dollars each; also, one thousand dollars each to my brothers, J. Milton and Theodore.

"(6) I appoint as my executors to this my last will and testament, my wife, and my brothers J. Milton and Theodore, either or all of them to serve as they may wish, without the necessity of giving bonds or security whatever, as I have implicit faith in their integrity."

At the time of the execution of this will the testator had only the two children, Albert and Walter, named therein. During the next ten years four more sons were born to him, and on March 11, 1874, as has been stated, he executed a codicil to his will reading as follows:

"My sons Edgar, Arthur, Oscar and Jerome, being born to me since the making of the foregoing will, I hereby further will that they share and share alike with their brothers Albert and Walter in all properties held by me at the time of my death, and I hereby revoke the second clause of my will bequeathing to my brothers that property known as Nos. 510 and 512 Clay street, between Montgomery and Sansome streets, San Francisco, and that it be placed for distribution among my sons when the youngest becomes of twenty-one years of age, like my other property mentioned herewith: All those certain parcels of land, with improvements, in south line of Washington street, between Battery and Front streets, 20 feet x 60 feet deep, known as No. ———. Also, southwest corner of Sansome and Washington streets, 45 10-12 feet x 67 feet; also, northeast corner of Powell and Filbert street, 68 9-12 feet on Powell by 137 feet on Filbert street; also, southeast corner of Powell and Jackson streets, 48 feet on Jackson by 90 on Powell street; also, lot on Broadway street known as No. 729, 21 by 137½ feet, together with all real estate I may hereafter accumulate, as well as moneys at interest, etc., not otherwise appropriated.

"I also substitute my brother-in-law, Mr. R. B. Dallam, to act in place of my brother J. Milton Painter, as administrator to my will, without his giving bonds, etc. I also revoke clause 4th of this will and direct that my wife share with my sons, and they with her in all property, she one-half and they all the other one-half equally among them."

After the execution of the codicil and prior to the death of Jerome B. Painter a seventh son, Eugene, was born. From the bill of exceptions, it appears that in a prior proceeding between the same parties the superior court made a decree (which has become final) construing this will and codicil. In any consideration that is now to be given to the terms of these instruments, the matters thus adjudicated are to be taken as conclusive, and to this extent the question before us is limited and narrowed. We shall point out hereafter the portions of that decree which have a bearing on the present controversy.

The legacies, payment of which was sought by the appellants, are those mentioned in paragraph 5 of the will, and the proportion of the rents bequeathed by paragraph 3 to the testator's mother, brother, and sister. The petitioner, Cochran, claims as assignee of John H. Pearsol. It is admitted here, although it was in issue in the lower court, that at the time of the hearing there was not in the hands of the executrix and executor sufficient personal property to pay the legacies bequeathed by paragraph 5, and the main question for determination is whether these legacies are payable out of the real estate devised by the will and codicil, and distributed by the decree of partial distribution appealed from. If the legacies given by paragraph 5 of the will are chargeable against such real estate, the order denying the application for their payment and the decree distributing such real estate to the devisees are alike erroneous. (The rent bequests of paragraph 3 stand on a different ground and will be separately discussed.)

The contention of the respondents is that the real estate was specifically devised to them by the codicil and that therefore such real estate is not chargeable with the payment of general legacies. As to how far, if at all, specific legacies or devises can be made to pay general legacies, the provisions of the Civil Code are by no means free from doubt. Section 1357 defines the various kinds of legacies, to wit: Specific, demonstrative, annuities, residuary, and general. Section 1360 provides: "The property of a testator except as otherwise specially provided in this Code and the Code of Civil Procedure, must be resorted to for the payment of legacies in the following order: (1) The property which is expressly appropriated by the will for the payment of the legacies. (2) Property not disposed of by the will. (3) Property which is devised or bequeathed to a residuary legatee. (4) Property which is specifically devised or bequeathed." Taking this section alone, it would seem that, in the absense of any property embraced in one of the three classes first named in the section, property specifically devised or bequeathed should be resorted to for the payment of general legacies. Such rule would, however, be entirely contrary to the rule at common law and in force, so far as we know, in all American jurisdictions. The respondent contends that the fourth subdivision of section 1360 should be read "Property which is not specifically devised or bequeathed," the word "not" having been, as is claimed, omitted by inadvertence. The point was discussed by this court to some extent in Estate of Neistrath, 66 Cal. 330, 5 Pac. 507, and the purport of the decision seems to be that, reading section 1360 together with sections, 1357, 1359, and 1362, the effect of the various provisions is to make specific devises and specific legacies free from any contribution to the payment of general legacies. The question has not again been brought to the attention of this court, except in Re Ratto's Estate (Cal.) 86 Pac. 1107, in which it is said: "In the Estate of Neistrath, 66 Cal. 330, 5 Pac. 507, the court leaves it somewhat doubtful whether by said section 1360 the Legislature intended to subject specific devises to the payment of general legacies; but we need not consider that question here." While, as was said in the Ratto Case, the former decision did leave the question somewhat doubtful, we think it was intended by the court in the Neistrath Case to hold specific legacies or devises not chargeable with the payment of general legacies, and shall adhere to this construction of the Code. It may be remarked that in this case it is expressly conceded by the appellants that, "if this real estate is specifically devised, these general legacies found in clause 5 of the will cannot be charged upon such real estate."

Section 1357 of the Civil Code declares that "a legacy of a particular thing, specified and distinguished from all others of the same kind belonging to the testator, is specific; if such legacy fails, resort cannot be had to the other property of the testator." While this definition refers in terms only to legacies, and not to devises, we have no doubt that in this state the question whether a testamentary gift is specific or general is to be determined by the same tests where the subject of the gift is real as where it is personal property. It is true that in England devises of real estate have always been regarded as specific. This resulted from the early statutory rule that a will disposed only of the real estate owned by the testator at the date of the execution of the will. And while the English courts have continued to treat all devises as specific, notwithstanding the later statute whereby wills may pass all real property owned by the testator at the time of his death (18 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law [2d Ed.] 720), it has generally been held in the United States that statutes making wills speak as of the time of the testator's death have the effect of permitting devises to be general, at least as to after-acquired property (Id.; Kelly v. Richardson, 100 Ala. 584). Such statutes are in force in this state. (Civ. Code, §§ 1312, 1332), and the Legislature has in other ways evidenced its intent that real and personal property taken under a will should stand on the same footing. By sections 1358, 1359, and 1360 of the Civil Code, the property of decedents is made liable for the payment of debts and legacies, regardless of its character as real or personal. Sections 1359 and 1360 both speak of property "specifically devised or bequeathed," and, in using the term "specific" indifferently as applied to realty and to personalty, must be taken to use it in the same sense as to both.

A specific legacy (or devise), then, is one of "a particular thing (or parcel of land), specified and distinguished from all others of the same kind belonging to the testator." That the codicil undertakes to devise particular parcels of land, "distinguished from all others of the same kind belonging to the testator," would seem to admit of no doubt, since the various parcels devised are definitely and particularly described. If the devises covered merely the land so described, the appellants would hardly undertake to contend that such devises were not specific. They rely, however, on the words immediately following the description; i. e., "together with all real estate I may hereafter accumulate, as well as moneys at interest, etc., not otherwise appropriated." The argument is that this, read in connection with the last clause of the codicil, is in effect a gift of the residue to the wife and sons of the testator, and that therefore the particular enumeration of certain pieces of property which form a part of the residue does not make the gift of those parcels specific. That the effect of the codicil is to bequeath and devise the residue of the testator's estate to his wife and sons is, if not entirely clear upon the face of the instrument, conclusively settled as to all parties to this controversy by the former decree construing the will and codicil. In that decree we find it adjudged, inter alia, that "all the property of said deceased subject to his testamentary disposition at the time of his death, not in the said will and codicil otherwise specifically provided for, is, by the terms of said will and codicil, divided between his wife and sons." And no doubt it is the general rule that the enumeration of specific articles in a residuary clause will not necessarily make the bequest specific as to such articles. 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 716. This rule has been repeatedly applied to wills which purported to give certain specified property, "and all the rest and residue of my estate," etc. Le Rougetel v. Mann, 63 N. H. 472, 3 Atl. 746; England v. Vestry, 53 Md. 466; Walker's Estate, 3 Rawle, 229. The same rule applies where the gift is of "the rest and residue of my estate, including all my household furniture, ornaments, books, pictures, and utensils." In re Martin, 54 Atl. 589, 25 R. I. 1. See, also, Stehn v. Heyssen, 102 N. W. 1074, 124 Wis. 583.

On the other hand, a different conclusion has been reached where language was used indicating an intent to separate a specific gift from a residuary gift to the same legatee or devisee. In Clarke v. Butler, 1 Meriv. 304, the testator bequeathed all his household lease in London and all his household goods and furniture at Sawbridge, "and as to all my plate, linen, china, pictures, live and dead stock and all the residue of my goods, chattels and personal estate" to a legatee. It was held that the gift was specific as to the lease in London and the household goods and furniture at Sawbridge. In Fitzwilliams v. Kelly, 10 Hare, 866, the testatrix devised certain leaseholds and her shares in the Chelsea waterworks, "and also her stocks, funds and securities for money, and all other her personal estate and effects whatsoever." The leaseholds and shares were held to be specifically bequeathed. In Langdale v. Esmond, 4 Ir. Eq. 576, the will gave the "remainder of my books and paintings, together with the residue of my property"; and the gift of the books and paintings was treated as specific. See 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. Law (2d Ed.) 716, and Hill v. Hill, 11 Jur. (N. S.) 806. In Dauel v. Arnold, 66 N. E. 846, 201 Ill. 570, the will contained the following clause: "Also all my bank stocks and effects in the State Bank of Colfax, valued at $6,300, and also including the several sums due me, or which may be due from my children as heretofore specified, or which may be due me from any sources whatever, and any other property or effects, real or personal of whatsoever kind, which I now have or may have, I devise and bequeath to my wife. * * *" The court held that the legacy of the bank stock was specific, saying "the gift is specific if the specific things are so enumerated as to distinguish them from the residue, as by the use of such words as 'together with,' 'as well as,' 'and also,' and the like."

In short, the question is purely one of construction. The testator's intent is to be determined in each case from a consideration of the particular language employed. A bequest or devise of the residue of an estate is general, because such residue is not ascertainable at the time the will is made. The fact that, in giving such residue, the testator describes, as included in it or forming a part of it, certain specific property owned by him, does not alter the character of the residuary gift. But where the language used indicates an intention to make two distinct gifts, one of specific property and the other of the residue, the specific legacy or devise is not rendered general by the fact that there is a gift of the residue to the same person. We think the language of this codicil brings it within the principle of the cases last cited. The testator indicated, as plainly as language could do it, his intention to give to his wife and his sons the particular parcels of real estate described in the codicil. That he added to this gift the words, "together with all real estate I may hereafter accumulate," etc., did not make the preceding enumeration a mere part of the residuary gift. On the face of the will and the codicil alone, the court below rightly construed the devises of the real estate described in the codicil as specific. In this connection we may notice the finding of fact that at the time of the execution of the codicil the decedent owned sufficient personal property to pay all the general legatees mentioned in the will and codicil. This finding it attacked as unsupported by the evidence. The fact declared in it is merely probative. Whether or not the testator, when he made his will, had sufficient personal property to satisfy the general pecuniary legacies, without resort to the land described in the will, is a circumstance bearing on his intent. If he had no such property, there would be less reason for holding the devises specific, since it will not be presumed that he intended to make general legacies which could not be paid, except out of the realty, and then devised the realty so that it could not be applied to the payment of those legacies. The ultimate fact in issue, however, is whether or not the devises are specific, and it may well be that the finding as to this fact could stand, even though it should be held that there is no evidence to support the probative finding as to the personal property owned by the testator at the date of the codicil. We are of opinion, however, that the evidence justified the conclusion reached by the court regarding the testator's property.

He owned, at the date of the codicil, a one-half interest in the firm of Painter & Co. We shall not undertake to review the complicated mass of testimony that was given regarding the business and condition of this partnership. The relations between the estate of the decedent and the surviving partner have been the subject of litigation which has lasted many years. It is enough for the purposes of this case to say that, if we concede the correctness of the contention of appellants that Jerome B. Painter was largely indebted to the firm on what is called in the record the "School Land Account," there was still sufficient evidence to justify the view that his share of the partnership assets was enough to pay this indebtedness and leave a surplus which would be adequate to discharge the legacies given by paragraph 5 of the will. The court found that all the real property of which the decedent was seised or possessed, or in which he had any interest, except that owned by the firm of Painter & Co., is particularly described in the will. It is urged that the evidence shows that the decedent owned lots 1399 and 1401 in "Gift Map No. 2," Harvey's addition to the city and county of San Francisco. But there was also evidence justifying the conclusion that this property, although standing in the name of J. B. Painter, was in fact owned by the firm of Painter & Co.

It is claimed that the court erred in denying to Adaline Mininger and to Josephus Painter any right to participate in the rents derived from the buildings Nos. 318, 320, and 322 Clay street. It is argued that the gift of a share of these rents, in paragraph 3 of the will, was specific, and that it had been conclusively determined by the former decree construing this will that the codicil did not revoke the specific legacies given by the will. But whether or not this gift of a portion of the rents was specific, and whether or not it was revoked, it was, by the terms of paragraph 3, merely a gift of such rents until the testator's sons, Albert and Walter, should reach the age of 21 years. Both were over this age when the testator died, and hence this gift to Josephus Painter and to Adaline Mininger never took effect.

The appellants assign as error the ruling of the court admitting in evidence a paper dated 1863, shown to be in the handwriting of the decedent, and purporting to contain a statement of the assets and liabilities of Painter & Co. Doubtless such paper was not competent evidence of the condition of the firm's affairs, but it appears to have been offered merely for the purpose of showing the belief of J. B. Painter as to the status of the business. If his belief regarding his property was material, which does not seem to be disputed by appellants, we think his declaration, written or oral, was properly admitted as some evidence of such belief. 16 Cyc. 1183. See Kyle v. Craig, 125 Cal. 107, 57 Pac. 791. The ruling admitting in evidence a "schedule of personal property," dated 1864, is attacked; but, as no exception was taken, the action of the court cannot be reviewed.

Some other points are made on the admission of testimony; but none of them, even if well taken, is of sufficient importance to justify a reversal.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

MACKINTOSH v. AGRICULTURAL FIRE INS. CO. (S. F. 3,498.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1907. On Rehearing March 8, 1907.)

1. INSURANCE—FORFEITURES—CHANGE OF INTEREST.

There is not a change of interest in the insured property, which under a fire policy works a forfeiture, where a contract for purchase thereof is given, which amounts to a mere option, with rights of possession for experimental purposes, subject to free access and management by the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, §§ 795, 799.]

2. SAME—CHANGE OF POSSESSION.

There is not a change of possession of the insured property, which under the fire policy works a forfeiture, where one, given an option to purchase, is given right of possession for experimental purposes, subject to free access and management of the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 823.]

3. SAME—INCREASE OF HAZARD—WRITTEN AUTHORITY—WAIVER.

Notwithstanding the provision in a fire policy that, unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed thereon, it shall be void if the risk is increased, and that no agent of the insurer shall have power to waive a provision of the policy except in writing indorsed thereon, insured has the right to increase the hazard by operation of a smelter on the premises, where for a consideration a general agent gives permission therefor, and attempts to indorse it on the policy, but states the "within smelter," when the smelter was not described therein.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, §§ 1020, 1023, 1024.]

4. SAME—WATCHMAN CLAUSE—OPERATION OF INSURED WORKS.

Under a fire policy, providing: "Permission granted for the above-described works to remain idle, it being warranted by the assured that at all times when the above works are idle or inoperative * * * watchmen shall be * * * on duty at night"—a watchman at night is not required, where the works are operated during the day, and it is not shown that it was usual or customary to operate such works at night.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, §§ 748, 759.]

5. SAME.

There is an operation of the works, so that a watchman is not required, under the provision of a fire policy on smelter works, giving permission for such works to remain idle, that, when the above works are idle or inoperative, watchmen shall be on duty at night, though none of the insured furnaces are operated, but only a small furnace, put up, under a shed near the main building, by one to whom insured had given an option for purchase of the premises, and which he was operating daily, with a force of five or six men, for the purpose of testing the slag and ore on the premises.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 759.]

Beatty, C. J., and Sloss, J., dissenting on rehearing.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; S. P. Hall, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Mackintosh against the Agricultural Fire Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Campbell, Metson & Campbell and Thomas H. Breeze, for appellant. Goodfellow & Eells, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The action is upon a policy of insurance. The judgment was given for the defendant. The appeal was taken from the judgment within 60 days after its rendition, and the record is accompanied by a bill of exceptions. The insurance company, in defense, alleged that there had been four several violations of the terms of the policy by the insured, without the consent of the company, and that the policy had been forfeited thereby, to wit: (1) That there had been a change of possession of the property; (2) that there had been a change of interest in the property insured; (3) that there had been an increase of hazard which was prohibited by the conditions of the policy; (4) that the property insured was idle and inoperative, and the insured had failed to keep a watchman constantly on duty, as the policy, in that event, required. The findings were in favor of the defendant on all these points. There was no substantial conflict in the evidence, and no serious dispute about the facts. The findings were manifestly based upon the court's conclusions as to the meaning and legal effect of the policy and the subsequent transactions of the parties. The decision of the case depends on the question whether or not the findings were justified by the evidence.

1. The first two defenses may be considered together. The change of interest and possession, if any, arose out of a proposed sale by the plaintiff to one G. W. Baker, after the issuance of the policy. A written agreement was executed between them; Mackintosh being the party of the first part, and Baker being the party of the second part. It recited that the price of $22,000 for the property and certain slag and ore situated thereon had been agreed on, and that Baker was desirous of buying it at that price. It thereupon declared that he agreed that he would "purchase said premises and property" for said price, "in the following manner, that is to say: It is agreed between the parties hereto that the said party of the first part shall execute to the said party of the second part a good and sufficient deed of the premises above mentioned and described, together with a bill of sale of the slag and ore situated thereon, and place the same in escrow with A. M. McDonald to be delivered to the party of the second part upon the payment of the said sum of $22,000 on or before sixty days from the date hereof. In case the said $22,000 is not fully paid within sixty days from the date hereof as aforesaid, said premises shall be vacated by the Vulcan Smelting & Refining Company and surrendered by the party of the second part free and clear of all incumbrances of whatsoever kind or nature made or suffered by the said Vulcan Smelting & Refining Company, and shall also surrender to the party of the first part the product of all ores smelted or reduced in its furnace from said slag-dumps while occupying the same. It is further agreed between the parties hereto that, during the time the party of the second part is in possession of said property, the said party of the first part or his agent A. M. McDonald shall have free access to said property and its management in every respect, the same as though to all intents and purposes the work was being done by him, instead of by the party of the second part, and during the time said work is carried forward the said party of the second part shall in every way protect said property and premises from any encroachments or depredations or damage of any kind, and not endanger the said premises by fire, or from any other cause. The sum of $400 is hereby acknowledged to have been received upon this contract by the party of the first part, and the further sum of $173 is to be paid to A. M. McDonald upon demand, which said sum, in case of purchase, is to be credited as part of the purchase price, and in case of default is to be considered as rent of the premises during the occupation of the party of the second part, as herein stated, and forfeited to the party of the first part. Time is of the essence of this contract. This contract shall not be assigned by the party of the second part until payment is made." (The italics are ours.)

Baker was acting in the premises as agent of the Vulcan Company. Prior to the execution of this agreement, a previous agreement had been made between the same parties, whereby Baker had obtained an option for 60 days for the purchase of said premises and property. That time had expired, and this agreement was made for the purpose of renewing the option. Under the previous agreement, Baker had taken possession of the premises and put up thereon a small six-ton smelting furnace, which he had been operating, for the purpose of testing the slag and ore upon the premises, in order to be the better able to determine whether or not he desired to purchase the same at the price fixed. In pursuance of the agreement quoted above, it was understood that Baker should remain in possession of the premises for the purpose of making such further test of said slag and ore as he might deem necessary to enable him to determine what he desired to do in regard to the purchase of the property. When the time expired, Baker surrendered the property and refused to purchase.

Taking the circumstances thus surrounding the parties and the language of the contract together, we are of the opinion that it was not an absolute agreement on the part of Baker to purchase the property, but was simply an option whereby he had the privilege of purchasing the same at any time within the 60 days mentioned, by payment of the price as therein provided. There was therefore no change of interest in the premises by virtue of the contract. The title, interest, and estate in the property remained in Mackintosh, subject to be divested only by the payment of the money as provided in the contract. Upon failure to pay the money as provided therein, without any further act whatever on the part of Baker, the privilege to purchase, which he had obtained under the contract, ceased, and the property then remained free from any right in him whatever. All that he possessed, prior to the payment of such purchase money, was a mere right at his option to purchase or not. This right did not create an "interest" in him, within the meaning of that term as used in the policy of insurance. The change of interest referred to in the policy, in view of the well-known rule of construction applied to insurance policies requiring them to be construed most strongly against the insurer, refers to some change of interest which would make the loss, in case of destruction, fall upon the buyer, so that by such change the original policy holder would lose his interest in maintaining the property and protecting it from fire. It does not refer to a mere right which another party may acquire which does not change the risk in case of loss, nor give the third party more than a mere option to purchase the property. This rule regarding the change of risk might be different if it were not for the qualified character of the possession which was given to Baker under the arrangement between the parties. Baker was to have possession of the property merely for the purpose of operating the smelter in order to test the slag and ore, and the seller, notwithstanding such possession, was to have "free access to said property and its management in every respect the same as though to all intents and purposes the work was being done by him," instead of by Baker. Under these circumstances, a loss by fire, occurring before the exercise by Baker of his option, would fall upon Mackintosh. If it was caused by the negligence of Baker, Mackintosh could recover from him the damage, both by reason of the express covenant in the contract and by the general principles of law requiring him to exercise ordinary care in the use of another's property. This emphasizes and illustrates the proposition that the loss would be caused by the destruction of the property of Mackintosh. If it were the property of Baker, Mackintosh would suffer no damage. The contract could not have been enforced by Mackintosh as a contract of sale and purchase. The terms of the policy required a change of interest in order to work a forfeiture. This contract cannot be construed to have passed any interest whatever in the property to Baker, but merely a prospective right to obtain an interest. The interest would pass when he exercised the option, and not before.

The same considerations apply to the contention that there was a change of possession of the premises which Baker was holding under the owner, Mackintosh. He had no exclusive right to the property, and it further appeared that, during the occupancy of Baker, a watchman was kept on the property who was under employment and was holding for the seller, Mackintosh. Such common possession did not work the change of possession which would be required to avoid the policy. Furthermore, as will be hereafter seen, we think the conduct of the agents of the company was such as to waive any forfeiture on the ground of this particular change of possession.

2. The next defense is that there was an increase of hazard caused by the acts of the insured which, by the terms of the policy, would cause its forfeiture. This increase of hazard arose from the erection upon the premises of a certain six-ton furnace by Mr. Baker, which was used by him for the purpose of testing the slag and ore upon the premises. This was erected some time in January, 1901, two months prior to the agreement above recited between Mackintosh and Baker. Before the erection of this smelting furnace, and before making the arrangement whereby Baker was to have possession of the works and operate the furnace for that purpose, the plaintiff's agent called upon the general agent of the defendant company, and explained to him the circumstances and the proposed erection and operation of the furnace thereon for the purposes mentioned. The agent caused a rate to be fixed, and thereupon, gave permission to erect said furnace and operate the same for 60 days, charging $4.20 for the privilege. This permission expired upon the 16th of March following. The agreement above quoted was executed on that day, and thereupon the parties again called upon the general agent of the insurance company and explained their desire for a renewal of the permission and the purpose to continue the operation of this six-ton furnace for smelting the ore and slag on the premises. Thereupon the agent stated that it would be satisfactory to the company, and gave the desired permission, again charging the additional sum of $4.20 for the privilege of so doing, which sum was paid, and the policy delivered to the agent for the proper indorsement. The policy provides that, "unless otherwise provided by agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto," the policy should be void if the hazard be increased, or if any change, other than by the death of the insured, takes place in the interest, title, or possession of the property. It further provides that: "No officer, agent, or other representative of the company shall have power to waive any provision or condition of this policy except such as by the terms of this policy may be the subject of agreement indorsed hereon or added hereto, and as to such provisions or conditions, no officer, agent, or representative shall have such power, or be deemed or held to have waived such provisions or conditions, unless such waiver, if any, shall be written upon or attached hereto, nor shall any privilege or permission affecting the insurance under this policy exist or be claimed by the insured unless so written or attached." The indorsement made upon the policy by the general agent of the company was as follows: "In consideration of $4.20 additional permission is hereby granted to operate the within described smelter for a period of forty-five days from this date. [Signed] Edward Brown & Sons, General Agents." At the time this permission was given, the six-ton smelter was on the premises, but it was not mentioned or described in the policy. The indorsement therefore did not upon its face give permission to operate the six-ton smelter, although doubtless it was so intended. We must consider the case upon the theory that no sufficient indorsement was made of the permission agreed upon and paid for. It is apparent from all the evidence that the parties all acted on the belief that the indorsement gave them permission to operate the six-ton smelter, without invalidating the policy, and that the general agents of the company knew they so believed. It will be perceived that the general agent of the company was made fully acquainted with the increase of hazard and the change of occupation or possession contemplated by the parties, and that he agreed that the same might be done, and undertook to attach to the policy the required written permission for the contemplated changes. It further appears from the evidence that the parties in reliance upon this arrangement, proceeded to operate the six-ton smelter and maintain the divided possession whereby Baker continued to operate the smelter and occupy the premises in conjunction with the watchman employed by the plaintiff.

The effect of such limitations upon the power of agents to waive the conditions in a policy has been a frequent subject of decision in the courts. The doctrine is well settled that such stipulations and limitations in a policy regarding the powers of agents, and the manner of waiving its conditions, do not preclude a waiver by the conduct of authorized agents in regard to future operations upon the premises. In 3 Cooley's Briefs on Insurance, p. 2607, with respect to limitations of this character, it is said: "Even this limitation will not prevent an insured from relying on a parol subsequent waiver by an authorized agent or officer, as 'there can be no more force in an agreement in writing not to agree by parol than in a parol agreement not to agree in writing,'" Orient Ins. Co. v. Knight, 197 Ill. 190, 64 N. E. 339; Hanover F. & I. Co. v. Dole, 50 N. E. 772, 20 Ind. App. 333; Home Ins. Co. v. Gibson, 72 Miss. 53, 17 South. 13; Wilson v. Commercial Ins. Co., 51 S. C. 540, 29 S. E. 245, 64 Am. St. Rep. 700; Lamberton v. Conn. F. I. Co., 39 Minn. 129, 39 N. W. 76, 1 L. R. A. 222; Renier v. Dwelling H. I. Co., 74 Wis. 89, 42 N. W. 208. And, again, with respect to subsequent changes, it is said: "If an insurer, or authorized agent, consents to changes which are required to be indorsed on the policy, and promises to make the necessary indorsement, having access to the policy for this purpose, but fails to make the indorsement through mistake, oversight, or neglect, the insurer will be bound, if not by waiver, at least by an estoppel in pais." 3 Cooley's Briefs on Ins., 2617. To this point very many cases are cited. And further on this subject, in the same work (page 2658), it is said: "If an insurance company, with knowledge of facts vitiating a policy, by its acts, declarations, or dealings leads the insured to regard himself as protected by the policy, or induces him to incur trouble or expense, such acts, transactions, or declarations will operate as a waiver of forfeiture, and estop the company from relying thereon as a defense to an action on the policy." The permission to operate the six-ton smelter was made in consideration of the additional rate charged and paid. It was, in effect, a new contract executed between the parties, a contract which the law does not require to be in writing. Knarston v. Manhattan L. I. Co., 140 Cal. 57, 73 Pac. 740. The agent who made this new contract was a general agent of the company, and had authority to issue and deliver policies. "Agents authorized to issue and deliver policies are regarded as having the same power to waive conditions in policies as the companies themselves, and can therefore waive conditions and forfeitures." 3 Cooley's Briefs, p. 2479; Id., pp. 2504, 2505. This rule includes all persons empowered to conclude contracts of insurance without first referring the negotiations to their principals, such as those who have "full power to effect contracts of insurance, to fix rates of premiums, to consent to changes, to make indorsements, and cancel policies." Id., p. 2480. Such limitations do not prevent the making of new contracts by the company or its authorized agents. Home Ins. Co. v. Nichols, 72 S. W. 440; Home Ins. Co. v. Gibson, 72 Miss. 58, 17 South. 13. And, as a general rule, a subsequent parol waiver by a general agent of conditions in a policy are valid, although the policy requires them to be in writing. Farnum v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 83 Cal. 261, 23 Pac. 869, 17 Am. St. Rep. 233; 3 Cooley's Briefs, pp. 2601, 2602–2608. Waivers such as that here made, constituting, as they do, a new contract upon a sufficient consideration, need not be evidenced by a writing, and need not be indorsed on the policy, no matter what limitations or conditions are expressed in the policy, provided, always, they are made by an agent who would otherwise have authority to make the contract. 3 Cooley's Briefs, p. 2695.

In Gladding v. Insurance Co., 66 Cal. 6, 4 Pac. 764, the agent who attempted to waive the conditions was a local agent, and not, as here, a general agent, who, for contractual purposes, impersonated the company itself. The general remarks contained in the opinion in that case cannot be deemed authority, so far as they indicate a lack of power in the general agent to waive such conditions by acts amounting to a new contract, or an estoppel, and without indorsement upon or attached to the policy. In Shuggart v. Lycoming Fire Ins. Co., 55 Cal. 408, and Enos v. Sun Ins. Co., 67 Cal. 621, 8 Pac. 379, it was held that a mere local agent was without such authority, unless specially empowered. This is the substance of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Northern Ass'n Co. v. Grand View B. A., 183 U. S. 308, 22 Sup. Ct. 153, 154, 46 L. Ed. 213. In the present case, it clearly appears that the agents who gave the permission and made the written indorsement, were the general agents of the company with full powers. This, indeed, is not controverted. The failure to accurately describe the six-ton smelter in the slip attached to the policy was the fault of the defendant, and any attempt on its part to avoid the policy because of such failure would at once create an estoppel which would prevent the company from taking advantage of the misdescription. We are therefore of the opinion that the company waived the forfeiture which otherwise might have been caused by the increase of risk and partial change of possession in this case, and that it is now estopped from claiming such forfeiture after having knowingly allowed the parties to act in the belief that they had received the privilege which they were exercising and for which they had paid the additional premium.

3. The remaining defense is that the plaintiff has violated the following clause in the policy: "Permission granted for the above described works to remain idle, it being warranted by the assured that at all times when the above works are idle or inoperative, one or more watchmen shall be constantly on duty at night." At the time of the fire there was a watchman, in the employ of the plaintiff, on the premises, whose duty it was to keep guard and watch against danger from fire. The fire occurred on April 2, 1901, near midnight, and at that time, instead of being on watch, he had gone to bed and was asleep. We think, under these circumstances, it must be admitted that the plaintiff was guilty of a violation of this condition, if, as a fact, he was bound, under the other circumstances attending the case, to keep a watchman constantly on duty during the nighttime. The obligation to keep a watchman on duty would not be observed by having a man asleep upon the premises. Because of this failure of the watchman to keep on duty, the policy would be void, unless the works were neither idle nor inoperative at the time of the fire, within the meaning of the above clause. This clause did not require that the plaintiff should have been running the works day and night. What is contemplated by such a clause is the ordinary operation of the works during usual and customary hours. Whitney v. Ins. Co., 72 N. Y. 117, 28 Am. Rep. 116; Halpin v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 118 N. Y. 165, 23 N. E. 482; Kansas, etc., Ins. Co. v. Metcalf, 53 Pac. 68, 59 Kan. 383. There was no evidence that it was usual or customary to operate such works at night, and the presumption is not that such is the case, but the contrary. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963, subds. 20, 28. The effect of such proof would be to establish a forfeiture, and, consequently, the burden was on the defendant to prove the usage or custom. In the absence of such proof, we must conclude that the policy did not require that there should be a watchman on duty at night during times when the works were in operation during the day.

From the 16th of March until the night of the fire, the six-ton furnace erected by Baker under a shed on the premises 30 feet from the main building was in daily operation in the smelting of slag and ore. This operation required the work of five or six men on the premises. In connection with this work, they were using one of the boilers belonging to the works and the water pipes and tools of the plaintiff, and were occupying the buildings for the storage of ore and other materials. The six-ton furnace was a smelter and was used to smelt the slag and ore in a manner substantially the same as that pursued in the use of the fifty-ton smelters covered by the policy. These four large smelters were not in use, nor was any other part of the buildings occupied in the work, except as above stated. Under these circumstances, we think the works were not "idle or inoperative," within the meaning of the policy. Forfeitures are not favored in law. It was not necessary that the works should be kept in full operation, or that all the furnaces should be kept going every day. A comparatively slight operation would suffice. The operation in good faith of one of the original furnaces would, so far as we can perceive, as effectually serve to prevent danger from fire at night, which was the object to be attained, as the full operation of all. Doubtless, if Mackintosh himself had built an additional smelter on the grounds, and had operated the works with that alone, leaving the others idle, it would have been a sufficient performance of the obligation to run the works when there was no night watchman. The increase of risk by the erection and operation of the six-ton furnace, as we have seen, was waived. That point being disposed of in that way, it is of no consequence, and does not change the legal rights of the parties, that the furnace in use was not one of the four which were insured, nor that it was used by the plaintiff in person, but by Baker under the direction of the plaintiff, or by his permission. There was a substantial operation of the works, which is all that was required. Bole v. New Hampshire F. I. Co., 159 Pa. 55, 28 Atl. 205; City, etc., Mill Co. v. Ins. Co., 72 Mich. 654, 40 N. W. 777, 16 Am. St. Rep. 552; Prieger v. Exchange M. I. Co., 6 Wis. 104. In McKenzie v. Scottish U. & N. Ins. Co., 112 Cal. 548, 44 Pac. 922; and Brehm L. Co. v. Svea Ins. Co., 79 Pac. 34, 36 Wash. 520, 68 L. R. A. 109, there was no operation of the premises at all comparable to that here shown, and those cases are not in point. As the works were not idle or inoperative, the necessity for a night watchman did not exist, and the fact that one was employed, but failed to watch, did not affect the validity of the policy.

The findings are not sustained by the evidence, and the judgment is therefore erroneous.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

On Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. Rehearing denied.

SLOSS, J. I dissent.

BEATTY, C. J. I dissent from the order denying a rehearing of this cause. It is conceded that there was no watchman on duty, but it is held that the works were in operation. This conclusion, in my opinion, is opposed to any reasonable construction of the policy.

I dissent, also, from the doctrine that the parties to a written contract cannot bind themselves by a stipulation that it shall not be altered except by an agreement in writing. By such a stipulation they merely import into the particular contract the beneficent principle of the statute of frauds, thereby protecting themselves from the consequences of false claims of alterations.

I deprecate especially the disposition of courts to deprive insurers on slight and insufficient grounds of the benefit of proper stipulations and conditions inserted in their policies for the legitimate and laudable purpose of compelling the insured to protect the insured property from unnecessary and easily prevented hazards. The necessary effect of such a course of decision is to increase premium rates, and the final result, in the long run, is that careful and honest policy holders pay for the losses of the reckless and dishonest.

MACKINTOSH v. AMERICAN FIRE INS. CO. (S. F. 3,497.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 6, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 8, 1907.)

INSURANCE — FIRE POLICY — WATCHMAN CLAUSE.

Under the provision of a fire policy on a smelter, that, during such time as the works are idle or not in operation, whether closed for repairs, or during the absence of workmen, or otherwise, a watchman shall be on duty constantly, day and night, where the works are operated during the day, and it is not shown that it is usual or customary to operate such works at night, it is not necessary that there be a watchman at night.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; S. P. Hall, Judge.

Action by Charles H. Mackintosh against the American Fire Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., and Sloss, J., dissenting.

Campbell, Metson & Campbell, G. W. Baker, and Thomas H. Breeze, for appellant. Goodfellow & Eells, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. Appeal from a judgment for defendant in an action upon a policy of fire insurance.

The property destroyed was covered by various policies in addition to the one sued upon in this action, and actions were brought upon these different policies. In one of these cases (Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co.), judgment went for the defendant, and that judgment has just been reversed by this court. See opinion filed in Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Insurance Co. (S. F. 3,498) 89 Pac. 102. The present case presents the same facts as those considered by the court in the Agricultural Company's Case. It is true that the phraseology of the "watchman clause" differs somewhat in the two cases. In the Agricultural Case the policy read: "Permission granted for the above-described works to remain idle, it being warranted by the assured that at all times when the above works are idle or inoperative, one or more watchmen shall be constantly on duty at night." In this case the policy contained the following: "Warranted by the insured that, during such time as the within-described buildings or works are idle or not in operation, whether closed for repairs, or during the absence of workmen, or otherwise (except as otherwise herein provided), one or more watchmen shall be on duty constantly, day and night, in and immediately about the said buildings or works, and, if the said buildings or works shall at any time remain shut down for more than thirty (30) days, notice shall be given this company, and permission to remain so shut down be obtained and indorsed hereon, or this policy shall be null and void." But it is not claimed by the appellant that this clause has, so far as the points raised on this appeal are concerned, any different effect from that of the clause in the agricultural policy, and we think the views expressed by us on the other appeal are equally applicable here.

For the reasons stated in the opinion in Mackintosh v. Agricultural Fire Insurance Company, the judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

PEOPLE ex rel. CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. LOS ANGELES INDEPENDENT GAS CO. (L. A. 1,705.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1907.)

GAS—GAS COMPANIES—FRANCHISES—FORFEITURE.

Where a gas company acquired a franchise under Const. art. 11, § 19, providing that, in the absence of public works for supplying artificial light, any corporation shall have the privilege of using the public streets for laying pipes to supply the city and its inhabitants with gas or other illuminating light, etc., and such company exercised no control over its gas furnished to consumers after it had passed through its meters, it was not subject to a forfeiture of its franchise because some of the gas had been used by its patrons for heating purposes.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Quo warranto by the people, on relation of the city of Los Angeles, against the Los Angeles Independent Gas Company. From a judgment for defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and W. P. Mathews, and J. S. Chapman, for appellant. Lynn Helm and Lee, Scott, Bailey & Chase, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is a proceeding in the nature of quo warranto, brought by the people of the state, on the relation of the city of Los Angeles, for the purpose of ousting and excluding the defendant, a corporation, from exercising a certain franchise. The main averment of the complaint is that defendant "has usurped and is unlawfully exercising the franchise of laying pipes in the public streets and alleys of said city of Los Angeles for carrying gas for heat and power, and of supplying and distributing, by means of said pipes, gas for heat and power to a large number of the inhabitants of said city." Judgment was for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment, and also from an order denying its motion for a new trial.

The material facts of the case, found by the court and supported by the evidence, are these: A year or two before the commencement of this action defendant had laid pipes under certain streets of the city of Los Angeles, through which it supplies illuminating gas for the use of the inhabitants of that city. It claimed the right and franchise to do this under section 19 of article 11 of the state Constitution. This section provides, in substance, that in any city where there are no public works for supplying water or artificial light any individual or corporation shall, under the direction of the superintendent of public streets, and under such regulations as the municipality may prescribe, "have the privilege of using the public streets and thoroughfares thereof, and of laying down pipes and conduits therein, and connections therewith, so far as may be necessary for introducing into and supplying such city and inhabitants either with gas light or other illuminating light, or with fresh water for domestic and all other purposes, upon the condition that the municipal government shall have the right to regulate the charges thereof." The respondent complied with all the provisions of said section. It procured the gas with which it supplied the inhabitants of the city from another corporation, called the "Los Angeles Suburban Gas Company," which furnishes defendant with illuminating gas, and this gas, without any chemical or other change, is supplied to defendant's customers. When used, it necessarily generates both light and heat. The gas is delivered to the consumers at certain meters on their premises, and after it passes beyond the meters it is the property of the consumers, and defendant has no further control over it. Some of these consumers use the gas, not only for illuminating purposes, but also for heating and cooking, and a few—not more than "one in fifty"—use it for heating purposes exclusively. It may be assumed that defendant knew that some of the gas furnished by it was used for heating as well as for illumination. And the contention of appellant is that the franchise of having pipes in the streets has been forfeited because the gas furnished by it has not been used for illumination alone, but has been used also for the other purposes above mentioned. This contention is, in our opinion, not maintainable. Indeed, this court has determined the matter adversely to appellant's contention by its decision in Re Johnston, 137 Cal. 115, 69 Pac. 973, and in Denninger v. Recorder's Court, 145 Cal. 629, 638, 79 Pac. 360. In each of those cases the franchise of a party under said section 19 of the Constitution to maintain pipes in the streets for distributing illuminating gas was attacked on the ground that the gas was being used for heating as well as for illuminating purposes. In the Johnston Case the court said: "The suggestion on the part of the respondent that it is the purpose of the corporation herein to supply gas through its pipes for other purposes than light, even if founded upon fact, does not deprive it from exercising the right conferred upon it by the Constitution, or authorize the municipality to prevent it from enjoying that right. Even though the pipes, when laid, may be available for other purposes than supplying gaslight, the corporation is not thereby deprived of the right which the Constitution has given it to lay its pipes in the streets, nor can it be required as a condition of exercising that right to declare that the gas to be supplied by it shall be used exclusively for illumination, or is to be supplied solely for such use. It may be added that it is not made to appear that the streets will be subject to any other or greater obstruction than is requisite for the supplying of gas for illuminating purposes." In Denninger v. Recorder's Court, 145 Cal. 638, 79 Pac. 364, the court say: "Section 19 of article 11 does not directly confer upon any individual or company the right to lay pipes and conduits in the streets of a city in order to supply gas for cooking and heating purposes, but only so far as may be necessary for supplying the city and its inhabitants with gas light. The same gas, however, which furnishes light also serves for cooking and heating, and the pipes and connections necessary for the one purpose make the gas available for the other purposes without subjecting the streets to any additional burden. It was accordingly held in Ex parte Johnston, 137 Cal. 122, 69 Pac. 973, that an intention to permit the use of gas for other than illuminating purposes afforded no ground for prohibiting the laying of the pipes by a party claiming the benefit of the constitutional grant." The burden and servitude, if any, which is imposed on the streets and public by the laying of the pipes is accomplished as soon as the pipes have been laid and the surface of the street restored to its proper condition; and that burden is in no way increased by the fact that the use of the gas carried through the pipe is not confined to illumination. Its use by some persons for heating purposes is a great convenience to those persons, while it is not a grievance to any one; and such use affords no just or legal reason for depriving respondent of its franchise.

Appellant contends for a reversal because it contends the findings are inconsistent. We do not see any inconsistency in the findings, and, at all events, none that are material. The fact is that there is only one material question in the case, and that is: Has the respondent forfeited its franchise because some of the gas distributed by it through its pipes has been used for heating purposes? This question is amply presented by the transcript, and it is not evaded by the minor points made by appellant. There is nothing in the other points which calls for special notice.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

TRADERS' INS. CO. OF CHICAGO, ILL. v. AACHEN & M. FIRE INS. CO.

(S. F. 3,660.)

INSURANCE — REINSURANCE — AVOIDING RELEASE—MISTAKE.

Plaintiff reinsured part of its risk with defendant, and then, on defendant's request, placed such reinsurance with another, commencing on a certain day, on which day it returned to defendant its written obligation. On the day previous, unknown to them, the insured property was burned. Held, that the release, not being made in contemplation of a prior loss, was made under a mistake of fact, against which relief would be granted.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Traders' Insurance Company of Chicago, Ill., against the Aachen & Munich Fire Insurance Company. From an order granting defendant a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Charles W. Slack, for appellant. Van Ness & Redman and T. C. Van Ness, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. On the trial of this action the plaintiff had judgment according to the prayer of its complaint. The defendant moved for a new trial on the grounds of errors of law occurring at the trial and insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision. The motion was granted, and the plaintiff now appeals from the order granting a new trial. It is not claimed by the respondent that the court below made erroneous rulings of law which would justify the making of the order complained of. The facts in the case appear without substantial conflict, and the question before us, therefore, is simply whether upon these facts plaintiff was or was not entitled to judgment.

The plaintiff and defendant are corporations engaged in the business of fire insurance. On the 16th day of January, 1901, the plaintiff issued its policy of insurance to the Menan Milling Company, insuring said company in the sum of $3,000 from the "16th day of January, 1901, to the 16th day of January, 1902, against loss or damage by fire to a building and grain elevator situated at Menan, Idaho. On January 21, 1901," the plaintiff, desiring to be reinsured in part, offered $1,000 of the risk to the defendant, the Aachen & Munich Fire Insurance Company, and that company delivered to plaintiff a "covering note" in the sum of $1,000. This covering note or memorandum contained the following language: "From January 21, 1901, at noon. Insurance under this covering note to cease twenty days from this date at noon, or at such time prior thereto as this company's policy may be issued on above described risk. Dated at San Francisco, January 21, 1901." The plaintiff subsequently sent a formal application for reinsurance to the Aachen & Munich Insurance Company, and this was accepted and signed. On January 25, 1901, the defendant requested the plaintiff to place the reinsurance elsewhere. Thereupon the plaintiff made application to the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Company, which issued a covering note or memorandum which by its terms was to cease "ten days from January 25 at noon, or at such time prior thereto as the policy of this society may be issued on above named risk." On the same day, January 25, 1901, the plaintiff returned to the defendant the covering note which it had issued to plaintiff, and the application which plaintiff had made to the defendant was destroyed. It was subsequently learned that on January 24th, the day before the cancellation, the building and elevator in question had been damaged by fire, causing a loss on account of which plaintiff was obliged to pay, under its policy, the sum of $2,450 to the Menan Milling Company, and it was further obliged to pay $102.45 as necessary expenses of adjustment. At the time when the covering note was surrendered and canceled neither the plaintiff nor the defendant had any knowledge of the fact that a fire had occurred. On learning this fact, the plaintiff tendered to the defendant the premium for the reinsurance, and demanded payment of $850.82, the proportion of the loss represented by defendant's covering note. On defendant's refusal to accept the tender or to make the payment, this action was commenced; the plaintiff praying that the cancellation of the covering note be set aside, and demanding judgment for $850.82.

The plaintiff contends that, having surrendered the covering note under a mistake of fact, it is entitled to be relieved from this mistake, and to recover from the defendant the amount which was actually due when the covering note was canceled. Such was the view originally taken by the learned judge of the trial court, but upon motion for a new trial he appears to have come to the opposite conclusion. We think the result first reached was the right one. On the 25th of January, 1901, when the covering note was surrendered, the defendant was under a fixed liability to the plaintiff amounting to $850.82. The plaintiff, not knowing that such liability had accrued, surrendered it to the defendant in exchange for a release of the obligation to pay a much smaller sum as premium. It goes without saying that the covering note would not have been delivered for cancellation if the plaintiff had been aware that the loss had already occurred. It makes no material difference whether we say that the plaintiff consented to the cancellation in the belief that the insured property had not been burned, or, adopting the language of the respondent, say that the plaintiff acted in ignorance of the fact that a loss had occurred. In either view its consent was given through mistake and was therefore subject to rescission. Civ. Code, §§ 1566, 1567. "Mistake of fact is a mistake, not caused by the neglect of a legal duty on the part of the person making the mistake, and consisting in: 1. An unconscious ignorance or forgetfulness of a fact past or present, material to the contract; or, 2. Belief in the present existence of a thing material to the contract, which does not exist, or in the past existence of such a thing, which has not existed." Civ. Code, § 1577. If the plaintiff did not act under a "belief in the present existence" of the property insured it was at least in "unconscious ignorance" of the fact that the property had been injured by fire. That the occurrence of a fire destroying or injuring the property insured was a fact material to the contract (i. e., of cancellation) is manifest. There would seem, accordingly, to be no reason why the party who acted under the influence of such mistake should not be permitted to be relieved from the effect of its action upon offering to place the other party in the position which it occupied before. It is a familiar doctrine that one who has parted with money or property under a mistake of fact may recover what he has parted with, in the absence of circumstances which would render such recovery inequitable as against the defendant. In this case the success of the plaintiff would not subject the defendant to any loss which in equity and justice it ought not to suffer. The sum recovered would be merely the amount which the defendant had, for an adequate consideration, agreed to pay on the occurrence of the event which has actually taken place. The defendant would be deprived of nothing except the right to set up a release of an existing liability given by a creditor who was not aware that any liability existed, and who would not have given the release if it had been aware of the existence of the liability. It is argued the cancellation of the covering note was intended to operate as a surrender of all liability, past as well as future. This is no doubt true, but it does not answer the point that the plaintiff was acting under a mistake of a material fact when it consented to the cancellation. Not knowing that a loss had occurred, it intended and agreed to wipe out all liability, but it would not have so agreed had it known the facts. Plaintiff's application to be relieved from the consequences of its action presupposes that, unless so relieved, the defendant's liability on the covering note would be absolutely extinguished.

The respondent contends, further, that, while the appellant surrendered the covering note in ignorance of the fact that a loss had occurred, it did so knowing that a loss might have occurred. No doubt it was open to the plaintiff to consent to cancel the reinsurance, agreeing at the same time to take the chance of any loss that might have occurred in the meanwhile. "Where parties knowingly predicate a settlement upon uncertain or contingent matters or circumstances, and where the consequent risk which each is to encounter is taken into consideration in the stipulation assented to, the contract will be valid notwithstanding the mistake of one of the parties." 20 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 815. This principle is applied in cases where a policy is issued insuring property from a date anterior to the execution of the policy. The insurer is bound to pay a loss occurring between the date fixed for the commencement of the insurance and the actual execution of the policy although the fact of such loss was not known when the policy was issued. And this stands upon the ground that the risk is one expressly contracted for. Ins. Co. v. Hallock, 27 N. J. Law, 645, 72 Am. Dec. 379. But the facts of the present case do not bring it within this rule. We see no reason why the intent to surrender an accrued claim, the existence of which was not known, should be imputed to the plaintiff in the absence of an express understanding to that effect; and there is nothing here to evidence such understanding. In this respect, as in its main features generally, the case bears a close resemblance to Riegel v. American Life Ins. Co., 140 Pa. 201, 21 Atl. 392, 11 L. R. A. 857, 23 Am. St. Rep. 225. There the defendant had issued to Riegel, the plaintiff's intestate, a policy of insurance for $6,000 on the life of one Leisenring. Reigel died after paying the premiums for some years. The plaintiff his widow and administratrix, in order to be relieved from the burden of the annual premiums, surrendered the policy to the company, taking in exchange a paid-up policy for $2,500. In fact, although the fact was not known to either the plaintiff or the company, Leisenring had died before the exchange of policies was made. It was held that the mistake under which both parties had acted entitled the plaintiff to be relieved from the exchange and to be reinstated to her rights on the original policy. This view was restated by the court on a second appeal. Reigel v. American Life Ins. Co., 153 Pa. 134, 25 Atl. 1070, 19 L. R. A. 166. It is argued by the respondent that in the Riegel Case there was no consideration for the surrender by plaintiff, she being then under no obligation to pay further premiums, whereas here plaintiff was by the cancellation relieved from its existing liability to pay a premium. But this distinction does not affect the principle upon which the Riegel Case was decided. As was said by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania on the second appeal: "In many cases prominence is given to failure of consideration resulting from mutual mistake or ignorance of material facts, but entire failure of consideration is not an essential ingredient in any case."

Much stress is laid by respondent on the dealings between the plaintiff and the Norwich Union Fire Insurance Company; it being claimed that plaintiff transferred its reinsurance from the defendant to the Norwich Union, and that this conclusively shows plaintiff's intent to release defendant from any possible liability, past or future. But the covering note of the Norwich Union did not begin until January 25th, and could not cover a loss occurring on the 24th. If plaintiff intended to substitute the new insurance for the old, such intention was based on the belief that no loss had yet occurred. And, while the plaintiff subsequently applied to the Norwich Union for a policy running from January 16, 1901, the undisputed testimony shows that this application was never acted upon or accepted. Even if it could be said that the Norwich Union did reinsure $1,500 of the risk from January 16, 1901, such reinsurance was not effected until January 29th. At that time the transactions between plaintiff and defendant had been closed, and a subsequent dealing between plaintiff and a third company could not destroy the rights vested in plaintiff upon the surrender of the covering note to defendant on January 25th.

The order appealed from is reversed.

HARDY et al. v. MARTIN et al.

(S. F. 4,006.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 19, 1907.)

1. Witnesses — Confidential Communications — Attorney and Client — Termination of Relation.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1881, subd. 2, providing that an attorney cannot, without the consent of his client, be examined as to any communication made by the client to him, or his advice given thereon in the course of professional employment, letters written by complainants to their attorney with reference to a conveyance of land to decedent, and containing admissions regarding facts sought to be established on the trial of a suit to vacate the same, were inadmissible over complainants' objection, though the relation of attorney and client did not exist at the time the conveyance was made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 747–751.]

2. Appeal—Prejudicial Error.

Where, in a suit to set aside a deed, certain letters written by complainants to their attorney, containing admissions, were erroneously admitted in evidence over complainants' objection, and they could not be said to have been without effect on the decision in favor of defendants, the error was prejudicial.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Suit by Lilian B. Hardy and another against Ada C. Martin, as administratrix of the estate of Robert C. Chambers, deceased, and others. From a judgment in favor of defendants, and from an order denying complainants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Reversed.

Dorn, Dorn & Savage, for appellants. Aylett R. Cotton (L. A. Redman, of counsel), for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is an action to set aside a deed, alleged to have been procured by the fraud and undue influence of the deceased, Robert C. Chambers. The plaintiffs are the nieces of the deceased wife of Robert C. Chambers. Their mother died in 1875 when they were small children. In 1884 Chambers was married to their mother's sister, Eudora A. Chambers, and from that time until her death in 1897, and afterwards until their respective marriages, the plaintiffs lived with Robert C. Chambers as members of his household and family. In 1896 Chambers conveyed to his wife the property in dispute. She had made a will in 1884, devising all her property to her said husband, in trust, for the equal benefit of the two plaintiffs and their grandmother on their mother's side, Mrs. Tolles, which trust, however, was to cease with respect to the plaintiffs when they respectively became 18 years of age. They arrived at that age several years before the death of Mrs. Chambers, and, consequently, upon her death, they each became seized of an undivided one-third of her estate in their own right and entirely free from the trust. The charge is that after the death of Mrs. Chambers, and while he was executor of her will, Robert C. Chambers obtained from them a conveyance of their shares in the real estate described in the complaint, consisting of about 46 acres of land, situate in Butte county in this state, and referred to in the evidence as the Palermo property, and that said conveyance was obtained from them by means of fraud, undue influence, and without any consideration. The fraud charged consisted of promises that he would make a will giving them a substantial part of his estate, which was large and valuable, and that he would also, during his lifetime, give them sums of money for their use, which promises, it is alleged, he had no intention of performing. The undue influence alleged arose from the long residence of the plaintiffs during their tender years as members of the family of said Chambers, and the mutual affection and esteem which arose therefrom, whereby they had learned to trust him and have great confidence in him. The action was tried by the court, and findings and judgment were given in favor of the defendants. The plaintiffs appeal from the judgment, and also from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

From the statement used on the motion for a new trial, it appears that after the death of their aunt, Mrs. Chambers, the plaintiffs had employed an attorney to look after their interest in the estate, and that from that time until the execution of the deed in controversy, said attorney had advised them from time to time concerning the same, and had been consulted by them during negotiations leading up to the execution of the conveyance, and that while these were pending they had each written to him several letters relating to the matter, containing some admissions in regard to the facts sought to be established on the trial of the case. Upon the trial, the defendants offered these letters in evidence. Objections were made on the ground that they were confidential communications between attorney and client, and on that ground inadmissible. The objections were overruled and the letters admitted, to which the plaintiff excepted, and this ruling is assigned as error. We are at a loss to perceive on what ground the evidence was admitted. Section 1881, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc., provides that: "An attorney cannot, without the consent of his client, be examined as to any communication made by the client to him, or his advice given thereon in the course of professional employment." That these letters were those of the client to an attorney, concerning the very matter of the controversy for which he was employed in their behalf, appears from the contents of the letters, beyond question. That the statements therein contained constituted material evidence in the cause was also apparent; indeed, it is not disputed. It seems to have been claimed that the relation of attorney and client did not exist, or rather that it did not continue down to the moment of the execution of the deed, and, further, that the advice of the attorney was not taken or given concerning the question of the policy to be pursued by the plaintiffs with regard to the execution or nonexecution of the deed. The fact that the relation of attorney and client did not exist at the moment of the execution of the deed, or for a considerable time prior thereto, would not render the communications admissible, if such relations existed at the time they were made. The statutory provision above quoted is intended for the protection of the client, and to encourage him to give to the attorney whom he consults the fullest information concerning the facts upon which he asks the attorney's advice or action; and if the relation existed at the time the communications are given, the subsequent cessation of that relation does not make the communication admissible. Nor do the circumstances that after having made the communications with the view of procuring the advice or assistance of the attorney, the client concluded to act upon his own motion, and did so act without receiving any advice from the attorney, make such communication admissible, and particularly where, as in this case, the attorney merely stated to the plaintiffs that if they were disposed to make the conveyance to their uncle out of their personal regard for him, that was a matter upon which he would not presume to advise them. They still had the right to freely inform the attorney of all the facts affecting their case, with a view to having his direction concerning the law, and to have the protection of the statute to prevent disclosure of the communications made to him. The case of Estate of Wax, 106 Cal. 347, 348, 39 Pac. 624, is cited, wherein the court says that when a testator requests his attorneys to sign his will as attesting witnesses, "he in effect consented that whenever the will should be offered for probate, they might be called on as witnesses and testify to any facts, within their knowledge, necessary to the establishment of its validity." We do not think this decision has any bearing upon the question in this case. The attorney was not a witness to the deed sought to be set aside, but was an attesting witness to a contemporaneous document stating the terms of the agreement in pursuance of which the deed was executed. It does not appear either from the instrument itself, or from any evidence in the case, who requested the attorney to sign his name as a witness. That, however, we deem to be immaterial. The reasons advanced in Estate of Wax, supra, for the admission of the testimony of an attorney concerning the occurrences attending the execution of a will are that it is necessary to allow the testimony of such witnesses in order to enable the beneficiaries under the will to secure its probate. The decision in that case does not go beyond allowing the attesting witnesses to give their testimony concerning the occurrences at the time of the execution of the will. The letters introduced in the case at bar were not communications made at the time of the execution of the deeds or the instrument to which the attorney had subscribed his name as a witness, but were letters long prior thereto, and contained statements of facts bearing upon the matter, which statements must be regarded as confidential; and it cannot be conceived how the request of the plaintiffs, conceding that they did request the attorney to sign as a witness, could be understood by them, or could be considered by the court, as constituting a waiver of their right to object to the introduction in evidence against them of the previous statements made to him as their attorney. We think the admission of the letters was clearly erroneous.

A judgment would not be reversed for the admission of such testimony if it appeared that the evidence could not have affected the case. It does not appear, however, in this case, that the evidence was so immaterial as to have been harmless. There was evidence directly tending to prove that the deceased had made the alleged promises charged without intending to perform them, and that the deed was executed in reliance upon those promises, and because of the undue influence possessed by him over them, arising from the relations of confidence and trust existing between them. There was also evidence tending to show that the property in controversy had been conveyed by the deceased to his wife under a naked trust whereby she was to hold the same for his benefit, that this was understood by all the parties, and that the deed in controversy was made for the purpose of terminating this trust. The conflict between these two theories, and the question which of the two was correct, was the principal question in the case. The statements in the letters introduced in evidence tended to prove the latter, and disprove the former. We think it was material evidence of considerable weight, and that it cannot be said to have been without effect upon the decision. There are other questions in the case which are discussed in the briefs, but as they relate to merely technical matters, and may not arise upon another trial, we do not think it necessary to consider them.

The judgment and order are reversed.

JENSON v. WILL & FINCK CO. (S. F. 3,856.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 1, 1907. Rehearing Denied Feb. 28, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE.

A boy 12½ years of age, employed as a cash boy in a department store, was ordered to remove goods from a warehouse by loading the same on trucks and using an elevator. The elevator was defective and without sides. The trucks were so constructed as to be liable to shift on the elevator, to the injury of those using them. The boy was inexperienced, and he was set at work without any warning. He was injured by a truck moving while on the elevator. Held to justify a finding that the injury sustained was the result of the hazardous employment in which the boy was placed while inexperienced and without warning, authorizing a recovery.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 314.]

2. Same—Knowledge of Danger—Evidence.

In an action to recover for injuries to a boy 12½ years of age, while removing goods from the basement of a warehouse to the street by the use of an elevator, evidence held insufficient to show that the boy appreciated the peril in which the shifting of the truck might place him, and as a matter of law he did not assume the risk of injury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 601–609, 981–986.]

3. Same.

Where a minor employé is shown to have known of the special dangers attending the work to which he was assigned, and has sufficient intelligence to appreciate them, his employer is not liable for an injury sustained by him resulting from such dangers; for in such a case he assumed the risk.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 601–609.]

4. Same—Question for Jury.

The law does not exact from a child of tender years the same judgment or the same degree of caution that it does from an adult, and whether a minor employé is shown to have had knowledge and an appreciation of dangers incident to his employment is a question for the jury, except where the evidence unquestionably demonstrates that he did have such knowledge and appreciation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, §§ 1079–1082.]

5. Same—Violation of Rules—Evidence.

An infant employé was injured while removing goods from the basement of a building to the sidewalk by the use of an elevator, and was caught between the elevator and the sidewalk. There were signs on the elevator which read, "No person allowed to ride on the elevator. This means you"—and "Keep off this elevator. Dangerous." It was the custom of employés removing goods to the sidewalk to ride up with them on the elevator. The employé was ordered to use the elevator, and the person who directed him to do the work saw he used it. Held, that the warning did not apply to the employé and deprive him of a right of recovery on the theory that he violated the rules of his employer.

6. Same—Scope of Employment.

A boy 12½ years of age was employed as a cash boy. An employé in charge of a warehouse was removing goods from the basement to the sidewalk. The secretary of the employer sent over to the store for a boy to work in the warehouse, and the person under whose control the boy was working directed him to go to the warehouse to work there. The boy was instructed by the person in charge as to what he should do, and, while the boy was at work, the president of the corporation saw him there. Held to warrant a finding that the boy was regularly employed at the warehouse, rendering the employer liable for an injury negligently inflicted on the boy there.

7. Appeal — Review — Complaint — Sufficiency.

One appealing from an order denying a motion for a new trial cannot raise the point that the complaint is defective.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3478.]

8. Trial—Instructions—Responsiveness to Issues.

An instruction in an action for injuries to a minor employé as to the duty of the employer to provide a reasonably safe place to work, and that his failure to do so is negligence, is not objectionable as not being responsive to the issues, involving the question of assumption of risk arising from the hazards of the work, where it was immediately followed by a number of instructions relative to the duty of an employer where a minor employé is directed to perform work which in its nature is hazardous.

9. Same — Refusal to Give Instructions Embodied in Those Given.

It is sufficient for the court to give on its own motion instructions substantially covering those requested.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Harold Jenson, by Oscar Jenson, his guardian ad litem, against the Will & Finck Company. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Jesse W. Lilienthal and Lloyd & Wood, for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for personal injuries alleged to have been sustained while in the employment of defendant. The cause was tried before a jury, who returned a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $7,500, upon which judgment was entered. A motion by defendant for a new trial was denied, and this appeal is from such order alone. There is no appeal from the judgment.

The complaint alleged that on February 9, 1901, defendant was carrying on business in the city of San Francisco and maintaining in the basement of premises No. 100 O'Farrell street a warehouse, where it kept a stock of merchandise, and operated in said premises an elevator for the purpose of transporting goods from said basement to the sidewalk in front of said premises; that for the purpose of transporting said goods therefrom it was necessary to place the goods in a wheeled truck, which was placed upon the elevator and hoisted thereon to said sidewalk; that prior to the 9th day of February, 1901, plaintiff had been employed as a cash boy in defendant's store, No. 818–820 Market street, and prior to said date had never had any experience whatever in the work of transporting goods in trucks from the basement of said premises, No. 100 O'Farrell street, to said sidewalk, or any experience whatever in handling or transporting goods in elevators; that on said day defendant, well knowing the inexperience of plaintiff in the work of so transporting goods, and well knowing the inexperience of plaintiff in handling and transporting goods upon the said elevator, or any elevator, put plaintiff to work in said basement, and directed him to attend to the transportation and transfer by means of said wheeled trucks of the goods of said defendant from the said basement; that, in order to transport said goods as aforesaid, it was necessary for plaintiff, in the performance of such duties, to go on said elevator with the truck load of goods; that the work of transporting such goods in a truck on said elevator was a hazardous undertaking, and the hazard was known to defendant and unknown to plaintiff; that plaintiff was unfamiliar with the dangers attending said work which he was ordered to do on said day, and was unfamiliar with the dangers of transporting said goods; that before ordering plaintiff to do the work of transporting goods in said trucks from said basement to the sidewalk defendant did not give plaintiff any instructions or directions whatever as to the manner in which he should perform his work or transport said goods from said basement; that, while plaintiff on said day was in the act of transporting from said basement to the sidewalk on the elevator a large quantity of goods belonging to defendant in one of its wheeled trucks, plaintiff's right leg and foot, without any negligence on his part, were crushed between the platform of the elevator and the sidewalk, and were then and there mangled and bruised; that on account of said injuries it was necessary to amputate plaintiff's leg and foot. The answer of defendant denied the allegations of the complaint, and set up affirmatively, among other separate defenses, that he violated instructions, and that he had knowledge during his employment of all the dangers incident to his work in connection with said trucks and elevator, and assumed the risk.

Upon this appeal it is contended that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict; that the court erred in denying defendant's motion for a nonsuit, and erred also in its rulings on the admission of evidence, and in giving and refusing certain instructions.

The evidence on the part of plaintiff showed that in December, 1900, shortly before the holidays, the plaintiff, then about 12½ years of age, and four feet three inches in height, was employed by Mr. Litzius, secretary of the defendant, as cash boy in its toy department, where he was working in that capacity on the morning of February 9, 1901. On this date defendant was in control of premises located in three different places in the city of San Francisco used in connection with its business; these consisting of its store and two warehouses. Its store and salesrooms were at No. 818–820 Market street, in the Phelan building, extended back to O'Farrell street, with an entrance thereto on said street, and included the ground floor and the basement; the toy department, where plaintiff was employed, being conducted in the latter place under the management of C. G. Weir. About a block westerly from the store, and at No. 108 O'Farrell street, in the basement thereof, was an old warehouse of defendant from which, as occasion required, goods were brought to the store on Market street. This warehouse was in charge of Osma Welk. Defendant had established a new warehouse on the opposite side of O'Farrell street from its store entrance on that street, and on the day of plaintiff's injury was engaged in removing its goods from the old warehouse to this new one; the employés in the former, with additional employés assigned to the task, doing the work. It was while assisting in this work that the plaintiff was injured, and how he came to leave the toy department and be engaged in the warehouse, and the circumstances surrounding his injury, are best disclosed by the evidence of the plaintiff himself. He testified: That on the morning of February 9, 1901, while engaged in the discharge of his ordinary duties as cash boy in the toy department, Osma Welk, who was in charge of the old warehouse, came over to the toy department, and stated that Mr. Litzius wanted another boy over at the old warehouse to move goods, and that his superior, Mr. Weir, directed him to go over to the basement to work, and he did so. When he reached there, Mr. Welk said to him: "Take those trucks over. This is your work. Take those trucks over to the other warehouse." This was all he said to him; all the direction that was given him as to the task he should perform, or the manner in which he should perform it. There were others engaged in similar work to which he was assigned, and he immediately commenced to do as directed. This work consisted of placing loaded trucks upon a freight elevator, accompanying them on their way in the elevator to the sidewalk above, and then pushing the trucks down O'Farrell street to the new warehouse. The distance from the floor of the warehouse basement to the sidewalk was from nine to ten feet. The trucks used were wooden ones, about four feet wide by four feet high, with wheels upon them; those in the center at the sides being larger than those at either end. No direction was given to him by any one as to the operation of the elevator machinery. It was operated by pulling a chain, which he, observing others do, did likewise. The trucks could not be taken to the sidewalk unless by this elevator. He did not load the trucks himself. They were loaded by others in the warehouse. He simply pushed them to the elevator, took them up on it, wheeled them to the warehouse, and returned with the empty trucks, doing this all the time unassisted, until the last trip made by him, during which his injury was sustained. The persons besides himself engaged in handling these trucks consisted of an able-bodied man and two boys; each one attending to a truck. Some of the loads on these trucks were quite heavy. The elevator was an open one, without siding on any portion of the platform, and the floor of the elevator platform, which was about four feet square, was made of wood, was rickety, and had patches on it and a piece of iron. On account of the construction of the trucks, with higher wheels midway on the sides than on the ends, they tilted to one end when at rest. That for this reason it was necessary that some one should accompany the trucks to the sidewalk in order to prevent their rolling off the elevator. Plaintiff worked from a little after 8 in the morning till noon, and thereafter until the time of the injury, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, during which period he handled about 50 trucks upon the elevator; no accident happening to his knowledge during that time.

As to the immediate circumstances attending the injury, plaintiff testified: That he started to take a loaded truck up the elevator accompanied by another boy a little older than himself, named Clark. When a truck was a large one, one boy pushed and the other pulled it upon the elevator. On this occasion Clark pushed and plaintiff pulled the truck, which was a large and rickety one, on the elevator. One of them stood on either side of the truck after it was placed on the elevator; there being between the side of the truck where plaintiff was and the edge of the elevator just space enough for him to stand in, and the height of the truck was such that he could just see above the top of it. After placing the truck upon the elevator, each held one end of it, and Clark started the elevator on its ascent. At this point, to quote his testimony, he said: "I was holding on to the truck when I was injured. It was a tilted truck that moved up and down. The side wheels were higher than the end wheels. The side of the truck struck my leg, and that is all I knew after that. Jerry Clark stood at one end of the truck and I stood at the other. I held on to the bottom of the truck, facing the sidewalk—the side—the bottom of the truck. It was necessary to hold on to it because it would bounce and roll off. Movable wheels that would move and revolve like the wheels of a piece of furniture. They would roll all over. For the purpose of maintaining the truck upon the elevator, it was necessary to hold on to the truck." Proceeding, he further testified that, when the elevator was ascending, the truck did not stay straight all the time, and when they had gotten about three-fourths of the way up the truck moved sideways; the lower part striking against his right foot, pushing it in between the elevator and the sidewalk, where the foot and leg were so badly crushed as to necessitate immediate amputation a few inches below the knee.

It further appeared from plaintiff's evidence that he had never been engaged before in taking loaded trucks up this elevator; that his doing so on the day he was engaged was the first time that he had ever done it; that no one gave him any warning, direction, or instruction as to any danger existing incident to, or to be apprehended in, doing this unaccustomed work; that, aside from the order given him by Welk when he reached the warehouse with reference to the work he was required to do, nothing further was said to him by anybody; that Mr. Finck, who it is claimed by defendant had charge of the basement when plaintiff went to work, saw him engaged in taking the trucks to the sidewalk by way of the elevator, but said nothing to him.

This constitutes the evidence on the part of plaintiff, and constitutes practically the entire evidence on his part, and which it is insisted was insufficient to support the verdict.

The general rule of law applicable in cases of the character made by plaintiff is set forth in Ingerman v. Moore, 90 Cal. 410–421, 27 Pac. 306, 25 Am. St. Rep. 138. There this court said: "The principles of law governing this class of actions are clearly defined. It is well settled that one who enters the service of another takes upon himself the ordinary risks of the employment; and if he is an adult, and engages to do a particular work, the employer has a right to presume, unless otherwise informed, that the employé is competent to perform it, and understands and appreciates such risks. But, on the other hand, when one who is known to be an inexperienced person is put to work upon machinery which is dangerous to operate unless with care, and by one familiar with its structure, the employer is bound to give him such instructions as will cause him to fully understand and appreciate the danger attending the employment and the necessity for care. This rule is thus stated by the Supreme Court of Wiscónsin: 'We think that it is now clearly settled that if a master employs a servant to do work in a dangerous place, or where the mode of doing the work is dangerous, and apparent to a person of capacity and knowledge of the subject, yet if the servant employed to do work of such a dangerous character or in a dangerous place, from youth, inexperience, ignorance, or want of general capacity may fail to appreciate the dangers, it is a breach of duty on the part of the master to expose a servant of such character, even with his own consent, to such dangers, unless he first gives him such instructions or cautions as will enable him to comprehend them, and do his work safely with proper care on his part.'" This rule has been frequently approved in subsequent cases. Among others, Mullin v. California Horseshoe Co., 105 Cal. 77, 38 Pac. 535; Foley v. California Horseshoe Co., 115 Cal. 184, 47 Pac. 42, 56 Am. St. Rep. 87; Verdelli v. Gray's Harbor, etc., Co., 115 Cal. 517, 47 Pac. 364; O'Connor v. Golden Gate Woolen Mfg. Co., 135 Cal. 543, 67 Pac. 966, 87 Am. St. Rep. 127; Mansfield v. Eagle Box Company, 136 Cal. 624, 69 Pac. 425. These were all actions brought by minors to recover damages for the alleged negligence of their employers, and the doctrine as to liability in such cases was there fully and elaborately discussed, but for the purposes of this case the general rule as above quoted and approved need for the present only be considered.

Now, examining the evidence presented by the plaintiff and applying this rule of law to it, succinctly stated, this evidence shows that the plaintiff, a boy of immature years and diminutive size, was taken from his usual occupation as cash boy in one department of defendant's business and ordered to enter upon work in another department to which he was entirely unaccustomed and concerning the proper discharge of which he knew nothing; that this work consisted of taking large loaded trucks which occupied almost the entire floor space of an elevator from the basement to the sidewalk; that the elevator itself which was used for that purpose was rickety, and its surface uneven; that the trucks were so constructed as to be liable to shift in transit from their position upon the elevator to the injury of those attending their transportation to the sidewalk; that the elevator was without sides which might protect the operator from having his limbs thrust between the elevator and the sidewalk by the sudden movement of the trucks; that the work to which he was assigned, involving the use by him of the trucks and elevator, was attendant with hazard and dangers of which the defendant was advised; that the plaintiff was entirely inexperienced in the discharge of this character of work; that he was set to the task of doing it in the presence of the dangers which surrounded it, and of which he was unadvised, without any warning or direction whatever as to the risks of injury to which he was subjecting himself. As the evidence on the part of plaintiff sustained these facts, it must be assumed in support of the verdict that the jury so found; that they found that the injury sustained by plaintiff was the result of the hazardous employment in which he was placed by his employer, while inexperienced and without any warning of such danger and without fault on his part. So finding, under the rule of law we have referred to, the employer was liable in damages for the injury sustained.

It is, however, insisted by defendant that it was incumbent upon the plaintiff, claiming his injury to have resulted from being put to a hazardous employment, to show that he was ignorant of the dangers, and it is insisted that the evidence of plaintiff himself proves that he was not. This latter contention is based on the testimony of plaintiff. On his cross-examination he testified as follows: "On the day of the accident I knew that there was small room between the sidewalk and the elevator. There was half an inch between the elevator when it got up in place and the frame that surrounded it and the street. I knew that on the day of the accident, before the accident occurred. The form of the truck and the relative size of the wheels and the relative length and width of the truck I knew on the morning of that day and before I went on the elevator the last time. I did not know that they had those trucks before that day. I knew then, when I went up the elevator the last time, that, if I had my foot and my heel projecting beyond the end of the elevator floor, then, when the elevator went up, my foot was likely to get hurt. I had experience and intelligence enough to understand that." This evidence, however, only proves that he knew if he projected his foot beyond the elevator he would get injured. It was not evidence that he knew and appreciated the fact that the truck he was taking up in the elevator might by reason of its size and construction or its position on the elevator list to the side and push his foot beyond the elevator floor. He might have had knowledge that the truck might move, but it does not necessarily follow that he appreciated the dangers which might result therefrom. Plaintiff might have had knowledge of the liability of the truck to move and strike him without, on account of his inexperience and youth, having sufficient judgment to appreciate the dangers arising from it. It was one thing for him to have known that the truck would shift, but another thing to have sufficient judgment to apprehend any dangers from it. If from youth or inexperience, or both combined, he did not appreciate the peril in which such shifting might place him, he is not deemed in law to have assumed the risk of injury so as to relieve the defendant from any liability in placing him there without warning. And, in order that he might not only know, but appreciate, these dangers, he was entitled to be particularly cautioned and instructed by the defendant concerning them. The rule is that "the master must warn such young servants against the dangers to which their employment exposes them, and he must put this warning in such plain language as to be sure that they understand it and appreciate the danger." 1 Shearman & Redfield on Negligence (4th Ed.) § 219. The duty of the defendant when it placed plaintiff to work was to have given particular instructions to him as to the peculiar dangers which might be anticipated, so that, having them in mind and appreciating them, he might perform his work in safety. If particular danger was to be apprehended from there being but very little space for plaintiff's occupancy on the elevator with the truck on it, and the absence of side guards, or special danger of the moving of the trucks on account of the rickety condition of the elevator or uneven condition of its floor, or that the trucks, on account of the manner of their construction, were liable to shift from their position while being raised to the sidewalk and strike him, it was the duty of the defendant to have given the plaintiff warning that such particular dangers were to be looked out for. The warnings or instructions must be commensurate with the dangers. If special dangers are incident to the employment, particular instructions pointing out those dangers must be given, so that they may be known and appreciated by a minor employé. The very fact that no warning is given to a child or inexperienced person would naturally lead them to infer, or at least to proceed to carry out the orders of their employer on the assumption, that no danger was to be apprehended.

It is true that where a minor is shown to have known of the special dangers attending work to which he has been assigned, and has sufficient intelligence and judgment to appreciate them, the employer will not be held liable for any injury sustained by him during such work resulting from dangers which he knew and appreciated. Under such circumstances, as in the case of an adult, he will be held to have assumed the risk of injury. The law, however, does not expect or exact from a child of tender years the same maturity of judgment or the same degree of care, caution, or circumspection that it does from an adult, and whether in a given case a minor employé is shown to have had knowledge and an appreciation of the dangers incident to his employment is (except in cases where the evidence unquestionably demonstrates that he did) a question of fact to be determined by the jury. The rule upon this entire subject is declared in Foley v. California Horseshoe Company, 115 Cal. 184, 190 et seq., 47 Pac. 42, 56 Am. St. Rep. 87, where the court was considering the conduct of a boy nearly two years older than this plaintiff, who had been called to perform a service outside of the line of his office or employment and was injured.

The court said: "Where the ordinary and usual occupation of a minor is the running or management of a machine, or is some employment in and about it, and the minor is shown to have knowledge of the working of the machine, its dangers or its defects, and where it further appears that the minor is not of such tender years as to be unable to appreciate the nature of the dangers or defects, it is beyond question the rule, sanctioned by a long line of authority, that he takes upon himself, as will an adult under the same circumstances, the perils and risks of his employment; and that, if injured in the course thereof, he may not look to his employer for compensation. But there is a distinction which, as a matter of humanity as well as law, should be drawn between such cases and those where the minor is put to a task which, while within the range of his employment, is to him in his inexperience and youth unusual and strange; and it is a case of the latter kind which we are here called upon to consider. Had the accident to the boy occurred while he was engaged in the ordinary operation of his machine, it could be said without hesitation that, knowing the peculiar danger to which he might be exposed by its sudden starting, and knowing, as he did, that it was liable thus suddenly to start, he continued in his employment, taking upon himself the responsibility for any accident which might result therefrom. But the accident did not occur while he was engaged in his ordinary occupation at the machine. It occurred while he was engaged in the unusual task set him, that of screwing on a fallen bolt. It is true that, while engaged in this task, he had still the knowledge that the machine was liable to start, but does this fact establish that for which appellant contends, viz., that he had assumed that particular risk while screwing on the nut, as he had assumed it generally in operating the machine? We think that as a proposition of law this cannot be said. Were the employé in this case an adult, the rule might well be different; but the very reason why an adult under these circumstances would be held to have taken the risk while screwing on the nut serves to show the injustice and hardship which would result if it were sought to be applied to a minor. The question of the taking of a risk, the question of the assumption of responsibility of a given act, is determined as much upon the matter of judgment as upon the matter of knowledge. An adult employé, when the facts are known to him, is presumed in law to exercise the same judgment upon those facts as would the employer. * * * The conduct of the child, however, is and should be viewed and measured by a different rule. Children are taught obedience. They are taught not to oppose their will and their judgment to those in authority over them; but in addition to this, and more important than all, the judgment of the child is the last faculty developed. Knowledge he may have; facts he may acquire; but the ability to apply his knowledge or to reason upon his facts comes to him later in life. * * * The very accidents of childhood come from thoughtlessness and carelessness, which are but other words for absence of judgment. When sent out to labor, they are told by their parents or guardians to obey. In the factory or shop unquestioning obedience is expected and exacted. They must go where they are sent. They must do as they are told. It would be barbarous to hold them to the same accountability as is held the adult employé who is an independent free agent. Their conduct is to be judged in accordance with the limited knowledge, experience, and judgment which they possess when called upon to act. And it must, from the nature of the case, be a question of fact for the jury, rather than of law for the court, to say whether or not, in the performance of a given task, the child duly exercised such judgment as he possessed, taking into consideration his years, his experience, and his ability. This must necessarily give rise to a different rule from that so well established, which measures the conduct of the adult by that which might be expected of the ordinarily prudent person placed in the same position. So here the child might well be expected to comprehend the likelihood of accident, and to know how to provide against it, when engaged in his usual employment in front of the machine. But when he is sent to the rear of it, and in among the wheels and mechanism to perform a novel duty, we cannot say as matter of law that he entered upon its performance with a full appreciation of the increased dangers and risks, and with sufficient judgment to know how to avoid them. These matters, and the further question whether the minor duly exercised such judgment as he possessed, must, therefore, as a rule, be left as considerations of fact for the jury's determination; and it would be an exceptional case which would present them as unmixed questions of law for the determination of the court. * * * The ordinary care which a child of limited judgment and experience is called upon to exercise in a given act is not the same quantum of care which the adult would be called upon to use under the same circumstances. Each is required to use ordinary care, but the amount of care which the person of perfected intelligence and judgment must employ is very different from the amount which the law in its humanity exacts of a minor."

We make these extended quotations from the authority in support of the rule that, in order to relieve the defendant here from liability, it must not only appear that the plaintiff had knowledge that the trucks he was engaged in transporting from the basement to the sidewalk were liable to shift or move, but also that he had sufficient judgment to appreciate the dangers of such movements; and that, whether he did or not, was a question of fact for the jury. In the case at bar the question whether the plaintiff had knowledge and appreciation of the dangers were matters to be determined by the jury from all the facts in the case, taking into consideration the youth of plaintiff, his inexperience, and the work to which he was assigned, the particular character of the dangers attending it, and the failure of defendant to give him any warnings or instructions concerning them. If, therefore, it be conceded that plaintiff had knowledge of the dangers, as appellant claims he had, it cannot be said that under the evidence the jury were not warranted in finding, as they must necessarily have found under the instructions of the court, that plaintiff, by reason of his tender years and inexperience and unadvised of the dangers, was not possessed of sufficient judgment to appreciate them.

Passing now to the next point. It is contended that the plaintiff used the elevator contrary to plain precautionary signs upon it warning him to keep off. These signs, it is claimed, read "No person allowed to ride on this elevator. This means you"—and "Keep off this elevator. Dangerous." Plaintiff claims that he could not read these signs because they were indistinct, but whether he could have read them, or whether he did read them, is, in our judgment, of no consequence. Counsel presses this point under a claim that it was the duty of the employé to put the truck on the elevator, start it up, and then walk up the stairway to the sidewalk. The jury gave no credit to this contention, and the weight of the evidence was against it. These signs undoubtedly were intended to keep persons from using the elevator for their personal convenience and when no freight was being taken up upon it. The evidence shows that it was the custom of employés removing freight to the sidewalk to ride up with it on the elevator. Aside from this, however, the warning could not apply to plaintiff because his direction to take the loaded truck to the new warehouse involved the use of this elevator as the only means of getting it to the sidewalk. All the men employed there were doing so. Mr. Welk, who directed him to take the trucks over, saw him using it, as did Mr. Finck, the president. Under these circumstances, to whomsoever the warning might otherwise apply, it was not intended to apply to plaintiff while engaged in transporting the trucks to the sidewalk by means of it.

It is further insisted that there was no proof that any one in authority gave plaintiff directions to carry goods by the elevator. It is certain from the evidence, however, that the plaintiff left his place of employment in the store as cash boy to work in the old warehouse of the defendant in transporting the trucks to the new warehouse, and that he spent nearly all day in doing so, having during that period moved some 50 truck loads. It is extremely improbable that plaintiff should be thus found working in a department of the general business of defendant different and removed from the one in which he was employed, and at an obviously harder task than his usual employment entailed, without having been so directed by some one in authority. He claims he was directly instructed to go to work by Mr. Welk. It is claimed, however, that Mr. Welk had no authority to employ him. The evidence shows that Mr. Welk was in charge of the old warehouse on the day plaintiff reported there, that the business being done there was the transportation of the stock on trucks to the new warehouse, and that Mr. Welk was actually engaged in attending to and superintending its removal. From these facts the jury would be warranted in finding that at least on that occasion and for the purpose in which it was engaged he represented the defendant. But, assuming he did not, still the evidence shows that Mr. Litzius, the secretary of defendant, sent over to the store for another boy to work in the old warehouse; that in response to this request Mr. Weir, who was in charge of the toy department and under whose control plaintiff was, directed him to go to the old warehouse to work there; that, when he got there, he was immediately instructed by Mr. Welk, who was then actually in charge, what to do, and proceeded to do it; that, while at work handling trucks by way of the elevator, he was seen doing this work by Mr. Finck, president of the corporation, who testified that on that day he had charge of the old warehouse. Proof of these facts was sufficient to warrant the jury in finding that plaintiff was properly and regularly employed there on the day in question.

This disposes of all of the points made by appellant as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. We have not discussed the merits of the motion for a new trial, as the points which were made thereon, in as far as they are pertinent, have been considered under the specifications of insufficiency of the evidence. In discussing in his brief the ruling of the trial court upon his motion for a nonsuit, counsel for appellant attacks the sufficiency of the complaint. He insists that in as far as it attempts to state a cause of action for injury sustained by plaintiff growing out of being placed in a hazardous employment without warning or instructions it is fatally defective. Appellant is, however, not entitled to raise that point on this appeal. He could only do so on an appeal from the judgment, and the appeal in this case is only from the order denying the motion for a new trial. Martin v. Matfield, 49 Cal. 45; Moore v. Douglas, 132 Cal. 400, 64 Pac. 705; Swift v. Occidental, etc., 141 Cal. 161, 74 Pac. 700; Sharp v. Bowie, 142 Cal. 462, 76 Pac. 62.

The court opened its instructions to the jury with one relating to the legal duty of the employer to provide for his employés a reasonably safe place, and that his failure to do so constituted negligence. It is claimed that this was error because the instruction was not responsive to any issue. We do not think that this point has any force. The instruction was given as defining the general duty of an employer to his employé, and was immediately followed by a number of instructions relative to the duty of the employer where a minor is directed to perform work which in its nature is hazardous.

Exceptions are taken to other instructions given by the court, and to the refusal of the court to give some instructions tendered by appellant. We have examined the instructions given under appellant's claim of error, but perceive no valid objection to them. Those tendered by appellant which were not given were in the main covered by the instructions given by the court on its own motion, and this was sufficient. It also appears from the record that many of the instructions tendered by appellant and which he claims were not given by the court, were, as a matter of fact, given by it almost verbatim. The instructions tendered by it which were refused were properly so.

We have disposed of all the points presented which, in our judgment, require discussion.

We find no ground upon which the order appealed from should be disturbed, and it is therefore affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.

GROCERS' FRUIT GROWING UNION v. KERN COUNTY LAND CO. (S. F. 3,573.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1907.)

1. Venue — Subject of Action — Specific Performance of Contract.

An action praying for a specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, for an accounting as to whether the purchase price had been paid, and demanding judgment for the payment in excess of the consideration called for in the contract is triable in the county in which the land is located, within Code Civ. Proc. § 392, subd. 1, providing that actions for the recovery of an interest in real estate must be tried in the county in which the property is situate; the demand for an accounting and for a judgment for payment in excess of the price being incidental to the general relief sought.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Venue, § 4; vol. 44, Specific Performance, § 324.]

2. Same — Constitutional and Statutory Provisions.

Under Const. art. 12, § 16, providing that a corporation may be sued in the county where the particular place of business thereof is situated "subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases," Code Civ. Proc. § 392, providing that an action for the recovery of real property must be tried in the county in which the property is situated, is applicable to a corporation, and, on being sued for specific performance of a contract for the sale of land, it may demand that the case be tried in the county where the property is situated; the phrase quoted in the Constitution giving the court permission to change the place of trial in accordance with the statute.

3. Same.

An action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of real estate is not an action either for recovery of possession or for quieting title to real estate within Const. art. 6, § 5, providing that actions for the recovery of the possession of or quieting the title to real estate shall be commenced in the county in which the same is situated.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Venue, § 4; vol. 44, Specific Performance, § 324.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Action by Grocers' Fruit Growing Union against the Kern County Land Company. From an order denying a motion for a change of venue, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Page, McCutchen, Harding & Knight and W. S. Barnett, for appellant. Edwin L. Forster, Robert R. Moody, and F. T. Poore, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action was commenced in the city and county of San Francisco. Defendant appeared, and, upon filing its demurrer, made demand and moved the court that the place of trial of the action be changed from the city and county of San Francisco to the county of Kern. The motion for a change of venue was denied, and defendant takes this appeal, contending, first, that the action is one for the specific performance of a contract to convey lands, which lands are admittedly situated in the county of Kern, and that under article 6, § 5, of the Constitution of this state the superior court of San Francisco had no jurisdiction over the action, for that it should have been commenced in the county of Kern; second, that the action is strictly one within the letter and the spirit of section 392, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure, and should, therefore, have been transferred to the county of Kern for trial. In this connection it is urged and argued that, if the proposition be advanced that article 12, § 16, of the Constitution warrants the commencement of the action in the city and county of San Francisco and forbids to defendant its right to change the place of trial, then this clause of our state Constitution is violative of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States in denying to corporations the right to have an action affecting an interest in real estate tried in the county where the land is situated, while this right is accorded to natural persons.

The respondent insists that the action is brought under section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure; that it is of the class where real and personal actions are joined in the same complaint, and upon the authority of Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 356, and other cases of similar import must be tried in the county of defendant's residence; that as the city and county of San Francisco is the principal place of business of the corporation defendant it is its residence within the purview of this section; and that the action was therefore commenced and should be tried before the superior court of that county. Resting its case upon this proposition, respondent has declined to discuss the constitutional questions advanced by appellant.

It thus becomes necessary to determine the true character of this action as disclosed by the complaint. Plaintiff charges that defendant was the owner of certain lands in the county of Kern, and that plaintiff and defendant entered into written contracts for the purchase and sale of these lands; the purchase price being $35,000, to be paid in installments at specified periods of time. Plaintiff under the terms of these agreements entered into possession of the lands and cultivated them, planting large quantities of fruit trees, erecting substantial improvements, and thereby greatly increasing the value of the property. These contracts, it is averred, were entered into in writing "between the 3d day of June, 1893, and the 1st day of January, 1897." It is then averred that on the 6th day of March, 1899, the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement in writing, which is set forth in full in the complaint. That agreement recited that the parties had theretofore entered into contracts in writing for the purchase and sale of the lands in controversy, the taking possession of the lands by plaintiff herein, the planting of fruit trees with the object of selling the improved lands "in small tracts." The agreement further declared that the Grocers' Fruit Growing Union is in default in a large amount, and that the sum of $39,448.75 will be due on November 1, 1899, from the Grocers' Fruit Growing Union of the Kern County Land Company, and that the Grocers' Fruit Growing Union is unable to pay this money. Moreover, that it is without financial ability to carry on the business or to cultivate the orchard, to prune the trees, gather and handle the crop, and that it is desirous of obtaining financial assistance from the defendant to enable it to do these things. It was therefore agreed that the defendant would advance to plaintiff moneys sufficient to enable it to carry on its undertaking, and plaintiff agreed upon its part to cultivate, take care of, and handle the fruit crop and the lands, and sell and market the same through the defendant, that it would sell the orchard lands if opportunity presented, the sales always to be subject to the approval of the defendant, and the proceeds of the fruit crop and of the sale of lands should be applied, first, to the repayment of moneys advanced by defendant; and, second, towards the extinguishment of the indebtedness due on account of the original contracts for the purchase and sale of the lands, together with interest. Plaintiff further agreed that on or before the first day of November, 1899, it would pay the sum of $30,000, in addition to the repayment of the advances which might be made by defendant, as full payment of the purchase price of the lands, and agreed that if it was unable to pay or failed to pay by that date all sums of money that should have been advanced to it, together with the sum of $30,000 in satisfaction of the indebtedness due from it, it would on the 1st day of November, 1899, execute and deliver to defendant a good and sufficient deed of conveyance of all the lands and peaceably quit and surrender possession thereof and surrender and cancel the contracts for the purchase of the lands, and deliver to the defendant all the personal property of every nature and kind on the said lands, and execute a bill of sale for the personal property, that it would also assign all contracts that it might then have with any person for the sale of any of the lands, or otherwise, and all obligations that it might then have or hold from any person or persons for the payment of any sum of money on account of the sale of the lands. Time was declared to be of the essence of the contract.

As to the transactions following this agreement, it is alleged that before the 1st day of November, 1899, the president of defendant corporation urged the plaintiff corporation to make the deed and bill of sale referred to in the agreement, "saying and representing that the plaintiff had not performed and could not perform its said agreement, and that this would avoid litigation, and that the plaintiff corporation could afterwards have all the time it wanted to make the thing right, and that the defendant corporation would help it." It is next averred that "thereafter and in the month of November, 1899, the plaintiff corporation, acting upon and pursuant to all of the aforesaid statements and representations, and believing them to be true and made in good faith, executed to defendant corporation its deed to said lands and its bill of sale of all of its personal property in the manner specified in said agreement of March 6, 1899, and that, had it not been for said statements and representations, said plaintiff corporation would not have executed said deed or bill of sale, or either of them; that in truth by reason of the failure and neglect of the defendant corporation to account to the plaintiff corporation for moneys received by it from sales of crops and lands and moneys advanced by it, as hereinafter alleged, plaintiff was in ignorance of its financial standing and ability to perform its said agreement; and that by reason of its being so kept in ignorance was induced to rely and act upon said statements and representations." It is then alleged that the original agreements of sale were never rescinded, extinguished, or canceled, but have remained and still remain in full force and effect: that the agreement of March 6, 1899, "was executed solely for the purpose of fixing the amount of the indebtedness then due and as a further security therefor, and of arranging means of settlement and enforcement in the event that said indebtedness should not eventually be paid." It is further alleged that the deed and bill of sale executed by plaintiff to defendant in November, 1899, were understood and intended to operate by way of mortgage and further security. Next, it is averred that demand had been made upon the defendant before as well as after the execution by plaintiff of its deed and bill of sale in November, 1899, for an accounting of the proceeds of the sales of the fruit crop, of the advances by defendant to plaintiff, and of the sales of the lands, but that defendant has neglected and refused to make such accounting. Upon information and belief the plaintiff then alleges the fact to be that by the receipts of the proceeds of the sale of fruits and lands the advances of the defendant and the indebtedness on account of the purchase of the lands has been fully paid, and that there is an excess or surplus of moneys over and above such indebtedness due from the defendant to plaintiff, by reason of which "plaintiff is entitled to an accounting by the defendant, and thereupon to a judgment against the defendant for the transfer and reconveyance of said real and personal property, and to a judgment for the surplus or excess of said proceeds from said sales above the amount necessary to discharge said indebtedness and advances, and for interest on such surplus or excess," and the prayer of the complaint is for an accounting, that upon the accounting it be adjudged that the indebtedness and advances have been fully paid and discharged, and that plaintiff have judgment against defendant for any surplus or excess, that the court adjudge that the agreements of sale have never been rescinded, executed, or canceled and are in full force and effect, and that defendant be ordered and directed to execute and deliver to plaintiff due and legal conveyances of the real property in fee simple absolute, and due and legal transfers of all personal property.

Stripped to its essentials this is simply an action for the specific performance of a contract for the sale of land under an allegation that the purchase price has been paid. If it be conceded that the right to an accounting is sufficiently pleaded, that accounting is but an incident in the transaction. It goes merely to the establishment of the proposition as to whether or not the consideration has been paid. That the alleged collections made by defendant exceed the amount due from plaintiff does not in any sense change the character of the action, even though, upon proof being made, plaintiff would be entitled to a personal judgment for the excess. In any action for specific performance when the matter in dispute is the payment or nonpayment of the purchase price an accounting may be necessary, and, if necessary, will be ordered; such being clearly within the power of a court under our system where equitable and legal functions are exercised by the one tribunal. But such an accounting in no way changes the cause of action. This case is in all essentials like that of Bush v. Treadwell (N.Y.) 11 Abb. Prac. (N. S.) 27. That was an action brought in Monroe county to have the title to certain real estate in the city of New York declared to be in plaintiff, on the ground that the deed conveying the title to defendant was a mortgage, for a conveyance of the property to plaintiff and for an accounting by defendant of the rents, issues, and profits. Defendant made a motion for change of the place of trial from Monroe county to the county of New York under section 123 of the Code from which our section 392 Code of Civil Procedure is taken. It was there urged in resisting the motion that the cause of action was transitory, and not local; that section 123 of the New York Code related to actions of legal cognizance only, and that the present action was in equity; that the relief sought was an accounting by the defendant; that the accounting might show advances beyond the value of the trust estate, in which case no land would be transferred or conveyed; that land was not the primary object of the action; and that the fact that land might be affected by the determination was not sufficient to entitle the defendant to a change of the place of trial. The Court of Appeals declared that the action was for the recovery of an interest in real property, and for the determination of such an interest, "and the statute declared in plain language that where such an action is brought it is local, and that this shall be so without regard to the form in which the determination is sought." So here, while the proceeding may necessitate an accounting, the relief sought is a conveyance of the land. And, if it should be determined that a payment in excess of the consideration had been actually made, the personal judgment which would follow for plaintiff would, as in Bush v. Treadwell, be but incidental to the real cause of action and relief sought. Smith v. Smith, 88 Cal. 572, 26 Pac. 356, upon which respondent most strongly relies, was vitally different in character. In that case personal property consisting of 26,000 sheep, together with horses, wagons, harness, and camp equipage, together with real estate in Tuolumne and Merced counties, was by conveyance absolutely transferred to the defendant. Plaintiff sought in this action to have the transfer declared to be a mortgage, and alleged that the property so mortgaged had earned and paid funds more than enough to extinguish the mortgage indebtedness, and thus sought an accounting, a personal judgment for the excess, and a reconveyance of the property transferred. Here the cause of action was plainly twofold, and twofold owing to the very nature of the original transaction. It was transitory and personal as to the accounting for the vast amount of personal property which had been conveyed. It was local as affecting the title to the land. That action was commenced in the county of Tuolumne against the defendant, who was a resident of the county of Merced, and who, because of the nature of the action, was insisting upon his right to have the place of trial changed to the county of his residence, in which contention this court held that he was right because of the clear joinder of an action local with one which was transitory; the venue for the trial of such an action being the county of the defendant's residence. But here we have an action strictly local in character, clearly affecting the title to land, the gist of the action being specific performance of a contract for the conveyance of land, the principal relief which is sought being a conveyance of the land, and the defendant is asking that the place of trial be changed to the county where the land is situated.

It having been determined that in its character this action is local, it will not be questioned but that in this regard it is one of those actions provided for by section 392, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is an action for the determination of a right or interest in real property. Such an action, as the above cited section of the Code declares, must be tried in the county where the land is situated. Since the Legislature has decreed that all such actions must be tried in the county in which the land is situated the test then becomes the subject-matter of the action. Where the subject-matter of the action, to wit, land, is made the test for fixing the place of trial of the action, no reason or distinction appears, or can be made to appear, why the right should be given to a natural person to have such an action tried in the county where the land is situated, and the same right should be denied to an artificial person, a corporation. In State v. Hayes, 81 Mo. 574, it is held that the provisions in regard to the venue of an action involve rights in respect to which the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States forbids arbitrary discrimination. That the discrimination is arbitrary and rests upon no logical or rational distinction seems too plain to permit of debate, or to call for elaborate consideration. No conceivable ground can be suggested why a natural person should have the right of trial of an action involving an interest in land in the county where the land is situated, and the same right should be denied to a corporation. If the situation were reversed, the absurdity would be patent. A law which granted to a corporation the right and denied it to a natural person would be held arbitrarily discriminative without a moment's hesitation. Yet it must be recognized that a refusal to change the place of trial in such a case as this has been sanctioned in Miller v. Kern County Land Company, 134 Cal. 586, 66 Pac. 856, and Miller, etc., v. Kern Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836. The jutification was based upon the language of article 12, § 16, of our Constitution. That section provides, "that a corporation * * * may be sued in the county * * * where the principal place of business of such corporation is situated subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases." In those cases it was held that the Constitution had the right to fix the place of trial of actions against corporations; that, having so fixed them in the county of the principal place of business of the corporation, the force of this constitutional provision could not be impaired by any legislative enactment fixing the place of trial as to natural persons in other places, since that would be in effect to allow a legislative enactment to modify and control a constitutional provision. Of the soundness of the determination in this case so far as concerns the points which were presented and determined there can be no question, but the particular proposition here and now advanced, namely, that such a construction of the law works a violation of defendant's right under the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States was not presented to this court for consideration. Being now so presented, since the Supreme Court of the United States has repeatedly decided that corporations are within the protection of that amendment, the question must be considered in the light of this claim of right.

It has already been said that no valid reason can or has been shown why a distinction in the place of trial should be made, and the distinction has been supported solely upon the authority of the language of our own state Constitution. Since it is beyond question that the Constitution of this state cannot be made to yield to the force of any legislative enactment, it would follow that, if there were no way of harmonizing the provisions of section 392 of the Code of Civil Procedure and article 12, subd. 16, of our Constitution, the necessary result of a conflict would be that the former would fall. But, upon the other hand, if reasonably possible, an harmonious adjustment of the two provisions will be sought. The language of the Constitution itself presents a ready solution of the difficulty. It declares that corporations may be sued in the county of their principal place of business "subject to the power of the court to change the place of trial as in other cases." As the power of the court to change the place of trial rests entirely upon legislative enactment, it follows that here in the Constitution itself is a distinct permission to the courts to change the place of trial in accordance with legislative enactment. The constitutional provision is therefore as though it had read, "Any and all actions may be commenced against corporations in the county of the principal place of business of the corporation, provided, however, that the courts may change the place of trial of such actions in accordance with the laws governing such places of trial." So construed, all our laws touching change of venue and place of trial become uniform and harmonious. The right still remains to a plaintiff to commence his action in the county of the principal place of business, and the right remains to the corporation to have the place of trial changed under exercise of the court's power in enforcing the legislative enactments in regard thereto.

It follows herefrom that the defendant was entitled to have the place of trial of the action changed to Kern county under the provisions of section 392, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure. We have not in the foregoing overlooked the language of this court in Lewis v. South Pacific Coast R. R. Co., 66 Cal. 209, 5 Pac. 79, where in a single sentence it is said, referring to the section of the Constitution which has been under consideration, "Nor are we able to see wherein the provision of the state Constitution in question conflicts with the provision of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States." But this declaration cannot be considered as authority. It was given in 1884, at a time when this court had held that corporations were not persons within the meaning of the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution of the United States, and were therefore not within the protection of that amendment. C. P. R. R. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 60 Cal. 35. It was not until 1886 that the Supreme Court of the United States first declared corporations to be entitled to the protection of that amendment. Santa Clara County v. S. P. R. R. Co., 118 U. S. 394, 6 Sup. Ct. 1132, 30 L. Ed. 118; Guthrie, Fourteenth Amendment, p. 53. The language of this court in Lewis v. S. P. Coast R. R. Co., supra, while sustainable in the then condition of the law can, in the light of the subsequent decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, no longer be supported.

Appellant's reliance upon article 6, § 5, of the Constitution, which provides that "all actions for the recovery of the possession of or quieting the title to real estate shall be commenced in the county in which the real estate * * * is situated," is not well founded. It may not be said that this is an action either for the recovery of possession or for quieting title to real estate.

For the foregoing reason, the order refusing a change of venue of the action is reversed.

PEOPLE v. WILLARD. (Cr. 1,350.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 4, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—DEFENSE—INSANITY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, on a trial for homicide, defended on the ground of insanity, it appeared that accused had been committed to the state hospital for the insane three times prior to the homicide, and the commitments were admitted in evidence, the affidavits, report of examining physicians, their certificates, etc., were inadmissible, they not constituting a judgment roll and not conclusively determining anything, the commission for the examination of alleged insane persons, provided by statute, not being a tribunal in which the status of an alleged insane person is fixed.

2. SAME.

Where on a trial for homicide, defended on the ground of insanity, the order committing accused to an insane hospital the day of the commission of the crime, was admitted in evidence, accused's petition for a writ of habeas corpus signed by himself 13 days thereafter, and averring that he was then sane, and praying for his discharge from the hospital, was admissible to show that the prosecution did not try accused while confined in the hospital under the commitment, though the superintendent of the hospital had testified that accused had been discharged.

3. SAME.

On a trial for homicide, defended on the ground of insanity, the petition of accused for a writ of habeas corpus for his discharge from an insane hospital to which he had been committed on the day of the homicide, is admissible on the question of mental capacity of accused at the time of the homicide, where the petition was signed 13 days after the homicide, and alleged that accused was then sane, and where the evidence showed that he read and understood the petition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 760.]

4. SAME.

Where the defense of insanity is interposed to a charge of homicide, the acts and conduct of accused at the time of and within a reasonable time before and after the homicide are admissible on the question of insanity existing at that time.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 760.]

5. WITNESSES—VOLUNTARY ADMISSIONS OF ACCUSED—ADMISSIBILITY.

On a trial for homicide, defended on the ground of insanity, it appeared that accused was committed to an insane hospital on the day of the homicide, and that 13 days thereafter he filed a petition for a writ of habeas corpus for his discharge, in which he alleged that he was then sane. On the hearing of the writ accused testified in his own behalf though he was informed by the prosecuting attorney that in case of his discharge he would be prosecuted for the homicide. Held, that the testimony of accused on the hearing was voluntary and admissible on his subsequent trial for homicide, notwithstanding Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself.

6. SAME — APPEAL — REVIEW — DISCRETION OF COURT—ORDER OF PROOF.

Under Pen. Code, § 1094, authorizing the court, in the exercise of its sound discretion, to depart from the order of trial prescribed by section 1093, the action of the court in a criminal case in permitting the prosecution to give in rebuttal testimony admissible in chief is not ground for reversal, unless the court abused its discretion, which must affirmatively appear.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 3063.]

7. SAME—ARGUMENT OF PROSECUTING ATTORNEY—GROUNDS FOR REVERSAL.

On trial for homicide, defended on the ground of insanity, the prosecuting attorney in his closing argument in arguing the existence of malice of accused against decedent stated that according to two commitments of accused to the insane hospital, decedent had placed accused in the hospital. Exception was taken by accused. The court declared that there was no evidence to sustain the statement and instructed the jury to disregard the same. The statement was made in the honest belief that the evidence supported it. Held, that a verdict of guilty would not be disturbed on the ground of misconduct of the prosecuting attorney.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1669.]

8. SAME.

The prosecuting attorney, in a criminal case, may present to the jury his view of the deductions drawn from the evidence, and though his reasoning is faulty, and his deductions illogical, no exception lies to his argument.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1670, 1671.]

9. SAME—INSANITY—BURDEN OF PROOF.

The burden of proving the defense of insanity in a homicide case is on accused, and, to satisfy the burden, insanity must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 742–744.]

10. SAME—APPEAL—VERDICT—REVIEW.

The Supreme Court cannot disturb a verdict in a criminal case unless there is no evidence to support it, or where the evidence relied on by the prosecution is so improbable as to be incredible, or where it so clearly preponderates against the verdict as to convince the court that it was the result of prejudice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, §§ 3074–3083.]

11. SAME—INSANITY.

Though one may be laboring under partial insanity, yet, if he understands the nature and character of his action and its consequences, if he has knowledge that it is wrong and criminal, and that if he does the act he will do wrong, insanity is not a defense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 53–61.]

12. SAME.

The jury, in a homicide case, defended on the ground of insanity, are not, in determining the issue of insanity, concluded by the report of medical examiners that accused was insane, or by the opinion of the medical examiners as to the nature of his insanity, or by the judgment which declared him insane, and ordered him committed to the insane hospital, though the order of commitment was made immediately prior to the homicide.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1081.]

13. SAME—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence on a trial for homicide, defended on the ground of insanity, examined, and held to support a verdict of guilty based on accused's sanity.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1285–1288.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; A. G. Burnett, Judge.

Frank Willard was convicted of murder, and he appeals. Affirmed.

T. L. Carothers and Charles M. Mannon, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., C. N. Post, Asst. Atty. Gen., Robert Duncan, Dist. Atty., and E. B. Power, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

LORIGAN, J. The appellant was tried in Mendocino county for the alleged murder of J. H. Smith, the sheriff of that county.

The immediate circumstances attending the killing of deceased, although by no means the only evidence in the case, are undisputed. The defendant, a man 42 years of age, was born in Mendocino county, and had lived there practically all his life. He had been twice committed by the judge of the superior court of Mendocino county, after examination as to his sanity held in the city of Ukiah, to the Mendocino State Hospital for Insane, in both instances on account of alcoholism, and after remaining there a short time had recovered and been discharged from the asylum; his second discharge occurring some time in the early part of 1903. On December 20, 1905, two days prior to the homicide, the defendant appeared in the city of Ukiah, and the deceased, as sheriff, having been informed that he was acting in a peculiar manner, brought him about 8:30 a. m. on December 22, 1905, to the sheriff's office. Leaving him there, the deceased at once repaired to the chambers of the judge of the superior court, where he made affidavit that the defendant was insane, and that it was dangerous for him to be at large. The judge doubtless thought the defendant would be brought before him, and fixed 9 o'clock a. m. of that morning as the time for the examination, and the defendant, having been formally arrested by deceased, was immediately brought into the judge's chambers for that purpose. Two physicians were summoned as medical examiners, and after an examination had they reported to the judge of the superior court that the defendant was insane and "homicidal and dangerous." On this report defendant was adjudged insane by the judge of said court, and ordered committed to the Mendocino State Hospital for the Insane for care and treatment. Just as the judge was signing the order of commitment, defendant declared that he was not insane; that he ought not to be sent to the asylum—that it was an outrage. He became angry and started to leave the judge's chambers, whereupon the deceased followed to intercept him. As defendant approached the door, he drew a pistol from his pocket, opened the door, and, as he stepped into the hallway, whirled and fired at deceased, who was some five feet from him inside the judge's chambers, and killed him. Defendant fled, and was pursued and captured where he had taken to the brush on the hillside about a mile and a half from the scene of the tragedy. Upon the trial the jury returned a verdict of murder of the first degree, and the motion for new trial having been denied, judgment of death was pronounced upon the defendant. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

No attempt was made on the part of defendant upon the trial to dispute the killing of the deceased under the circumstances detailed; the sole contention on his behalf being that he was irresponsibly insane at the time of the homicide, and the principal—it may be said all—testimony in the case was devoted to that subject. Upon this appeal it is urged by appellant as grounds of reversal that the court erred in rejecting evidence offered by appellant on the question of his insanity, and in admitting evidence offered on the part of the prosecution on the same subject, and erred also in instructing the jury on the degree of proof required by appellant under the law to establish his insanity. It is also claimed that the district attorney was guilty of misconduct precluding the appellant from having a fair trial. Lastly, it is contended that on the question of the insanity of appellant, the evidence was so overwhelmingly in support of it, that the verdict of the jury was contrary to the evidence and necessitates a reversal.

Proceeding now to a disposition of these points as they are presented, and, first, as to the alleged erroneous rejection by the court of testimony offered by appellant in proof of his insanity: It appeared from the evidence, as a fact, that the defendant had been three times committed to the Mendocino State Hospital for insane; the first commitment being on February 2, 1901, the second on May 29, 1902 (these being the times of commitment heretofore referred to), and the third on the morning of the homicide. In connection with the testimony of the medical superintendent of said hospital, who testified to the fact of such commitments, the attorneys for defendant offered in evidence all the proceedings pertaining to each of these three insane examinations of appellant, which consisted of the complaint charging his insanity, the warrant of arrest, report of the medical examiners, their certificate, and the judgments and orders of commitment by the judge of the superior court. To the offer of all the documents pertaining to the examination of December 22, 1905, the people raised no objection and they were admitted. As to the admission of all of the documents pertaining to the two prior examinations, except as to the judgment and order of commitment in each case to which no objection was raised, the court sustained the objection of the district attorney. This ruling is claimed to have been erroneous, but we think it was correct. We do not determine on this appeal whether the judgments and orders of commitment which were admitted in evidence would have been admissible if objection had been interposed against their admission. No objection was made to any of them by the district attorney, and, hence, the question of their admissibility is not involved on this appeal, except in as far as that question is affected by discussing the admissibility of the other documents. As to the other documents which appellant insists should have been admitted—the affidavit, report of examining physicians, their certificate, etc.—the court was clearly right in rejecting them. The certificates were purely hearsay evidence, and were not admissible for any purpose. It is contended by appellant that all these proceedings constituted a judgment roll. There is nothing in this contention. In a proceeding such as is in question here, there is no judgment roll, in the sense that it determines conclusively anything. The statute provides for a commission in each county in the state, consisting of at least two physicians and a judge of the superior court of the county, whose duties in the examination of one alleged to be insane, are limited and confined to the specific purpose, viz., to ascertain whether such alleged insane person is a proper subject to be admitted for care and treatment to the insane asylums of the state. This commission is purely a creature of the statute. It is not intended as, and is not, a tribunal in which the status of the alleged insane person is fixed, but simply a commission which determines whether the mental condition of the person it has examined is such as warrants his detention in the asylum for treatment. From these considerations we are satisfied that the ruling of the court, as far as it went, was correct.

It is further claimed by appellant that the court erred in admitting, over his objection, a petition for a writ of habeas corpus made by him, and likewise his testimony given on the hearing thereof. It appears that defendant was placed in the Mendocino State Hospital under the commitment of December 22, 1905, on that date. Thirteen days thereafter a petition for a writ of habeas corpus was presented to the superior court of Mendocino county, signed by appellant himself. In it he stated that on December 22, 1905, he was committed to the Mendocino State Hospital as an insane person, and that he "is now sane," and prayed for his discharge from said hospital. We think the petition was admissible. As the order of December 22, 1905, committing him to the hospital had been introduced in evidence, it was proper for the people to show by the records of the court that he had been discharged therefrom, in order that the prosecution might not be placed in the attitude of trying the appellant for murder while he was detained by the medical superintendent of the hospital under the commitment as insane. It is true that, previous to the offer, the superintendent of the hospital had testified that appellant had been discharged from the hospital on habeas corpus proceedings, but this was only cumulative evidence, and did not affect the admissibility of the record. Aside from this, however, the making of this petition was the voluntary act of the appellant, and the evidence shows that he read and understood it when it was presented. This being true, and being an act done by him within a short time after the homicide, the fact of its presentation, and the declarations of the defendant made in it, were admissible as bearing on the question of the mental capacity of the appellant at the time the homicide was committed. It is a rule of evidence in this state that where the defense of insanity is interposed against a criminal charge, the acts and conduct of the accused at the time of, and within a reasonable time before and after the alleged criminal act is committed, may be presented to the jury upon the question of insanity existing at the time of its commission. People v. Lee Fook, 85 Cal. 300, 24 Pac. 654; People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 260, 46 Pac. 1073; People v. Zeigler, 142 Cal. 338, 75 Pac. 1090. Within the rule of these authorities the claim of appellant that the admission in evidence of his testimony taken on the hearing of said petition was error, must also be disposed of against him. This testimony was admitted solely on the question of the mental condition of the appellant, and within that limitation was properly admitted. With reference to the admission of this evidence, it is insisted that by permitting its introduction, it was in fact compelling the appellant "in a criminal case to be a witness against himself" contrary to the provisions of article 5 of the Constitution, and of article 1, § 13, of the Constitution of this state. There is no merit in this claim. The habeas corpus proceedings were not instituted by any public authority, or by any friend on behalf of appellant, but by appellant himself, and it fairly appears from his own statement, while testifying in the habeas corpus proceeding, that he was informed by the district attorney that were he discharged under it he would still be prosecuted for the killing of deceased. He was not required to take the stand at the hearing on the application for the writ. He was under no compulsion whatever, but, as the record shows, was sworn on his own behalf. Under such circumstances, it cannot be said that the introduction of his testimony given on the habeas corpus proceedings was in effect at all violative of any of his constitutional rights. Not only was the testimony voluntarily given, and the proceeding inaugurated solely by himself, but, when his testimony as there given is examined, there is nothing in it which can be construed as a confession or admission of guilt, and it is established as the rule in this state that the admissions or statements made by the defendant, which do not amount to a confession of guilt, are admissible against him whether they are voluntary or not. People v. Le Roy, 65 Cal. 613, 4 Pac. 649; People v. Knowlton, 122 Cal. 357, 55 Pac. 141; People v. Miller, 122 Cal. 84, 54 Pac. 523.

Complaint is further made as to the admission in rebuttal of certain evidence offered by the prosecution. Most of it, particularly on the question of the insanity of appellant, was properly evidence in rebuttal. As to the rest of it, it is apparent that it would have been admissible if offered in chief. The fact that it was permitted to be given in rebuttal constituted of itself no ground of complaint. A court is warranted in departing from the order of proof prescribed by section 1093 of the Penal Code under proper circumstances. Whether it shall permit such departure is a matter committed to its sound discretion, and its action in that regard is not ground upon which error may be predicated unless the discretion appears to have been grossly abused, and this abuse must affirmatively appear. Pen. Code, § 1094; People v. Gordan, 103 Cal. 568, 37 Pac. 534. There is no appearance of abuse in permitting the departure in the case at bar; hence, the point made is not well taken. We have discussed all the rulings of the court made during the trial relative to the admissibility of evidence of which appellant complains, and which we deem worthy of particular consideration. Some other objections on the same line are urged by appellant, but we do not think them tenable or requiring any special mention.

As to the other points urged. The claim of prejudicial misconduct on the part of the district attorney is, in our judgment, of no force. In his closing address to the jury the district attorney, in arguing the existence of possible malice of appellant against the deceased, stated that according to the two commitments in evidence the deceased had placed the appellant in the asylum. Exception was taken by appellant to this statement. After some discussion between court and counsel on both sides as to what the evidence was in that respect, the court declared that there was no evidence in the record to sustain the statement and instructed the jury, then and there, to disregard the remarks of the district attorney concerning it. Thereafter no reference to the subject was made by the district attorney. It is apparent from the record that this statement of the district attorney was made in the honest belief that the evidence supported it, and as the court immediately pointed out his error, and instructed the jury to disregard it, we are satisfied that, under those circumstances, the conduct of the district attorney cannot be said to have been so prejudicial to the appellant as to warrant a reversal on that account. Verdicts will not be disturbed merely on account of the inadvertent mistakes of counsel as to matters of evidence in addressing juries. It is only when from the course of conduct of a prosecuting officer, it is apparent that the right of the defendant to a fair trial has been prejudicially invaded, that he can successfully complain of it, and nothing of the kind appears here. People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 340, 38 Pac. 945; People v. Putman, 129 Cal. 262, 61 Pac. 961. As to the other matter concerning which misconduct by the same officer is specified, less need be said. It occurred also in his closing address. In his remarks no statement was made by him of any facts which the evidence did not disclose. The matters complained of were suggestions in his argument of certain inferences and deductions, which the jury should make from particular evidence in the case. The exception was leveled against these deductions and inferences. This was no ground for exception. Counsel have a right to present to the jury their views of the proper deductions or inferences which the facts warrant. There reasoning may be faulty; their deductions from the premises illogical, but this is a matter for the jury ultimately to determine, and not a subject for exception on the part of opposing counsel.

It is next insisted that the court erred in giving an instruction to the jury upon the subject of insanity—that the burden of proof was upon the defendant to establish that defense and that it must be established by a preponderance of evidence. But this has been the established rule in this state practically since its earliest history, repeatedly affirmed by this court, so that it cannot be considered as open to further question. It was first established as the correct rule to be applied in this state in People v. Myers, 20 Cal. 518, and has been adhered to ever since. People v. Travers, 88 Cal. 233, 26 Pac. 88, citing a list of cases sustaining the rule since People v. Myers, supra; People v. Bawden, 90 Cal. 195, 27 Pac. 204; People v. McNulty, 93 Cal. 443, 26 Pac. 597, 29 Pac. 61; People v. Bemmerly, 98 Cal. 299, 33 Pac. 263; People v. Ward, 105 Cal. 342, 38 Pac. 945; People v. Allender, 117 Cal. 81, 48 Pac. 1014.

We approach now the last point made by appellant—that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict. Counsel for appellant make this contention in their brief, without endeavoring to at all specify in what particulars it is insufficient; they simply state the point. We have, however, considering the gravity of the position of the appellant on this appeal, made a careful examination of the record to find if this claim of appellant finds support from it, and are satisfied that it does not. This court cannot disturb a verdict unless there is no evidence to support it, or where the evidence relied on by the prosecution is apparently so improbable or false as to be incredible, or where it so clearly and unquestionably preponderates against the verdict as to convince this court that its return was the result of passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. In a case presenting any of these features, this court would deal with it as a matter of law. Such a situation, however, can only be presented on appeal in extreme cases, and, notwithstanding the claim of appellant, the record before us does not disclose any such case. It presents the usual and ordinary situation where the evidence was conflicting as to the only real question in the case—the insanity of the appellant—and the jury finding against it, and their finding being supported by material evidence, is conclusive on this court.

The claim of counsel that on the subject of the insanity of appellant the evidence was so overwhelmingly in favor of it, is, as we say, without foundation. This claim seems to be based on the several orders of commitment to the insane asylum. But it did not at all follow because appellant was so committed that the commitment was proof that he was insane to the extent that the law would exempt him from responsibility for his criminal acts. There are many kinds and degrees of insanity, and it is not every kind or degree which will relieve a person from such responsibility, and the degree of mental impairment which would authorize his confinement in an asylum for the insane may be entirely different from the degree of mental derangement which will relieve him from responsibility for his criminal acts. A person may be partially insane, or be insane upon one or several subjects, and for that reason be a proper person for confinement in a state insane asylum to be cared for and treated for his mental disorder, and yet at the same time such person may be perfectly sane upon all other subjects and entirely responsible under the law for a criminal act committed by him. In re Buchanan, 129 Cal. 330, 61 Pac. 1120, 50 L. R. A. 378. That insanity may be available as a defense to a crime charged, it must appear that the defendant, when the act was committed, was so deranged and diseased mentally that he was not conscious of the wrongful nature of the act committed. If he has reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act he is doing, knowledge and consciousness that what he is doing is wrong and criminal, and will subject him to punishment, he must be held responsible for his conduct. Although he may be laboring under partial insanity, as, for instance, suffering from some insane delusion or hallucination, still if he understands the nature and character of his action and its consequences, if he has knowledge that it is wrong and criminal and that if he does the act he will do wrong, such partial insanity or the existence of such delusion or hallucination is not sufficient to relieve him from responsibility for his criminal acts. Now, while it is true that the appellant was committed to the insane asylum under two commitments prior to the last one of December 22, 1905, there was no evidence introduced to show that he was irresponsibly insane at those times within the rule as the law prescribes it. In fact, the evidence shows that on both these occasions he was suffering merely from acute alcoholism; that he was to some extent mentally deranged therefrom, but after he had been there from 10 days to a couple of weeks he recovered, and was subsequently discharged from the asylum as cured.

As to the last commitment to the asylum—the one made on the morning of the homicide. The fact that the appellant had been ordered committed to the Mendocino State Hospital for Insane immediately prior to the homicide did not of itself exempt him from responsibility for the killing of deceased. He might have been suffering from partial insanity, such as would justify his detention in the asylum for care and treatment, and still, as we have seen, not be insane to such an extent as to be deemed irresponsible in law for his conduct. The fact that he was committed to the asylum did not conclusively establish the fact that he was insane at all. Notwithstanding the commitment, it was a question for the jury to determine whether he was in fact insane, and to what extent. They were in no wise concluded by the report of the medical examiners that appellant was insane, or by the opinion of the medical examiners as to the nature of his insanity, or by the judgment which declared him insane and ordered him committed to the asylum. The report of the medical examiners, and the judgment and order of commitment being before them, were to be regarded by the jury only as evidence bearing on the question of insanity. These were to be considered by them, but what weight or credibility, if any, they should give them, was entirely a matter for their determination. Now, as to the judgment and commitment of the morning of December 22, 1905. It appears from the testimony of the examining physicians given on the trial, that they believed from the evidence adduced at the medical examination, and so stated in their medical report, that the appellant was the subject of an insane delusion, namely, that he was appointed by President Roosevelt and Gov. Pardee a peace officer to arrest people or evil doers. They testified that during the examination upon all other subjects he talked rationally and appeared to be sane. As to the statement in the report of their examination of appellant that he was "homicidal; dangerous," they testified that this statement was made by them in response to one of the questions contained in a blank form for medical examinations in insanity cases prescribed by the state commission in lunacy. The question prescribed in that form was: "Is alleged insane person noisy, restless, violent, dangerous, destructive, incendiary, excited, or depressed, homicidal or suicidal?" It was in response to this inquiry that the examining physicians answered "homicidal; dangerous." As a witness on the trial, testifying as to the medical examination of appellant, Dr. Bond, a physician, who acted as one of the medical examiners, and who gave the answers to be written down, said that during the examination of appellant, after the latter had stated that he was appointed by President Roosevelt and Gov. Pardee as a peace officer to arrest evil doers, he asked him if he would kill a person in the exercise of his duties as peace officer—whether he would kill a wrongdoer if he had him under arrest—whether he would injure him in any way—to which appellant responded that he would kill him if necessary; that this inquiry and the answer of appellant furnished the basis for stating that he was "homicidal; dangerous." Upon the trial four other witnesses testified to other conversations with the defendant, having for their basis this apparent delusion of being appointed as a peace officer by the President and Governor, and that in these conversations defendant, in their judgment, talked irrationally. This was practically all the evidence offered on the part of the defense to sustain the plea of insanity.

Upon the part of the prosecution a number of persons were called who had known defendant intimately a number of years prior to the homicide, who testified that he was rational during all the time they knew him. A large number of witnesses testified to the conduct of the defendant immediately subsequent to the homicide, and that he was entirely rational. And the assistant medical superintendent in charge of the asylum to which appellant was taken on the day of the homicide under the commitment of that date, who examined, observed and talked with him while he was there, testified that during all of the time he was there he was perfectly rational. Attendants at the asylum, who observed and conversed with him, testified likewise. The physicians who examined him at the hearing on December 22, 1905, testified, as we have already said, that upon every other subject than the delusion referred to he was sane, and the superior judge who presided at that examination testified that except as to that delusion defendant appeared to be entirely rational. There was further evidence in the case that several years before the day of the homicide, appellant had stated that he would kill anybody who would try to put him in the asylum again, and the day before the homicide made the same declaration. This is a general statement of the evidence presented on both sides. We do not deem it necessary to go into detail, and state it only as far as we have, to show that there was no such preponderance of evidence in favor of the insanity of appellant as is claimed by his counsel; but, on the contrary, there was a clear and marked conflict in the evidence on this issue. The trial court fully and fairly instructed the jury on the law of insanity as applied to the evidence in the case, with special instructions for determining the responsibility of one suffering from an insane delusion, if they found it existed. Under the conflicting evidence in the case, and applying the instructions to it, the jury in returning a verdict of guilty determined that the appellant was sane. The evidence on behalf of the prosecution, if believed by the jury, warranted them in doing so, and we cannot disturb their conclusion.

This disposes of all the points made on the appeal, and no reason appearing for the reversal of the judgment, it and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

GOORBERG v. WESTERN ASSUR. CO.
(L. A. 1,501.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1907.)

1. INSURANCE — FIRE INSURANCE — POLICY — CONSTRUCTION.

A fire policy insured for a specified sum a dwelling, and for a specified sum household goods therein, and stipulated that the "entire policy" should be void if the interest of the insured in the property was not truly stated. The building was located on unsurveyed government land, and the insured made misrepresentations with respect to his title to the realty. Held, that the policy was entire, without reference to the fact that the premium was entire, and without reference to the use of the word "entire," for the risk to the contents of the house was affected by the circumstances which affected the risk to the building itself.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, §§ 549, 634.]

2. SAME—WAIVER—RETENTION OF PREMIUM.

The mere retention by an insurer of the premium for a fire policy after a loss has occurred, and where its liability is denied, is not a waiver of the defense that the policy is void because of misrepresentations as to the insured's title to the realty.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 1045.]

3. SAME—PLEADINGS.

Where, in an action on a fire policy, the complaint showed that there had been a breach of warranty as to title, and to overcome the same it was averred that the policy was issued after notice of the defect of title, the question whether waiver or estoppel might have been created by other facts was not in issue, for, if an insured relies on waiver or estoppel as to any defense otherwise available to the insurer, the facts constituting the waiver or estoppel must be pleaded.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 28, Insurance, § 1637.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by A. V. D. Goorberg against the Western Assurance Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Sylvester G. Williams and Edwin A. Meserve, for appellant. George L. Keefer, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This is an action upon a policy of fire insurance, by which, in consideration of a premium of $21.75, the defendant insured the plaintiff in the sum of $1,700 against loss or damage by fire to five different items of property; a specific amount of insurance being apportioned to each item—that is to say, $550 on a frame dwelling, situate upon certain land described in the policy; $725 on household furniture contained in said dwelling; $150 on a smaller dwelling, situate upon the same land; $75 on household furniture situate in the smaller dwelling; and $200 on tools, farming implements, etc., contained in the building first described. A fire occurred, causing damage to each of the five items. The amount of such damage is not here in dispute. The principal defense, and the only one which need be considered on this appeal, is based upon the following provisions of the policy: "This entire policy shall be void if the insured has concealed, or misrepresented, in writing or otherwise, any material fact or circumstance concerning this insurance or the subject thereof; or if the interest of the insured in the property be not truly stated herein; or in case of any fraud or false swearing by the insured touching any matter relating to this insurance or the subject thereof, whether before or after a loss." It appears that the buildings were located upon unsurveyed government land, to which plaintiff had no title. He was merely in possession as a "squatter." The plaintiff claimed, and so alleged, that any warranty as to title had been waived by defendant's agents, in that they had caused the policy to be issued after having received from plaintiff full notice of the fact that he was holding as a "squatter" on unsurveyed government land. This alleged notice and waiver were denied by the insurer, which alleged that plaintiff, at the time of applying for the insurance, stated to defendant that he was the owner in fee simple of the land, and on these issues the case went to trial before a jury. The court charged the jury as follows: "I instruct you that, on the evidence before you, without any conflict, the plaintiff is entitled to a verdict for $748.95 for loss on the personal property described in the policy of insurance. As to the loss claimed on the buildings, I instruct you that, if you find that the defendant or its agents did not know, or had not been informed at the time of the issuance of the policy, that the plaintiff did not own the land on which the buildings were located, and did not learn that plaintiff did not own the land until after the commencement of this action, then plaintiff is not entitled to recover anything for the loss of the buildings. But, if defendant or its agents did have knowledge of the plaintiff's title or learned of it before the fire, then there was a waiver of the fact that plaintiff did not own the land, and plaintiff is entitled to recover the loss of said building, viz., $575.30. If you find on this issue in favor of the plaintiff, your verdict will be for the plaintiff for $1,324.25. If you find on this issue in favor of the defendant, then your verdict will be for the plaintiff in the sum of $748.95." The verdict was for $748.95 (the amount of loss claimed on the second, fourth, and fifth items of the policy), and defendant appeals from the resulting judgment and an order denying a new trial.

It is evident that the trial court regarded the conditions and warranties which we have quoted as applying solely to the buildings insured, and not to the contents of those buildings. In other words, the policy was treated as severable into as many contracts as there were items insured. Whether such policies, insuring distinct items for different amounts, in consideration of a gross premium, are to be regarded as entire or severable, is a question that has not heretofore come before this court, although it has been passed on by the courts of many other states. The authorities on the point are so numerous that it would be impracticable to attempt to review, or even to cite, all of them. There is conflict between the adjudications of different courts, and even, in some instances, between those of the same court. In a general way, the effect of the cases may be summarized and illustrated by saying that the courts of a number of states have laid down the rule accepted by the trial court in the case at bar, namely, that, where the property insured consists of different items which are separately valued, or insured for separate amounts, the contract is divisible, and a breach of warranty or condition as to one item will not affect the insurance on the remainder of the property, even though the premium be entire. Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 73 N. Y. 452, 29 Am. Rep. 184; Schuster v. Dutchess County Mut. Ins. Co., 102 N. Y. 260, 6 N. E. 406; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Metc. (Ky.) 9, 81 Am. Dec. 521; Continental Ins. Co. v. Ward, 50 Kan. 346, 31 Pac. 1079; State Ins. Co. v. Schreck, 27 Neb. 527, 43 N. W. 340, 6 L. R. A. 524, 20 Am. St. Rep. 696; Commercial Ins. Co. v. Spankneble, 52 Ill. 53, 4 Am. Rep. 582; Loehner v. Home Mut. Ins. Co., 17 Mo. 247; Sullivan v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 36 S. W. 73, 89 Tex. 665; Manchester Fire Assur. Co. v. Feibelman, 118 Ala. 308, 23 South. 759; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. Barker, 41 Pac. 513, 6 Colo. App. 535; Clark v. New England Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 6 Cush. (Mass.) 342, 53 Am. Dec. 44; Bullman v. North Brit. & Merc. Ins. Co., 159 Mass. 118, 34 N. E. 169; Wright v. Fire Ins. Co., 12 Mont. 474, 31 Pac. 87, 19 L. R. A. 211; Coleman v. New Orleans Ins. Co., 49 Ohio St. 310, 31 N. E. 279, 16 L. R. A. 174, 34 Am. St. Rep. 565; Light v. Greenwich Ins. Co., 105 Tenn. 480, 58 S. W. 851; Conn. Fire Ins. Co. v. Tilley, 88 Va. 1024, 14 S. E. 851, 29 Am. St. Rep. 770; Quarrier v. Peabody Ins. Co., 10 W. Va. 507, 27 Am. Rep. 582.

On the other hand, there are many cases holding that such contracts are entire, and that a breach of any condition or warranty vitiates the whole insurance; most of these decisions basing their conclusion on the ground that the premium was a single or gross sum. Gottsman v. Pennsylvania Ins. Co., 56 Pa. 210, 94 Am. Dec. 55; Day v. Charter Oak F. & M. Ins. Co., 51 Me. 91; Plath v. Minn. Farmers' Mut. Fire Ins. Ass'n, 23 Minn. 479, 23 Am. Rep. 697; Garver v. Hawkeye Ins. Co., 69 Iowa, 202, 28 N. W. 555; Cuthbertson v. North Car. Home Ins. Co., 96 N. C. 480, 2 S. E. 258; Southern Fire Ins. Co. v. Knight, 111 Ga. 622, 36 S. E. 821, 52 L. R. A. 70, 78 Am. St. Rep. 216; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 88, 33 Atl. 429, 30 L. R. A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457; McGowan v. People's Mut. Fire Ins., 54 Vt. 211, 41 Am. Rep. 843.

There is still another line of cases which take a middle ground between the extreme doctrines above stated, and hold that the question of the severability of the contract in such cases depends upon the nature of the risk, i. e., that, where the property is so situated that the risk on one item cannot be affected without affecting the risk on the other items, the policy must be regarded as entire; but where the property is so situated that the risk on each item is separate and distinct from the risk on the other items, so that what affects the risk on one item does not affect the risk on the others, the policy must be regarded as severable. Havens v. Home Ins. Co., 111 Ind. 90, 12 N. E. 137, 60 Am. Rep. 689; Phenix Ins. Co. v. Pickel, 119 Ind. 155, 21 N. E. 546, 12 Am. St. Rep. 393; Pickel v. Phenix Ins. Co., 119 Ind. 291, 21 N. E. 898; Worachek v. New Denmark Mut. Home Fire Ins. Co., 78 N. W. 411, 102 Wis. 88; Taylor v. Anchor Mut. Fire Ins. Co., 116 Iowa, 625, 88 N. W. 807, 57 L. R. A.

328, 93 Am. St. Rep. 261; Western Assurance Co. v. Stoddard, 88 Ala. 606, 7 South. 379; Republic Co. Mut. Fire Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 76 Pac. 419, 69 Kan. 146, 105 Am. St. Rep. 157; Hartshorne v. Agr'l Ins. Co., 50 N. J. Law, 427, 14 Atl. 615; Brehm Lumber Co. v. Svea Ins. Co., 79 Pac. 34, 36 Wash. 520, 68 L. R. A. 109; Herzog v. Palatine Ins. Co., 79 Pac. 287, 36 Wash. 611; Ætna Ins. Co. v. Resh, 44 Mich. 55, 6 N. W. 114, 38 Am. Rep. 228; Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Public Parks Amusement Co., 37 S. W. 959, 63 Ark. 187; Baldwin v. Hartford Fire Ins. Co., 60 N. H. 422, 49 Am. Rep. 324.

In our opinion, the rule declared in the cases last cited is supported by reason, and tends to produce a just result. Whether a contract is entire or severable is a question of intention, to be determined from the language employed by the parties, viewed in the light of the circumstances surrounding them at the time they contracted. Sterling v. Gregory (Cal.) 85 Pac. 305. In these cases the policy, insuring several classes of property, provides that it shall be void in certain events. In view of the settled rule that any uncertainty or ambiguity in a contract of insurance is to be interpreted most strongly against the insurer, it is proper to say that this language should not be given the effect of avoiding the policy as to every item insured in all cases. Where the warranty or condition which is broken does not affect the risk on certain items, the insurance should not be held to be ineffective as to those items. Such construction would subject the insured to a forfeiture for a cause which had no substantial relation to the interest of the insurer. The purpose of the warranties and conditions is to protect the insurer from liability on risks which he would have been unwilling to take for the stipulated premium, or, perhaps, for any premium. And if, as to any item, the breach of condition or warranty does not at all affect the risk, the release of the insurer from liability for that item may fairly be said not to have been within the reason or the condition or warranty, and hence not within the contemplation of the parties. For example, where a single policy insured, in separate amounts, two buildings situated upon farms several miles apart, the breach of a warranty of title as to one would not in the slightest degree increase the risk on the other, and the policy should be held severable. Loomis v. Rockford Ins. Co., 77 Wis. 87, 45 N. W. 813, 8 L. R. A. 834, 20 Am. St. Rep. 96. We do not think the mere fact that the premium is entire should affect this conclusion. On the other hand, where the breach of condition, although in terms affecting only one item, is such as to increase the hazard to which other items are subjected, the avoiding of the policy as to all such items is the very thing which is requisite in order to protect the insurer from having to assume a greater risk than the one he had contracted for. Take the case here presented, of a building and furniture in the same, both covered by the same policy. There is a breach of a warranty or representation relating to the title to the land on which the building was situated. That any misrepresentation as to title is material, and has the effect of avoiding the policy, at least as to the building, is undisputed. And one ground upon which the materiality of statements as to title has been put is that they "might, and probably would, influence the mind of the underwriter in forming or declining the contract. Generally speaking, insurances against fire are made in the confidence that the assured will use all the precautions to avoid the calamity insured against, which would be suggested by his interest. The extent of this interest must always influence the underwriter in taking or rejecting the risk or in estimating the premium." Columbia Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 25, 7 L. Ed. 335; Id., 10 Pet. (U. S.) 507, 9 L. Ed. 512. "In other words, it is in their relation to the moral hazard that the materiality of statements as to title or interests rests." 2 Cooley's Briefs on Ins., 1340. The risk is greater, then, where a man insures a house which is on land not belonging to him than it would be if he owned the land. But if the risk on the house is greater by reason of the want of ownership, it is clearly greater as to the contents of the house. It is, of course, possible that a house may burn, and a part or all of its contents be saved, but surely the contents of a house are in great danger of burning if the house takes fire, and any circumstance which increases the risk of fire to the house necessarily increases the risk to the contents. If the insuring company would have been unwilling to insure a house on land not belonging to the insured, because it might be more advantageous to the insured to have the house burn than to have it saved, it can hardly be supposed that it would have consented to take the risk on furniture contained in a house exposed to such hazard. It is, we think, no answer to this position, to say, as was said in Merrill v. Agricultural Ins. Co., supra, a case frequently cited, that insurance companies habitually insure the contents of buildings, without insuring the building or inquiring about its ownership. Such insurance on the contents alone would involve no unusual hazard. It would not tempt the insured to permit his furniture or other movables to burn. But if it be coupled with insurance on a building which he does not own, and by the destruction of which he would profit, both the house and its contents are subjected to a risk which the insurer was not willing to assume, and one against the assumption of which he expressly contracted. In the case at bar, the court directed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff for the loss on the contents of the buildings, notwithstanding the defense, and the evidence in support of it, that there had been a misrepresentation, which, as the defendant claimed, had not been waived. Under the views above set forth, this was error. The risk to the contents of the buildings was directly affected by any circumstance which affected the risk to the buildings themselves, and the contract should, so far as concerns the representation as to title, have been treated as entire.

In the foregoing discussion, we have laid no stress on the fact that the language of the policy is that "this entire policy shall be void, if," etc. In most of the cases cited above the word "entire" did not appear in the policy in this connection. It has been held (sometimes even in jurisdictions where separate valuations are ordinarily regarded as rendering the contracts divisible) that the inclusion of this word makes the contract entire and indivisible. Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. Schild, 68 N. E. 706, 69 Ohio St. 136, 100 Am. St. Rep. 663; Germier v. Springfield F. & M. I. Co., 33 South. 361, 109 La. Ann. 341; Agricultural Ins. Co. v. Hamilton, 82 Md. 88, 33 Atl. 429, 30 L. R. A. 633, 51 Am. St. Rep. 457; Martin v. Ins. Co. of N. A., 57 N. J. Law, 623, 31 Atl. 213; McWilliams v. Cascade F. & M. I. Co., 7 Wash. 48, 34 Pac. 140. But there are also cases holding, in effect, that no valid distinction can be drawn between the words "this policy shall be void," and "this entire policy shall be void." Kiernan v. Dutchess County Mut. Ins. Co., 150 N. Y. 190, 44 N. E. 698; F. F. Ins. Co. v. Barker, supra; Kans. Farmers' Fire Ins. Co. v. Saindon, 53 Kan. 623, 36 Pac. 983; Trabue v. Dwelling House Ins. Co., 121 Mo. 75, 25 S. W. 848, 23 L. R. A. 719, 42 Am. St. Rep. 523. In view of our conclusion that the policy in question is, for other reasons, an entire contract, it is not necessary in this case to express any opinion as to the effect of the use of the word "entire" in a policy which, in the absence of such word, would be treated as divisible.

The respondent contends that, whatever construction be put upon the policy, the judgment must be affirmed, because there was uncontradicted testimony to the effect that, shortly after the fire, the company ascertained the true state of the title, and for a period of several months thereafter, and up to the time of trial, made no offer to return the premium. During all this time, however, it denied liability. It may be conceded that, if by reason of a breach of warranty as to title, no risk ever attached, the insured was entitled to a return of his premium. Civ. Code, § 2617. But the insurer's delay in offering to repay it (assuming the delay to have been unreasonable) did not forfeit the right to defend for such breach. The cases cited to the proposition that a party cannot rescind a contract without restoring what he has received under it are not in point. The defendant is not in this action seeking to rescind the contract sued upon. It is standing upon the contract, and insisting that under its terms there is no liability. Nor can the mere retention of the premium, after the loss has occurred, and where the liability is steadfastly denied, constitute either a waiver of the defense or an estoppel. To constitute such waiver or estoppel by the action or nonaction of the insurer after the loss, it is essential "that one party should have relied upon the conduct of the other, and been induced by it to put himself in such a position that he would be injured if the other should be allowed to repudiate his action." McCormick v. Orient Ins. Co., 86 Cal. 260, 24 Pac. 1003; McCormick v. Springfield F. & M. I. Co., 66 Cal. 361, 5 Pac. 617. Here nothing was done which could have led the insured to believe that the defendant would not take advantage of the breach of warranty. On the contrary, it persistently asserted its reliance upon such breach. If the case of Fishbeck v. Insurance Co., 54 Cal. 422, is in conflict with these views, it must be regarded as overruled by the McCormick cases, just cited. See, also, Georgia Home Ins. Co. v. Rosenfield, 95 Fed. 358, 37 C. C. A. 96; Austin v. M. R. F. L. Ass'n (C. C.) 132 Fed. 555; Thompson v. Traveler's Ins. Co., 91 N. W. 75, 11 N. D. 274; Blaeser v. Ins. Co., 37 Wis. 39, 19 Am. Rep. 747.

Furthermore, the retention of the premium was not pleaded by the plaintiff. His complaint showed affirmatively that there had been a breach of warranty as to title, and to overcome this he was obliged to allege facts showing a waiver or estoppel. He met this requirement by alleging the issuance of the policy by the defendant after notice of the defect of title, but this did not put in issue any waiver or estoppel that might have been created by other facts. If the plaintiff relies on waiver or estoppel as to any defense which would otherwise be available to the defendant under the facts stated in the complaint, the facts constituting such waiver or estoppel must be pleaded in the first instance. 19 Cyc. 923; Gillon v. Northern Assur. Co., 127 Cal. 480, 59 Pac. 901; Vernon Ins. & T. Co. v. Maitlen, 158 Ind. 393, 63 N. E. 755; Bruce v. Germ. S. & L. Soc., 24 Or. 486, 34 Pac. 16; McCoy v. Iowa State Ins. Co., 107 Iowa, 80, 77 N. W. 529.

The judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

PEOPLE v. SCIARONI et al. (Cr. 28.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—EVIDENCE—TESTIMONY OF ACCOMPLICE—CORROBORATION.

Under the express provisions of Pen. Code, § 1111, a conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice without corroboration, both as to the commission of the offense and as to defendant's connection therewith.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1124–1126.]

2. SAME—SUFFICIENCY OF CORROBORATION.

While evidence corroborating an accomplice to sustain a conviction need not be strong, it is insufficient if it merely excites suspicion of the defendant's connection with the offense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1128–1138.]

3. SAME.

In a prosecution for exploding dynamite in a mine with intent to injure the mine and injure and intimidate human beings, evidence that a few days after the offense was supposed to have been committed defendant M. asked witness how the mine was looking, and, about the same time having ceased work at that point, inquired of the railroad ticket agent concerning the fare to Mexico, and that defendant had an opportunity to commit the crime, was insufficient corroboration of the testimony of an alleged accomplice to connect defendant therewith.

Appeal from Superior Court, Calaveras County; A. I. McSorley, Judge.

Fred Sciaroni and another were convicted of maliciously exploding dynamite in a mine with intent to injure the mine and human beings, etc., and they appeal. Reversed.

C. H. Fairall and Will A. Dower, for appellants. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. P. Snyder, Dist. Atty., and Solinsky & Wehe, for the People.

BURNETT, J. This is an appeal from the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial.

The defendants were convicted of the crime of exploding dynamite in the Angels quartz mine at Angels Camp, Calaveras county, "with the intent to injure said mine and said structures therein, and to injure, intimidate, and terrify human beings, and by means of which human beings were endangered."

The most serious contention made by defendants is that the evidence is insufficient to justify the verdict of conviction. In this connection it is urged that no corroboration of the testimony of one Charles E. Holmes, an admitted accomplice, can be found in the record. The demand of the law upon the subject is clear and unmistakable. It is set forth in the instructions given by the learned trial judge. These are substantially as follows: "A conviction cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice unless he is corroborated by other evidence, which in itself and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof." Section 1111, Pen. Code. Furthermore: "Evidence that merely excites suspicion is not sufficient corroboration." People v. Main, 114 Cal. 632, 46 Pac. 612; People v. Hoagland, 138 Cal. 341, 71 Pac. 359. Corroborative evidence need not be strong. People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 24 Pac. 32; People v. Barker, 114 Cal. 619, 46 Pac. 601. There is sufficient evidence shown by the transcript to support the conclusion that a crime was committed, but it is insufficient to establish the connection of defendants with the commission of said crime. Every circumstance upon which plaintiff relies, exclusive of the testimony of the accomplice, is entirely consistent with the innocence of defendants and compatible with the theory that Holmes alone is guilty, or that he was assisted by parties other than defendants.

As an illustration of the few circumstances which, it is urged, furnish the necessary corroboration, reference may be had to the testimony of one of the witnesses to the effect that a few days after the offense is supposed to have been committed he was asked by Mitchell how the mine was looking. In this interrogation there is no suggestion of guilt. Viewed in the light of the presumption of innocence, it would appear to be the artless expression of natural and guileless curiosity. Again, about the same time, Mitchell inquired of the ticket agent about the fare to Candalaria, Mexico. He had, however, ceased work at Angels Camp, and there is no apparent reason why he should have remained there. The fact is, moreover, that the record fails to show any attempt at flight or concealment, and the circumstance involving the ticket agent is utterly without any inculpatory significance. Again, there is some evidence that the defendants had the opportunity to commit the crime, but under the circumstances disclosed this cannot be accepted as tending to show their guilt. They had a right to be there at the time, as required by their employment, and the suggestion contained in People v. Koening, 99 Cal. 576, 34 Pac. 239, may be invoked. It is there said: "No inference of the guilt of the defendant can be drawn from the fact that he was at the saloon on the evening of the commission of the crime beyond the fact that it gave him an opportunity to advise its commission. His business called him there and his presence was not a suspicious circumstance." The other slight considerations to which attention has been directed by the Attorney General do not arise to the dignity of corroborative evidence. It is true that it is peculiarly within the province of the jury to judge of the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given to the evidence; and a verdict should not be set aside for slight or trivial causes, nor for technicalities involving no prejudicial error. But the Legislature, acting within the scope of its authority, has provided that to justify the conviction of a defendant there must be substantial corroboration of the testimony of an accomplice. This rule of evidence is doubtless based upon sound public policy. But, whether so or not, it cannot be ignored without an unwarranted invasion of the constitutional rights of the citizen.

Some criticism is directed against the action of the court in giving and refusing certain instructions. Defendants may be entitled to have the jury instructed as to the presumption of fair character, but the instruction proposed is misleading and was properly refused. In the event of a new trial the instruction upon reasonable doubt had better be modified so as to obviate the objection urged against a portion of it as given.

There is no other error in the record.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

ROSE v. DOE. (Civ. 305.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Jan. 3, 1907.)

1. Pledges—Sale—Objections—Estoppel.

Plaintiff's assignor pledged certain bonds to secure a debt, and was present, but did not object to a private sale thereof, on April 3, 1899. No objection was subsequently made to such sale until after a subsequent sale of the bonds with other similar bonds in April, 1900, to a purchaser procured by plaintiff's assignor for which he was paid a commission. Held, that both plaintiff and his assignor were estopped to object to the validity of the original sale of the pledged bonds.

2. Appeal — Review — Findings of Fact — Scope of Review.

The findings of fact which are filed with the clerk constitute the decision of the court on the issues of the case and their correctness is to be measured by the evidence, and not by any statement of opinion, made by the court during the progress of the trial.

3. Pleading—Amendment—Discretion.

Whether a defendant should be allowed to file an amended answer, is largely within the discretion of the court, which should be so exercised as to bring about a judgment on the merits of the controversy between the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 601.]

4. Trial—Reception of Evidence—Offer of Evidence—Sufficiency.

A mere offer of evidence without having a witness in court, or if he be present, without putting a question to him in such form as to give an opportunity for an objection, may be properly disallowed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 112.]

5. Appeal — Review — Presumptions — Sustaining Trial Court—Exclusion of Evidence.

In an action for an accounting of a sale of certain pledged bonds, the court directed that the issue as to the validity of the sale be first tried. After the court had stated that further evidence would be of no assistance on that issue, plaintiff's counsel offered to prove, that plaintiff's assignor did not, and could not know of the things done at the sale until about the time the suit was instituted. The offer was rejected, but the record on appeal did not show the ground of the ruling. Held, that the refusal of such offer would be sustained on the ground that the offered evidence was not within the issues then being tried, the presumption on appeal, in the absence of any contrary showing, being that the action of the lower court is correct if it can be sustained on any theory applicable to the facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by F. M. Rose against Bartlett Doe. A judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, he appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Baggett, for appellant. John Flournoy and Mich. Mullany, for respondent.

HARRISON, P. J. Action for an accounting. The cause was tried by the court, and judgment rendered in favor of the defendant. A motion by the plaintiff for a new trial was denied, and from this order he has appealed.

The facts constituting the controversy between the parties, as disclosed at the trial and shown by the findings of the court, are as follows: The plaintiff's assignor, J. S. Emery, made two promissory notes to the defendant—one bearing date September 15, 1896, for $33,319, and the other bearing date December 16, 1896, for $14,950; each payable six months after its date. As collateral security for the payment of the first note he deposited with the defendant 42 bonds of the Blue Lakes Water Company of $1,000 each, and as collateral security for the payment of the other note 23 similar bonds of the same corporation. Each of these pledges was accompanied by an instrument in writing, authorizing the defendant, in case the note for which the security was given should not be paid at its maturity, to sell the pledged property at public or private sale, at any place, with or without any previous notice to the pledgor or any notice whatever of said sale. Neither of the notes having been paid at its maturity, the defendant, on March, 20, 1899, gave written notices to Emery that on April 3, 1899, at 11 o'clock a. m. of that date, he would sell the property so pledged at private sale at his office in San Francisco (designating the street and number thereof). Pursuant to these notices the defendant, on April 3, 1899, sold said bonds to Charles F. Doe for the sum of $52,350. There was then due on the principal of said promissory notes of Emery the sum of $47,350, and the said Charles F. Doe gave to the defendant his check for that amount, and the defendant gave credit therefor to Emery, and at the same time canceled and marked "Paid" the aforesaid notes of Emery. At the time of said sale, and for more than two years prior thereto, Emery was indebted to said Charles F. Doe upon four promissory notes theretofore executed by him to said Doe, and said indebtedness then amounted to $10,180. After giving to the defendant his check for the aforesaid amount of $47,350, Charles F. Doe applied $5,000 of the sum for which he had purchased the bonds as a credit upon the said indebtedness of Emery to himself. Emery, together with his legal counsel, was present at the sale of said bonds, and heard and saw all that took place at the time of said sale, and knew of the application by the defendant and Charles F. Doe of the respective portions of the sum for which the bonds were sold as credits upon his indebtedness to them as aforesaid, but he did not, nor did either of them, either then, or at any time prior to the commencement of this action, make any objection to the manner of making said sale, or to the price at which they were sold, or to the manner in which the price was credited to Emery, or inform or notify the defendant that Emery claimed that the sale was in any respect defective or invalid, or that he elected to treat it as defective or invalid. In addition to the bonds so purchased by him, Charles F. Doe was the owner of 50 other similar bonds of the same corporation, and after said sale and prior to April 25, 1899, he sold to the defendant 65 of said bonds, and on April 25, 1899, the defendant and said Charles F. Doe entered into an agreement with John Flournoy for the sale of the 115 of said bonds held by them, in which it was provided, among other things, that said Flournoy would endeavor to sell said bonds at the highest price obtainable therefor, and should receive from the defendant and Charles F. Doe one-half of whatever sum might be received upon their sale above the sum of $93,800, that being estimated as the approximate cash outlay by them for said bonds. This agreement was prepared and drafted by T. C. Judkins, who was then, and had been for a long time next prior thereto, and was for a long time next subsequent thereto, the attorney and counsel of Emery, representing and acting for him and attending to his legal business, and said Judkins, presented the said instrument to the defendant and to Charles F. Doe, and induced them and each of them to enter into and sign it. Prior to April 25, 1900, Emery was informed by the defendant of the said agreement with Flournoy, and was also informed of its terms and provisions, and after being so informed entered into an agreement with Flournoy, by which they agreed that if the 115 bonds owned by the defendant and Charles F. Doe should be sold to a purchaser procured by Emery, Flournoy would pay and deliver to Emery, and Emery would receive and accept as his commission for procuring said purchaser, whatever surplus above $5,000 should be coming to Flournoy under his aforesaid agreement with the defendant and Charles F. Doe, and that Flournoy should retain such sum of $5,000 as his share of said commissions. On April 25, 1900, the 115 bonds were sold to purchasers procured by Emery and Flournoy for the sum of $109,250, and on April 27th Flournoy received from the defendant and Charles F. Doe the commission to which he became entitled under his aforesaid agreement with them, and paid over and delivered to Emery a portion thereof pursuant to the said agreement between Emery and himself. Upon these facts the court held that the plaintiff was not entitled to any relief. Other matters were embraced in several of the above transactions, between the parties, but as they do not affect the relations between them as shown by the aforesaid statement, a statement of their character is omitted.

The pivotal point of the controversy between the plaintiff and the defendant is the sale of the bonds by the defendant April 3, 1899—the plaintiff contending that, by reason of the mode in which the sale was conducted, it was invalid, and that his ownership of the bonds was not affected thereby, and much of the argument of his counsel is directed to this point. The court has, however, found in favor of the validity of the sale, and we cannot say that the evidence is insufficient to sustain its decision. But, even if its findings on this issue should be disregarded, we are of the opinion that the evidence before the court, and its findings thereon, respecting the conduct of Emery at the time of the sale, his silence and acquiescence therein, his unexplained delay in making any objection thereto, and his conduct thereafter in connection with the bonds, and in reference to their sale in 1900 under the agreement between the defendant and Flournoy, his agreement with Flournoy to accept a compensation for effecting their sale, and his acceptance of such compensation after their sale, and their delivery from the defendant to the purchaser, if not technically a ratification of the sale by the defendant in 1899, operated as an estoppel against Emery, and the plaintiff as his assignee, from disputing its validity, and justified the court in refusing the plaintiff any relief. The evidence in the record is quite voluminous, and, in many material points, is conflicting and quite contradictory. It would serve no useful purpose to recount it at length, but it suffices to say that it justifies all of the findings of the court which are material for sustaining its judgment; and even if it be conceded that some of the other findings are without sufficient evidence to support them, as claimed by the appellant yet, inasmuch as these findings do not countervail the findings which are material to the judgment, and which are fully justified by the evidence, and would not impair the judgment if contrary findings had been made, the want of evidence to support them would not warrant a reversal of the order denying a new trial. At the trial the court directed the parties to first introduce their evidence relative to the sale of the bonds on April 3, 1899, so that the issue upon the validity of that sale might be first determined; and, at the close of the plaintiff's case, the defendant moved for a nonsuit upon the ground that the evidence did not show that the sale was invalid. The court took the matter under advisement, and at a subsequent day denied the motion, filing an opinion in connection therewith, in which it stated that the sale was invalid, and ordered that the cause be set down for a further hearing. Upon the final submission of the cause the court filed its findings of fact, in which it held that the sale was valid, and it is contended by the appellant that the opinion of the court given upon denying the motion for a nonsuit should prevail over its findings of fact. The correctness of the findings of fact is to be determined upon a consideration of the entire evidence in the case, together with such inferences of fact as the trial court might properly draw therefrom, and is not in any way impeached by the fact that at some stage in the course of the trial the court may have given or expressed a contrary opinion. The findings of fact which are filed with the clerk constitute the decision of the court upon the issues in the cause, and their correctness is to be measured by the evidence in the cause, and not by any statement or opinion made during the progress of the trial.

After the motion for a nonsuit had been denied, the court, upon the motion of the defendant, gave him leave to file an amended answer. The plaintiff excepted to this ruling, and now urges that it was error for the court to allow the defendant to amend his answer by setting up special defenses other than those presented in the original answer. The original answer is not contained in the record before us, and we are unable to make any comparison of the defenses therein with those upon which the cause was tried; but even if the fact be as claimed by the appellant, the court did not err in permitting the amendment. Stringer v. Davis, 30 Cal. 321; Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786; Gould v. Stafford, 101 Cal. 32, 35 Pac. 429; Crosby v. Clark, 132 Cal. 8, 63 Pac. 1022; McDougald v. Hulet, 132 Cal. 154, 4 Pac. 278. In determining whether to allow a defendant to file an amended answer much is left to the discretion of the court, and, as in the case of setting aside a default, this discretion is best exercised when it tends to bring about a judgment upon the merits of the controversy between the parties. It can very rarely happen that the allowance of an amendment, for the purpose of setting up a defense upon the merits that has not been previously pleaded, would be held erroneous. As was said in Stringer v. Davis, supra, where the trial court had denied the defendant leave to amend his answer upon the ground, as alleged by it, that, if allowed, a recovery by the plaintiff might be defeated, "such would seem to be a very good reason why the amendment should be allowed." After the testimony on the part of the plaintiff relating to the validity of the sale of the bonds by the defendant on April 3, 1899, had been presented, the record recites the following proceedings: "Here counsel for the plaintiff offered to prove that Mr. Emery did not know and could not have known of the various details respecting the matters and things done at the sale so far as the giving of the check and its return was concerned until about the time of the institution of the suit. The court sustained the objection thereto, and the plaintiff duly excepted."

The record does not show the nature or grounds of the objection; and as error in the ruling of the court is not to be presumed, for the purpose of sustaining its ruling if any valid objection could have been made to receiving the evidence offered it will be assumed that such objection was made. The objection may have been upon the ground that there was no means at hand of making the proof. A mere "offer" without having the witness in court, or, if he be present, without putting a question to him in such form as to give an opportunity for an objection, would be a sufficient ground for the ruling. In Biddick v. Kobler, 110 Cal. 191, 42 Pac. 578, it is said: "A mere general 'offer' to prove a variety of things without producing the witness or evidence whereby they are to be proved, or segregating the different items, is an improper method of presenting offered evidence, and should not be allowed unless by consent of parties." This offer of proof was made after the court had stated that, for the purpose of deciding that issue, "I do not see how any further evidence could be of any assistance to the court at all. All these other things would come in later." And under this statement of the court a sufficient ground for the objection, and for the ruling of the court would have been that the matters offered were not within the issues which the court had directed to be first tried and which were then before it for trial; or that the testimony offered was not a part of the plaintiff's case, but was in anticipation of what might be shown in defense of the action. In such case the plaintiff would not be precluded from introducing the evidence at a subsequent stage of the trial, but such subsequent offer was not made. Many other rulings of the trial court are assigned as error, the greater part of which are, however, upon matters not essential to the merits of the case, and in none of which a different ruling would have affected the decision, and for this reason need not be further considered in this opinion.

The order denying a new trial is affirmed.

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 22, 1907.)

CERTIORARI—EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY.

The Supreme Court will not entertain a petition for a writ of review to a county board, where the superior court having jurisdiction in the matter, has refused such a writ; the remedy being by appeal from the superior court (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 939, 963, 1064, 1110).

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Certiorari, § 5.]

Petition by J. B. Beaumont for writ of review to W. H. Samson and others, as board of supervisors of the county of Tehama. Writ denied.

Chas. L. Donohoe and Frank Freeman, for petitioners. McCoy & Gans, for defendants.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The petition sets forth that on September 6, 1906, there was filed in the office of the clerk of defendants a petition asking that defendants give notice of an election to be held for the purpose of determining whether the territory in said petition described, including the town of Corning, shall become incorporated under the act approved March 13, 1883. It is set forth in the petition for the writ that, in certain particulars alleged to be essential to the jurisdiction of the defendants to act in the matter, the petition presented to defendants was fatally defective. It appears that the petition was presented to and heard by defendants, as such board of supervisors; that an election was held pursuant to notice thereof published in the "New Era," a newspaper published in the town of Corning, said county, but as to which it is alleged that no proof of such publication was made to said defendants before making the order declaring the result of said election or before making the order declaring that the territory described therein had become duly incorporated as a municipal corporation of the sixth class. The petition for the writ alleges further: "That heretofore your petitioner presented his petition and application to the Honorable John F. Ellison, judge of the superior court of Tehama county, state of California, praying that a writ of review issue to the board of supervisors of the county of Tehama in the matter hereinbefore set out and alleged in this petition, and on the 11th day of January, 1907, the said judge * * * made and entered an order refusing to issue a writ of review in said matter, and denying the application of your petitioner herein for such writ of review, and dismissing your petitioner's petition in said matter. That the said Hon. John F. Ellison, judge of the superior court of Tehama county as aforesaid, denied the said application of your petitioner upon the sole ground that the subject was not a proper matter for the issuance of the writ." Upon filing the petition, this court issued an order for the defendants to show cause why the writ should not issue, in response to which defendants appeared by demurrer and also by answer, showing the proceedings before the superior court. The demurrer alleged the following grounds: (1) Insufficiency of facts to constitute a proper cause for writ of review; (2) that defendants in respect of the matters set forth in the petition were not exercising judicial functions; (3) that in said matter there is "a plain, speedy and adequate remedy" without resort to writ of review, namely, by quo warranto; (4) that the said board has fully completed its proceedings in the matter, and that no beneficial purpose would be subserved by the writ; (5) that the town of Corning is now, by virtue of the said proceedings, in the full enjoyment of the powers of a municipality, and is acting in fact as such; (6) that the order of the superior court made and entered on the 11th day of January, 1907, is an appealable order and is conclusive except on appeal, and hence no writ should issue.

It appears by plaintiff's petition that the matter as here presented was submitted by petitioner to said superior court, was heard by that court, writ denied, and proceedings dismissed. The view we have taken of the case makes it unnecessary to pass upon the questions presented by defendants at this time, except the last one above enumerated. The superior court had jurisdiction and was empowered to hear and determine the matter. The reason given by the court for, or the ground of, his decision, does not affect the question we are about to consider. He had jurisdiction to act, and he exercised that jurisdiction. This was sufficient for the present purpose. "A judgment in a special proceeding is the final determination of the rights of the parties therein. * * *" Code Civ. Proc. § 1064. The provisions of part 2 of the Code of Civil Procedure, relating to new trials and appeals, apply to the proceedings mentioned in title 1, pt. 3, which relates to writs of review and other writs. Code Civ. Proc. § 1110. "An appeal may be taken to the Supreme Court from the superior court in the following cases: (1) From a final judgment entered in an action or special proceeding commenced in the superior court or brought into a superior court from another court." Code Civ. Proc. §§ 963, 939.

It was held, in Knowles v. Thompson, 133 Cal. 245, 65 Pac. 468, that an appeal lies from the judgment of the superior court denying the writ of mandate (citing cases), and that "this furnishes a plain, speedy and adequate remedy to the petitioner, in the ordinary course of law"—citing Santa Cruz, etc., Co. v. Supervisors, 62 Cal. 40. Many cases might be cited where appeals have been taken from judgments of superior courts upon proceedings for the writ of review. Stumpf v. Board of Supervisors, 131 Cal. 364, 63 Pac. 663, 82 Am. St. Rep. 350, cited by petitioner, was such a case. See, also, Santa Cruz, etc., Co. v. Supervisors, supra. In the case of Knowles v. Thompson, supra, the petition was filed in the Supreme Court. A demurrer was interposed on the ground, among others, that petitioner had a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal, as it appeared that the petitioner had applied to the superior court for the writ, and it had been denied. The order of the Supreme Court at the hearing was that "the demurrer to the petition must be sustained, and the writ denied."

So, we think, must be the action of this court upon the present petition.

The writ is denied.

BACON v. BACON et al. (S. F. 3,741.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1907.)

1. Executors — Decree of Distribution — Review in Equity—Mistake—Fraud.

A decree of distribution is not so essentially a part of the probate proceeding in which the will was established that it cannot be reviewed by a suit in equity for fraud or mistake.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 1293.]

2. Same—Jurisdiction of Equity—Statutes.

Since the Constitutions of 1849 and 1879 conferred on the superior court such jurisdiction to review judgments and decrees for fraud or mistake as had been formerly possessed by courts of equity, Code Civ. Proc. § 1666, declaring that distribution decrees shall be conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees, or devisees, subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal, and section 473, providing that, on motion in the same cause or proceeding instituted within six months after judgment, a party may be relieved from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect, afforded merely a cumulative remedy, and did not displace the constitutional power of the superior court to set aside a distribution decree for fraud or mistake, by an original proceeding in equity.

3. Judgment—Mistake—Relief in Equity.

Relief may be given in equity against a decree which was the result of a mistake, unmixed with fraud, and not the result of the negligence of the injured party.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 780, 785.]

4. Executors — Decree of Distribution — Setting Aside—Mistake.

Testator declared that, if his estate was worth more than $250,000, the wife of his son and the husbands of his two daughters should receive $10,000. The estate was worth more than the sum specified, and on the reading of the will the word "ten" was by mistake read as "two," for which it might easily be taken. Testator's three children were appointed his personal representatives, and had copies of the will made for each legatee, in which the mistake was continued. The subsequent proceedings in the estate were conducted by the use of the copies, and plaintiff, the wife of the son, was induced by the personal representatives to execute a receipt in full of her legacy on the payment to her of $2,000, and such personal representatives thereafter obtained a decree of distribution, at which plaintiff did not appear and was not represented, which fixed her interest in the estate as $2,000. Held that, as there had never been any real contest with reference to the amount of plaintiff's legacy, the mistake was not one of the court by which the decree of distribution was entered, but of the parties interested in the estate, and that it was therefore properly vacated on that ground.

5. Same—Laches.

Nothing having occurred to arouse plaintiff's suspicions as to the truthfulness of the representations of her husband, who was an executor, or to doubt the good faith of the others, until after dissensions arose between herself and husband which ended in a divorce, after which she learned of the mistake and began the action to vacate the decree a short time thereafter, she was not guilty of laches.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 1305.]

6. Limitation of Actions—Accrual—Mistake—Discovery.

Limitations did not begin to run against a suit to set aside a distribution decree for mistake until the mistake was discovered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 337, 476.]

7. Executors—Decree of Distribution—Vacation—Evidence—Will.

A suit to set aside a distribution decree for mistake was a direct attack thereon, in which the probated will was competent evidence to prove the error.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Mamie C. Bacon against Frank Page Bacon and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, defendant Frank Page Bacon and certain others appeal. Affirmed.

R. Brent Mitchell (John A. Percy, of counsel), for appellants. Bishop & Wheeler and W. W. Deamer, for respondent.

SHAW, J. On January 19, 1893, Henry D. Bacon died, leaving surviving him his widow, Julia A. Bacon, and three children, namely, Frank Page Bacon, Ella Etta Bacon Soule, and Carrie Jennie Bacon. His will was duly admitted to probate on March 13, 1893. By its terms the bulk of the testator's property, after payment of debts, was bequeathed to his three children aforesaid. It contained the following clause, out of which this litigation arises, to wit: "If my said estate is worth as much as two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, at my death after payment of liabilities as aforesaid I desire that my legal representatives shall pay to the wife of my said son Frank the sum of ten thousand dollars and to the husband or husbands of my said daughters Ella Etta and Carrie Jennie each the sum of ten thousand dollars." The plaintiff, at that time, was the wife of said son Frank. The estate was worth much more than $250,000, and she was therefore entitled to the legacy of $10,000. The three children were appointed executor and executrices of the will, and duly qualified and acted as such. Shortly after the testator's death, and before the will was probated, the children and other parties interested, except the plaintiff, met for the purpose of reading the will. In reading it, by mistake the word "ten" was read as "two" where it occurs in the above-quoted clause. This mistake was carried into all the subsequent proceedings, was not perceived by any of the interested parties or any person concerned in the administration, the respective legacies were paid as legacies of $2,000 each, that sum was accepted and receipted for as payment in full by the plaintiff, all parties then believing that the legacies were each for $2,000 only, and a petition for distribution was thereafter filed, notice thereof duly given, and a decree of final distribution of the estate made on December 18, 1896, reciting the said legacy as a legacy for $2,000, declaring its full payment, and distributing the residue to the defendant Bacon Land & Loan Company, a corporation organized to receive and hold the property of the estate, to which said residuary legatees had theretofore conveyed their respective interests in exchange for a proportionate amount of the corporation stock. It is also claimed that this decree was obtained by fraud, as well as by reason of the mistake above mentioned.

This suit was begun on July 31, 1899, against the residuary legatees above named, both in their individual and representative capacities. The widow and the said corporation are also made parties defendant. The object of the action is to obtain a judgment declaring that the legacy bequeathed to plaintiff by the will was $10,000; that of that sum $8,000, with interest, remains unpaid; that the decree of distribution with respect to the recitals that the legacy was $2,000 was satisfied be held void; that the said sum of $8,000 and interest be declared a lien and charge on the property of said estate so distributed to said corporation, or on the stock of said corporation issued to said legatees in exchange for said property in case the property could not be charged; that said property or stock be declared to be held in trust for plaintiff, so far as may be necessary for the payment of the said balance with interest; and that, if not paid, then that said property be sold and payment made out of the proceeds. The court gave judgment substantially as prayed for against the three residuary legatees, declaring said balance and interest a lien and charge on the stock of said corporation belonging to them, and that they held said stock in trust for the plaintiff, so far as should be necessary for the payment of the balance, enjoining any transfer by them and providing for its sale to satisfy said lien. It also gave personal judgment against said legatees in favor of plaintiff for the amount of said balance and interest, and declared her receipt for full payment canceled. The court refused to declare a lien or charge against the property of the estate held by the corporation, and gave judgment in favor of said corporation for its costs. From this judgment, and from an order denying their motion for a new trial, the said Frank Page Bacon, Ella Etta Bacon Soule, and Carrie Jennie Bacon appeal.

There is also an appeal by the same parties as personal representatives of the deceased, Henry D. Bacon; they having never been discharged from that trust. There is no judgment against them in that capacity, except so far as the judgment declaring void the recitals in the decree and canceling the receipts may be so construed. Their interests in that capacity are concerned only so far as that part of the judgment may require further proceedings in the administration of the estate. This appeal has not been argued by either party, and need receive no further consideration here.

The first proposition of the appellants is that the superior court had no jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action. The complaint states a cause of action of the class formerly cognizable in equity and now within the jurisdiction of the superior courts by virtue of the constitutional grant to those courts of "original jurisdiction in all cases in equity." Article 6, § 5. The appellants claim that decrees of distribution constitute an exception to the general rule, and cannot be reviewed in equity upon the ground of fraud or mistake.

1. The proposition that a decree of distribution is subject to review in equity, upon a showing that it was procured by fraud or mistake, appears to be settled by the decisions of this court in Baker v. O'Riordan, 65 Cal. 368, 4 Pac. 232; Sohler v. Sohler, 135 Cal. 323,

67 Pac. 282, 87 Am. St. Rep. 98; Estate of Hudson, 63 Cal. 457; Dean v. Superior Court, 63 Cal. 478; Wingerter v. Wingerter, 71 Cal. 110, 11 Pac. 853; Buckley v. Superior Court, 102 Cal. 10, 36 Pac. 360, 41 Am. St. Rep. 135. In Baker v. O'Riordan, supra, a decree of distribution to the defendant had been obtained by the consent of an attorney, who, fraudulently and without authority, appeared for Baker, who was entitled as husband of the decedent. It was a case of the kind described in U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 65, 25 L. Ed. 93, as a case "where an attorney fraudulently or without authority assumes to represent a party and connives at his defeat," and which is classed therein as among the instances of fraud for which a new suit would be sustained to set aside the judgment so obtained. In regard to the jurisdiction, this court, in Baker v. O'Riordan, said: "'The equitable jurisdiction to cancel and set aside or to restrain judgments and decrees of any court, obtained by a fraud practiced upon the court and the losing party, is well settled and familiar.' 2 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. 919. * * * We have no doubt of the right of the plaintiff, under the findings, to have the decree assigning his share of the estate of his wife to the defendant canceled and set aside." In Sohler v. Sohler, supra, the plaintiff sued to set aside a decree of distribution induced by the fraud of the defendants, coupled with the mistake or ignorance of the plaintiff; the ignorance being also the result of the fraud. The court below had sustained a demurrer to the complaint. The Supreme Court reversed the judgment, held that the superior court had jurisdiction of the action and power to review the decree of distribution, and to declare that the defendants held as involuntary trustees of the plaintiff the property improperly vested in them by the decree. This is substantially the same relief as that given in the case at bar. The other cases above cited contain declarations similar in effect to the above quotation from Baker v. O'Riordan, and, although they may be obiter dictum, we think they correctly state a settled rule of equity jurisprudence.

The decisions cited by the appellants are not in conflict with these conclusions. In Langdon v. Blackburn, 109 Cal. 19, 41 Pac. 814, it seems to have been conceded that, while the probate of a will could not be reviewed in equity, a decree of distribution was subject to such attack in a proper case of extraneous or collateral fraud, and it was held that the showing of such fraud in that case was insufficient. William Hill Co. v. Lawler, 116 Cal. 360, 48 Pac. 323; Jewell v. Pierce, 120 Cal. 79, 52 Pac. 132; Cunha v. Hughes, 122 Cal. 111, 54 Pac. 535, 68 Am. St. Rep. 27; and McKenzie v. Budd, 125 Cal. 600, 58 Pac. 199—were collateral attacks upon decrees of distribution, and they simply announce that the well-known rule protecting judgments against collateral attack, except for want of jurisdiction, is applicable to such decrees. They have no bearing on the question. Goad v. Montgomery, 119 Cal. 552, 51 Pac. 681, 63 Am. St. Rep. 145, and In re Trescony, 119 Cal. 568, 51 Pac. 951, merely decide that the decree of distribution supersedes the will, and that, so long as the decree stands unreversed by any direct attack, the will cannot, in any collateral inquiry, be used to impeach the decree. Toland v. Earl, 129 Cal. 148, 61 Pac. 914, 79 Am. St. Rep. 100, was an action in the superior court to construe a will and obtain a decree directing the same court as to the manner in which it should distribute the estate then in course of administration in that court. It was held that such a proceeding in equity was no longer necessary, that the same relief could be obtained from the same court in the regular course of the probate proceedings, and that the former jurisdiction of equity was now exercised through the same court by means of the proceeding for distribution, or a proceeding under section 1664, Code Civ. Proc., which were made the exclusive modes of obtaining a judicial construction of a will. Lynch v. Rooney, 112 Cal. 282, 44 Pac. 565, was an attempt to review a decree of distribution and declare an involuntary trust, upon a showing that the decree was procured by false or mistaken testimony. The case is one of the class where the fraud or mistake is intrinsic. In such cases no relief can be given. Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 133, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159; U. S. v. Throckmorton, supra. If the latter part of the opinion in this case was intended to declare that such decrees may not be reviewed for extrinsic fraud in procuring them to be made, it must be considered as overruled by the decision in Sohler v. Sohler, supra,. In Mulcahey v. Dow, 131 Cal. 73, 63 Pac. 158, the opinion concedes that a distributee may, in a proper case, be held as an involuntary trustee, but decides that the fraud there shown was not extrinsic or collateral.

It is urged, with respect to the jurisdiction, that decrees of distribution, being a part of the same probate proceeding as the decree probating the will, must be governed by the same rule, and that, as in State v. McGlynn, 20 Cal. 231, 262, 81 Am. Dec. 118, and Kieley v. McGlynn (Broderick's Will), 88 U. S. 503, 22 L. Ed. 599, it was decided that decrees probating wills are not subject to review in equity for fraud or mistake, it would follow that a decree of distribution cannot be so reviewed. In view of the decisions we have cited to the contrary, this proposition is clearly untenable. Furthermore, the rule denying such power to review the probate of a will, while it is declared by the above decisions, and perhaps by the greater number of decisions elsewhere, is universally admitted to be an exception to the general rule that all final judgments are subject to such attack. The reasons given in support of the exception are generally declared in the opinions to be unsatisfactory and illogical, and the discussions usually end with the statement that, whether for good reasons or not, the exception is firmly established, and upon that ground must be adhered to. An exception so poorly supported by reason should not be extended to a new class of cases.

2. It is further claimed that such review is prohibited by the provisions of section 1666 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which, on this point, is as follows: "In the order or decree the court must name the persons and proportions or parts to which each shall be entitled. * * * Such order or decree is conclusive as to the rights of heirs, legatees or devisees, subject only to be reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal." The proposition proves too much. It necessarily concedes that such jurisdiction is conferred by the Constitution and would remain in the superior court, but for this statute, which is supposed to divest it. The Legislature does not possess power to divest the court of its constitutional jurisdiction. It may change the practice or procedure, the mere method by which the jurisdiction is exercised (Ex parte Harker, 49 Cal. 467), but it cannot take away the jurisdiction entirely, nor substantially impair it. No adequate new procedure has been provided for the exercise of this jurisdiction, and, if it exists at all, it must be exercised by the long-established method of an independent suit. It is true that section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that, upon motion in the same cause or proceeding, instituted within six months after judgment, a party may be relieved from a judgment taken against him through his mistake, inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect. This would undoubtedly also include mistake superinduced by the fraud of the other party, and it does provide a new method whereby some relief can be obtained on motion, similar to that here sought by an independent suit. But this provision has never been considered as an exclusive method for the exercise of the equity jurisdiction, nor as an adequate substitute for the right to proceed by action. It is a cumulative remedy, and does not displace the remedy in equity. Baker v. O'Riordan, supra. We have recently held, not only that it does not displace the equitable remedy, but also that an adverse decision on such a motion does not necessarily bar a subsequent suit to vacate the judgment for the same cause. Estudillo v. Security L. & T. Co. (Cal. Sup.) 87 Pac. 19. Also, Freeman on Judgments, § 511; Simson v. Hart, 14 Johns. 63; Wistar v. McManes, 54 Pa. 318, 93 Am. Dec. 700. It follows that the jurisdiction still remains, notwithstanding the provisions of that section.

It is suggested that, at the time the present Constitution was adopted, section 1666 was in force, and its effect was that courts of equity were thereby deprived of jurisdiction to vacate decrees of this class; that the jurisdiction in equity conferred by the constitutional grant must be understood to include only the jurisdiction as then existing and as limited by that section; and hence that it did not include the power to vacate judgments in cases of this class. To this there is a sufficient answer. The grant of this jurisdiction is not a new provision. It was conferred upon the district courts by the Constitution of 1849, in identical language, and this had been construed to give that court the same jurisdiction as that formerly possessed by the equity courts. Sanford v. Head, 5 Cal. 298; People v. Davidson, 30 Cal. 391; Rosenberg v. Frank, 58 Cal. 400. In Sanford v. Head, supra, it was held that this jurisdiction included power to set aside a judgment for fraud, and in Baker v. O'Riordan, supra, this doctrine was applied to a decree of distribution. Hence this provision of section 1666, if we consider that it was intended to divest a party of this equity jurisdiction, must have been unconstitutional and void in 1866, when it was first enacted. St. 1865–66, p. 767, c. 548. The Constitution of 1879 gave the jurisdiction to the superior court by the use of the same language as that of 1849, and it must be construed to have the same effect. The effect of the words used cannot be changed, and the jurisdiction limited, by reference to a void statutory provision, having only a nominal existence at the time of the adoption of the new Constitution. The grant of jurisdiction in all cases in equity, made in 1879, was of the same effect as the similar grant in 1849, and conferred upon the superior courts the jurisdiction previously vested in the district courts, and therefore it was unaffected by the void statute.

We think, however, that section 1666 was not intended to have the effect claimed. A statute should be so construed as to make it constitutional, if it is reasonably possible. People v. Frisbie, 26 Cal. 139; French v. Teschemaker, 24 Cal. 554. The provision may reasonably be interpreted to mean no more than that the decree of distribution should have the same force and effect as other final judgments; that is to say, that it should not be subject to collateral attack, but only to direct attack on appeal, or as otherwise provided by law. This construction was, in effect, given to it by the decision in De Pedrorena v. Superior Court, 80 Cal. 144, 22 Pac. 71. The rigid construction contended for would as completely cut off the power of the court to vacate such decree upon proceedings by motion, under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., as it would the power of review by a suit in equity. Yet in that case it was held that the court had power to set aside a decree of distribution, on motion, under section 473, begun within six months after its rendition, notwithstanding the provision of section 1666 aforesaid. Thus, in effect, it declared that the latter section does not exclude any form of direct attack. A suit to review a judgment for fraud or mistake is a direct proceeding against such judgment, and not a collateral attack. Bergin v. Haight, 99 Cal. 56, 33 Pac. 760. We conclude that the provisions of section 1666 do not prevent a review of a decree of distribution by a suit in equity, in a proper case.

3. It is urged that the power to review judgments extends only to cases where they have been procured by fraud, and that it does not exist with respect to judgment wrongfully given by reason of mistake either of the court or of the injured party. No such distinction is recognized by the authorities. The text-books all declare that such relief can be given where the former judgment was the result of a mistake, unmixed with fraud, and not the result of the negligence of the injured party. Black on Judgments, § 381; 2 Freeman on Judgments, § 500; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 885; 2 Beach on Injunctions, § 701; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 871; 3 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. §§ 1376, 1377; 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 383; 1 High on Injunctions, § 209 et seq. Indeed, the cases on the subject of mistake allow relief from a judgment where the subject-matter of the mistake approaches more closely the actual merits of the former inquiry than in cases of fraud. In Quivey v. Baker, 37 Cal. 465, and Busey v. Moraga, 130 Cal. 588, 62 Pac. 1081, a mortgage, by mistake, described a lot not owned by the mortgagor, instead of the one intended. It was foreclosed, and the same mistake was inadvertently carried into the judgment, the sale, and the sheriff's deed. It was held that an action would lie to correct all the mistakes, including the mortgage, the judgment, and the deed. In Gerig v. Loveland, 130 Cal. 512, 62 Pac. 830, one who held two mortgages for the same debt, by mistake foreclosed the first alone, which covered less property than the second, and was insufficient to pay the debt. The court declared that he could maintain an action to cancel the first decree, and to foreclose the second mortgage against a subsequent judgment creditor, thus avoiding the bar of section 726, Code Civ. Proc., allowing but one action on a debt secured by a mortgage. In Merrill v. Bank, 94 Cal. 59, 29 Pac. 242, a judgment by default was rendered against two makers of a note. One of them afterwards discovered that the note had been fully satisfied by the other before the suit was begun. An action by him to set aside the judgment, or to have it declared satisfied as to him, was sustained; it appearing that he was not negligent in failing sooner to discover the defense. Ford v. Ford, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 505, 12 Am. Dec. 587, is substantially to the same effect. In Cohen v. Dubose, 1 Harp. Eq. (S. C.) 102, 14 Am. Dec. 709, there was a trial by jury in an action at law on a note. The note was given in evidence, and the jury returned a verdict for plaintiff for the amount of the principal thereon; the interest being omitted by their mistake. It was held that the plaintiff could maintain a suit in equity to correct the mistake and compel payment of the interest, and that the testimony of the jurors could be introduced in proof of the mistake. Chief Justice Marshall, in Marine I. & S. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch, 336, 3 L. Ed. 362, states the rule thus: " It may safely be said that any fact which clearly proves it to be against conscience to execute a judgment, and of which the injured party could not have availed himself in a court of law, or of which he might have availed himself at law, but was prevented by fraud or accident unmixed with any fault or negligence in himself or his agents, will justify an application to a court of equity. On the other hand, it may with equal safety be laid down as a general rule that a defense cannot be set up in equity which has been fully and fairly tried at law, although it may be the opinion of that court that the defense ought to have been sustained at law."

We are satisfied that the court below had power to entertain the suit and give the relief awarded by the judgment appealed from. It remains for us to consider the case upon its merits.

4. A photographic copy of the will is inserted in the record. Upon a casual reading, a person of ordinary skill in deciphering penmanship might easily mistake the word "ten," in the two places where it appears therein, for the word "two," and believe that the legacies were each for $2,000; but, upon a careful reading, and especially upon a comparison with the formation of the same letters in other parts of the will, and without the aid of a microscope, no person of experience could doubt that the word is "ten," and that the legacies are each for $10,000, and not for $2,000. Without doubt the testator did bequeath to the plaintiff a legacy of $10,000. The original will was filed and probated as it was written by the testator, and, consequently, the estate exceeding $250,000, the probate of the will clearly established that the plaintiff was entitled to a legacy of $10,000.

At the time of the first reading of the will, when the words "ten" were erroneously read by all parties present as "two," the attorney of the executors was present, and was directed by them to have typewritten copies of the will made and sent to the parties interested. This was immediately done; the copyist by mistake writing the amount of the legacy as "two thousand dollars." Thereafter these copies were used in the subsequent proceedings, and the original will was not again carefully read or examined by any person until some three years after the estate was distributed. Thus the mistake was perpetuated and repeated in the final decree. The plaintiff did not expect that any legacy would be left to her, and did not know that anything was given to her by the will, until she was informed by her husband shortly after the first reading thereof. He told her that it gave her a legacy of $2,000. A day or two later she received the copy from the executors, which gave her the same information. She had every reason to believe that the information was correct. It came from those on whom she had a right to rely. We may presume that she had been accustomed to rely on her husband, and had found him trustworthy. She did rely on them, and believed that the legacy was, in fact, $2,000, and during the whole course of the administration she had no occasion for even a suspicion that it was otherwise. Under these circumstances, the court properly found that she cannot be charged with neglect in failing to discover the mistake. Furthermore, the information came from persons occupying fiduciary relations toward her. Her husband first informed her, and she then received the copy from the executors. Afterwards, and before the petition for distribution was filed, upon her request for payment of the supposed balance of her legacy, the individual defendants, in their representative capacity, prepared a receipt in full, in effect stating therein that the balance of the principal of her legacy was but $1,500 ($500 having been previously paid), which they presented to her, and demanded that she should sign upon payment of said balance, which she did, and the supposed balance was then paid by them to her. This was equivalent to a statement by them that her legacy was but $2,000. Executors occupy trust relations toward the legatees, and are bound to the utmost good faith in their transactions with the beneficiary. 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 218; Robins v. Hope, 57 Cal. 497. They were also residuary legatees, and hence whatever was lacking in full payment to the plaintiff was so much gained to them. They are therefore not in any position to claim that the plaintiff, in relying on their own statements regarding the amount of the legacy, was lacking in diligence.

At the hearing of the petition for distribution the original will, in the handwriting of the testator, was on file, but it was not produced, examined, or read by or to the court. The petition was prepared from one of the typewritten copies of the will. It stated the legacy as for $2,000, and that it had been fully paid. This statement was read or stated to the court by the attorney for the executor and executrices, and he also then stated that it was a correct statement of the contents of the will. The court accepted his statement as true, and gave judgment for distribution accordingly. That all parties concerned, including the court, were acting under the influence of the mistake is unquestionable. It is claimed that it is not extrinsic or collateral to the case that the amount of the legacies and the purport and effect of the will were the precise things which the court was to ascertain and determine by the judgment, and that the mistake in reading the will was a mistake of the court, intrinsic to the action, which cannot be reviewed in any other court. If the plaintiff had been present at the hearing, contending that the will gave her $10,000, had presented the point to the court, and the court had thereupon read the word "ten" as "two," and had made the distribution as it was made by the judgment appealed from, no doubt she would be precluded from any relief by way of equitable review, no matter how plain the mistake of the court would appear. The mistake would then be a mere error in the consideration of the evidence in a case fully presented to the court, an error of the class which human tribunals are subject to in any case, and which cannot be reviewed in equity. There would also be a complete remedy at law. The party injured would have timely notice of the error, and could pursue the usual mode of review by motion for a new trial and appeal.

The general rule as to what constitutes extrinsic fraud or mistake is clearly stated by the United States Supreme Court in U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 65, 25 L. Ed. 93. After stating the general rule that a bill in equity will not lie to set aside a judgment obtained by means of perjured testimony, or forged documents, introduced in evidence in support of a contested issue of fact, that court says: "But there is an admitted exception to this general rule in cases where, by reason of something done by the successful party to the suit, there was, in fact, no adversary trial or decision of the issue in the case. Where the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case by fraud or deception practiced upon him by his opponent, as by keeping him away from court; a false promise of a compromise; or where the defendant had never had knowledge of the suit, being kept in ignorance by the acts of the plaintiff; or where an attorney fraudulently or without authority assumes to represent a party and connives at his defeat; or where the attorney regularly employed corruptly sells out his client's interests to the other side—these, and similar cases which show that there never has been a real contest at the trial or hearing of the case, are reasons for which a new suit may be sustained to set aside the former judgment or decree and open the case for a new and fair hearing." (The italics are ours.) This statement was approved by this court in Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 135, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159. These cases refer to fraud as the preventing cause of the real contest, adversary trial, or fair submission. The cases related to fraud, and hence the discussion was confined to that subject, but the rule is the same where the preventing cause is mistake, influencing the action, or inaction, of the injured party. Bibend v. Kreutz, 20 Cal. 114; Merrill v. Bank, 94 Cal. 59, 29 Pac. 242; Marine Ins. Co. v. Hodgson, 7 Cranch, 336, 3 L. Ed. 362; Ford v. Ford, 1 Walk. (Miss.) 505, 12 Am. Dec. 587; Wilson v. Boughton, 50 Mo. 17; Drew v. Clarke, Cooke (Tenn.)

373, 5 Am. Dec. 698; Rust v. Ware, 6 Grat. 50, 52 Am. Dec. 100; Currier v. Esty, 110 Mass. 536; Epes v. Williams, 17 S. E. 235, 89 Va. 794; Busey v. Moraga, 130 Cal. 586, 62 Pac. 1081; note to Oliver v. Pray, 19 Am. Dec. 605. See, also, the citations to the textbooks under subdivision 3 of this opinion. The gravamen of the rule thus expressed lies in the fact that "the successful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case," and, consequently, that there has been "no adversary trial or decision of the issue," no "real contest at the trial," or, as stated in Pico v. Cohn, no "fair submission of the controversy." Where the unsuccessful party has been thus hindered, he is not to be refused relief on the ground that the fact on which his defense or claim in the original action depended, and by which he expects to bring about a different result in the new suit for equitable relief, was technically in issue in the original action or proceeding, or was necessarily decided by the court in that action and concluded by the original judgment beyond reach on collateral inquiry. It is because such judgment does conclude all parties so long as it stands unrevoked and unaffected by any direct attack, not only as to the facts actually in issue, but also as to all facts not in issue, but which might constitute a possible defense, and is therefore injurious, that there is ground for the interposition of equity to give this form of relief. To deny relief where the fact is technically in issue, though, by reason of the mistake or fraud, not controverted or contested at the trial or hearing, would be to destroy the equitable remedy in a large class of cases in which it has been hitherto administered.

The case at bar comes fully within these principles. The plaintiff, by reason of the common mistake, believed that her legacy was only $2,000, instead of $10,000, as it was in fact. She had been fully paid the $2,000, which she believed to be the extent of her demand. Her claim was, as she supposed, satisfied, and she was thereby fully justified in assuming that she had no further concern with the estate and no interest in the distribution. As we have seen, the mistake was not caused by her culpable negligence. In this state of mind she would properly consider that she should not appear in the proceeding in which she had no interest. One who has no defense to an action against him, or no interest in a proceeding in which he is cited, is not negligent, or chargeable with laches, in failing to appear therein, but is thereby doing his legal duty to the court. The plaintiff testified, in substance, that, if she had not been misinformed in regard to the amount of her legacy, she would have made inquiry about it. The court below was justified by the circumstances disclosed by the evidence, as well as by this direct testimony, in finding that, by reason of her mistake as to the contents of the will, the plaintiff was induced to refrain from appearing in the proceeding for distribution and there contesting the statement that her legacy was but $2,000, and claiming the true amount thereof. It is therefore a fact that by reason of this mistake she was prevented from exhibiting fully her case, and that, as the result, there was no adversary trial, no real contest, and no fair submission of the question whether her legacy was $2,000 or $10,000. The obvious result was the decision of the court, based on the uncontested facts set forth in the petition for distribution, that the plaintiff had been paid in full, with the corresponding decree distributing to the residuary legatees $8,000 of the money of the estate, which, of right, belonged to the plaintiff. The mistake of the plaintiff, which led to this injury, was clearly caused by matters extraneous and collateral to the merely formal inquiry made by the court upon the hearing.

The court further found that her failure to appear was induced by both the actual and constructive fraud of the defendants. We do not find it necessary to consider the sufficiency of the evidence to support these respective findings of fraud. There is sufficient proof of mistake, as we have shown, and the judgment is fully sustained by the findings on that subject.

The plaintiff was not guilty of neglect or laches in the delay in beginning the present action. She did not discover the mistake until a short time before the action was begun. We do not find anything in the evidence which would necessarily put her on inquiry as to the amount of the legacy, or cause her to suspect that there had been a mistake concerning it. The dissensions between herself and her husband, and their consequent separation, occurring shortly before the time of the last payment upon the legacy, and the subsequent divorce, had no reference to the legacy, or to the will, and were not of a character to arouse in her a suspicion that her previous information from him concerning it was false, or a doubt of the good faith of the other defendants. She testified that she had no such doubt or suspicion. The delay does not appear to have been in the least injurious or prejudicial to the defendants in respect to their defense in this action, or in any other respect, and therefore one element of laches, as distinguished from the bar of the statute of limitations, is wanting. Cahill v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 47, 78 Pac. 467; Mayer v. Mayor, 63 N. Y. 455; Lawrence v. American Nat. Bank, 54 N. Y. 432; Nat. Bank of Com. v. Nat. Mechanics' Bank, 55 N. Y. 211, 14 Am. Rep. 232; Snyder v. Ives, 42 Iowa, 157; U. S. Bank v. Georgia, 10 Wheat. 333, 349, 6 L. Ed. 334.

The action was not barred by the statute of limitations. The plaintiff had no actual knowledge of the mistake, prior to the distribution, nor until the accidental discovery, shortly before the action was begun. The statute did not begin to run until that discovery occurred. The causes which produced the cessation of the intimate relations between plaintiff and the defendants did not put plaintiff upon inquiry to the extent necessary to charge her with constructive notice of the mistake, prior to the actual discovery. The differences between them, as we have stated, would not necessarily affect her confidence in the honesty and integrity of the defendants, in respect to the administration of the estate.

There are other particulars wherein it is claimed that the evidence does not sustain the findings, but it is not necessary to discuss them in detail. A careful consideration of the evidence in the record satisfies us that it is sufficient to prove all the facts necessary to support the judgment. The will was competent evidence to prove the mistake, the right of the plaintiff, and the injury to her from the erroneous distribution. Decisions holding that a will is not admissible on collateral inquiry, after probate and distribution, to prove that it was disregarded, or incorrectly construed, by the court in making distribution of the estate, have no application here. This is not a collateral attack on the decree of distribution. It is a direct attack thereon. Bergin v. Haight, 99 Cal. 56, 33 Pac. 760. In such direct proceedings to impeach the decree the will is competent evidence to prove the error and the injury. It is unnecessary to discuss the other errors of law assigned. They are either not well taken, or they do not affect the result.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

SOULE v. BACON et al. (S. F. 3,744.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1907.)

JUDGMENT — VACATION — MISTAKE — NEGLIGENCE.

Complainant, a legatee under testator's will to the extent of $10,000, was present when the will was read, at which time a mistake was made in reading his legacy as only $2,000. After the will was read, complainant looked at it, but, not having his spectacles, did not read it. Complainant's wife was one of the executrices, the others being his brother-in-law and sister-in-law, and they promised him a copy of the will, which was delivered a few days thereafter, in which the legacy appeared as $2,000. The mistake continued during the proceedings and into the distribution decree. Shortly after the will was read, a published account thereof stated complainant's legacy at $10,000, and, on his calling his wife's attention thereto, she stated she supposed it was a typographical error, and complainant at no time had any other cause to suspect that the copy of the will was defective. Held, that complainant was not chargeable with negligence as a matter of law, precluding his maintenance of a suit to set aside the distribution decree.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Samuel P. Hall, Judge.

Suit by Frank Soule against Frank Page Bacon and others. From a decree in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

R. B. Mitchell, for appellants. Bishop & Wheeler and W. W. Deamer, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This was an action by the plaintiff to declare the defendants involuntary trustees of the plaintiff, with respect to the sum of $8,000 belonging to the estate of Henry D. Bacon, deceased, which is claimed by plaintiff as the balance of a legacy given to him by the last will of said deceased, but which, by the decree of final distribution of said estate, was distributed to a corporation organized by the defendants to take and hold the property for their benefit. Judgment was given for plaintiff in the court below. The defendants appealed from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial.

The case is, in all important particulars, identical with the case of Bacon v. Bacon et al. (decided concurrently with this case) 89 Pac. 317. The parties defendant are the same, and the case depends on the same clause in the will of Henry D. Bacon, and involves the same mistake with respect to the word "ten" in that part of the clause relating to the husband of the defendant, Ella Etta Bacon Soule. The plaintiff was the husband of said defendant, and as such he was given a legacy of $10,000 by the will, but by reason of the mistake he received only $2,000. An estrangement between the husband and wife occurred similar to that in the other case. The questions of law involved, and the facts and evidence also, are, with a few unimportant exceptions, of similar effect to those set forth in the aforesaid case of Bacon v. Bacon, and for the evidence, the facts, and the law of this case we refer to the opinion in that case, where they are elaborately stated and discussed. In this opinion we confine ourselves to a discussion of the exceptions.

Frank Soule, the plaintiff here, was present at the first reading of the will, prior to its probate, and at that time, after it had been read aloud by the attorney for the executor and executrices, he took it in his hands for a moment and looked at it, but, not having on his spectacles at the time, he did not read it, but passed it on to the others. At that time, and while the persons interested were assembled in the presence of the executor and executrices appointed by the will, one of them voluntarily promised, on behalf of all, that they would prepare copies of the will and send one to each person receiving a legacy. A few days afterwards the plaintiff was presented with a copy of the will by his wife, who was an executrix, with the statement that it was the copy promised. Shortly afterwards he read in a newspaper a statement, purporting to give the substance of the will, in which the amount of his legacy was stated as $10,000. There was some conversation at that time between himself, his wife, and her sister, the defendant Carrie Jennie Bacon, in which the plaintiff and his wife both remarked that they supposed the newspaper statement regarding his legacy was a typographical error or an ordinary newspaper exaggeration. He never at any time had further cause to suspect that his copy of the will was not accurate, or that his legacy was larger than $2,000, or that the representatives of the estate were not dealing fairly and honestly with him. In all other respects the present case is not materially different, in respect to the facts, from that of the plaintiff in the case of Bacon v. Bacon, supra. It is apparent in both cases, from the conduct of the parties, that all the interested persons had full confidence in the capacity and integrity of the attorney who read the will aloud at the meeting above mentioned. There never was any statement or intimation to the plaintiff, from any source, that the writing of the words in the will was at all difficult to decipher, or that any person who read it had any hesitation in pronouncing as "two" the word, which in fact was "ten," designating the number of thousands of dollars to be given to the plaintiff, unless it was given by the newspaper article above mentioned.

The facts here recited, when considered in connection with the facts appearing in the case of Bacon v. Bacon, aforesaid, do not require a decision at our hands different from that made in that case. The fact that all parties were mistaken in regard to the amount of the legacy is entirely clear. The only effect of the additional facts recited is to make a somewhat stronger case of negligence on the part of the plaintiff here, in failing to discover the true amount of the legacy until after the decree of distribution. But, with this additional evidence on the subject, the negligence of the plaintiff is not so marked and inexcusable that we can say that the implied finding of the court that the mistake, so far as he was concerned, was not caused by his inexcusable negligence, should be set aside and the case reversed. There are many cases holding that the party may have relief in equity from the consequences of his mistake of fact, although he was somewhat negligent in making the mistake, if his negligence in no way prejudiced the opposing party. Mayer v. Mayor, 63 N. Y. 455; Snyder v. Ives, 42 Iowa, 157; Lewis v. Lewis, 5 Or. 170; Capehart v. Mhoon, 58 N. C. 179; Voorhis v. Murphy, 26 N. J. Eq. 434. Although this rule may not apply with full force to suits in equity to relieve a party from a judgment, nevertheless, the failure of the plaintiff, under the circumstances of the case, to make an earlier discovery of the true amount due him, was not negligence of such a character that it must be declared negligence in law, contrary to the implied finding of the court that it was not negligence. At most, it was a question of fact for the court below to determine whether or not the lack of vigilance on the part of the plaintiff was such as would not have occurred with a man of ordinary care and prudence, under the same circumstances. That court has decided the question in favor of the plaintiff, and we are satisfied with its conclusion.

Some additional errors of law in the admission of evidence are assigned, but we do not think they are of sufficient importance to require discussion. The objections made were either properly overruled, or the evidence elicited was of such slight importance that we cannot believe that the court below could have been influenced thereby in the least in coming to a decision.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BROWN v. KLEMMER, County Treasurer.

DAVIDSON v. SAME. (Sac. 1,310, 935).

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 7, 1907.)

COUNTIES—FUND—TRANSFER—POWER OF SUPERVISORS.

County Government Act, St. 1897, p. 463, c. 277, § 25, subd. 18, authorizes supervisors to establish such funds as they may deem necessary, and to transfer moneys from one fund to another as the public interest may require, and Pol. Code, § 2712, provides that, when it appears that a road district would be unreasonably burdened by the expense of constructing, maintaining, or repairing a bridge, the supervisors may in their discretion cause a portion of the expense to be paid out of the general road fund of the county, or, by vote of two-thirds of the board of supervisors, may order a portion of the cost of construction and repairs of bridges to be paid out of the county general fund as well as the general road fund. Held, that neither of such provisions authorized the board of supervisors to direct a transfer of money from the general fund to a particular road district fund which is expressly limited by law in the amount of its receipts, on the ground that the expense of repairs of certain bridges in such road district, if paid in full out of the funds thereof, would impoverish such district.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Glenn County; Oval Pirkey, Judge.

Mandamus on petitions of David Brown and C. O. Davidson against L. J. Klemmer. From a judgment in favor of petitioners, defendant appeals. Reversed.

R. L. Clifton, for appellant. Charles L. Donohoe and Frank Freeman, for respondents. Snook & Church, amici curiæ.

ANGELLOTTI, J. By stipulation these two cases are to be heard and determined together. The facts are alike, and the law applying to each case is the same. The action is in mandamus to compel the defendant, as county treasurer of Glenn county, to transfer from the county general fund, in the one case, the sum of $1,512, to the fund of road district No. 2, and, in the other case, the sum of $854 to the fund of road district No. 5. Demurrers were interposed to the petitions and overruled, and defendant having failed to answer, judgment was given in each case that a peremptory writ of mandate issue in accord with the prayer of the petition. Defendant appeals from said judgments. The question before us is as to whether the petitions stated facts sufficient to justify the issuance of the writs.

According to the allegations of the petitions, the material facts were as follows: On February 5, 1904, the board of supervisors of Glenn county, by a two-thirds vote, made an order declaring with respect to each of said road districts that the expense of repairs theretofore made to certain bridges therein, if paid in full out of the funds of said road districts, would not only unreasonably overburden, but would impoverish, said districts, that one-half of such expense, $1,512 in one case and $854 in the other, would be a just and reasonable portion thereof to be paid out of the county general fund, and ordering that, "for the purpose of paying one-half of the cost of repairs," the respective sums aforesaid be transferred from the county general fund to the road district funds, and directing the auditor and treasurer to make the transfers accordingly. There was no order for the payment of any money on account of the repairs; the order being simply one for the transfers. Although there was sufficient money in the county general fund, the treasurer refuses to make the transfers ordered, and it is to compel compliance with said order that these proceedings were instituted.

We are unable to find in the statutes any authorization for the order made by the board of supervisors. No such authority is to be found in subdivision 18 of section 25 of the county government act (St. 1897, p. 463, c. 277), empowering the supervisors to establish such funds "as they may deem necessary and to transfer moneys from one fund to another, as the public interest may require." This is established by the decision in the case of Potter v. Fowzer, 78 Cal. 493, 21 Pac. 118, where a transfer from the county general fund to a road district fund was attempted to be justified under a similar provision of the original county government act. The court there said: "Under this provision the supervisors may establish county funds, and may transfer money from one fund to another, when required by the public interest; but it cannot be construed to authorize the transfer to a fund established by law, and expressly limited in the amount of its receipts." There is no statutory provision which, in terms, empowers the board of supervisors to transfer money to the fund of any road district.

It is sought to justify the order upon the ground that, under the statute by a two-thirds vote of the board of supervisors, the county general fund could be resorted to for the purpose of paying a portion of the cost of these repairs. Ordinarily, the general county fund, collected for general county purposes from all portions of the county, including municipalities, cannot be used for county highway purposes at all. The Legislature has, however, provided that the cost of certain highway work may be wholly or partially paid for from such general fund. Section 2712, Pol. Code, authorizes this to be done in the case of bridge work under certain circumstances, providing that, when it appears that a road district would be unreasonably burdened by the expense of constructing, maintaining, or repairing a bridge, the supervisors "may, in their discretion, cause a portion of the aggregate cost or expense to be paid out of the general road fund of the county, or by vote of two-thirds of the board of supervisors, said board may, in their discretion, order a portion of the cost of construction and repairs of bridges * * * to be paid out of the county general fund as well as the general road fund." (The italics are ours.) It will be seen that this section does not purport to authorize any order for the transfer of money to a road district fund, but simply authorizes an order for the payment out of the general road fund and out of the county general funds of amounts that would otherwise be payable only from a road district fund. The section authorizing this exceptional use of the county general fund thus prescribes the method, which is by ordering the payment directly from that fund. We are satisfied that the method so prescribed should be held to be exclusive. An examination of the other sections authorizing the use of the county general fund for certain highway purposes discloses the fact that in each case the provision is that the cost apportioned to such fund shall be charged to or paid from the general county fund (Pol. Code, § 2643, subd. 10, and Id., § 2647), and subdivision 8 of section 2643 provides that in auditing claims the board shall "specify the fund or funds, from which the whole or any part of any claim, * * * must be paid." We cannot avoid the conclusion that the Legislature intended that payments for highway purposes authorized to be made from the county general fund should be made directly therefrom, and not accomplished through the circuitous method of a transfer to a road district fund and payment therefrom. Nor should it be held that the distinction here made is one only of form, and not of substance. This very case suggests a reason in support of the method provided. While it is declared in the order of transfer that the transfer is for the purpose of paying a portion of the expense of this bridge work, there is no order for such payment. How can it be known that the money so transferred, instead of being devoted to this purpose, will not ultimately be used, as all real road district money may be used, for some district highway purpose for which the county general fund cannot be resorted to? As is pertinently asked by counsel for defendant: "Must the treasurer keep a fund within a fund, and check up to know whether the supervisors have expended the transferred money for the special purpose?" Were such a method as is here attempted generally followed, it would lead to endless confusion in the accounts of the various road districts, and render it exceedingly difficult to determine exactly for what highway purposes the general county fund was in fact used by the board of supervisors, and whether the same was used for a prohibited purpose or not.

No possible legitimate reason can be suggested for such an order as is here involved. If county general fund money can be used to pay the expenses incurred in these repairs, an order of payment directly from such fund may be made. If there be any reason why they cannot be paid directly from that fund, the same reason is sufficient to forbid their payment in the manner here attempted. If they cannot be directly paid from the general fund, they cannot be indirectly so paid. It is, however, sufficient for all the purposes of this case, that there is no authority in the law for any such order of transfer on the part of the board of supervisors. The Legislature has seen fit to prescribe a different method for the payment of moneys for certain highway purposes from the county general fund. The order therefore was void, and the treasurer, in the discharge of his official duties, properly refused to comply with the same.

The judgment in each case is reversed.

LIVERMORE v. RATTI et al. (S. F. 3,548.)

(Supreme Court of California. May 24, 1906. On Rehearing in Bank, Feb. 7, 1907.)

1. GUARDIAN AND WARD—FINAL ACCOUNTING—DEATH OF WARD — LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1754, makes it the duty of a guardian at the expiration of his trust to settle his accounts with the court, or with the ward, if he be of full age, or his legal representatives, and to pay over the moneys and effects in his hands on such settlement to the person lawfully entitled thereto. Held that, where the ward died before settlement of the guardian's account, the settlement must be had with the ward's legal representative.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Guardian and Ward, § 465.]

2. GUARDIAN AND WARD—GUARDIAN'S ACCOUNT—SETTLEMENT—APPOINTMENT OF ADMINISTRATOR—NOTICE.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1754, makes it the duty of a guardian to settle his accounts with the court, the ward, or his legal representatives, and section 1634 provides that. when a final account is to be settled, at least 10 days' notice must be given of the time and place of the hearing by posting. Held, that where, on the death of a ward, notices of final hearing of the guardian's account were posted on March 16, 1899, but no legal representative of the ward was appointed until March 20th, and the hearing was had and the account allowed on the 27th, there was no sufficient notice to a person legally representing the ward, and the decree allowing the account was therefore void.

On Rehearing.

3. SAME—NOTICE OF HEARING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1789, providing that the proceedings on the settlement of the account of a guardian and the notices required thereof are the same as on the settlement of the accounts of an executor or administrator, section 1634, declaring that, if the account filed by an administrator be for a final settlement, notice of the time and place of the hearing must be posted or published for at least ten days prior to the day fixed for the hearing, is applicable to the settlement of the final account of the guardian of a deceased ward.

4. SAME—JURISDICTION.

Where, after the death of a ward, an administrator was appointed for the ward's estate, the court in proceeding to settle the guardian's account could acquire jurisdiction of the administrator only by his appearance at or before the hearing, by the issuance of a citation to him and a personal service thereof, or by posting or publishing the same as required by law for 10 days before the day set for the hearing.

5. SAME—PRESUMPTION AS TO JURISDICTION—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

The record of the settlement of a guardian's account stated that jurisdiction was acquired by the posting of notices, which were shown both by recitals and by proofs on file to have been posted less than 10 days after the appointment of an administrator of the ward's estate. The record also disclosed that there was no continuance, but that the hearing was had and the guardian's report approved on the date specified in the notices. Held, that it conclusively appeared that the court had no jurisdiction of the representative of the ward's estate at the time the guardian's account was allowed, and that a finding that notice had been given as required by law and as ordered by the court did not justify a presumption that other proof of jurisdiction not shown by the record had been adduced.

Department No. 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; S. P. Hall, Judge.

Action by Charles E. Livermore, as executor of the will of Teresa B. Livermore, deceased, against Giovanni B. Ratti, individually, and as administrator of the estate of Delfina L. Ratti, deceased. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

Metcalf & Metcalf and Johnson & Shaw, for appellants. William R. Davis and George W. Langan, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the defendants from the judgment and from an order denying their motion for a new trial. The complaint sets forth an action to enforce a lien against certain lands formerly belonging to the deceased, Delfina L. Ratti; the said Giovanni being her sole surviving heir at law. Teresa B. Livermore was the mother of the deceased, Delfina L. Ratti. In April, 1888, she was appointed guardian of the person and estate of Delfina, and continued to act in that capacity until the said Delfina arrived at the age of 18 years, which was on the 25th of November, 1892. No account of her trust as guardian was ever filed or presented to the court during the minority of the ward, nor at all until March 15, 1899. On September 29, 1897, the ward Delfina was married to the defendant Giovanni B. Ratti, and on September 19, 1898, she died intestate, leaving surviving her husband and one child, which child has since died, at the age of four months. On March 15, 1899, when the guardian Teresa B. Livermore filed her final account as guardian of her daughter Delfina, there had been no administrator appointed of the estate of her said daughter, although proceedings to that effect were then pending and were set for hearing on March 20, 1899. The hearing of the final account filed on March 15th was set for March 27th, and the usual 10 days' notice of that hearing was given by posting, in the manner required by the statute. On March 20th the defendant Giovanni was appointed administrator of the estate of the ward. The order settling the account recites that proof was made to the satisfaction of the court; that notice of said settlement had been given as required by law and as ordered by the court. The account showed disbursements of $1,508.18 by the guardian in excess of cash receipts, and that the entire estate of the ward consisted of a one-ninth interest in certain real estate. The order settled and allowed this balance, and declared that it should be a charge against the estate of the ward. The purpose of the action is to have this charge declared a lien against the estate and enforced by foreclosure.

The respondent contends that the order settling the final account and declaring the balance a charge upon the estate of the ward is invalid for want of jurisdiction in the court over the legal representative of the ward. By the provisions of section 1754 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is made the duty of the guardian, "at the expiration of his trust, to settle his accounts with the court, or with the ward, if he be of full age, or his legal representatives, and to pay over and deliver all the estate, moneys, and effects remaining in his hands, or due from him on such settlement, to the person who is lawfully entitled thereto." The proceedings to settle the account of a guardian instituted after the ward has arrived at full age, or after the ward has deceased, is one in which no persons are directly interested except the guardian, on the one hand, and the ward, or his legal representative, on the other. The proceeding is regulated by the provisions of the act concerning administrators of deceased persons (Code Civ. Proc. § 1789), and under section 1634, Code of Civil Procedure, when a final account is to be settled, notice of at least 10 days must be given of the time and place of the hearing thereof. The effect of the provisions of section 1754, above quoted, in a case where the ward has deceased, is that the proceeding for the settlement of the account must be had with the legal representative. It would seem to be a reasonable conclusion from this provision that such proceeding cannot be instituted nor determined unless there is a legal representative against whom it can be prosecuted, who may appear and resist the claims of the guardian, and who may be bound by the adjudication therein made. His interests are adverse to those of the guardian, and he is a necessary party to the proceeding, although he may be brought in by constructive notice only. It is a proceeding of a special nature in which the only process required by law is the posting of a general notice for 10 days. In all cases where by statute a substituted service of notice is authorized in place of actual service, a strict compliance with the statute is essential to a valid service. 17 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 45; 19 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 625; Forbes v. Hyde, 31 Cal. 342; Ricketson v. Richardson, 26 Cal. 149; People v. Huber, 20 Cal. 81; McMinn v. Whelan, 27 Cal. 300. A publication or posting for less than the required time is ineffectual to give jurisdiction and renders the subsequent proceedings under such notice void. 17 Ency. Pl. & Pr. 94; Foster v. Vehmeyer, 133 Cal. 460, 65 Pac. 974. The theory upon which such constructive service is allowed as a substitute for actual service is that, if such public notice is given for a reasonable time, the parties interested will, during the prescribed period, thereby obtain knowledge of the proceeding, and, where the proper notice is given for the required time, such knowledge is conclusively presumed. The Legislature, within reasonable limits, has power to determine the length of the period over which the publication is to extend. Such determination implies that in the legislative judgment the whole of the period is necessary to create the presumption that the published notice has imparted knowledge to the persons interested. It is always in the power of the guardian to procure the appointment of an administrator with whom he may settle the account, and who will then be in existence to receive such constructive notice. Such legal representative being made by the statute a necessary party to the settlement, and constructive notice being authorized as to him, and the only notice given him, as in the present case, it seems to follow that his existence during the entire period required to make that form of service valid is necessary to raise the statutory presumption that he has obtained from such notice a knowledge of the pendency of the proceeding. In cases under the statute, where the ward dies before the account is filed, the full period of posting must run while the person against whom the notice is directed is in legal existence and capable of receiving such knowledge; otherwise there will not be the full statutory notice to him, and jurisdiction of the proceedings will be lacking. The giving of such notice before the appointment of a legal representative, or in part before and in part after such appointment, will not give the court jurisdiction to make a valid order settling the account. In the present case the notices were posted on March 16, 1899, the legal representative was not appointed until March 20, 1899, and the hearing of the account and the order settling it was on March 27th. The administrator was not legally in existence in his representative capacity to receive such constructive notice during the period of the notice, except for the last seven days thereof, and consequently he could not in that capacity have received the full statutory constructive notice, upon which alone jurisdiction to make the order was predicated.

It follows, therefore, that the order in question is invalid. The evidence is therefore insufficient to support the finding that the order settling the account was duly given and made, the court erred in admitting the order in evidence over the objection of the defendant, and, as the findings show the dates of the notice and order and of the appointment of the administrator, and the consequent invalidity of the order, they are not sufficient to support the judgment.

In view of the conclusion we have reached upon this point in the case, it is unnecessary to consider the effect of the previous judgment as a former adjudication of the same cause of action, nor the numerous other questions presented.

The judgment and order are reversed.

On Rehearing In Bank.

SHAW, J. In the petition for rehearing it was urged that the recital of the order settling the final account of the guardian, that "proof was made to the satisfaction of the court that notice of said settlement had been given as required by law, and as ordered by the court," is, upon this inquiry, which, in effect, is collateral, conclusive evidence that the representative of the deceased ward's estate had, in some manner, received due and legal notice of the time and place of the hearing of the account, that it conclusively established jurisdiction, and that we cannot look into the record to ascertain what notice was in fact given to him, or receive proof of other facts outside the record to show the lack of jurisdiction. The rehearing was granted chiefly for the purpose of re-examining this point. Upon further consideration we are satisfied that the proposition is untenable.

The proper solution of the question depends upon the applicability of section 1634 of the Code of Civil Procedure to the proceedings for the settlement of the final account of a guardian. That it does apply thereto has not been disputed by either party. Section 1789, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the proceedings upon the settlement of the account of a guardian and the notices required thereof are the same as those required upon the settlement of the accounts of an executor or administrator. Section 1634, Code Civ. Proc., provides that, if the account filed by an administrator or executor be for a final settlement of the estate and a petition for final distribution of the estate is filed therewith, notice of the time and place of the hearing thereof must be posted or published for at least 10 days prior to the day fixed for said hearing. No other provision is made specifically relating to a final account. It has been, so far as we are advised, the universal custom throughout the state to treat this provision as applicable to a guardian's final account and to require 10 days' notice thereof. The final account of a guardian is, in many respects, the counterpart of the final account and petition for distribution of an executor or administrator. In the latter the balance due is determined and ordered paid over to the persons found to be the heirs, legatees, or creditors. In the former the balance is ascertained and ordered paid over and delivered to the ward, if living, or to his representative, if he is dead. Code Civ. Proc. § 1754. We think it is reasonable to conclude that the Legislature deemed the two proceedings to be analogous and intended that the same procedure should apply to both, so far as the notice to be given is concerned.

The court could have acquired jurisdiction of the administrator of the ward's estate in but three ways: Firstly, by his appearance at or before the hearing, by which act he would have submitted himself to its jurisdiction; secondly, by the issuance of a citation to him and its personal service on him; thirdly, by the constructive service of notice upon him, by posting or publishing the same as required by law for 10 days before the day set for the hearing. The latter notice is recited in the record, but there is nothing whatever in the record to indicate that any order was made by the court, or that there was any citation issued, or any appearance by or for the administrator. The proofs, which constitute a part of the record, show that the recital regarding the posting of notice was true. With respect to the order of the court, referred to in the recital, the record is silent. The law, however, does not provide for any order of court, except in the contingency that, at the time of the hearing, the court, or a judge thereof, deems the notice given by posting insufficient (Code Civ. Proc. § 1633), in which case a further notice may be ordered. This would necessarily require a continuance of the hearing to another day. The record shows affirmatively that there was no continuance, thus demonstrating that there was no order for any further notice, or that, if there was, no such notice could have been given, which fact would of itself be fatal to the existence of jurisdiction. With regard to the possible fact of an appearance by or for the administrator, it may be that, if the record had been silent concerning any sort of notice, the usual presumptions in favor of the validity of the proceedings of a court of general jurisdiction would prevail and such appearance would, if necessary, be conclusively presumed. But, on that point, the rule laid down in the leading case of Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 407, that, "when the record states what was done, it will not be presumed that something different was done," applies. The record here states that the jurisdiction was acquired by the posting of notices, which is shown by the recital and by the proofs on file, and it will not be presumed that it was acquired in some other way, as by an appearance. If service of notice in the manner recited was legally possible, it will be presumed that it was made, although the proof on file may be defective. In that event it would be presumed that proof was made by parol, or that the corrected proof had been mislaid. Sacremento Bank v. Montgomery, 146 Cal. 751, 752, 81 Pac. 138. The validity of the order, therefore, depends on the question whether or not, under the circumstances appearing outside the actual record of the proceedings, it was legally possible that the notice could have been given to the legal representative of the ward for 10 days before the hearing.

Upon the death of the ward, the law, as shown in the original opinion, to which we still adhere, requires the settlement to be made with the legal representative, and the constructive notice of 10 days must have been operative upon that representative for the full period of 10 days, and that in his representative capacity, to make it effective at all. For the purpose of showing that jurisdiction could not have been acquired in the manner shown by the record, evidence is admissible to prove any fact, the existence or nonexistence of which is not conclusively established by the record or its recitals. Thus, if a judgment against a corporation recites due service of process upon the corporation, or the appearance for it by some authorized person, it may be set aside upon proof that it had been dissolved and had no legal existence for any purpose at the time the action was begun and until the rendition of the judgment. So, also, if a judgment against a natural person recites due service of process on him, his heirs or legal representatives may show that such service was impossible, and that the judgment was void, by proof that he was dead before the action was begun.

In like manner, the giving of an effective notice in the manner here recited is shown to be impossible and the order is accordingly avoided, by proof of the fact that the legal representative of the ward was not in legal existence to receive it, during a necessary part of the 10 days for which it was running; that is, that he was not appointed until March 20, 1899, which was only seven days prior to the day upon which the order was made. Neither the record nor the recital of the giving of the notice, nor the presumptions in favor of the jurisdiction of the court, are conclusive of the fact of the existence of the administrator, as such, during the whole or any part of the 10 days, any more than they would be conclusive of the existence of the corporation, or of the fact that the defendant was alive, in the instances above referred to. The actual, effective, time of the notice to the administrator was therefore only seven days, whereas the law requires 10 days to constitute legal service. Jurisdiction to hear the settlement of the account was therefore wanting and the order was void.

The judgment and order are reversed.

WILLIAMS v. LOS ANGELES RY. CO.

(L. A. 1,676.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 27, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS — STREETS — RIGHTS OF ABUTTING PROPERTY OWNERS—INJURY TO RIGHT TO USE FOR TRAVEL.

An injury to an adjoining property owner's right to travel from place to place on a street in front of his lot or elsewhere being one which he enjoys in common with the public, he is not entitled to maintain an action for damages or for an injunction for an injury to such right.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 1447, 1448.]

2. SAME—PRIVATE EASEMENTS.

An owner of a lot adjoining a street has certain private easements therein, consisting of the right of ingress and egress, the right to receive light and air from the space occupied by the street, and the right to have the street space kept open, so that signs or goods displayed in or upon the lot may be seen by passers in order that they may be attracted as customers, etc., for injury to which rights the property owner is entitled to sue, regardless of the number of persons who may suffer a similar injury to similar private easements appurtenant to other lots fronting on the street.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, §§ 1447, 1448.]

3. STREET RAILROADS—FRANCHISES—USE OF STREETS—SIGNAL TOWERS.

The granting of a franchise to lay street car tracks in a street, and to run cars thereon by electricity, did not confer the right to erect a signal tower in the street, at least without a showing that it could not be made of practical use if located on private property.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN—USE OF STREETS—CONDEMNATION OF LAND.

Where a street railway company placed a signal tower at the intersection of certain streets, to the injury of the private easements of an adjoining property owner, it was no answer to the railroad company's obligation to condemn private property for the location of such tower that the expense of such proceedings would be great.

5. APPEAL—DISCRETION—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION—DENIAL—REVIEW.

The denial of an application for a temporary injunction pendente lite will not be reversed on appeal, unless there appears to have been an abuse of the trial court's discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3818.]

6. INJUNCTION — PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—REMEDIES—MONETARY DAMAGES.

Where the damage or injury threatened is of a character which may be easily remedied if a temporary injunction is refused, or where the damage is chiefly monetary and the defendant is solvent, the injunction pendente lite may be properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, §§ 305-307.]

7. SAME.

Where one or the other of the parties to a suit will suffer by the granting or refusing of an injunction pendente lite, the inconvenience likely to be incurred by each, from the action of the court in granting or refusing the injunction, should be balanced, and the injunction should be granted or withheld accordingly.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, §§ 305-307.]

8. EMINENT DOMAIN—USE OF STREET—TEMPORARY INJUNCTION.

Defendant street railway company erected a signal tower in a street nine feet from the plaintiff's property. The post alone interfered slightly with plaintiff's right of ingress and egress. It did not appear that the defendant was insolvent, and that full damages could not be recovered in the action; the court under the prayer for general relief being authorized in the final judgment to restrain the use of the tower and command its removal, unless the damage was paid or the right to retain the tower was obtained by condemnation proceedings. Held, that the refusal of an injunction restraining the use of the tower pendente lite was not an abuse of discretion.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Suit by Chester Williams against the Los Angeles Railway Company. From an order refusing an application for an injunction pendente lite, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Works, Lee & Works, for appellant. Bicknell, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing an application for an injunction pending the action.

The plaintiff was the owner of a lot and of the building thereon situated on the corner of Spring and Fourth streets, which is about the business center of the city of Los Angeles. The building was used for a retail curio store, and among its advantages were those arising from its position on the street, consisting of the facilities thereby afforded for the display of signs advertising the business, its accessibility, and the free admission of light and air. The defendant was operating a system of electric street railways passing along both of the streets and turning each corner of the intersection. It had previously kept a man employed to turn the switches and signal the men operating the cars at the proper time to cross the intersection or turn the corner into the other street. For the purpose of facilitating this work, the defendant erected a large iron post or pedestal, twelve inches in diameter and about ten feet high, and placed thereon a switch tower four feet two inches wide and over nine feet high above the top of the post. The post was situated on the sidewalk of Spring street some two or three feet north of the north line of Fourth street and about nine feet from the walls and windows of the plaintiff's building. This tower was to be used as a signal station, and in it was to be stationed a man who, by means of electric wires extending from the tower to the switches, was to turn the switches and by semaphore signals was to direct the running of the cars, as was formerly done by the switchman on the street. At the time the complaint was sworn to the tower had not been placed on the post; but, before the preliminary restraining order was served, it had been so placed, though not entirely completed ready for operation.

Every lot fronting upon a street has, as appurtenances thereto, certain private easements in the street, in front of and adjacent to the lot, which easements are a part of the lot and are private property as fully as the lot itself, though exercised in the street and extending into and over the street. Any obstruction to the use of the street which impairs or destroys these easements is a private injury, special and peculiar to the owner of the lot, and different and distinct from the injury to the general public and from that which such owner suffers as a part of the general public. As one of the public he has the right to travel from place to place on the street, in front of his lot or elsewhere. An injury to this public right gives him no right to maintain an action for damages, or for an injunction. As an abutting owner, he has the right to the private easements in question, and for an injury thereto he may sue for damages, or to enjoin the continuance of the injury, regardless of the fact that the same obstruction also constitutes an injury to his public right of travel, and regardless of the number of persons who may suffer a similar injury to similar private easements appurtenant to other lots fronting on the street. These private easements are: First, the right of ingress and egress to and from the lot over and by means of the adjacent portion of the street (Eachus v. Los Angeles R. Co., 103 Cal. 617, 37 Pac. 750, 42 Am. St. Rep. 149; Bigelow v. Ballerino, 111 Cal. 563, 44 Pac. 307; Geurkink v. Petaluma, 112 Cal. 308, 44 Pac. 570; Symons v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 557, 42 Pac. 913, 47 Pac. 453; Sievers v. San Francisco, 115 Cal. 653, 47 Pac. 687, 56 Am. St. Rep. 153; Bancroft v. San Diego, 120 Cal. 437, 52 Pac. 712; Eachus v. Los Angeles, 130 Cal. 495, 62 Pac. 829, 80 Am. St. Rep. 147); second, the right to receive light from the space occupied by the street, and to the circulation of air therefrom (Brown v. Board, 124 Cal. 280, 57 Pac. 82; Townsend v. Epstein, 93 Md. 537, 49 Atl. 631, 52 L. R. A.

409, 86 Am. St. Rep. 441; Field v. Barling, 149 Ill. 556, 37 N. E. 850, 24 L. R. A. 406, 41 Am. St. Rep. 311; Shepard v. Manhattan Ry. Co., 117 N. Y. 442, 23 N. E. 31; Story v. R. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Lahr v. Railroad Co., 104 N. Y. 268, 10 N. E. 531; 2 Dill. Mun. Corp. [4th Ed.] § 712); third, the right to have the street space kept open so that signs or goods displayed in and upon the lot may be seen by the passers-by, in order that they may be attracted as customers to patronize the business carried on thereon (First Nat. Bank v. Tyson, 133 Ala. 459, 32 South. 144, 59 L. R. A. 399, 91 Am. St. Rep. 46; Dill v. Board, 20 Atl. 743, 47 N. J. Eq. 421, 10 L. R. A. 276; Hallock v. Scheyer, 33 Hun [N. Y.] 111). The plaintiff, as the owner of the lot abutting on the street, was possessed of these private easements. The structure erected by the defendant was, at the place where it was situated, to some extent an obstruction to the exercise of all of these easements. To the extent of the space occupied, it absolutely excluded all other use, either for passage, light, air, or view. Whether the damage and obstruction thereto was so slight as to come within the de minimis rule, or was sufficient to justify an injunction pendente lite, was a matter for the determination of the court below.

The allegations of the answer do not show that it was necessary to the operation of the street cars that the tower should be placed in the street. They show, only, that it was necessary, if it was to be used at all, that it should be placed "at the intersection." But, for all that appears, it would have served its purpose as well if erected upon private property at the apex of either of the four corner lots at the intersection, and within the property line. The photographs of the place included in the record make it extremely probable that this is the case, if they do not absolutely demonstrate the fact. The granting of the franchise to lay tracks in streets and run cars thereon by electricity did not carry the right to erect such a structure as this tower in the street, at any rate not unless it is shown that it cannot be made of practical use if located on private property. We do not mean to say that, even if that were shown, the right would be included in the franchise. What we decide is that, if it can be placed on either of the four corners, on private property, and not in the space dedicated as a street and sidewalk, and can there be used substantially in the same manner, then the city authorities cannot give the right to put it in the street, to the detriment of the private rights of the plaintiff. The fact that it may cost a large sum to obtain the necessary private property at that point is immaterial. It is not at all clear, from the facts stated in the answer, whether the purport of it is that the use of the tower is essential to any operation of the car line, or only that it is much more convenient, economical, and efficient than the employment of one or more men in the street to perform the work of changing the switches. These are matters for the determination of the trial court upon the final trial, if it has not yet been had. The answer fails to show that its franchise, or permit to erect this tower, authorized it to place it at the point selected, to the injury of the plaintiff, without first making compensation to him for the damage caused thereby, if any.

Nevertheless, upon this appeal, we cannot say that the refusal of a temporary injunction until the trial of the cause was erroneous. The question of granting or refusing an application for a temporary injunction is addressed to the sound discretion of the lower court, and its action will not be reversed upon appeal, unless there appears to be an abuse of the discretion. If the damage or injury threatened is of a character which may be easily remedied if the injunction is refused, as where it is chiefly monetary damage and the defendant is solvent, the court, in its discretion, may refuse to issue an injunction, leaving the question to be decided upon the final hearing. Hicks v. Michael, 15 Cal. 116; Peterson v. Santa Rosa, 119 Cal. 389, 51 Pac. 557; U. S. v. Duluth, 1 Dill. 469, 25 Fed. Cas. 925, Fed. Cas. No. 15,001. Where one or the other of the parties is to suffer by the granting or refusing of an injunction, pending the action, the inconvenience likely to be incurred by each from the action of the court in granting or refusing a temporary injunction should be balanced, and the court should grant or withhold the injunction accordingly. 10 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. 989.

From the facts stated it is probable that the court below believed that the actual damage to the plaintiff's private rights would be small. The tower is at least nine feet distant, and the post alone interferes with the right of ingress and egress, and that but slightly. It may be that the court below considered it doubtful that there would be any appreciable damage, or, at all events, as it is not claimed that the defendant is insolvent, that the full damages could be recovered in an action. Bigelow v. Los Angeles, 85 Cal. 618, 24 Pac. 778; Reardon v. San Francisco, 66 Cal. 506, 6 Pac. 317, 56 Am. Rep. 109; Tyler v. Tehama Co., 109 Cal. 624, 42 Pac. 240. The court could allow it in this action, under the prayer for general relief, and could, in the final judgment, restrain the use of the tower or command its removal, unless the damage was paid within a time fixed. The defendant would have the right to bring a condemnation suit, pay the damages assessed, and thereupon resume the use of the tower. At the time of the service of the restraining order, the tower was in place, and it remained there at the hearing, substantially ready for use. We cannot say that it would have been unreasonable in the court below, in view of these circumstances, to have considered that the rights of the parties could be substantially preserved by reserving the matter of an injunction until the trial, in the meantime suffering the tower to remain, and allowing defendant to operate its cars therewith. The abuse of discretion is not clear.

The order is affirmed.

3. ATTACHMENT—AFFIDAVIT—ALIAS WRITS.

Code Civ. Proc. §§ 538, 539, require the clerk to issue a writ of attachment on receiving the affidavit and undertaking, and section 540 provides that "several writs may be issued at the same time to sheriffs of different counties." Held, that it is not necessary to file additional affidavits and undertakings to secure additional writs not issued at the time the first writ is issued; and if, by reason of a change in conditions between the filing of the affidavit and the issuance of the writ, the writ ought not to issue, the debtor's remedy is by motion to set aside the attachment.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; F. F. Oster, Judge.

Action by M. S. Martinovich against P. Marsicano. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Boyer, for appellant. Naphtaly, Freidenrich & Ackerman and Waters & Wylie, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action to quiet title, involving an undivided one-half of the N. E. ¼ of the N. E. ¼ of section 10, Tp. 1 S., R. 7 W., S. B. M., in San Bernardino county. From a judgment therein in favor of defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

Ceverio Martinovich died testate on February 6, 1889, the owner of the property above described. By the terms of his will, the undivided one-half thereof in controversy was devised to his widow, Sophia Martinovich. On December 1, 1897, defendant commenced an action in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against said Sophia Martinovich. On December 16, 1897, he filed in said action an affidavit and an undertaking for attachment in regular form, and on that day a writ of attachment was regularly issued from said court, directed to the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. On December 18, 1897, without filing any new affidavit or undertaking, he procured to be issued by said clerk another writ of attachment in said action, directed to the sheriff of San Bernardino county. Under this writ, the property involved was attached on December 20, 1897, by the sheriff of San Bernardino county, in the manner provided by law. On February 14, 1898, no motion to dissolve said attachment ever having been made, judgment was given in said action in favor of this defendant and against Sophia Martinovich for $3,083.19, and a transcript of the original docket of this judgment, duly certified, was filed and recorded in the office of the county recorder of San Bernardino county on April 8, 1898. On June 30, 1898, execution was duly issued out of the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and levied by the sheriff of San Bernardino county on this property, and he, after due notice, on July 25, 1898, sold the property at public sale to defendant. No redemption having been made, said sheriff, on December 16, 1899, executed a deed for the property to defendant. In the meantime, on March 29, 1898, which was after the attempted levy and the judgment, but prior to the filing of the transcript of the docket in San Bernardino county, Sophia Martinovich executed and delivered a conveyance of the property to plaintiff. This deed was not recorded until February 20, 1903. On March 30, 1898, a decree of final distribution in the matter of the estate of Ceverio Martinovich was made by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and by this the property here involved was distributed to plaintiff, it being recited in the decree that it had been made to appear to the court that said Sophia had transferred the same to plaintiff. This decree was entered in the minutes of the court April 21, 1898, and a certified copy thereof was recorded in the office of the county recorder of San Bernardino county on June 25, 1898, which was before the sheriff's sale.

Upon these facts, judgment was properly given for defendant. Such rights as defendant may have had under the attachment levy were in no way affected by the decree of distribution. He was not required to present his claim in this behalf to the probate court and was not entitled to participate in the distribution of the estate, and the property distributed continued to be subject to the lien of his attachment, if the property had been legally attached, which for the present we assume to have been the case. See Martinovich v. Marsicano, 137 Cal. 354, 70 Pac. 459.

Concededly, a sheriff's deed executed in pursuance of an execution sale under a judgment rendered in an attachment suit relates back to and takes effect from the levy of the attachment, if the levy was such as to create a lien. Porter v. Pico, 55 Cal. 165, 171; Godfrey v. Monroe, 101 Cal. 224, 35 Pac. 761;

Woodward v. Brown, 119 Cal. 283, 306, 51 Pac. 2, 542, 63 Am. St. Rep. 108. If the attachment was valid, plaintiff, therefore, acquired the property from Sophia Martinovich subject thereto, and subject to the subsequent proceedings to enforce the judgment recovered against her.

Plaintiff claims that there was no valid attachment as to this property, for the single reason that the San Bernardino writ was issued by the clerk without the giving by plaintiff of any additional affidavit or undertaking. Manifestly, it was considered sufficient that an affidavit showing a proper case for an attachment, and an undertaking in due form, had been filed two days before. We have no doubt that such affidavit and undertaking constituted a sufficient legal basis for the writ. It is not claimed that several writs may not be issued upon a single affidavit and undertaking to the sheriffs of different counties. That this may be done is clearly shown by the statute. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 537–540. But it is contended that all writs so issued must be issued at the same time. This contention is based upon the fact that sections 538 and 539, Code Civ. Proc., require the clerk to issue the writ upon receiving the affidavit and undertaking, and that section 540, Code Civ. Proc., after declaring that the writ must be directed to the sheriff of any county in which property of the defendant may be, and in terms requires him to attach and safely keep all property of the defendant within his county not exempt from execution, provides: "Several writs may be issued at the same time to the sheriffs of different counties." This provision of section 540, as we read it, was intended solely in aid of the plaintiff in attachment, and the whole purpose was to authorize such a plaintiff to have at one time two or more writs addressed to sheriffs of different counties, so that property of the defendant in various counties necessary to secure the plaintiff's claim may be levied on under the one proceeding for attachment instituted by him. The plaintiff in attachment is, by virtue of the showing made and security given, entitled to have as many writs issued to different sheriffs as he may see fit to demand. All writs so demanded and issued constitute parts of the one proceeding to have the property of the defendant in the state levied on as security for any judgment that may be obtained, and have for their basis the affidavit and undertaking given to secure the remedy of attachment. If by his first demand he has failed to ask for and secure a writ for a county in which he almost immediately thereafter discovers attachable property necessary to his security, no good reason is apparent why he may not reach such property by procuring what he would have been entitled to as a matter of right in the first instance by including it in his demand to the clerk, thus accomplishing the same result that he would be enabled to obtain as to property subsequently discovered in a county for which a writ had issued, before the return of the attachment, by a simple direction to the sheriff. The mere fact that a writ has been issued as to one county of the state should not deprive the plaintiff of his right to a writ for any other county, and the statute does not, in our opinion, have such effect. Such fact does not detract from the power and duty of the clerk to issue, upon the affidavit and undertaking already filed, writs to other counties as demanded.

It is urged that, if the statute be so construed as to authorize a second writ subsequent to the issuance of the first, conditions may have so changed in the meantime that the affidavit no longer speaks the truth as to the matters essential to the right of attachment. This, however, would be true as to any writ of attachment issued. It has not been attempted to prescribe by our statute the time within which, after the making or filing of the affidavit, a writ may legally issue, nor to limit the force and effect of the affidavit to any specified time after its execution. Some time must, from the nature of things, elapse between the making of the affidavit or its filing, and the issuance of any writ, during which time, however short, a change may occur as to some fact required to be alleged in such affidavit. It is impossible to absolutely prevent this, as successive steps in a proceeding cannot be contemporaneously taken. The mere requirement that all writs issued should be concurrently issued would not absolutely prevent it. It was said in Wheeler v. Farmer, 38 Cal. 203, 215, that an objection that an affidavit for attachment was made before the commencement of the suit was manifestly untenable, and that there was no valid objection to a complete preparation of all the papers requisite to the writ before the complaint was prepared. It has been said elsewhere that, as the ground of attachment must exist at the time the warrant of attachment was issued, an unreasonable time should not be allowed to elapse between the making of the affidavit and the issuance of a writ. By the term "unreasonable time," as herein used, is meant such delay as would, under the circumstances, cast suspicion on the verity of the affidavit, or lead to the supposition that the ground stated for the attachment had ceased to exist. See Kesler v. Lapham, 33 S. E. 289, 46 W. Va. 293, and cases there cited. We think that, as to this particular matter, the true rule, in the absence of statute to the contrary, is as stated in Hadden v. Linville, 38 Atl. 900, 86 Md. 210, where the objection was to the jurisdiction for the reason that the affidavit was made several months before the issuance of the attachment, the appellant insisting that the affidavit must be made either at the time of the institution of the suit, or as shortly before as conveniently might be. The court said: "But while we are of opinion that there may be such delay between the making of the affidavit and the suing out of the writ as may reasonably induce a presumption, when taken in connection with other facts properly proven, that the process of the court is being abused, or that the facts set forth in the affidavit may not be true when the suit is instituted, yet we do not think such divergence of dates is a jurisdictional matter that will enable this court, on appeal, to consider the question in a case like the one at bar, where the point was not raised and considered below on appropriate motion or plea." This is as applicable to a second writ issued to another county after the issuance of the first writ as it is to a case of delay between the making of the affidavit and the procuring of the first writ. The protection afforded by the law to the defendant against an improper attachment is as broad in the one case as in the other. In each, no jurisdictional defect being apparent on the face of the proceeding, his only remedy, under our system, is a motion to set aside the attachment, and on this motion the showing made by the affidavit in support of the judgment can be assailed, and the attachment which has been improperly issued discharged. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 556–558. The reason advanced by plaintiff in support of the construction of section 540, contended for by him, appears to us to be without force.

The San Bernardino writ of attachment must here be held to have been legally issued. Admittedly, the levy thereunder was in full compliance with the statute. The attachment proceedings operated, therefore, to render the subsequent sheriff's deed effectual from the date of the levy, and paramount to plaintiff's deed from Sophia Martinovich, executed subsequent to such levy.

The judgment is affirmed.

CROSSMAN v. VIVIENDA WATER CO.

(L. A. 1,683.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 21, 1907.)

1. CORPORATIONS—VOLUNTARY DISSOLUTION—FALSE STATEMENT IN APPLICATION—EFFECT—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

A decree dissolving a corporation is not assailable collaterally because the corporation falsely stated in its application for dissolution that all claims against it had been discharged; the fraud not affecting the court's jurisdiction to make the decree.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS—DISSOLUTION OF CORPORATION—NOTICE.

The Code provision for the voluntary dissolution of corporations is not unconstitutional as impairing the obligation of contracts, because the only notice of the hearing of the application for dissolution is by publication; the debts of the corporation being not vacated by the dissolution.

3. CORPORATIONS—EFFECT OF DISSOLUTION—ACTIONS.

The effect of the dissolution of a corporation is to terminate its existence as a legal entity, and render it incapable of suing or being sued, Civ. Code, § 400, providing that unless other persons are appointed, the directors or managers of a corporation at the time of its dissolution are trustees of the creditors and stockholders, and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation, not having the effect of continuing the corporate existence as cestui que trust, or otherwise, so as to enable it to defend actions in its corporate name, and Code Civ. Proc. § 385, providing that an action does not abate by the death of any disability of a party, if the cause of action survives, if applicable to corporations, not authorizing an action against the corporation itself, and hence a judgment against such corporation is a nullity.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, §§ 2482, 2483.]

4. SAME — JUDGMENT AGAINST DISSOLVED CORPORATION—COLLATERAL IMPEACHMENT—RIGHTS OF STOCKHOLDERS.

Where a dissolved corporation and its stockholders were sued, the stockholders could collaterally impeach a judgment against it, though the suit had been dismissed as to them.

5. ESTOPPEL — EQUITABLE — PERSONS AFFECTED.

Where a dissolved corporation and its stockholders were sued, the stockholders were not estopped to assert the invalidity of a judgment against the corporation, where they filed an answer early in the action, denying the existence of the corporation, and alleging its dissolution, though a demurrer had been filed inadvertently and without authority on its part, and one of the stockholders had accepted service of summons as its president, no estoppel lying against a dissolved corporation.

6. JUDGMENT—SETTING ASIDE VOID JUDGMENT—TIME WITHIN WHICH MOTION MAY BE MADE.

A motion by stockholders of a dissolved corporation to vacate a judgment against it obtained after its dissolution, made within six months of the date of the entry of judgment, was not too late, it being immaterial whether it was then too late to obtain in the action an order setting aside the default.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 735–744.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by H. M. Crossman against the Vivienda Water Company. Plaintiff appeals from an order setting aside a judgment in his favor. Affirmed.

Ezra Crossman and Works, Lee & Works, for appellant. Flint & Barker and Shirley C. Ward, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This action was commenced in the year 1894 against the defendant, alleged to be a corporation, for an accounting and the recovery thereon of some $33,250, and also against certain persons alleged to be stockholders therein, to recover from them their proportionate shares of the amount sought from the corporation. Summons was served on respondent J. F. Holbrook, as president of the corporation, and he acknowledged service as president. What purported to be a demurrer on the part of the corporation and certain other defendants was served and filed on August 27, 1894, by an attorney, assuming to act for such parties. This demurrer was overruled, and on February 1, 1895, an answer was filed by all of said stockholder defendants, in which, besides denying the facts alleged in the complaint as to liability on the part of the alleged corporation, said defendants denied the existence of the corporation since December 27, 1893, alleging that on the last mentioned day, by a proceeding under title 6 of part 3 of the Code of Civil Procedure, §§ 1227–1233, relating to the voluntary dissolution of corporations, said corporation was by the superior court of Los Angeles county duly declared to be dissolved, and had not since existed as a corporation. No answer was made for the corporation. On December 2, 1896, the entry of the default of the corporation was made under direction of plaintiff, and on December 4, 1896, judgment thereon was entered by the clerk against the corporation for the full amount claimed, with interest. A motion to set aside this judgment against the corporation was made by the defendant stockholders on various grounds, and this motion was granted by the superior court on December 11, 1899. An appeal was taken by plaintiff to this court from the order granting such motion, and on June 16, 1902, that order was affirmed. The only ground of the motion considered here was that the clerk had no power to enter the judgment in the absence of an order of the court, and it was held that this claim was well based, the action being primarily for an accounting. Crossman v. Vivienda Water Company, 136 Cal. 571, 69 Pac. 220. On December 23, 1899, plaintiff dismissed the action as to all of the defendants except the alleged corporation. On December 22, 1902, an order was made in the lower court appointing a referee to take an accounting between plaintiff and the corporation, and this referee presented his report to the court, and on November 3, 1903, judgment was given by the court in favor of the plaintiff against such alleged corporation for $28,221.25 and costs. All of these proceedings were had without the participation of any one purporting to represent the corporation, and without any notice to any one. Respondents here, the original stockholder defendants herein, had no knowledge of any of these proceedings until they were served with a supplemental complaint in another action pending against them as stockholders, which complaint alleged the recovery of this judgment against the corporation, and the inability of plaintiff to discover property of the corporation from which the same could be satisfied. Respondents thereupon gave notice of a motion to be made February 8, 1904, to set aside the judgment upon the ground, among others, that the court had no jurisdiction to give the same, for the reason that, prior to the institution of the suit, the corporation had been dissolved and had ceased to exist. They also moved that the default and order appointing a referee be set aside for the same reason. On March 30, 1904, the court made an order setting aside and vacating the judgment upon this ground, and the appeal before us is one taken by plaintiff from this order.

The record shows that the corporation was dissolved and had ceased to exist several months before the commencement of the action. The proceedings for dissolution were in full accord with the provisions of our law relative to voluntary dissolution of corporations. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1227–1233. It is suggested that the court making the decree of dissolution was without jurisdiction of the proceeding, because of an alleged false statement in the application for dissolution to the effect that all claims and demands against the corporation had been satisfied and discharged. This is not a matter going to the jurisdiction. The question as to the truth of this allegation was, so far as the dissolution proceeding was concerned, one solely for the determination of the court to which the application was made, and that court found that the allegation was true. Id., §§ 1228, 1232. Even if we assume here that the allegation was false in fact, the jurisdiction of the court in the dissolution proceeding would in no degree be affected. In reply to what is said by appellant as to a fraud being committed upon the court in that matter, it is sufficient to say that this is not an action to set aside the decree of dissolution on the ground of fraud, and that such decree is not collaterally assailable upon that ground. The decree of dissolution sufficiently shows legal notice of the hearing of the application to have been given.

There is nothing in the point made to the effect that our Code sections, in the matter of voluntary dissolution of corporations, are unconstitutional, in that the only notice required is by publication, and the opportunity of creditors to recover is thereby restricted and the obligation of contracts is therefore impaired. We see no reason to doubt the legal sufficiency of the provisions as to notice. It is well settled that statutory provisions for the voluntary dissolution of corporations are not violative of the constitutional inhibition against the impairment of the obligation of contracts. The universally accepted modern doctrine is that the debts of a corporation are not vacated by its dissolution. In the absence of statute, equity treats the surviving assets as a trust fund for the creditors and stockholders, and enables the beneficiaries to reach the same by appropriate procedure. In Mumma v. Potomac Co., 8 Pet. (U. S.) 281, 8 L. Ed. 945, it was said by the Supreme Court of the United States: "We are of opinion that the dissolution of the corporation, under the acts of Virginia and Maryland, * * * cannot, in any just sense, be considered, within the clause of the Constitution of the United States on this subject, an impairing of the obligation of the contracts of the company by those states, any more than the death of a private person can be said to impair the obligation of his contracts. The obligation of those contracts survives, and the creditors may enforce their claims against any property belonging to the corporation which has not passed into the hands of bona fide purchasers, but is still held in trust for the company or for the stockholders thereof, at the time of its dissolution, in any mode permitted by the local laws." The matter is now generally covered by statute. Where there is no statute providing for the continuance of the corporation itself for the purpose of settling its affairs, provision is generally made for the doing of this by others. We have such a provision in this state. Section 400, Civ. Code, provides: "Unless other persons are appointed by the court, the directors or managers of the affairs of such corporation at the time of its dissolution are trustees of the creditors and stockholders or members of the corporation dissolved, and have full power to settle the affairs of the corporation." This provision is applicable in all cases of dissolution, whether voluntary or involuntary. Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 365, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192; State I. & I. Co. v. Superior Court, 101 Cal. 135, 148, 35 Pac. 549.

It is settled beyond question that, except as otherwise provided by statute, the effect of the dissolution of a corporation is to terminate its existence as a legal entity, and render it incapable of suing or being sued as a corporate body or in its corporate name. It is dead, and can no more be proceeded against as an existing corporation than could a natural person after his death. There is no one who can appear or act for it, and all actions pending against it are abated, and any judgment attempted to be given against it is void. As to this, all the text writers agree, and their statement is supported by an overwhelming weight of authority. See 5 Thompson on Corp. §§ 6721, 6722, 6723; Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, §§ 322, 329; Angell & Ames on Corp. § 195; 2 Morawetz on Corp. § 1031; Vol. 10 Cyc. p. 1316; 7 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 854; Pendleton v. Russell, Receiver, etc., 144 U. S. 640, 12 Sup. Ct. 743, 36 L. Ed. 574; First National Bank v. Colby, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 609, 22 L. Ed. 687; Mumma v. Peters, supra; Sturges v. Vanderbilt, 73 N. Y. 384; Rodgers v. Adriatic, etc., Co., 148 N. Y. 38, 42 N. E. 515. There is no statute of this state that authorized the commencement or continuance of this action against the corporation after its legal death. We have no statute similar to that of several states, providing that in the event of the dissolution of a corporation its existence shall be continued either indefinitely or for a specified time for the settlement of its affairs. Statutes similar to our section 400, Civ. Code, above quoted, do not have the effect of continuing the existence of the corporation as cestui que trust, or otherwise, so as to render it capable of defending actions in its corporate name. Thompson on Corp. § 6739; Clark & Marshall on Private Corporations, § 333; Sturges v. Vanderbilt, supra. If section 385, Code Civ. Proc., providing that an action does not abate by the death or any disability of a party, if the cause of action survives, is applicable to the case of a corporation, it does not authorize the continuance of the action against the corporation itself, but allows the action to be continued only against the "representative or successor in interest," brought in on motion. McCulloch v. Norwood, 58 N. Y. 562, 568. See, also, Judson v. Love, 35 Cal. 463. There being no statute which can be held to modify the general rule, it would seem that the judgment in this case was as much of a nullity as if it had been given against a dead natural person, and that plaintiff's remedy, after the dissolution of this corporation was against the directors who continued such at the time of dissolution as trustees, and the stockholders. Sturges v. Vanderbilt, supra.

There can be no serious doubt that such a void judgment can be collaterally impeached and its invalidity shown by any one interested, such as one entitled either as creditor or stockholder to participate in the assets of the corporation, or a stockholder liable for the debts of the corporation. In the absence of circumstances operating as an estoppel upon them to assert such invalidity, they should be allowed to so do for their own protection. In Sturges v. Vanderbilt, supra, a judgment given against a corporation which had been dissolved pending the action, was held void in an action brought to compel stockholders of the company to apply certain moneys received by them from the assets of the company to the payment of such judgment. In McCulloch v. Norwood, supra, the receiver of a defunct corporation was allowed to show such invalidity of the judgment rendered against the corporation after its dissolution, in a proceeding brought to subject assets in his hands to the satisfaction thereof. The same is true of Pendleton v. Russell, 144 U. S. 640, 12 Sup. Ct. 743, 36 L. Ed. 574. Such a judgment, it has been held, will be reversed on a writ of error brought by a member of the corporation whose property has been levied upon under an execution issued to enforce the same. Merrill v. Suffolk Bank, 31 Me. 57, 1 Am. Rep. 649; Thompson on Corp. § 6725. We know of no good reason why such a person may not be permitted to appear in the original action against the corporation, and there assert his claim. As said in Combes v. Keyes, 89 Wis. 297, 62 N. W. 89, 27 L. R. A. 369, 46 Am. St. Rep. 839, "from the very nature of things the dissolution or death of a corporation defendant, like the death of a party to a pending action, can only be brought to the attention of the court by some one other than the defunct corporation." In First National Bank v. Colby, supra, it was held that the application of the receiver of such a corporation for a discharge of an attachment issued against the corporation should have been granted although he was not a party to the action. And on the former appeal in this case, it was held in affirming the order made on the motion of the respondents here, vacating the former judgment against the Vivienda Water Company, upon the ground that the same was void for want of power in the clerk to enter it, that the respondents had such interest as entitled them to make the motion. The court said: "These defendants were not only successors in interest of the property involved, but were liable as stockholders for any valid judgment against the corporation. As stockholders they were made parties defendant to recover from them a judgment covering the same liability for which the corporation was sued. If this judgment should stand, we do not see why under some circumstances it might not fix by that much the stockholders' liability, and if this be true they were directly interested in the judgment. But it has been held by this court that one who succeeds to property that is subject to a judgment may appear to have it vacated, though he was not a party to the judgment." We regard this as decisive here. The fact that the action has now been dismissed as to respondents is immaterial. They were not parties to the judgment on the former appeal.

There is nothing in the record which would justify a conclusion that these respondents are estopped from asserting the invalidity of the judgment against the alleged corporation. Their verified answer, filed February 1, 1895, in terms denied the existence of the corporation, and alleged its dissolution, as has already been seen, and there was no subsequent act upon the part of any of them tending to contradict this. This answer filed almost at the very commencement of the action entirely overcame any effect in the direction of an estoppel on respondents, that might have been contended for the prior filing of a demurrer on the part of the corporation by an attorney, and the prior acceptance of service of summons by respondent Holbrook, as president of the corporation. It should be noted in this connection that there was a sufficient showing made on the hearing of the motion, to warrant the conclusion that the attorney filing the demurrer included the corporation as a demurrant inadvertently, and without being authorized to do so. So far as the dead corporation itself is concerned, there could be no admission or estoppel. It could not be served with process, could not appear, could not itself admit anything nor authorize anyone else to do so for it. It was legally dead. The proceedings against it must be held to be an absolute nullity whenever it is made to appear that it had ceased to be prior to the commencement of the action, and those sufficiently interested to be allowed to assail the judgment on this ground cannot, unless estopped by their own acts or omissions, be held bound by any unauthorized appearance or admission attempted to be made on behalf of the dead corporation, or by the entry of the default of such a corporation attempted to be made in such action. The motion to vacate the judgment did not come too late, even if it be assumed that the provisions of section 473, Code Civ. Proc., as to the time within which relief can be granted, are applicable to a case of this character. The application was made within six months of the date of entry of judgment, the time prescribed in that section for the making of application for relief. Whether or not it was then too late to obtain in the action an order setting aside the default is immaterial. It is enough for all the purposes of this appeal, that the judgment was void for the reason that it was given against a corporation that had become legally dead, and that the application for the vacating of this judgment was made within six months of its entry.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

DUCKWORTH et al. v. WATSONVILLE WATER & LIGHT CO. et al. (S. F. 3,754.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 9, 1907.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES — RIPARIAN OWNERS—APPROPRIATION—TITLE TO WATER OF LAKE.

The grantee of a riparian owner of land on the outlet of a lake acquired no title to the waters of the lake, since neither a riparian proprietor nor appropriator has title to the water of a stream before it reaches his land or point of diversion respectively.

2. SAME—CESSATION OF FLOW.

The rights of a riparian owner of the waters of a stream forming the outlet of a lake cease for the time being when the stream becomes dry, and do not entitle him to any natural right to the use of water standing in pools or in the lake above his land.

3. SAME—USE OF WATER.

A riparian owner, as such, has no right to sell or convey to another the right to use the water on any land, except that to which the right originally attached as against third persons also entitled to use the water.

4. SAME—DEEDS—EFFECT.

An owner of land abutting on the outlet of a lake at some distance below the lake conveyed to plaintiff "all riparian rights and other water rights and water which he possessed in that outlet as appurtenant or belonging to the grantor's tract of land." Held, that such deed gave plaintiff only the right to use the water of the outlet on the grantor's land when any water was flowing in such outlet, and an estoppel against his grantor to prevent complaint by him against any use of such water which plaintiff might make to the injury of the grantor's riparian rights, and did not authorize plaintiff to take water for use on his land as against third persons having rights in the water of the lake.

5. SAME — USE OF WATER — FINDINGS — EVIDENCE.

Where defendant water company from December, 1894, to December, 1902, pumped water from a lake in controversy to an amount sufficient to irrigate the plants of several strawberry growers, so that, if plaintiffs took the 250 inches they demanded, the two diversions would not leave much water in the lake at the end of the dry season, a finding that the water company had never exercised nor used any of the water rights derived by it from certain deeds was erroneous.

6. Same—Extent of Rights—Deeds.

Where defendant acquired the rights of grantees under a deed to water rights in a lake, conveying all the grantor's water and riparian and water rights and privileges of every kind, character, and description which belonged or in any manner pertained to a certain 320 acres of land, reserving the right to water for domestic use and for watering stock thereon, defendants acquired, so far as that land and its owners were concerned, the right to use the whole or any part of the waters of the lake, except such as were necessary for domestic use and for the watering of stock kept on the land.

7. Same—Adverse Use.

The adverse use of the waters of a lake for the watering of stock alone does not confer any right to use the water for the irrigation of land.

8. Same—Evidence.

Where neither plaintiffs nor their predecessors had title to certain land bordering on a lake, and never made use of any water of the lake other than for the watering of stock, nor claimed any right to do so as against defendants until a few months before suit was brought to determine the water rights of the parties, plaintiffs acquired no adverse right to use the water for irrigation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, §§ 148–150.]

9. Same—Running Streams.

Where a lake, with its tributaries and outlet, during the rainy season constituted a running stream of water, it was properly designated as a "running stream" subject to appropriations for irrigation, though it was not shown that it continued to flow to the sea or to a junction with some other stream.

10. Same—Conveyances—Estoppel.

Where a riparian proprietor conveyed all her water rights in a lake to defendants' grantors, subject to the right to use the water for domestic purposes and the watering of stock, and thereafter conveyed the land to plaintiffs, plaintiffs were estopped to object to the use to which defendants applied the water, so long as there remained enough water for plaintiffs' stock and domestic use.

11. Same.

Plaintiff's privity with a deed, conveying riparian rights in the waters of a lake appurtenant to plaintiff's land, did not estop him from making an appropriation of any water in the lake subject thereto, nor from demanding that the grantee of the riparian rights should not make a greater use of the water than it was authorized to do by the rights which it was shown to have under the deed, if such use interfered with plaintiff's right of appropriation.

12. Same — Actions to Determine Rights — Pleading—Traverse—Admission.

Where a cross-complaint alleged that defendant water company was, and for a long time had been, the owner and entitled to the exclusive use of the waters of a certain lake, a denial that the water company was, or had been, the owner of, and entitled to, the exclusive use of all the waters of the lake, was not a good traverse of the allegation, but was in effect an admission that the water company was entitled to substantially all the water.

13. Same—Streams Subject to Appropriation.

The right to appropriate water, under the provisions of the Civil Code, is not confined to streams running over public lands of the United States, but exists wherever the appropriator can find water of a stream which has not been appropriated, and in which no other person has or claims superior rights and interests.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 145.]

14. Same.

An appropriator's right to the waters of a stream can only be disputed by one who has or claims a superior right or interest, and then only so far as there is a conflict.

15. Same — Appropriation — Rights of Appropriator.

An appropriation of water merely vests in the appropriator such rights as have not previously become vested in private ownership either by some riparian right, or because of prior statutory or common-law appropriation and use, conferring on such appropriator a right superior to that of any subsequent appropriator on the same stream.

16. Same—Riparian Rights—Use and Disuse.

The riparian right to the use of the waters of a stream is neither gained by use nor lost by disuse.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, §§ 32, 33, 145.]

17. Same—Deeds—Construction.

A deed of a riparian owner, conveying all and singular the water and riparian and water rights and privileges pertaining to certain specified land, did not limit the rights of the grantee to the water then standing in the lake.

18. Same—Estoppel.

Where plaintiffs did not make an adverse claim to the waters of a lake until November, 1902, when defendant water company served on plaintiffs written notice of its claim to the water under a deed emanating from complainants' grantors, such notice was effective to prevent any estoppel from arising in plaintiffs' favor by reason of any subsequent expenditure of money by them in the diversion of water pursuant to their adverse claim.

19. Same—Rights of Appropriator—Disuse—Effect.

The rights to the waters of a lake for irrigation acquired by appropriation depends on use, and ceases with disuse, as provided by Civ. Code, § 1411.

20. Same—Extent of Right.

Where defendant water company was using the water of a lake, not as a riparian proprietor, but as an appropriator for the irrigation of nonriparian land, it was not concerned in the disposition of the surplus waters of the lake not necessary to fulfill its appropriation, but was only entitled to insist that a reasonably ample quantity should remain in the lake to last through the entire season.

21. Same—Notice.

A posted notice of a claim of the waters of a lake for irrigation, stating that the water claimed was to be used on land owned by D., describing it, contained a sufficient statement of the purpose for which the water was claimed and the place of the intended use, though it further stated that the water was also to be used for irrigation by other parties to whom D. might furnish it on other land not described.

22. Same—Extent of Use.

Where a notice of an appropriation of water for irrigation stated that the water was to be conveyed to the place of use by a "six-inch pipe or by a pipe of other dimensions," it was sufficient to authorize a diversion of the quantity that could be carried in a six-inch pipe, not exceeding a maximum of 250 miners' inches claimed by the appropriator.

23. ACKNOWLEDGMENT—DESIGNATION OF OFFICER.

Where an acknowledgment of a deed recited the venue "State of California, Monterey County—ss.," and declared that before the subscriber, a notary public in and for such Monterey county, personally appeared, etc., and after the signature were the words "Notary Public," the acknowledgment sufficiently declared the name of the office of the officer taking the same, as required by Civ. Code, § 1193.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Acknowledgment, §§ 164-167.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge. Action by S. J. Duckworth and another against the Watsonville Water & Light Company and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiffs, defendants appeal. Reversed.

C. A. Shurtliff and H. C. Wyckoff, for appellants. Dickman & Torchiana and W. P. Netherton, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Plaintiffs are the owners of 320 acres of land fronting on Pinto Lake; the plaintiff Flora being the owner of the fee, and the other plaintiff the owner of a leasehold interest. They claim rights in the waters of the lake as riparian proprietors thereon, and the plaintiff S. J. Duckworth also claims a right by appropriation to take therefrom a quantity of water equal to a continuous flow of 250 miners' inches under a four-inch pressure. The lake contains an area of about 70 acres. The defendant Watsonville Water & Light Company owns 65 acres of the bed and surface of the lake and all the land surrounding it, except the land of plaintiffs and two other tracts of small extent, and claims the ownership of, and the right to take and use, all the waters of the lake. The purpose of the action, as stated in the complaint, is to have the plaintiffs' alleged rights determined. The corporation defendant filed a cross-complaint, alleging ownership of all the water of the lake, and asking that its right be also determined. Judgment was given declaring that the plaintiffs have the right to take from the lake and use upon their land as much water as they could beneficially use thereon, not exceeding a continuous flow of 250 miners' inches, and enjoining the defendants from interfering with the plaintiffs' right to such use, and that the defendant corporation take nothing by its cross-complaint. The defendants appealed from the judgment within 60 days after its rendition, and present the evidence in the record by a bill of exceptions.

The plaintiffs derive their title to the land from Carmen Amesti de McKinlay, who, on May 13, 1901, leased the land to S. J. Duckworth, and on August 6, 1901, conveyed it to the plaintiff Flora McKinlay Duckworth, subject to the lease. In 1885, while Carmen Amesti de McKinlay was the owner in fee of the land, she made conveyances to the defendants Smith and Montague, whereby she granted to them "all and singular the water and riparian and water rights and privileges of every kind, character and description which belong, or in any manner pertain to," the 320 acres of land, the same being particularly described therein, reserving, however, the right to water for domestic use and watering stock thereon. On January 21, 1897, Smith and Montague conveyed to the Watsonville Water & Light Company all the waters, right, and privileges conveyed to them by Carmen Amesti de McKinlay as aforesaid. Smith and Montague thereupon, so far as appears, ceased to have any interest in the property in controversy. They joined in the answer and join also in the appeal. There are some indications in the evidence that their holding prior to 1897 was for the benefit of the water company. In any event, as they have no present interest, their position in the case need not be further discussed. It is claimed that the evidence does not sustain the findings. As to several of them, we think this contention is well founded.

1. There was an outlet to Pinto Lake, through which water usually flowed from the lake during the rainy season of each year, but which was dry at all other times. One Grimmer owned a tract of land which abutted upon this outlet at a point some distance below the lake. On March 21, 1903, Grimmer conveyed to S. J. Duckworth "all riparian rights and other water rights and water" which he possessed in this outlet as appurtenant or belonging to this tract of land. This conveyance was made after the beginning of the action, but before the filing of the cross-complaint, and in his answer to the cross-complaint Duckworth averred that by virtue thereof he was a riparian owner to the waters of the lake. The court found, in accordance with this answer, that the plaintiff S. J. Duckworth "is a riparian owner of the waters of said Pinto Lake, its tributaries and outlet," by virtue of this deed. Even if we consider the lake with its tributaries and outlet as forming one continuous stream of water, as the lower court found it to be, this finding is not technically true. Every owner of land upon a stream is, in some respects, interested in the entire stream. He has the right to use the water as it passes his land for domestic purposes thereon, and to take out a reasonable portion thereof for the irrigation of his abutting land, and for the protection of this right, which begins only when the water reaches his land. He has a certain right with regard to all the waters of the stream above his land—the right to insist that it shall not be polluted to his injury nor diminished from use by other riparian owners above, so as to deprive him of his just portion, and, perhaps, as to other than riparian owners, the right to prevent any substantial diminution of the amount of water which would naturally flow to his land. If nothing more than this was meant by the finding in question, we could not say that it was not supported by some evidence, nor that it was not a correct general statement of the right of Duckworth under the Grimmer deed. But the finding is that Duckworth thereby became a "riparian owner" of the waters of the lake, and it appears that, under it, he claims some right, as against the defendant water company, to take water from the lake for use, not on the Grimmer land, but on the Duckworth land, which abuts on the lake far from the outlet, and that not only during the rainy season, or at such times as there is water flowing to the Grimmer land, but during all seasons, and when the outlet is entirely dry. The court below seems to have intended this finding to declare some such right. This claim is contrary to the doctrine of riparian rights, and to the general principles of law as well. Neither a riparian proprietor nor an appropriator has title or ownership in the water of the stream before it reaches his land, or point of diversion, respectively. This has been expressly decided with respect to appropriators. Parks M. Co. v. Hoyt, 57 Cal. 46; Riverside W. Co. v. Gage, 89 Cal. 418, 26 Pac. 889; McGuire v. Brown, 106 Cal. 670, 39 Pac. 1060, 30 L. R. A. 384. The same rule applies to the riparian owner. As a riparian owner, Grimmer had no title to the water, except as it passed in front of his land and constituted the stream. The right or title to the stream as it passed was a part and parcel of his land, a part of the realty. See cases last cited. Being a part of his realty on his land, it was also part of the realty of other riparian owners at the points where it passed over their lands. Hence the title of each to the water exists only during such passage, and the right of each in the water during its course above consists only of the right to use such means as are necessary to preserve it until it reaches his land. Grimmer had the right to use a reasonable portion of the water running in the outlet by his land for the irrigation of his land riparian thereto, and to take the whole of it, if necessary, for domestic purposes. This right exists because the stream runs by the land, and thus gives the natural advantage resulting from the relative situation. When the stream ceased, and the channel became dry, he, for the time being, ceased to be a riparian owner, so far as a present use of the water was concerned. His land did not, at those times, border upon any stream. It did not then possess any natural right to the use of the water standing in pools or lakes at points above his land. During such dry periods, he could obtain the use of water from such pools or lakes only by convention with the owners of the lands abutting upon them. He would not have it by virtue of any right pertaining to his own land. Furthermore, his riparian right is limited to his riparian land. It gave no right to use any of the water of the stream for any purpose, upon land not riparian, nor upon any riparian land other than his own. No one can sell or convey to another that which he does not himself own. Grimmer could not, by a transfer of his riparian rights, sell to the plaintiff, as against third persons having interests in the water, the right to use the water upon any land, riparian or nonriparian, except his own, to which it originally attached. His deed operated to prevent him from complaining of a diversion, but it did not affect other parties. It does not appear that Grimmer had any water rights, except his right as riparian owner to the use of the water of the outlet. It follows, therefore, that Duckworth did not obtain anything by the Grimmer deed, except the right to use the water of the outlet on the Grimmer land, when any water was flowing therein, and an estoppel against Grimmer to prevent complaint by him against any use of such water which Duckworth might make to the injury of the Grimmer riparian right, as above defined. It did not in any respect add to his rights to take water from the lake for use on the Duckworth land, as against the defendants, or as against any one, except Grimmer and his successors in interest.

2. The findings further state that the water company has never exercised or used any of the water rights derived from the deeds from Carmen Amesti de McKinlay to Smith and Montague. This is true in the literal sense that it has not used any water upon the land to which these rights, prior to those deeds, attached. But it appears from the evidence that the water company was pumping water from the lake during the eight years extending from December, 1894, to December, 1902. The amount is not shown, but it was enough, during part of the time, at least, according to the testimony of William A. White, its superintendent, to furnish water to several strawberry growers for irrigation of their plants, and so much that, if the plaintiffs took the 250 inches they claim, the two diversions would not leave much water in the lake at the end of the dry season. This evidence is not as definite as it should have been; but, there being no evidence to the contrary, it established the fact that the company had taken a substantial quantity of water from the lake during the time specified. Such taking would have been contrary to the riparian rights attached to the Duckworth land, if they had remained unsevered therefrom. By reason of its purchase of these riparian rights, the company possessed the right, so far as that land and its owners were concerned, to use the whole, or any part, of the waters of the lake except such as were necessary for domestic use and for the watering of stock thereon. The pumping of the water was done in the exercise of this right, and it was a right obtained by virtue of the McKinlay deeds. This finding is therefore contrary to the evidence.

3. There is a finding to the effect that, after the execution of the deeds by Carmen Amesti de McKinlay to Smith and Montague, in 1895, she continued in possession of the water and water rights thereby granted to them, and that she and the plaintiffs, as her successors, did not relinquish possession thereof to the grantees, but have ever since then remained in possession thereof, and that they had been in the open, notorious, hostile, and adverse possession thereof for more than five years immediately before the commencement of this action. This finding has no support in the evidence. They did, indeed, remain in possession of the land, and continued to exercise all ordinary acts of ownership over it, including the use of the water of the lake for the watering of stock. This latter use of the water, however, was reserved in the deed, and hence it was not one of the rights granted. Even if it had been granted, the adverse use for the watering of stock alone could gain a right only to the extent of the use, and it would not confer any right to the additional use of water for the irrigation of land. There is no evidence that Mrs. McKinlay, or either of the plaintiffs, ever made any use of the water other than for the watering of stock, or claimed the right to do so as against the defendants, until November, 1902, a few months before this action was begun. The finding seems to have been based on the fact that the defendants never entered upon the land of the plaintiffs for the purpose of exercising or asserting the right to use the waters of the lake which they obtained under the McKinlay deeds. But it was not requisite to the exercise of the rights granted by the deeds that they should enter upon the land, unless it became necessary to do so in order to get the water from the lake. The deed was evidently procured to protect the grantees from interference in their proposed diversion of water from the lake. They could get the water from any other point on the lake as well as from the limits of the McKinlay land, and it appears that they took it from the lower end of the lake. This was a taking from the McKinlay land, as well as from all the other land on the borders of the lake. The force of gravity would accomplish that. The use which was made of the land by the plaintiffs and McKinlay was not antagonistic to the right which the defendants had to the water under the grant. It is not true, therefore, that the grantor and her predecessors continued or remained in possession of the rights of the grantee, nor that said rights were not relinquished to the grantees, nor that the possession of the plaintiffs and their predecessor extended to the water rights granted, or was hostile and adverse to the grantee, or open and notorious with respect thereto. According to the evidence, their actual use of the water, if any, did not begin under their adverse claim, until the day of the trial in the lower court.

4. There is some evidence that Pinto Lake, with its tributaries and outlet, during the rainy season, constituted a running stream of water. It is clear that during the dry seasons there was no water flowing out of the lake, but there is evidence that during that period there was a slight flow from a tributary into the lake. We cannot agree with the appellant in his contention that the finding that the lake, or its tributaries, constituted a running stream is not sustained by the evidence. We think the better doctrine, in respect to the character of a stream from which the statute provides for appropriations, is that it is not necessary that the stream should continue to flow to the sea, or to a junction with some other stream. It is sufficient if there is a flowing stream; and the fact that it ends either in a swamp, in a sandy wash in which the water disappears, or in a lake in which it is accumulated upon the surface of the ground, will not defeat the right to make the statutory appropriation therefrom, and we can see no reason why the appropriation, in such a case, may not be made from the lake in which the stream terminates, and which therefore constitutes a part of it, as well as from any other part of the water course.

5. The only use which the water company makes of the water is to take it to nonriparian lands to be used thereon for irrigation. Respondents claim that the only right of the water company to the water, shown in the case, consists of the riparian rights pertaining to the narrow strip of land belonging to the water company surrounding the greater part of the lake, and the riparian rights under the McKinlay deeds, and that the use made of it is not in the exercise of either of these rights, but is inconsistent with each of them. In regard to this claim it is to be observed that, so far as the use made of the water by the water company may affect the rights claimed by the Duckworths as riparian owners of the McKinlay land, they have no ground of complaint, being estopped by the McKinlay deeds, and not having regained the rights by adverse possession. The estoppel does not extend to the water necessary for domestic use and for stock, but their right to that extent is not in dispute, nor have they been deprived of it by the water company. But S. J. Duckworth claims a right to a part of the water by appropriation, and with respect to the right thus claimed he has a status which entitles him to challenge the right of the water company. His privity with the McKinlay deed does not estop him from making an appropriation of any water in the lake that may be subject to appropriation, nor from demanding that the water company shall not make a greater use of the water than it is authorized to do by the rights which it is shown to have, if such use interferes with an appropriative right possessed by him. But the claim that the water company has not established any other right is not maintainable. Its cross-complaint alleges that it is, and for a long time has been, "the owner and entitled to the exclusive use of all the waters" of Pinto Lake. The plaintiffs, in their answer thereto, deny that the water company is, or has been, "the owner and entitled to the exclusive use of all the waters" of the lake. That is not a good traverse of the allegation. It is an admission that the water company is entitled to substantially all of the water. Fitch v. Bunch, 30 Cal. 208; Blood v. Light, 31 Cal. 115; Fish v. Redington, 31 Cal. 185; Reed v. Calderwood, 32 Cal. 109; Doll v. Good, 38 Cal. 287. This allegation of the cross-complaint, therefore, stands as an admitted fact of the case, except so far as it is inconsistent with the affirmative allegations of the answer thereto and of the original complaint. The effect, for the purposes of the trial, was to establish the fact that the water company owns and has the exclusive right to use, for any purpose and at any place, all of the water of the lake, excepting such portion thereof, or right thereto, as is alleged and was proven to belong to the plaintiffs or either of them. Inasmuch as the evidence did not show, and the court did not find, that the alleged claims of plaintiffs included all the waters of the lake, the judgment that the defendants take nothing is contrary to the evidence and to this admission of the pleadings. The existing rights of other riparian owners, not parties to this suit, are not material to this case.

6. The right to appropriate water, under the provisions of the Civil Code, is not confined to streams running over public lands of the United States. It exists wherever the appropriator can find water of a stream which has not been appropriated, and in which no other person has or claims superior rights and interests. And the right cannot be disputed except by one who has or claims a superior right or interest, and by him only so far as there is a conflict. It cannot be vicariously contested by another on behalf of the owner of the better right. The effect of an appropriation under the statute, when completed, is that the appropriator thereby acquires a right superior to that of any subsequent appropriator on the same stream; but he acquires thereby no right whatever as against rights existing in the water at the time his appropriation was begun. An appropriation does not, of itself, deprive any private person of his rights. It merely vests in the appropriator such rights as have not previously become vested in private ownership either by virtue of some riparian right, or because of prior statutory or common-law appropriation and use. It affects and divests the riparian rights otherwise attaching to public lands of the United States, solely because the act of Congress declares that grants of public lands shall be made subject to all water rights that may have previously accrued to any person other than the grantee. An appropriation of water and use thereunder does not become effective to divest private rights in the stream, unless it has been continued adversely thereto for the period of five years, under such circumstances as to gain a title by prescription, and then only to the extent of the use. The amount claimed in the notice is no measure of the right.

It follows that the attempted appropriation by S. J. Duckworth of a part of the water of the lake did not divest or affect the existing rights of the water company either as riparian owners, or by virtue of a prior appropriation or use. And so far as his claim was adverse to, and in conflict with, the prior rights and interests of the water company, it was entitled to a decree quieting its title against him and enjoining him from asserting such adverse title. This applies to the riparian right which attached to its strip of land partially surrounding the lake, as well as to any other prior right which it possessed to the water. The fact that the company had not used the water on this narrow strip did not affect the riparian right. A riparian right is neither gained by use, nor lost by disuse, and, for the protection of these riparian rights, the water company is entitled to a judgment declaring Duckworth's appropriation subject to the riparian rights pertaining to its lands and subject to all other prior rights of the water company, so that the continued use of the water by Duckworth shall not be adverse, and shall not ripen into an easement, which, in effect, would divest the rights of the water company. Moore v. Clear L. W. Co., 68 Cal. 146, 8 Pac. 816; Stanford v. Felt, 71 Cal. 249, 16 Pac. 900; Heilbron v. Fowler S. C. Co., 75 Cal. 426, 17 Pac. 535, 7 Am. St. Rep. 183; Conkling v. Pacific I. Co., 87 Cal. 296, 25 Pac. 399; Walker v. Emerson, 89 Cal. 456, 26 Pac. 968; Spargur v. Heard, 90 Cal. 221, 27 Pac. 198; Anaheim U. W. Co. v. Fuller (decided 1907) 88 Pac. 978.

7. We have said that, because of the McKinlay deeds, and so far as the claim of plaintiffs as riparian owners is concerned, the water company can use the water for any purpose, at any place, and in any quantity which leaves plaintiffs enough for stock and domestic purposes; but the mere fact that the company is a riparian owner on the lake gives it no right whatever to the water of the lake, except for actual beneficial use upon the land to which the riparian rights attach. The evidence does not show that it is using the water on that land at all. It is carrying the water to other lands and places, for use and sale. The admission of the pleadings, above referred to, relieves it of the necessity of establishing its right to do this, except as it may be affected by evidence in support of the specific rights alleged by the plaintiffs; but the right it actually exercises is not a right derived from the fact of its riparian ownership of the greater part of the lake shore and bed.

8. The claim of the respondents that the grant by Mrs. McKinlay of the rights pertaining to the land described in the deeds extended only to the water then standing in the lake, and that as soon as that water was exhausted by use, run-off, or evaporation, the rights ceased to exist, is utterly baseless, and needs no discussion, further than to deny it.

9. In its conclusions of law, the court declared that the defendants are estopped from claiming any rights under the McKinlay deeds. We find nothing in the evidence justifying this conclusion. The plaintiffs did not make an adverse claim until November, 1902, and the water company, about the same time, served on them written notice of its claim to the water under the said deed. This may not have been necessary, but it undoubtedly prevented any estoppel from arising in their favor by reason of any subsequent expenditure of money by them in the diversion of water in pursuance of their adverse claim, granting that such expenditure would otherwise have created an estoppel.

10. We have said that the water company is entitled to a judgment protecting its riparian right, although it has not used, and does not immediately propose to use, the water on its riparian land. This rule does not apply to any right which it has acquired by appropriation or use upon other lands, and this appears to be the source of the right which it has been exercising. Such right depends upon use, and ceases with disuse. Civ. Code, § 1411. It extends only to the water actually taken and used. The consequence is that, so far as the protection of this right, and the water necessary to supply this use, are concerned, the water company is not entitled to prevent an appropriation or use by others of the surplus of the waters of the lake, if there is any. So long as there is enough to supply it with the quantity of water which it has been so using, it has, in the protection of this right, no concern with the disposition of the remainder. It has the right, of course, to insist upon a reasonably ample quantity to last through the entire season, until rains renew the supply, and also to enjoin a depletion of the lake which will lower the water surface so as to substantially increase the cost of making the diversion it is entitled to make.

11. It may be that, upon another trial, the sufficiency of the notice of appropriation posted by S. J. Duckworth may not be important; but, as this cannot be decided here, it is necessary to notice the objections urged against it. The notice states that the water claimed therein is to be used for irrigation upon the land owned by Mrs. Duckworth, describing it. This is a sufficient statement of the purpose for which the water was claimed and the place of intended use, and it is not vitiated by the additional statement in the notice that it was also to be used for irrigation by other parties to whom Duckworth might furnish it upon other land, which was not described. It was a good notice for the appropriation of water for use on the place designated, at all events. It states that the water is to be conveyed to the place of use "by a six-inch pipe, or by a pipe of other dimensions." This we consider sufficient to authorize a diversion of the quantity that could be carried in a six-inch pipe, and not exceeding the 250 miners' inches claimed as the maximum. Whether or not it would justify a diversion, within the amount limited, if carried in a pipe more than six inches in diameter, is a question not presented, inasmuch as it does not appear that such pipe was proposed to be used.

12. It is claimed by the respondents that they acquired their title from Mrs. McKinlay to the land in question by purchase for a valuable consideration, and without actual notice of the deeds to Smith and Montague, and that the record of those deeds is ineffectual to constitute constructive notice to them, because the acknowledgment of each deed is defective. The acknowledgments were made before a notary public. The certificates recite his name and official character in the usual form. They are signed by him, with the addition of the words "Notary Public" after his signature. The Code requires that the officer certifying to an acknowledgment must affix thereto his signature, followed by the name of his office. Civ. Code, § 1193. The objection is that the words "notary public" are not a sufficient statement of the name of the office. The certificates in question begin thus: "State of California, Monterey County—ss."—and each recites that "before me, John Ruurds, notary public in and for said Monterey county, personally appeared," etc. In view of this statement, we think the name of the office is sufficiently stated after the signature. There is nothing in Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 479, 27 Pac. 356, that is in conflict with this conclusion. In that case the body of the certificate stated that the officer was a notary public of the city and county of San Francisco, while the name of the office after the signature was given as "Notary Public, Contra Costa County." The officer was in fact a notary public of Contra Costa county, and the acknowledgment was taken in that county, though the contrary was stated in the certificate. It was held that the certificate was invalid because it did not, in the body of it, truly recite the "name and quality of the officer" or the venue, as the law required, and that the words, "Notary Public, Contra Costa County," following the signature, were not sufficient to make it good. The two statements were inconsistent, and the certificate afforded no means of ascertaining which was correct. Here there is no inconsistency, and the statement after the signature, construed according to the ordinary usage of the language, and in connection with the recital, means that the person signing was a notary public of Monterey county. This is the proper construction, and therefore it does correctly state the name of the office, as the Code prescribed.

In conclusion, we deem it proper to say that, upon another trial, if the court shall decide that either of the parties possess rights to the water, acquired by appropriation under the statute, or by diversion and use, it will be necessary to ascertain and declare the amount of water covered by the right owned by each respectively. It is not necessary to mention the other points discussed in the briefs.

The judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

In re RUSSELL'S ESTATE. (S. F. 4,597.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 28, 1907.)

1. WILLS — CONSTRUCTION — DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY — RESIDUARY CLAUSE — VOID DEVISE.

Testator bequeathed "the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, whether real or personal, and wheresoever situated," to certain described persons. Civ. Code, § 1332, provided that "a devise of the residue of the testator's real property passes all the real property which he was entitled to devise at the time of his death, not otherwise effectually devised by his will." Held that, where a devise of real property was void, it passed under the residuary clause, and not to the heirs, as section 1332 abrogates the rule of the common law giving the residuary legatees only personal property.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 965, 967, 1282.]

2. APPEAL—MOTION TO DISMISS.

Where an appeal is determined on the merits as against one claiming to be an adverse party, his motion to dismiss for failure to serve notice will not be considered.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Robert Russell, deceased. Judgment against the claim of William Russell, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Duncan McPherson, Jr., for appellant. Elliott McAllister, Charles M. Cassin, Cassin & Lucas, and Charles B. Younger, Jr., for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Appellant instituted proceedings, under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure, to have determined his interest in the estate of Robert Russell, deceased. The admitted facts are that Robert Russell executed his last will and testament on October 20, 1903, and seven days thereafter died. His will was duly admitted to probate. The fifth paragraph of the instrument provided: "Fifthly, I leave my farm, consisting of one hundred and ninety-seven acres within the city limits of Santa Cruz, to the Maria Kip Institute of San Francisco County and City, California, for them to sell or dispose of as seems best to the officers of said institute." The sixth paragraph of his will declared: "Sixthly, I leave the rest, residue and remainder of my estate, whether real or personal, and wheresoever situated, to the other children of said Mary Barrett, widow, to be divided among them, share and share alike, exclusive of said Eugenie C. Barrett, for whom I have hereinbefore provided."

The Maria Kip Institute named in the fifth paragraph is conceded to be the Maria Kip Orphanage, which is a charitable and benevolent institution. Section 1313 of the Civil Code declares: "No estate, whether real or personal, shall be bequeathed or devised to any charitable or benevolent society, or corporation, or to any person or persons in trust for charitable uses, except the same be done by will duly executed at least thirty days before the decease of the testator; * * * and all dispositions of property made contrary hereto shall be void, and go to the residuary legatee or devisee, next of kin, or heirs, according to law." It is not disputed but that the devise to the Maria Kip Orphanage thus made within 30 days of the death of the testator became void. Appellant, as an heir at law of William Russell, deceased, contends that this lapsed and void devise goes to the heirs at law, and not to the residuary legatees, notwithstanding the provisions of section 1332 of the Civil Code, which reads as follows: "A devise of the residue of the testator's real property passes all the real property which he was entitled to devise at the time of his death, not otherwise effectually devised by his will." The earlier common law made a distinction between devises of real property and bequests of personal property; the former speaking from the death of the testator, and the latter from the date of the will. According to this distinction it was held that real property did not go to the devisees under a general residuary clause, while personal property did go to the residuary legatees. But it is well settled that section 1332, above quoted, abrogates this rule of the common law. Estate of Upham, 127 Cal. 90, 59 Pac. 315; O'Connor v. Murphy, 147 Cal. 148, 81 Pac. 406. It is thus the accepted rule in this state that, where there is a valid general residuary devise, real property mentioned in a lapsed or void devise goes to the residuary devisee, and not to the heirs, unless a contrary intent is clearly expressed by the terms of the will. No such intent is here shown at all. The devise in this case is general and valid, and bestows upon the residuary devisees the property attempted to be devised to the Maria Kip Orphanage.

A motion to dismiss this appeal has been made by the Maria Kip Orphanage, upon the ground that it was an adverse party and had not been served with notice. This determination of the question upon the merits renders unnecessary any consideration of that motion.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

GRAGG v. COOPER et al. (L. A. 1,612.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 25, 1907.)

PUBLIC LANDS—LAND ACTUALLY OCCUPIED—HOMESTEAD ENTRY.

Where defendants were in actual possession of public land of the United States inclosed by a substantial fence, and were using it for agricultural purposes, claiming title thereto, it was not subject to homestead entry, and plaintiff acquired no right of possession by filing a homestead declaration with the receiver of the land office, paying the fees, obtaining a certificate therefor, and taking peaceable possession.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Public Lands, § 53.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by J. Irwin Gragg against J. W. Cooper and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. S. Day, for appellant. Canfield & Starbuck, for respondents.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action by plaintiff to recover possession of a tract of land.

The land in question was on and prior to February 24, 1903, a part of the public lands of the United States. At that time, and for a long time prior thereto, the defendants and their predecessor in interest had been in possession of the land, had inclosed it by a substantial fence, and were, and had been, using it for agricultural purposes, claiming title thereto. On that day the plaintiff, who was a person qualified under the laws of the United States to take up public lands as a homestead, made a homestead filing for the land in the United States Land Office, paid the required fees therefor, and obtained the usual receipt or certificate of said entry. Afterwards, on April 6, 1903, he moved on the land with his family and occupied a portion thereof, claiming it all as a homestead. The record does not show that his entry was forcible, or surreptitious, and consequently we must presume that it was open and peaceable. Subsequently the defendants ousted him, and he thereupon began the present action. The defendants have no title to the land, nor any right to the possession thereof, except such as may arise from their prior actual possession and inclosure at the time of the homestead entry of plaintiff.

The question thus presented by the record is whether or not public lands of the United States, which are in the actual occupancy and possession of one who has it inclosed by a substantial fence and is using it for agricultural purposes, but is without other right, can be entered as a homestead by another person by filing his homestead declaration with the receiver of the Land Office, paying the fees, obtaining the proper certificate therefor, and thereafter taking peaceable possession of the land, or some part thereof, in pursuance of his claim. The law seems to be settled that such land, so occupied and possessed by another, is not subject to entry by a qualified claimant under the homestead laws of the United States, and that the process of obtaining from the officers of the United States a certificate of such entry and a receipt for the fees paid, in pursuance of a declaration of intention to settle upon the land as a homestead, filed with them, does not give the homestead claimant the right to go upon the land and oust the prior possessor, either by force of arms, or by process of law in an action for possession. In the leading case of Atherton v. Fowler, 96 U. S. 514, 24 L. Ed. 732, the proposition was laid down that the law of the United States on the subject did not authorize or contemplate an entry on land then in the actual possession of another, and that land so occupied was not subject to entry by another, under the homestead or pre-emption laws, although it would have been, but for the prior possession. In that case there had been no certificate issued, but the entry was made with the intent to purchase it under the pre-emption law. The appellant seeks to distinguish it from the present case on the ground that the certificate was here actually issued, and that its effect was to vest in the plaintiff the equitable title, which should prevail over the defendants who are in possession without title.

The reason of the rule, however, applies in one case as fully as in the other. The foundation of it is that such entries would inevitably lead to strife, violence, and perhaps bloodshed. In this state the rule has been repeatedly applied in cases where there had been the usual filing of the declaratory statement, and issuance of the certificate by the officers of the Land Office to the claimant; the land being at the time in the actual possession of some other person. Goodwin v. McCabe, 75 Cal. 588, 17 Pac. 705; McBrown v. Morris, 59 Cal. 64; Davis v. Scott, 56 Cal. 165. In these cases it is held that such an entry under the homestead or pre-emption laws is invalid, although the entry is open and peaceable, but that it is valid if the prior possession is not actual, but merely constructive. In the present case the court finds that there was an actual prior possession, inclosure, and use.

An exception to the rule is made in some of the cases, but it has no application to the case at bar. It has been held that where the prior occupant has possession of a part only of a governmental subdivision of public land, and the claimant enters upon the unoccupied part, claiming the right to enter the whole of it, and in pursuance of such claim files his declaratory statement and obtains the certificate of entry on the whole tract, he will be allowed to recover the possession of the part occupied by the prior possessor. Whittaker v. Pendola, 78 Cal. 296, 20 Pac. 680; Haven v. Haws, 63 Cal. 514. In the first case, the homestead claimant entered upon three acres of the tract which the other party had not inclosed or occupied. In the second, he claimed a tract containing 160 acres, under an entry upon one-half of it which was unoccupied; the other half being in actual possession of the other party. In the case at bar the plaintiff entered upon the inclosure of the defendants. When the reasons for the doctrine stated in Atherton v. Fowler, supra, are considered, the distinction between these cases and the others clearly appears. Where the applicant can find a part of the land unoccupied, he is at liberty to enter thereon, and can do so without danger of the strife, altercations, violence, or breaches of the peace, such as would be invited by an entry upon the actual possession of another. The reason of the rule does not exist, and the rule ceases. Having the right to take up this part of the land, and having obtained the evidence of title to the whole thereby, his title will prevail over the person in possession who can show no title whatever, but merely possession.

We think the court below correctly held that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. The judgment is affirmed.

TRAVELLI et al. v. BOWMAN. (L. A. 1,653.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 26, 1907.)

1. Reformation of Instruments—Defenses—Persons Entitled to Reformation.

A trust deed is not a mortgage, but conveys the title to the trustee for the purposes of the trust, and the fact that the debt secured has outlawed does not affect the title of the trustee, and will not prevent a court of equity from reforming the deed on the ground that the reformation would be a vain act.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Reformation of Instruments, § 85.]

2. Same—Laches.

Where parties to a trust deed did not discover a mistake in the description, or have knowledge of any facts sufficient to put them upon inquiry as to the mistake until one month prior to the commencement of an action to reform the deed, they were not guilty of laches, so as to estop them from maintaining the action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Reformation of Instruments, § 120.]

3. Same.

The fact that plaintiffs' attorney, who did not know that a certain trust deed was among his papers, did not examine it, is not evidence of any laches that would defeat an action to reform the description in the deed.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by Charles I. Travelli and another against M. S. Bowman, administrator. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Purrington & Adair, for appellant. Withington & Carter and Collier & Carnahan, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This action was brought against M. S. Bowman, administrator of the estate of George R. Senior, deceased, to obtain a judgment reforming the description of land in a certain deed of trust. Judgment went for plaintiffs in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, and from the judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial the defendant appeals.

The main features of the case are these: In March, 1896, George R. Senior, since deceased, was and for a long time prior thereto had been indebted to the plaintiff Travelli in a large sum of money, secured by a mortgage on certain real property situated in the county of Riverside. The debt secured by the mortgage was about to be outlawed, when the plaintiff Travelli, who lived in Massachusetts, employed the plaintiff Withington, a lawyer practicing in San Diego, Cal., to look after his claim against Senior and make some disposition of it. Withington went to Riverside and had an interview with Senior, and it was finally agreed that Senior should make a new note to Travelli for $18,000 and give a deed of trust to Withington to secure the payment of the same, and that the mortgage should be discharged. Withington went back to San Diego and had a draft of the note and deed of trust prepared which he gave to one Carter, who was a clerk in his office, to copy. When Carter presented the deed to Withington, the latter discovered that he had described the land as in San Bernardino county when, in fact, it was in Riverside. He told Carter to make the correction and to then send the deed on to Senior to be executed; Withington going away from home for a few days. Carter corrected the deed, but unfortunately made another mistake by describing it as in San Diego county. He sent it on to Senior by whom it was executed and returned to Carter. Carter had been instructed by Withington to send the deed on to Travelli in Massachusetts, but for some reason this was not done, and the deed was left among the papers in Withington's office. There was also another defect in the description. Withington did not see the deed or know of the misdescription until after the death of Senior, which occurred on or about the 10th of July, 1903. Upon the death of Senior, Withington commenced to look for papers connected with the business between Senior and Travelli and found the deed in his office and noticed for the first time the misdescription. This action was commenced within a month after the discovery of the mistaken description. At the time of the commencement of this suit the said note of Senior to Travelli had been outlawed for the period of about a month. Appellant pleaded the several provisions of the Code touching the limitations of actions.

The main contention of appellant for a reversal is that the reformation of a trust deed should not be granted by a court of equity after the note which is secured by the deed has been barred by the statute of limitations. This contention is not maintainable. Appellant has cited some cases to the point that a court of equity will not entertain a suit to reform a deed where it appears that the plaintiff would have no rights under the deed when reformed, and that the reformation would be a mere vain act. The theory of those cases is well illustrated by the case of Thompson v. Phœnix Ins. Co. (C. C.) 25 Fed. 296. The action there was to reform a policy of insurance issued by defendant, and to recover on the reformed policy. It appeared, however, that the contract sued on and set out in the complaint contained a provision that no action could be maintained thereon unless brought within 12 months next after the date of the fire from which loss should accrue, and it appeared that in that case the time had expired, so that, even though the policy should be reformed, the plaintiff would have no legal rights whatever under it as reformed; and the court very properly held that it would not undertake the work of reformation when it was apparent that it would be a vain thing to do it. The court said: "But the court will not reform an instrument merely for the sake of reforming it, but only to enable a party to assert some right thereunder. And, if an action thereon by the assured to recover the amount of loss is already barred by lapse of time, there is no claim that can be asserted under it against the defendant." But no such principle applies in the case at bar. The deed in question in this case is a typical deed of trust to secure a debt well known under the California law; and it has been frequently held here that such a deed is not a mortgage, but conveys the title to the trustee for the purposes of the trust, that the title remains in the trustee unless the debt has been paid or a sale made of the premises under the deed. The fact that the debt secured has become outlawed does not affect the title of the trustee. Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298; Savings & Loan Society v. Burnett, 106 Cal. 528, 39 Pac. 922; Weber v. McCleverty (Cal.) 86 Pac. 706. By the reformation of the deed in question here the plaintiffs are therefore put into the position of holding and asserting title to the land in question until the trustor should have become entitled to a reconveyance by payment of the debt, and to sell the property under the deed. To reform the deed, therefore, is not to do a vain thing, but to perfect a valuable right to property in the respondent.

The other points made by appellant may be condensed into the asserted proposition that plaintiffs have by want of diligence in discovering the mistake been guilty of laches, which estops them from maintaining the action. We do not think that this contention is available. The court found "that plaintiffs, David L. Withington and Charles I. Travelli or either of them, did not discover, nor had they or either of them, any knowledge of said mutual mistakes in the description of said property, as contained in said deed of trust, until on the 14th day of July, 1903, about one month prior to the commencement of this action," and did not "have any knowledge of any fact or facts sufficient to put them, or either of them, upon inquiry as to said mutual mistake until the 14th day of July, 1903, and after the death of said George R. Senior," and "at all times believed and, as reasonably prudent men, had reasonable cause to believe, that the descriptions contained in said deed of trust were correct and in accord with the intentions of the parties to said instrument, viz., Charles I. Travelli, David L. Withington, and George R. Senior." And we think that these findings were amply supported by the evidence. The mere fact that Withington, who did not know that the deed was among his papers, did not examine it is not evidence of any laches that would defeat this action. In Los Angeles & Redondo Railroad Company v. New Liverpool Salt Company (Cal.) 87 Pac. 1029, this court says: "It has been frequently decided that the mere failure of a party to read an instrument with sufficient attention to perceive an error or defect in its contents will not prevent its reformation at the instance of the party who executes it thus carelessly"—citing cases. And certainly such rule applies to the grantee in a deed as strongly as to the grantor.

We see nothing more in the other contentions of appellant which requires special notice.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

JOHNSTON v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (S. F. 4,216.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 8, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 7, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—PRESUMPTION—JURISDICTION.

An appellate court cannot indulge a presumption in support of the jurisdiction of a court of record to appoint a guardian ad litem for an infant, where the presumption does violence to the facts as presented by the record of such inferior court.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3671, 3682–3688.]

2. SAME—RECORD.

The rule that an order of a court of general jurisdiction will be treated as void on appeal only when its invalidity appears on the face of the record does not require that the record shall contain a direct statement that something which must have been done in order to give the court jurisdiction was not done, but only means that want of jurisdiction appears whenever what was actually done was stated and what was done is not sufficient in law to confer jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3682–3688.]

3. Infants—Guardian Ad Litem—Appointment—Erroneous Order.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 373, providing that, when a guardian ad litem is appointed for an infant, it must be on the application of the infant if he be over 14 years of age, an order declaring that it satisfactorily appeared from the petition of M. that he was the stepfather of J., a minor 16 years of age, that the minor was about to commence an action in which it was necessary that a guardian be appointed, and therefore M. was appointed guardian ad litem for the purpose of such action, was erroneous as showing a violation of such section, but was not void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Infants, §§ 215–217.]

4. Same—Ratification.

Where a guardian ad litem was illegally appointed for an infant 16 years of age on the petition of her stepfather, and on the minor attaining her majority she affirmed the proceedings instituted by her guardian, she thereupon became bound thereby, and the defect was cured.

5. Damages—Assessment—Physical Examination—Jurisdiction.

Plaintiff in a civil action for injuries having called a physician to testify in her behalf concerning the nature of her injuries, the court had power to direct plaintiff to submit to a physical examination by two other reputable physicians on defendant's behalf, to be held at a specified time and place.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 531.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; F. B. Ogden, Judge.

Action by Gertrude Johnston, by her guardian ad litem, against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded.

A. A. Moore, for appellant. Clark & Clark (D. M. Delmas, of counsel), for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This action is to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff, who was a passenger upon the cars of the defendant. The negligence charged is that defendant suddenly and violently started a train from which plaintiff was about to alight, whereby she was hurled to the ground, sustaining a fracture of the skull, hemorrhage of the brain, and other injuries. Plaintiff at the time of the commencement of her action was 16 years of age. Section 373 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "when a guardian ad litem is appointed by the court he must be appointed * * * when the infant is plaintiff, upon the application of the infant, if he be of the age of fourteen years." The record shows that a petition was presented to the court by Charles Manson for the appointment of himself as guardian ad litem of Gertrude Johnston, a minor, that the petitioner is the stepfather of the minor, and that the minor is of the age of 16 years. The order of the court made upon the petition declares, "it satisfactorily appearing to the court from the petition of Charles Manson that he is the stepfather of Gertrude Johnston, a minor, aged 16 years, and that the minor is about to commence an action, etc., * * * and that it is necessary that a guardian be appointed for her for the purpose of maintaining this action: Therefore it is ordered that Charles Manson be, and he is hereby, appointed guardian ad litem for the purpose of this action." The due appointment of the guardian was pleaded in the complaint. An issue was joined upon this allegation by the answer. Upon the trial, by various motions and objections, defendant raised the question of the due appointment of the guardian, and of the right of plaintiff to proceed with her action under the appointment disclosed. These objections were overruled, and here present the first proposition for consideration.

Respondent, in answer to plaintiff's objection, urges that as the proceedings were before a court of record every reasonable presumption will be indulged in to support the order which the court made, and that, in indulging such presumption, it will even be assumed that the minor was present and orally requested the appointment to be made. There is, however, a well-defined limit to an appellate tribunal's power in indulging in such presumptions. It can indulge in no presumption which does violence to the facts as presented by the record of the inferior court, and, while it is true that an order of a court of general jurisdiction will be treated as void only in the event that its invalidity appears upon the face of the record, ever since the case of Hahn v. Kelly, 34 Cal. 391, 94 Am. Dec. 742, the rule in this court has been well settled that this does not mean that the record must contain a direct statement to the effect that something which must have been done in order to give the court jurisdiction was not done, but means that want of jurisdiction appears whenever what was actually done is stated, and this which was done is not sufficient in law to confer jurisdiction. Therefore, whenever the record states the evidence or makes an averment with reference to a jurisdictional fact, it will be understood to speak the truth on that point, and it will not be presumed that there was other or different evidence respecting the fact, or that the fact was otherwise than is averred. Galpin v. Page, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 350, 21 L. Ed. 959; Smith v. L., A. & P. R. Co., 98 Cal. 210, 33 Pac. 53. It must be conclusively presumed, therefore, in accordance with the express declaration of the trial court in its order, that it appointed a guardian ad litem of a minor 16 years of age upon the application of the guardian alone, and that the minor never exercised, nor was given an opportunity to exercise, her right of nomination. Under these circumstances, is the order valid or erroneous, and, if erroneous, is it error curable, or such as to render the appointment void?

Unquestionably the order appointing the guardian was erroneous. Not only was it made in violation of the express direction of the statute, but as made it denied to the minor a substantial right of nomination accorded her by law. Indeed, there is very respectable authority for holding that the minor's right of nomination under a statute such as our own must be exercised, or good reason be shown for its nonexercise, else the appointment is void. Such a view of the law makes the nomination a jurisdictional prerequisite. Palmer v. Oakley, 2 Doug. (Mich.) 433, 47 Am. Dec. 41. The decisions of the courts which adopt the view of Palmer v. Oakley are in no sense technical, but rest upon the well-recognized disabilities of infancy and the protection which the law always accords to minors. So fully is an infant under the protection of the law that the courts will not allow his rights to be prejudiced by any act either of his own or of any other person. 10 Ency. of Pl. & Pr. p. 589. Being in their nonage and lacking the power generally to make contracts, infants cannot contract with or be represented by attorneys at law. So that, in general, if an action has been prosecuted on behalf of or against an infant without due observance as to the appearance of the infant either by guardian, prochein ami, curator, or some other legally authorized person, the right of disaffirmance of such a judgment rests with the minor until barred by his laches after attaining his majority. For even laches is not imputable to a minor. Tucker v. McBean, 65 Me. 352; Smith v. Sackett, 10 Ill. 534; Chandler v. McKinney, 6 Mich. 217, 74 Am. Dec. 686. Upon the other hand, since this right of disaffirmance remains with an infant plaintiff or defendant thus irregularly made a party to an action, it is clearly unjust that the adverse party under objection should be compelled to litigate under circumstances where the judgment would be binding against him, and not binding against his adversary. Therefore it is, as it should be, the general rule, even in jurisdictions which do not hold that irregularities in the proceedings touching the appointment of the guardian ad litem render the judgment void, that the error is of such gravity as to necessitate a reversal of the case when such a situation is presented, namely, a situation where the judgment is by law binding upon one litigant and may be disaffirmed because of infancy by the other; for it is of the very essence of a just judgment under our system of jurisprudence that the rights, duties, obligations, and privileges which spring from it should bear with even and exact pressure upon all the parties to it.

Other states, however, have adopted a rule of decision in conflict with that laid down in Palmer v. Oakley, supra, and amongst those states is our own. It has long and consistently been held in this state that a failure to appoint a guardian ad litem, or to sue by one, while irregular is only that, that the defect is not a jurisdictional one, and therefore the judgment is not void. Thus, in Re Cahill, 74 Cal. 52, 15 Pac. 364, a contest of a will was commenced by a minor in propria persona. This court considered the question with some elaboration, and held that the proceedings were not void for want of jurisdiction, and that it was proper after the commencement of the proceeding to appoint a guardian ad litem at the trial. In Childs v. Lanterman, 103 Cal. 387, 37 Pac. 382, 42 Am. St. Rep. 121, it was held that a judgment against an infant in an action in which no guardian ad litem had ever been appointed was not void; that the appearance by an attorney, notwithstanding the fact that an infant by reason of infancy could not authorize an appearance by an attorney, would be held "as authorized by him so far as the direction and consent of the infant can give authority." And, as the infant after reaching majority had not disaffirmed the judgment, he had waived his right thereafter to make such objection. In Foley v. California Horseshoe Company, 115 Cal. 184, 47 Pac. 42, 56 Am. St. Rep. 87, the complaint averred the appointment of a guardian ad litem, the averment was traversed by the answer, and the court upon trial held the appointment void, and then and there made an order appointing a guardian ad litem. It was held that the action should not abate, and that the appointment of a guardian ad litem after action begun was within the power of the court.

To sum up on this proposition, therefore, were it not for a saving fact hereafter to be considered, it would be held that the appointment of the guardian ad litem in this case was so irregular as to justify a repudiation and disaffirmance by the minor had the judgment been adverse to her. Such a judgment would lack the mutuality of responsibility and obligation which must belong to every valid judgment, and, as the defect was called to the attention of the trial court and no offer there made to cure it, as was done in the Foley Case, a reversal of the judgment would be necessitated. But it was made to appear to this court upon the hearing that the minor had now attained her majority, and made and declared her affirmance of the proceedings which had been taken and her willingness to be bound in all future matters by the proper judgments and orders of the court. Here, then, is the situation which was presented in Childs v. Lanterman, supra. From this point on whatever orders or judgments may be made and given are fully binding upon this plaintiff, who has attained her majority. The defendant, therefore, is protected by such judgments and orders in all of its rights, and the objection based upon irregularity in the appointment of a guardian ad litem, substantial as it was when made, is thus removed. And we hold upon this proposition that, for the reason appearing, namely, the attainment of majority by the minor and her affirmance of the action, no reversal of the judgment is called for.

Plaintiff offered proof, touching the nature of her injuries, that it had been necessary to remove a portion of the skull. Physicians were called on her behalf to testify to this and to other matters of personal injury connected with it. The case presented was that of a plaintiff complaining of and seeking damages for objective, physical injuries. Defendant requested of plaintiff that an opportunity be offered it to have a physical examination of the person of the plaintiff to be conducted by two physicians; plaintiff having permission to have her own physicians present and to select a reasonable place for the examination. This application was first made in the form of a request to plaintiff, and was refused by her attorneys. It was then addressed to the discretion of the court, and an order was asked to that effect. No objection was made that the application was not timely, that the physicians selected were not reputable, or that the circumstances in any way or for any reason were other than modest and proper. Indeed, the court in ruling, as shown by the record, declared that, if the authorities bore out defendant's contention, it would make the order. Its refusal to make the order, therefore, was founded upon the belief that it was powerless so to do. This is the first time this question has come before the court for adjudication, and what is here said must be regarded as applicable strictly to civil actions. It is a principle of criminal law that the defendant may not be compelled to give evidence against himself. In civil actions, where a plaintiff is seeking affirmative relief, the adverse party may compel him to give such evidence, even to becoming a witness. As to the power of a court to order such examination in proper cases, the overwhelming weight of authority is that it exists. The Supreme Court of the United States substantially alone has denied the power in Railroad Company v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 11 Sup. Ct. 1000, 35 L. Ed. 734. In Brown v. Railroad Company (N. D.) 95 N. W. 155, the Botsford Case is reviewed. It is said that it is not authority in a state court, and that the reason of the rule as to federal courts comes from the fact that all United States courts other than the Supreme Court must, in the absence of statute, follow the mode of proof as it existed in actions at common law. By the state courts, however, with unusual unanimity, it is held that courts have the power to order such examinations, and should exercise it with a sound discretion. In some states, as New York, the matter is controlled by statute, but where it is not a matter of statute the courts are uniform in declaring the existence of the power. Says the Supreme Court of Minnesota: "To allow the plaintiff in such cases to call in as many friendly physicians as he pleases, and have them examine his person, and then produce them as expert witnesses upon the trial, but at the same time to deny the defendant the right in any case to have a physical examination of plaintiff's person and leave him wholly at the mercy of such witnesses as the plaintiff sees fit to call, constitutes a denial of justice too gross in our judgment to be tolerated for one moment." Wanek v. City of Winona, 80 N. W. 851, 78 Minn. 98, 46 L. R. A. 448, 79 Am. St. Rep. 354. Says the Supreme Court of Indiana in City v. Turner, 60 N. E. 275, 156 Ind. 418, 54 L. R. A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200: "When serious and permanent injuries are claimed by the plaintiff, and he or she has submitted to an examination by a chosen physician or surgeon, who appears as a witness in plaintiff's behalf, and the nature, extent, and effect of the injury are to be deduced from objective conditions, and so fully from no other source, no degree of sentiment will justify the refusal of the motion. When it becomes a question of probable violence to the refined and delicate feelings of the plaintiff, on the one hand, and probable injustice to the defendant on the other, the law will not hesitate; the court in making such orders with respect to time, place, and person, in every case, having such due regard for the feelings of the plaintiff and proprieties of the case as the ends of justice will permit." To the same effect may be cited Shroeder v. Railway Co., 47 Iowa, 375; White v. Railway Co., 61 Wis. 536, 21 N. W. 524, 50 Am. Rep. 154; Shaw v. Van Renssalaer, 60 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 143; Miami, etc., T. Co. v. Baily, 37 Ohio St. 104; A., T. & S. F. Ry. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 44 Am. Rep. 659; Stuart v. Havens, 17 Neb. 211, 22 N. W. 419; Sibley v. Smith, 46 Ark. 275, 55 Am. Rep. 584; Railway Co. v. Underwood, 64 Tex. 463; Owens v. Kansas City, 95 Mo. 169, 8 S. W. 350, 6 Am. St. Rep. 39; Railroad Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 719, 9 S. E. 602, 3 L. R. A. 808, 14 Am. St. Rep. 189; Hess v. Lowery, 23 N. E. 156, 122 Ind. 225, 7 L. R. A. 90, 17 Am. St. Rep. 355; Hess v. Railroad Co., 7 Pa. Co. Ct. R. 565; Railroad Co. v. Hill, 90 Ala. 71, 79, 8 South. 90, 9 L. R. A. 442, 24 Am. St. Rep. 764; Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 54 N. W. 757, 19 L. R. A. 641, 35 Am. St. Rep. 561; Demenstein v. Richardson, 2 Pa. Dist. R. 825; Marler v. Springfield, 65 Mo. App. 301; Belt Elec. Line Co. v. Allen, 44 S. W. 89, 102 Ky. 551, 80 Am. St. Rep. 374; Lane v. Spokane R. Co., 57 Pac. 367, 21 Wash. 119, 46 L. R. A. 153, 75 Am. St. Rep. 821; Railway Co. v. Stroth (Ky.) 66 S. W. 177, 57 L. R. A. 875; Thompson on Trials, par. 859; Jones on Evidence, pars. 396-399; Fetter on Carriers of Pass. par. 406, p. 1138; Am. & Eng. Ency. Law, vol. 7, pp. 507, 508, and cases cited; Elliott on Evidence, p. 1237, and late cases cited. In the case at bar, as has been said, the court refused the application for lack of power. We are not left in doubt as to what its action would have been had it believed it possessed the power, for the record discloses that the court believed it to be a proper case. Such an error so clearly affecting the substantial rights of the defendant necessitates a reversal of the action.

We have examined the other propositions presented by appellant, but deem them without substantial merit, but for the foregoing reasons the judgment and order are reversed and the cause reamnded.

We concur: BEATTY, C. J.; McFARLAND, J.; LORIGAN, J.; SLOSS, J.

BAIRD v. MONROE et al. (L. A. 1,623.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 16, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 18, 1907.)

1. Municipal Corporations — Street Improvements—Assessments—Sale of Property—Deed.

Where a street superintendent's deed was made in proceedings for the opening and widening of a street in the city of Los Angeles under and in accordance with the general law (St. 1889, p. 70, c. 76), instead of under the provision of the city charter applicable to such matter, the deed was a nullity.

2. Taxation—Tax Deeds—Recitals.

Pol. Code, § 3785, as amended by St. 1895, p. 328, c. 218, provides that, if property assessed for taxes is not redeemed within the time allowed by law, the tax collector shall make a deed to the state, reciting the date of the sale, the amount for which the land was sold, the time when right of redemption expired, and that no person had redeemed within the time allowed by law, etc., and section 3780 authorizes redemption within five years from the date of sale to the state or at any time prior to the entry or sale of the land by the state. Held, that a tax collector's deed reciting the date of sale, but failing to recite in terms the date when the right of redemption expired, was fatally defective when made.

3. Same—Tax Deeds—Curative Act—Retroactive Operation.

St. 1903, p. 63, c. 59, declaring that all certificates of tax sales and tax deeds made to the state by a county tax collector, which failed to recite the correct date or any date when the right of redemption would expire or had expired, or which recited an incorrect date when the state would be entitled to a deed, were thereby confirmed and legalized, and should be construed on all occasions as if such matters and things required by law had been recited therein and performed in the first instance, was retroactive in operation, and validated a tax deed to the state previously made which recited no date of the expiration of the right to redeem.

4. Statutes—Local and Special Laws.

As such act operated on all certificates and deeds having the defects stated, it was not objectionable as a local or special law within Const. art. 4, § 25, subds. 14, 18, prohibiting the Legislature from passing local or special laws giving effect to invalid deeds, wills, or other instruments, or legalizing, except as against the state, the unauthorized or invalid acts of any officer.

5. Constitutional Law — Deprivation of Property—Due Process of Law.

St. 1903, p. 63, c. 59, curing invalid tax deeds from which necessary recitals had been omitted, provided that in all cases five years shall have elapsed between the date of the sale of the property to the state and the date of executing such deed, after which time the property owner had no absolute right to redeem as provided by Pol. Code, § 3780, was not unconstitutional, as depriving the taxpayer of his property without due process of law.

6. Taxation — Tax Deeds—Recitals—Consideration.

A tax collector being required to sell delinquent lands to the state for the precise amount for which the land was delinquent, a deed reciting that the land was sold to pay taxes of every kind charged against the property, together with penalties, costs, and charges due thereon, to wit, $2.92, was not defective for failure to recite in terms the amount for which the land was sold.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1514.]

7. Same—Assessments—Use of Abbreviations.

The use of abbreviations in assessments of real property is permissible if thereby the property may be easily known.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 734.]

8. Same—Listing Property.

Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 2, authorizes an assessment of land by township, range, section, or fractional section, and, where the land is not a congressional division, by metes or bounds, or "other description sufficient to identify it," and declares that any land, wherever situated, may be listed under such provision. Subdivision 3, providing for the listing of city and town lots, authorizes their assessment by naming the city or town and the number of lot and block, according to the system of numbering in such city or town and the improvements thereof. Held, that subdivision 3 does not provide an exclusive method for the listing of city and town lots, but that the assessing officer may assess such property under subdivision 2 if he so desires.

9. Same—Description—Reference to Plat—Evidence.

Where an assessment of real property referred to the P. tract in the county of Los Angeles, a recorded map of such tract was admissible to complete the description.

10. Same—Description—Sufficiency.

A city lot was assessed under description, "In Los Angeles county, in Pellissier Tr.," and in the column headed, "City and Town Lots," under the subdivision "Lots," the figure "5," and, under the subheading "Block," the letter "K." No city or town was mentioned, but it was proved that a map of the Pellissier tract was recorded in 1887 in the recorder's office of Los Angeles county, that it was the only recorded map of such tract, and that it showed lot 5 and block K to be 54 feet front by 121 feet deep. Held, that the description in connection with such proof sufficiently identified the property.

11. Same—Naming of City or Town.

Where an assessment of a city lot is made by description sufficient to identify it as authorized by Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 2, and not by the number of the lot and block according to the system of numbering in such city or town, as provided by subdivision 3, the assessment is not defective for failure to name the city or town where the property is situated.

12. Same — School, Road, and Revenue Districts.

An assessment of city property contained two columns headed, "School District" and "Road District," and underneath both headings, written across the division line, was the word "Rosedale," underneath which was the description. Held, that such assessment substantially indicated that "Rosedale" was the name of both the road and school district in which the property was located, and it was therefore not objectionable, in that it did not show in separate columns the school, road and revenue districts in which the property was situated, as required by Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 13.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by W. F. Baird, as administrator of the will annexed of the estate of James G. Wilson, deceased, against J. D. Monroe and others. From a judgment in favor of defendant George Harlan, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

O. B. Carter, for appellant. W. W. Allen, Sr. (Lucius M. Fall, of counsel), for respondent. E. R. Fox, as amicus curiæ.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an action to quiet title to certain real property, described in the complaint as lot 5 in block K of the Pellissier tract in the city and county of Los Angeles, state of California, as per map recorded in Book 15, p. 70, miscellaneous records of said county. Defendant Harlan had judgment, and plaintiff appeals from such judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff's testator was the owner of the land involved at the time of his death, January 7, 1899, and his estate is still the owner thereof unless title has been divested by either of two deeds. The first of these is a tax deed from the tax collector of Los Angeles county to the state of California of date July 6, 1900, for state and county taxes for the year 1894, followed by a deed from the tax collector, dated July 20, 1901, purporting to have been made upon the authorization of the State Controller, to one Monroe, whose title is vested in defendant Harlan. The second deed is a deed dated July 24, 1903, from the street superintendent of the city of Los Angeles to defendant Harlan, based on an assessment for the opening and widening of Pico street in said city. It appears that the street superintendent's deed was made in proceedings for the opening and widening of Pico street, under and in accord with the general law of March 6, 1889 (St. 1889, p. 70, c. 76), instead of under and in accord with the provisions of the charter of the city of Los Angeles applicable to such matter. Such proceedings were therefore void (Byrne v. Drain, 127 Cal. 663, 60 Pac. 433), and the street superintendent's deed a nullity. This does not appear to be contested by defendant. The question, then, is as to the validity of the tax deed.

1. The sale to the state was made July 3, 1895, under the provisions of section 3771 of the Political Code, as amended March 28, 1895 (St. 1895, p. 327, c. 218), requiring the sale to the state by the tax collector of all property delinquent for taxes. The deed to the state was made July 6, 1900, under section 3785 of the Political Code, as amended March 28, 1895. St. 1895, p. 328, c. 218. That section provided: "If the property is not redeemed within the time allowed by law for its redemption, the tax collector, or his successor in office, must make the state a deed of the property, reciting in such deed the name of the person assessed (when known), the date of sale, a description of the land sold, the amount for which it was sold, that it was sold for delinquent taxes, giving the assessed value and the year of assessment, the time when the right of redemption had expired, and that no person has redeemed the property in the time allowed by law for its redemption." Section 3780 of the Political Code provided that a redemption might be made "within five years from the date of the sale to the state, or at any time prior to the entry or sale of said land by the state." The tax collector's deed to the state did not recite in terms "the time when the right of redemption had expired," but did recite "the date of sale"; and further: "And whereas no person has redeemed the property aforesaid within the time allowed by law for its redemption * * * and whereas, the time for redeeming said property has expired, and the same has not been redeemed, nor any part thereof." The recital as to what the certificate of sale stated as to when the purchaser would be entitled to a deed we regard as immaterial in this connection. As we have seen, section 3785 of the Political Code requires in the deed not only a recital of "the date of sale," and a recital that "no person has redeemed the property in the time allowed by law," but also a recital of "the time when the right of redemption had expired," and the first two recitals thus required cannot be taken as also answering the requirement as to the additional recital expressly provided for. The statute undoubtedly requires a plain statement in terms as to the time when the right of redemption had expired, and a deed that did not contain it was not in compliance with the statute.

There can be no doubt that it was the well-settled doctrine in this state prior to the amendment of our tax laws providing that all property delinquent for taxes shall be declared sold to the state for the taxes and penalties due, instead of to the best bidder at public auction, that a tax deed not containing any recital required by law was void. See Grimm v. O'Connell, 54 Cal. 522; Hubbell v. Campbell, 56 Cal. 527; Anderson v. Hancock, 64 Cal. 455, 2 Pac. 31; Hughes v. Cannedy, 92 Cal. 382, 28 Pac. 573; Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 Pac. 761. The decisions proceed upon the theory that it is competent for the Legislature to prescribe the form of instrument which as the result of a proceeding in invitum can alone divest the citizen of his title, and that, where the particular form of the tax deed has been prescribed by statute, the form becomes substance and must be strictly pursued, and it is not for the courts to inquire whether the required recitals are of material facts or otherwise. Grimm v. O'Connell, supra; Simmons v. McCarthy, supra. This may appear to be an extremely technical ruling when applied in the case of such a recital as that here involved. We are unable to see how a recital in the deed to the state as to the date when the right of redemption had expired could be of any substantial benefit to the property owner, especially where there is a recital as to the date of sale, which, when considered in connection with the law as to the time after a sale when the state will be entitled to a deed, is sufficient to enable any one to determine exactly when the time had expired. The Legislature has seen fit, however, to require that the time shall be expressly stated in the deed, and that nothing in that regard shall be left to be determined from one's knowledge of the law. If the decisions already cited as to the effect of a failure to include in the tax deed all the recitals required by statute, however immaterial an omitted recital may appear to us, are to be followed, it must be held that the tax deed in question was originally void. By act approved February 28, 1903, taking effect immediately, entitled "An act to confirm, validate and legalize certificates of tax sales and tax deeds executed to the state of California for property sold and deeded thereto for non-payment of taxes" (St. 1903, p. 63, c. 59), it was provided as follows: "That all certificates of tax sales and tax deeds made to this state by the county tax collector, which certificates and deeds are based upon the sale of property for non-payment of taxes, and which certificates and deeds fail to recite the correct date, or any date, when the right of redemption will expire, or had expired, or which certificates recite an incorrect date when the state would be entitled to a deed, be and they are hereby confirmed, validated and legalized, and the same shall be construed and operate at all times and upon all occasions in law in the same manner as if such matters and things required by law had been recited therein and performed in the first instance; provided, that in all cases five years shall have elapsed between the date of sale of the property to the state for non-payment of taxes and the date of the execution of such deed." It is claimed by defendant that the defect in the deed was cured by this act, and we are of the opinion that it should be so held.

We are fully aware of the rule that a statute should not be construed to operate retroactively, unless the legislative intention that it shall so operate is clearly apparent S. F. Sav. Union v. Reclamation District, 144 Cal. 639, 647, 79 Pac. 374, and cases there cited. See, also, State v. Harman, 50 S. E. 828, 57 W. Va. 447. It is impossible to read carefully the statute in question, however, without coming to the conclusion that it was intended to so operate. It is essentially a curative act, intended to give effect to past acts or transactions which are ineffective because of neglect to comply with some requirement of law. No other object for its enactment can reasonably be suggested. If it had been simply intended to dispense with the necessity in future cases of the requirement that the certificate and deed should correctly recite the date when the right of redemption would expire or had expired, the obvious and simple method would have been to amend in those particulars the statute with reference to certificates and deeds, or to simply provide that the omission to correctly recite such date would not invalidate the certificate or deed. Retaining those provisions in their original form, the Legislature, however, enact this statute, which in every line compels the conclusion that it was the intention to cure, "to confirm, validate and legalize" something already ineffectively done. The words used are capable of no other reasonable construction, however strictly we construe them.

The statute by its terms covers the case before us. At the date of the approval of the act the deed had been executed to the state, and the defect therein was that it failed to recite any date when the right of redemption had expired. The only question remaining in this connection is as to the power of the Legislature to cure such a defect in the manner here attempted. The act of February 28, 1903, is not a "local or special" law within the meaning of those words as used in section 25, art. 4, of our Constitution, and is therefore not within the fourteenth or eighteenth subdivision of that section, whereby the Legislature is prohibited from passing local or special laws giving effect to invalid deeds, wills, or other instruments, or legalizing, except as against the state, the unauthorized or invalid act of any officer. It applies to all certificates and deeds having the defects stated, and the certificates and deeds constituted a class characterized by such qualities as indicated the propriety of such legislation. Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 481, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73.

The only remaining objection to the act is that it operates to deprive the property owner of his property without due process of law. This objection, we are satisfied, is not well founded. Assuming in the discussion of this question, as we must, that the assessment upon which the deed was founded was valid, and that all the requirements of the law relative to the enforcement of the taxes thereunder up to the time of the execution of the deed had been fully complied with, the omission of the tax collector to insert in the deed the recital in question, though sufficient perhaps, under our decisions, to render the deed ineffectual as it then stood, was really more in the nature of a mere irregularity, not affecting any substantial right of the property owner. Under the law requiring that all property delinquent "shall by operation of law and the declaration of the tax collector be sold to the state" (section 3771, Pol. Code), the property, more than five years before the deed, had been sold to the state for the taxes, penalties, and costs due thereon. At the time of the execution of the deed the five years from the date of sale within which the owner had the absolute right of redemption having expired (section 3780, Pol. Code), the state was entitled to the deed from the tax collector, and it was then the duty of the tax collector to execute such deed in the manner prescribed by law. The state was then equitably the owner of the property. The property owner had, as against the state, forfeited all rights in the property, except the privilege accorded him by the statute of redeeming it at any time before the state actually entered or disposed of it. The deed to the state provided for by the statute, though designated a "deed," is nothing more, in effect, than formal written evidence of the various facts essential to vest the property in the state, and to which the Legislature has seen fit to give a certain effect (Pol. Code, § 3787). It is the evidence, primary in some particulars and conclusive in others, of those facts from which the vesting of the title to the property in the state necessarily follows as a matter of law, and, prima facie, operates as a muniment of title. Pol. Code, §§ 3786, 3787. We cannot see how any right of the property owner is violated by a statute validating such of these instruments as are ineffectual solely because they fail to contain a recital as to the date when the absolute right of redemption had expired and the state had become entitled to a deed. The fact that the five-year period had expired without redemption was the important thing so far as he was concerned, and the curative statute probably could not, and certainly did not, purport to apply to any case where such period had not elapsed between the date of sale and the date of the execution of the deed. It is his failure to redeem within the time specified that deprives him of his property after due process of law, and he has no constitutional right to any particular form of instrument by which his failure to redeem and the consequent final vesting of the property in the state shall be evidenced. The defect attempted to be cured by the act is as to a mere formal matter—one that in no degree affected any of the substantial rights of the taxpayer. It was, therefore, entirely within the power of the state to remedy the defect by curative statute. It appears to be thoroughly well settled that in matters pertaining to the collection of taxes it is within the power of the Legislature to cure, by retroactive statutes, defects which are in their nature irregularities only, which do not extend to matters of jurisdiction, and that such statutes are not within the constitutional inhibition against the taking of property without due process of law. We consider it unnecessary in this connection to do more than refer to the opinion of this court in the recent case of Chase v. Trout, 146 Cal. 350, 80 Pac. 81, where the matter is exhaustively discussed, and many authorities cited. That case, it is true, involved simply a conclusive evidence provision in an act operating prospectively only, but the doctrine therein declared is equally applicable to mere validating acts, and many of the cases cited involved questions as to the validity of such acts. The case of Harper v. Rowe, 53 Cal. 233, relied on by plaintiff, is not in conflict with the views expressed in Chase v. Trout, supra. There the levy of the tax was invalid for want of any law authorizing it to be levied, and the curative act enacted after a purported sale for delinquent taxes thereon attempted to validate the levy and all proceedings had thereon, including the sale for delinquent taxes. This was clearly a matter going to the jurisdiction. Without a valid tax levy there could be no valid proceedings for the enforcement of the tax, and it was very properly held in Harper v. Rowe, supra, that a statute purporting to validate such a levy and the sales already made thereunder operated to deprive property owners of their property without due process of law, and by mere legislative rescript.

2. It is further claimed that the deed was invalid for failure to recite "the amount for which it [the land] was sold" to the state. The objection in this behalf is most technical, and wholly without merit. The recital is "was, by operation of law and the declaration of said tax collector, sold to the state of California, as purchaser, in pursuance of law in such cases made and provided, to pay said taxes of every kind charged against said property, together with the penalties, costs and charges due thereon, to wit, the sum of two and 92–100 dollars." Plaintiff contends that this recital does not show the amount for which the property was sold to the state, but shows only the object of the sale, and the total amount due for taxes, penalties, costs, and charges. As, under the law, there could be a sale to the state only for the precise amount so due, it appears very clear that what the Legislature intended as to this particular recital was simply that there should be a statement as to the exact amount so due to the state at the time of sale. In Simmons v. McCarthy, 118 Cal. 622, 50 Pac. 761, relied on by plaintiff, the recitals left it in doubt as to the exact amount paid by a purchaser at a tax sale. There is no such uncertainty in the deed here involved.

3. The assessment is assailed upon several grounds. The assessment was introduced in evidence. The description of property therein was as follows: "In Los Angeles County, in Pellissier Tr.," and in the column headed, "City and Town Lots," under the subheading "Lot," the figure "5," and under the subheading "Block" the letter "K." No city or town was named, and it does not appear whether or not at the time of the assessment the property was included in any city or town. It was stipulated that a map of the Pellissier tract was recorded in the year 1887 in the recorder's office of Los Angeles county, and that it showed said lot 5 in block K to be 54 feet front by 121 feet deep. The valuation of the property was placed in the column headed, "Value of City and Town Lots." In the assessment the word "Rosedale" was written across the line dividing the column headed, "School District," from the column headed, "Road District," thus:

School District	Road District
Ros	edale

The principal contention against this assessment is that the description of property is insufficient. It is apparent from the face of the assessment that the property assessed is lot 5 in block K in the Pellissier tract in Los Angeles county. Although we are not prepared to commend the abbreviation of the word "tract" to "Tr.," we think that such abbreviation used in the connection in which it here appears could not be reasonably supposed to indicate, as suggested by plaintiff, either "trustee," "transcript," or "treasurer," or anything else than the word "tract." The use of abbreviations in assessments appears to be permissible, if thereby the property "may easily be known." Rollins v. Woodman, 117 Cal. 516, 519, 49 Pac. 455. Except, therefore, for the reference to the map, we have in the assessment the same description as that contained in plaintiff's complaint.

A substantially similar description, viz., "Lots in Leibrandt Tract, Blk. F, Nos. 13, 14, 15, 16, 17 and 18," was held insufficient in Miller v. Williams, 135 Cal. 183, 67 Pac. 788; but in that case there was no evidence introduced to show that the description in the assessment was sufficient to identify the property. Here we have the stipulation as to the map of the Pellissier tract recorded in the office of the county recorder, showing this lot, which stipulation must be taken as meaning that there was only one such map, and that this map showed but one lot 5 in block K in said tract. It may be conceded that the description was not in compliance with subdivision 3 of section 3650 of the Political Code, providing for the listing of city and town lots as follows: "City and town lots, naming the city or town, and the number of the lot and block, according to the system of numbering in such city or town, and the improvements thereon." Miller v. Williams, supra. But it is not essential that property situated in a city or town, even though it be a city or town lot, should be listed in accordance with this provision. By subdivision 2 of the same section it is provided that land must be listed "by township, range, section, or fractional section; and when such land is not a congressional division or subdivision, by metes and bounds, or other description sufficient to identify it"; and any land, wherever situated, may be listed under this provision. The object of subdivision 3 of section 3650 was to obviate the necessity of describing each lot by metes and bounds or other description sufficient to identify it, and to render an assessment made in accord therewith equivalent to an assessment under subdivision 2, but the assessing officer is still at liberty to assess under subdivision 2, if he so desires. See Davis v. Pacific Imp. Co., 137 Cal. 245, 247, 70 Pac. 15.

The question, then, is as to whether the description here given was "sufficient to identify" the land. It may be assumed that it was of such a nature as to indicate that it could only be exactly located by reference to some map or plat, and that, as it referred to no such map or plat, it did not, prima facie, sufficiently identify the land (Miller v. Williams, supra), as would a description by name, such as "Forks House Ranch," or a description such as "house and lot on the north side of Main street, Michigan Bluffs, occupied by A. Ferguson as a tin shop." See People v. Leet, 23 Cal. 161. In the case just cited it was substantially said that a description of a tract of land by name is prima facie sufficient in an assessment, as it is presumed that the tract and the extent of its boundaries is well known by the name.

It was, however, permissible to show, in aid of this description, that it was, in fact, sufficient to identify the land, and, in this behalf, to show the recorded map of such Pellissier tract designating with certainty the property referred to in the assessment. If by such evidence it was made to appear that there was such a recorded map, and only one such map, or, if more than one, no difference therein so far as the assessed property was concerned, the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conclusion that the assessment sufficiently identified the property. The trial court had the right to assume, in the absence of a showing to the contrary by the person assailing the description, that there was but one Pellissier tract in the county of Los Angeles, and that this tract, and the extent of its boundaries, was well known by that name. People v. Leet, supra. The rules which should be applied in determining the question as to the sufficiency of a description in an assessment are most elaborately and clearly stated in the opinion in Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 733, 78 Pac. 293, the most recent expression of this court upon the subject. It is true that such case involved a question as to the sufficiency of the description of lands outside of a city or town, made under a provision similar to subdivision 2 of section 3650 of the Political Code, but there is no material difference between that case and this, so far as the question under discussion is concerned. The question there was, as here, as to the sufficiency of the assessment description to identify the property. The description there was in an irrigation district assessment, and, so far as material to the question we are discussing, was "Lot four (4) Block one hundred seventy-eight (178) 14.42 acres, Rancho Rincon del Diablo," which rancho was shown to constitute the whole irrigation district. No map of said rancho was referred to in the assessment or collector's deed. The judgment against the claimants under the tax deed was reversed because the trial court had refused to allow proof that there was, at the time of the assessment, but one lot 4 in block 178, in said rancho, and that such fact was then well known; the claimants having sought to introduce in evidence in this behalf the map or plat of said rancho on file in the office of the county recorder. The effect of the opinion in that case is that the real and only essential, so far as the description is concerned, is that it should be sufficient in itself to definitely inform the property owner as to the exact property assessed. This much, of course, has always been considered essential; the owner being entitled to know with certainty what land is charged with the tax. This knowledge being afforded, the whole purpose of the description under the present revenue law, whereby all property delinquent for taxes is declared sold to the state for taxes, penalties, and costs, is subserved. It was expressly recognized in Miller v. Williams, supra, that much of the reasoning in support of the conclusion as to the insufficiency of the description would have no application under the new system. Under this system the possible purchaser who would pay the tax for the smallest portion of the land is eliminated, and the property owner has no longer any ground upon which to urge that his rights may have been injuriously affected by reason of the fact that the description does not, on its face, at once certainly identify the property to all possible purchasers, and, for this reason, does not bring the return at the sale that it otherwise would.

It is said in Best v. Wohlford, supra, that the provision in the law that the description must be "sufficient to identify" the property implies that evidence may be received, not for the purpose of helping out a defective description, or to show the intention with which it was made, or to resolve an ambiguity in its terms, none of which things can be done, but to show the sufficiency of the description and apply the description given to the surface of the earth, and, further, that the question as to whether the description is sufficient to identify the land is a question of fact to be determined from the evidence presented upon that issue. The court further said: "The designation of a tract of land as a portion of a larger tract by number and block, without any reference to a map, may be sufficient to identify it, and, if so, the omission to refer to a map is not fatal to the description. If reference is made to a map, the map thereby becomes a part of the description, and may be read in evidence to identify the land, by showing that it is delineated thereon according to the recital; and, although it is not competent to show that any particular map was intended, if none is referred to, yet if it can be shown that there is only one map of a tract which includes the lot in controversy upon which this lot is delineated or designated, and that that map is well known and generally accepted as authentic, it may be received in evidence as tending to identify the land before the court." While general expressions are to be found in some of the opinions of this court as to what is required to appear on the face of the assessment that tend to support plaintiff's contention, there is no decision in conflict with the views expressed in Best v. Wohlford, supra. In Miller v. Williams, supra, the most favorable case to him, there was no attempt in the trial court to show the sufficiency of the description to identify the property, and the question as to the right to show this in aid of the assessment was not discussed. As to the cases cited in Miller v. Williams in support of the statement that failure to refer to a map of a tract in an assessment has been held fatal, Labs v. Cooper, 107 Cal. 656, 40 Pac. 1042, involved in street assessment simply of "all, lot 6, block D & E—16 and 17," and there was absolutely nothing to indicate of what larger tract or property these lots and block constituted subdivisions. Cadwalder v. Nash, 73 Cal. 43, 14 Pac. 385, was a case of a deed describing land by reference to a map, where there were two maps, and the description given rendered it uncertain as to which map was referred to. Keane v. Cannovan, 21 Cal. 291, 82 Am. Dec. 738, was a case where by reason of failure to state a direction it was impossible to locate the lot; and People v. Mahoney, 55 Cal. 286, was a case where the description was so indefinite upon its face that the taxpayer could not know therefrom the precise property charged against him. None of these cases are applicable here. The description given must always, of course, be sufficient to apprise the owner as to the exact property assessed to him, but when the description is such that, in the light of the knowledge which it must be presumed is possessed by property owners of the community in which the property is situated, it accomplishes this result, it is sufficient for all assessment purposes, although evidence may be necessary to apply the description to the surface of the earth, and evidence is always admissible to show this in support of the description, just as it is admissible to show against a description apparently clear and certain on its face, that, by reason of other circumstances, it is uncertain or doubtful in its application. This is substantially the doctrine of Best v. Wohlford, supra, and it is fully supported by the reasoning of the opinion and by the numerous authorities cited therein. It being made to appear to the satisfaction of the trial court that there was but one map of the Pellissier tract, which map was a public record, and that this map showed but one lot 5, block K, in such tract, there was enough, in the absence of other evidence tending to impeach the effect of this, to justify the conclusion of the trial court that the description in the assessment was sufficient to show with absolute certainty to the owner the exact property assessed to him, and that the same, therefore, complied with the requirements of subdivision 2 of section 3650 of the Political Code.

The other objections to the assessment require very little notice. It is urged that the name of the city or town wherein the property is situated is not stated, as required by subdivision 3, § 3650, Pol. Code, although the lot is assessed and valued under the head of "City or Town Lots." But the naming of the city or town is absolutely essential to the validity of the assessment only when the special mode of assessment prescribed by that subdivision is followed, viz., where only the number of the lot and block, according to the system of numbering in the city or town, is given. While the name of the city or town might advantageously be given in assessments under subdivision 2 of section 3650, it is not essential if the description otherwise sufficiently identifies the property sought to be charged. It is also claimed that the assessment does not show in separate columns "the school, road and other revenue districts in which each piece of property assessed is situated," as required by subdivision 13, § 3650, Pol. Code. We have already stated the facts in this regard, and they, in our judgment, show a substantial compliance with this provision, indicating "Rosedale" as the name of both road and school district. In Knott v. Peden, 84 Cal. 299, 24 Pac. 160, evidence introduced showed the assessed property to be in a certain road district (which is not the case here; there having been no showing in this behalf), and there was no entry at all in the road district column. There is nothing in the record to show that any portion of the tax against this property was for road district purposes. The only recital in the deed to the state in this regard was "for county purposes, the sum of $1.77-100; for state purposes, the sum of $39-100."

It is practically admitted that, if the title of plaintiff's intestate passed to the state by virtue of the tax proceedings, defendant Harlan has regularly succeeded thereto. We are satisfied that such must be held to be the effect of those proceedings, and that the conclusion of the trial court was correct.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

WOODS v. KELLERMAN. (Civ. 231.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. April 11, 1906. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court, June 7, 1906.)

1. EXECUTION — SALES — PRIORITY — REDEMPTION—EFFECT.

Where several sales were made by the sheriff in the inverse order of the dates of the liens on which executions were issued, plaintiff becoming the purchaser at all the sales, and having no liens on the property at the time of redemption from the first sale prior to the judgment under which the same took place, the fact that he accepted, through the sheriff, from defendant the amount paid in redemption due on such first sale, gave the judgment debtor no more than the interest which he had at the time of the accrual of the lien under which the land was sold, and the title acquired by him on redemption was subject to the prior liens then existing, and subordinate to the title acquired by plaintiff under the subsequent sales.

2. SAME—SENIOR LIEN—EFFECT OF SALE.

Where there are several executions against the same property in the hands of the sheriff, the senior liens, whether existing by judgment or otherwise, are not impaired by a sale under a junior lien.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 21, Execution, §§ 232, 762, 764.]

3. QUIETING TITLE—CONDITIONS PRECEDENT.

Civ. Code, § 1578, subd. 2, provides that a mistake of law constitutes a mistake within the meaning of the article only when it arises from (1) a misapprehension of the law by all parties, all supposing that they knew and understood it, and all making substantially the same mistake as to the law; or (2) a misapprehension of the law by one party, of which the others are aware at the time of contracting, or which they do not rectify. Several sales of defendant's property were made at the same time by the sheriff under executions issued on various judgments. Defendant redeemed from a junior lien, paying the amount thereof to the sheriff for plaintiff, who had purchased at all the sales, defendant believing that by the acceptance of such amount plaintiff was estopped to deny that the redemption was complete, and the property thereby freed from all prior liens. Plaintiff, knowing the law and defendant's supposition, accepted the money from the sheriff. After the expiration of the period of redemption plaintiff brought an action against defendant to quiet title to the property. Held that, as each party seemed to have aimed to obtain an advantage against the other to which he was not entitled, plaintiff was entitled to the relief prayed only on the condition of repaying to defendant the amount paid by the latter for redemption, with interest from the date of its payment.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Benjamin F. Bledsoe, Judge.

Action by James H. Woods against J. M. Kellerman. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Judgment modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

Jones & Weller, for appellant. Curtis & Curtis, for respondent.

SMITH, J. This is a suit to quiet title to the real property described in the complaint. The complaint is in the ordinary form. The defendant in his answer deraigns title under an execution sale to plaintiff of date February 3, 1903, in a suit of the Southern California Lumber Company v. Columbia Mining & Milling Company, the then owner of the property, and a subsequent redemption by him of date February 2, 1904, as judgment creditor in a judgment of date January 12, 1904, against the same defendant, which redemption has become final. The amount paid in redemption was $408.13, which sum was received by the plaintiff from the sheriff and is still retained by him. The facts of the case appear from a written stipulation of the parties, from which the court finds, as conclusion of law, in favor of the plaintiff. Judgment was entered accordingly, and the defendant appeals.

From the stipulation it appears that at the time of the execution sale, February 3, 1903, the sheriff had in his hands the following executions against the Columbia Mining & Milling Company, the then owner of the property, showing several judgment liens against the property, with their dates and the parties in whose favor they were, to wit: (1) Judgment of Harper & Reynolds upon attachment levied February 13, 1902, for the sum of $4,038. (2) Judgment of B. H. Dennis on attachment levied February 17, 1902, for the sum of $446.88. (3) Judgment of Gregory Perkins on attachment levied February 17, 1902, for $2,775.35. (4) Judgment of G. S. Welch, docketed April 16, 1902, for the sum of $465.93. (5) Judgment of the Southern California Lumber Company, docketed April 17, 1902, for the sum of $240.16. Several sales of the property were made by the sheriff; the sales being made in the inverse order of the dates of the liens, and in each sale the plaintiff became the purchaser for the several sums mentioned in the stipulation, aggregating $4,398.14. The first sale was made under the execution in favor of the Southern California Lumber Company, which is the sale from which the defendant redeemed. The amount paid in redemption by him was the sum of $408.13, which was received by the plaintiff from the sheriff, as already stated. Subsequently, the time for redemption having expired, deeds of conveyance were made to the plaintiff by the sheriff in pursuance of each of the other sales—all of date March 23, 1904.

The points urged by appellant for reversal are (1) "that by accepting the said payment [i. e., the redemption money], and retaining the money received thereon, the plaintiff is estopped to deny that the redemption was complete and the property thereby freed from all prior liens to defendant's judgment held by plaintiff as purchaser of said property"; (2) that "the first sale passed the title to the property."

With regard to the first point, the position of the defendant seems to be that the plaintiff was entitled, as a condition of the redemption, to receive either the amounts of the several judgments under which he had purchased, or the amounts of the several items of purchase money, or some other sum not specified, in addition to the purchase money, with percentage, etc., of the first sale, and that, having received a lesser amount, he is estopped to deny the validity of the redemption, or its sufficiency to pass a complete title to the property. But we can see no ground for this contention. The plaintiff, at the time of the redemption, had no liens on the property prior to the judgment under which the sale took place, and the liens of the several judgment creditors had been satisfied by the several sales. Pollard v. Harlow, 138 Cal. 390, 71 Pac. 454, 648. There can be no doubt, therefore, of the validity of the defendant's redemption; nor is there any necessity of invoking the doctrine of estoppel to sustain it. But the interest thereby acquired by him was merely the interest of the judgment debtor at the time of the accrual of the lien under which the land was sold. The title acquired therefore was subject to the prior liens then existing and subordinate to the title acquired by the plaintiff under the subsequent sales. Littlefield v. Nichols, 42 Cal. 374; Hibberd v. Smith, 67 Cal. 566, 4 Pac. 473, 8 Pac. 46, 56 Am. Rep. 726; Meherin v. Saunders, 131 Cal. 688, 63 Pac. 1084, 54 L. R. A. 272; Freeman on Judg. § 377.

The second point made by the appellant seems to be based upon the propositions that, where there are several executions against the same property in the hands of the sheriff, any sale made by the sheriff, though under a junior execution, is, in effect, a sale upon all the executions; and that the money is to be credited on the several liens in the order of their priority. This, from the authorities cited, seems to be the law in some states; but, according to the better opinion, "in the majority, the senior liens, whether existing by judgment or otherwise, are not impaired by the sale." And, even in those states where a different rule obtains, it is said: "If it be understood and agreed between the parties in interest and the purchaser that he will take the property subject to prior incumbrances, this agreement will be enforced, the judgment creditor making the sale will be entitled to the proceeds, and the prior lienholders will retain their liens against the property." Freeman on Executions, § 338. The majority rule, we think, obtains in this state; but, if otherwise, the case would clearly come within the exceptions stated; for here the sale seems to have been made by an arrangement to which all the parties to the immediate transaction assented; and we do not doubt as to them the sales were valid as made. The defendant redeemed with full notice of this arrangement, and did not by his redemption acquire any additional rights.

The several sales, it may be inferred from the facts stipulated, were made under some arrangement between the several judgment creditors, the effect of which was to distribute among them the fund to be produced by the sales. They should be viewed, therefore, as one transaction, for otherwise all the first four sales would be subordinate to the last. Hence, independently of this arrangement, the title sold under the junior lien was, in view of the amount of the prior liens, of no value; nor do we suppose the defendant would have redeemed from it, had he not supposed, under the view of the law entertained by him, that he could acquire a title paramount to that of the purchasers at the other sales. In this he is entitled to but little sympathy; but we do not think, under the circumstances of the case, that the plaintiff should have taken advantage of his mistake of the law and taken the money from the sheriff. Civ. Code, § 1578, subd. 2. Each party, indeed, seems to have aimed to obtain an advantage against the other to which he was not entitled; and under these circumstances we are of the opinion that the plaintiff is entitled to the relief granted him by the court only upon the condition of repaying to the defendant the amount paid by the latter for redemption, with interest from the date of its payment (Baird v. Monroe et al.),[1] and that the judgment should be modified accordingly.

It is therefore ordered that the cause be remanded, with directions to the lower court to modify its judgment in accordance with the view above expressed; and that, as thus modified, the judgment shall stand affirmed.

We concur: GRAY, P. J.; ALLEN, J.

SAN GABRIEL VALLEY BANK v. LAKE VIEW TOWN CO. et al. (Civ. 167.)*

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Dec. 27, 1906. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1907.)

1. Mortgages — Right to Foreclose — Default in Interest.

A mortgage, securing a note due at a specified time, but containing a stipulation that, on default in the payment of interest, the whole sum shall, at the option of the holder of the note, become due and collectible, may be foreclosed for a default in the interest, though the mortgage contains no such stipulation; the note and mortgage being one contract, and the latter being incidental to the former.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, § 1163.]

2. Judgment—Conformity to Pleadings.

In determining whether a complaint contains averments sufficient to support the judgment rendered, every intendment must be indulged in favor of the judgment, and all doubts of construction resolved in support thereof, and, if the complaint can be construed favorably to the upholding of the judgment, such construction must be adopted.

3. Mortgages — Foreclosure — Complaint —Copy of Mortgage as Part of Pleading.

A copy of a mortgage, attached to and made a part of the complaint in an action to foreclose it, may be examined to ascertain the contract of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Mortgages, § 1310.]

4. Same.

The complaint, in an action to foreclose a mortgage to secure a note due at a fixed time, but stipulating that, on default in the payment of interest, the note should at the option of the holder, become due, alleged that no part of the note had been paid, except interest for one year, and asked the court to ascertain the amount due plaintiff according to the terms of the note and mortgage. A copy of the mortgage made a part of the complaint provided that, on a sale under a foreclosure, the proceeds should be applied to the unpaid amount secured by the mortgage, and stipulated that, in the event of a foreclosure sale, the premises should be treated as one parcel and sold as such. Held, that a judgment of foreclosure for the payment of the principal of the note and interest was proper as against the objection that it did not appear that the holder had exercised the option to declare the principal due for nonpayment of interest.

5. Appeal—Objections Not Raised Below —Pleading—Ambiguity.

An ambiguity in a complaint cannot be taken advantage of on appeal from a default judgment rendered thereon, but only by demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3463.]

6. Mortgages—Property Conveyed.

A mortgage on land and stock of a water company declared to be appurtenant to the land conveys the stock.

7. Same—Foreclosure—Validity of Mortgage—Right to Contest.

The complaint, in an action to foreclose a mortgage on real estate and stock of a water company declared to be appurtenant to the premises, alleged that the interest of a third person in the mortgaged property was subsequent to the mortgage, and the third person was offered an opportunity to set up any claim he had. Held, that the third person was estopped from contesting the judgment of foreclosure on the ground that the mortgage of the stock was ineffectual as to him, on the ground that the same was personalty, and that the mortgage was not executed as prescribed by Civ. Code, §§ 2955–2972, relating to chattel mortgages.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by the San Gabriel Valley Bank against the Lake View Town Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Cyrus F. McNutt and Joseph E. Hannon, for appellants. Wright, Bell & Ward, for respondent.

BORDWELL, Special Judge. Action commenced December 17, 1902, to foreclose mortgage on real estate and certain water rights represented by 1,000 shares of the capital stock of the Lake View Water Company, appurtenant to the land. The note, to secure the payment of which the mortgage was given, bears date April 10, 1901, due in five years. It contains the following provisions: "If default be made in the payment of interest for a period of thirty days, then the whole sum, principal, here promised, shall, at the option of the holder of this note, become immediately due, payable and collectible." The mortgage contains certain incidental covenants with respect to taxes, cultivation, etc., and provides that, if the mortgagor fails to perform them, the mortgagee may do so, and the expenses so incurred by the mortgagee, with interest, "shall be due and payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee at the next interest due date thereafter, according to said note, and be secured by this mortgage." It is provided by the mortgage that releases of portions of the property may be had upon the making of certain stipulated payments, and there is also contained in the mortgage the following: "In case of default in making payments hereby secured, the mortgagee may cause this mortgage to be foreclosed, and * * * the mortgaged premises, which shall, at that time, be subject to this mortgage, shall be treated as one parcel and not as separate or several parcels, and they shall be entitled to be sold as one parcel. * * * The proceeds of such foreclosure sale shall be applied to the payment of the costs, * * * also to the then unpaid amount secured by this mortgage." The plaintiff alleges, "That no part of the amount promised to be paid by said note has been paid, except that the interest on the principal sum has been paid to the 10th day of April, 1901 [the date of the note]." By the prayer of the complaint the court is asked to "ascertain and by its decree determine the amount due plaintiff according to the terms of said promissory note and mortgage herein described," fix attorney's fee, direct sale of the property, etc. Summons was regularly served on the defendants, who failed to plead, and, after default duly entered, judgment was rendered against them for the amount of said note, both principal and interest to date of judgment, and attorney's fee and costs.

[1] For decision in Supreme Court, see 89 Pac. 352.

*[Judge Smith was disqualified, and Superior Judge Noyes was designated to sit in his place. After the opinion by Judge Noyes was filed (see 86 Pac. 727), it was discovered that he was disqualified to sit in the case, having decided it below. The case was ordered resubmitted, and Superior Judge Bordwell was named to sit as justice pro tem. in place of Justice Smith.—Ed.]

The defendants have appealed from the judgment and contend: (1) That, because the mortgage contains no stipulation that upon default in payment of interest a foreclosure may be had for the principal amount of the note, no right exists in the plaintiff to prosecute a foreclosure for more than the unpaid interest. The point is not tenable. The note and mortgage constitute one contract. The latter is incidental, and stands as security for the former, and whenever the note, for any reason, becomes due, a right of action of foreclosure is at once available. (2) Appellants further contend that it does not appear that the plaintiff has exercised the option contained in the note to declare the principal thereof due for nonpayment of interest, and therefore the judgment should have directed sale for payment of interest only. This is a more difficult problem.

The sole question is whether the complaint contains averments sufficient to support the judgment. In such cases the rule is invariable that every intendment shall be indulged in favor of the judgment, and that all doubts of construction shall be resolved in support thereof. If the complaint can be construed favorably to the upholding of the judgment, such construction shall be adopted. A copy of the mortgage is attached to and made a part of the complaint, and may be examined to ascertain the contract of the parties. It provides that, upon a sale ordered by foreclosure decree, the proceeds shall be applied, not simply to the payment of the amount due, but also "to the then unpaid amount secured by this mortgage." This provision is not entirely in harmony with the idea conveyed by the note that the principal can become due and payable before the expiration of the five-year term only in case of the exercise of the option. But ambiguity cannot at this stage of the case be considered. It can be taken advantage of only by demurrer. Furthermore, it is stipulated in the mortgage that in the event of a foreclosure sale "the mortgaged premises, which shall, at that time, be subject to this mortgage, shall be treated as one parcel and not as * * * several parcels, and they shall be entitled to be sold as one parcel." If upon any view of the complaint and the contract it can be said that it was the intention of the parties that, in the event of foreclosure, the whole debt then owing should be paid, then the judgment of the trial court was warranted. And, bearing in mind the rule of construction and presumed intendment above referred to, the judgment must be sustained; for the mortgage is subject to the construction that it was intended that in case of foreclosure, because of default in payment of interest, the property should be sold en masse, and the entire debt paid out of the proceeds.

Appellant McNutt makes the point that the mortgage of the water stock is ineffectual as to him, arguing that it is personal property, and not of the list subject to be mortgaged under the statute, and is not mortgaged with the formalities required by sections 2955–2972, Civ. Code; and, though it may be good as between the parties, it is not operative as against him without an averment of notice or knowledge on his part, which is not contained in the complaint. The point appears to us to be without merit for two reasons: (a) The stock is declared by the mortgage to be a water right appurtenant to the land. Anything appurtenant to the land passes with it. (b) The complaint alleges that his interest in the mortgaged property is subsequent to the mortgage. He was offered an opportunity to set up any claim he had. He had his day in court, and upon well-settled principles is now estopped from contesting the validity of the decree. Hutchings v. Ebeler, 46 Cal. 559.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

3. TRIAL—EVIDENCE—FAILURE TO OBJECT TO QUESTIONS—EXCLUSION OF IMPROPER EVIDENCE.

The failure to object to a question asked a witness does not preclude the court from striking out evidence that it deems improper.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 242.]

4. SAME.

In a suit to quiet title, based on plaintiff's title by prescription, a statement of a witness that he had heard defendant refer to the premises as his father's, which statement was not responsive to the question asked, was properly stricken, not only because it was not responsive, but because of its indefiniteness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 238.]

5. EVIDENCE—DECLARATIONS AGAINST INTEREST.

In a suit to quiet title, based on plaintiff's title by prescription, evidence of his petition and schedules in insolvency and his assessment of his property, all of which omitted the premises in question, was admissible as a declaration against interest, within Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 2.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 1115.]

6. QUIETING TITLE—EVIDENCE OF TITLE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit to quiet title, based on title by prescription, evidence of a sale of the land for taxes to the state was admissible to show that the operation of the statute of limitations was suspended from the time of the sale until the redemption of the land.

7. SAME.

In a suit to quiet title, based on plaintiff's title by prescription, it was proper to show the assessment of the premises, so that the court might determine whether plaintiff had paid the taxes required by statute to obtain title by prescription.

8. APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR — ERRONEOUS ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Where, in a suit to quiet title, based on plaintiff's title by prescription, defendant testified to the payment of the taxes thereon, and plaintiff afterwards claimed that he furnished the money therefor, the error if any, in the admission of the tax receipts, was not prejudicial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4161–4170.]

9. WITNESSES — IMPEACHMENT — COMPETENCY OF IMPEACHING WITNESS.

Where a witness stated that he knew the reputation of a party for truth and that it was bad, and admitted on cross-examination that he did not know that he had heard anybody say that the party was a man of bad reputation for truth, but that he knew it himself, and that he had heard it discussed, but could not tell by whom or the number, the witness' knowledge on the subject was not too imperfect to preclude the court from considering his testimony.

10. APPEAL—PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Where, if all the rulings of which complaint is made had been made in favor of the party complaining, a different result would not have been reached, the errors in the rulings will be disregarded.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4033.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by Joseph Spotswood against J. W. Spotswood. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

T. L. Carothers and A. J. Thatcher, for appellant. Weldon & Held, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an action to quiet title. The complaint is in the usual form. The answer denies that plaintiff is the owner or in the possession of any part of the property in controversy, or has been for several years, and alleges that defendant is and has been since 1891 and 1892 the owner and in possession of the whole of said property, and avers that plaintiff claims some interest in the same which is without right, and asks for judgment quieting defendant's title to said property. The findings follow the denials and averments of the answer. The judgment is the appropriate conclusion from the findings, and is in favor of defendant and respondent. From this judgment and from an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff brings this appeal.

The reliance of appellant is exclusively upon a title by prescription. There is no controversy that at the beginning of the action and for a long time prior thereto the record title was and has been in respondent. A portion of the property was deeded to him by appellant on July 16, 1891, another portion by J. A. Cooper, January 7, 1892, and the residue by A. F. Redemeyer, October 18, 1892. Appellant claims that the conveyance to respondent was to protect said appellant from the rapacity of an unjust and importunate creditor; that appellant paid the consideration for the Cooper deed; and that a mortgage executed by respondent was given to secure the amount due Redemeyer for his conveyance, and that appellant has paid the interest on said mortgage.

However, these considerations were not pressed in the court below, nor is it sought here to have a trust declared in favor of appellant. This probably is in contemplation of the fact that such relief is not within the scope of an action to quiet title, and that in this form of procedure the legal must prevail over the equitable title. Castro v. Barry, 79 Cal. 443, 21 Pac. 946; Harrigan v. Mowry, 84 Cal. 456, 22 Pac. 658, 24 Pac. 48; Tuffree

v. Polhemus, 108 Cal. 676, 41 Pac. 806; Chase v. Cameron, 133 Cal. 231, 65 Pac. 460.

1. The contention is made that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings in favor of respondent. The position is untenable. No one can read the transcript without concluding that there is at least a substantial conflict presented by the record. In view of the many decisions of the courts, it would seem to require a good deal of temerity to insist now that in such a contingency the appellate court can consider the question of the sufficiency of the evidence. In justice to counsel for appellant, however, it may be said that little significance seems to be attached to this point. Indeed, keeping in view what constitutes the elements of adverse possession (1 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 789; Unger v. Mooney, 63 Cal. 595, 49 Am. Rep. 100; Nathan v. Dierssen, 146 Cal. 67, 79 Pac. 739), and remembering that such elements must be shown by clear and positive proof (Ward v. Cochran, 150 U. S. 607, 14 Sup. Ct. 230, 37 L. Ed. 1195; Irvine's Heirs v. McRee, 42 Am. Dec. 468, 5 Humph. [Tenn.] 554), it is at least doubtful whether the evidence would support a judgment for appellant. Assuredly, the court was justified in finding for the respondent.

2. John A. Pickle, a witness for the plaintiff, was asked this question: "Did you ever hear the defendant say whether or not he owned the land?" To which he answered, "No, sir. Well, I have heard him refer to it as being his father's." The defendant moved to strike out the answer on the ground "that the plaintiff must prevail on the strength of his own title, and any declaration made by defendant that the property does not belong to him, or that it belongs to somebody else, is not evidence tending to show that plaintiff has title." The court granted the motion to strike out, and plaintiff excepted. Appellant seems confident of his position here. He says: "We submit that the court erred in striking out the answer, and that no citation of authorities is necessary on so elementary a proposition." No objection was made to the question, but that does not preclude the court from striking out evidence that it deems improper. Parker v. Smith, 4 Cal. 105; People v. Wallace, 89 Cal. 165, 26 Pac. 650; Mahan v. Wood, 105 Cal. 14, 38 Pac. 507; Davey v. S. P. Co., 116 Cal. 329, 48 Pac. 117.

The answer was not directly responsive to the question, and the court's action will be determined upon its merits, and not measured by the reason invoked in the motion to strike out. The question called for a categorical answer of yes or no. Counsel for defendant, knowing that if the answer were responsive it could not prejudice their client, might well refrain from objecting to such a preliminary question. Again, the answer was so indefinite as to time that it could neither hurt nor help plaintiff's cause. For aught that appears to the contrary, the remark may have been made while plaintiff was the undisputed owner of the premises. If this be true, assuming that the court's action was erroneous, it was without prejudice. Besides, it may be plausibly argued that the evidence was inadmissible in support of the title by prescription claimed by plaintiff. McGrath v. Wallace, 116 Cal. 548, 48 Pac. 719; Shroder v. Aden G. M. Co., 144 Cal. 630, 78 Pac. 20. If the question had been asked for the purpose of impeaching defendant, the proper foundation having been laid, it would present a different aspect. No error was committed in the ruling.

3. The court admitted in evidence, over the objection and exception of plaintiff, his petition and schedules in insolvency filed in 1897, and also the assessment of his property as given by him to the assessor in the year 1901. These instruments did not contain the land in controversy, and they were clearly admissible as an "act, declaration or omission against interest." Section 1870, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc.; McCracken v. San Francisco, 16 Cal. 591; Woolridge v. Boardman, 115 Cal. 78, 46 Pac. 868. According to appellant's contention, his occupancy of the land had ripened into a perfect title at the time he filed his petition and schedule in insolvency, and his omission to include therein said property is certainly a significant circumstance and constituted relevant testimony. The same suggestion will apply to the assessment. It was his duty to list all that he claimed to be his property. If he failed to do so, the court had a right to consider that matter, giving it whatever weight to which it seemed entitled.

4. Defendant neglected to pay his poll and hospital taxes for the year 1896, and the land in controversy assessed to him was sold for said tax, costs, etc., to the state, August 1, 1897. The certificate of sale and the deed and certificate of redemption were admitted in evidence over plaintiff's objection and exception. This evidence was not admitted for the purpose of showing what taxes were levied and assessed upon said land which plaintiff was required to pay to perfect his title, but it was received, as evidence that the title had vested in the state of California, in support of defendant's contention that the operation of the statute of limitations was suspended from the time of the sale till the redemption of the land. Plaintiff contented himself with the general objection that the evidence was immaterial, incompetent, and irrelevant, and did not tend to prove any issue in the case, and that the title vested in the state was destroyed by the act of redemption. No attack was directed against the regularity of the proceedings, nor was it questioned that the sale was properly made and invested the state with the title. The evidence was within the issue whether the plaintiff's adverse occupancy, assuming it to exist, had continued for the statutory period. It is in line with the authorities holding that

"forfeiture to the state within the period necessary to give effect to the statute has the effect to break the continuity of adverse possession, and prevented the operation of the statute bar." Armstrong v. Morrill, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 120, 20 L. Ed. 765; Reusens v. Lawson, 21 S. E. 352, 91 Va. 226.

5. The objection to the introduction of the assessment rolls, from which it appeared that the land in controversy was assessed, is not well taken. It was proper to show the assessment of the land in order that the court might determine whether plaintiff had paid all the taxes as required by the statute to obtain a title by prescription. Oneto v. Restano, 78 Cal. 374, 20 Pac. 743; Baldwin v. Temple, 101 Cal. 396, 35 Pac. 1008.

6. The admission of the tax receipts, if error, was without prejudice, as defendant testified to the payment and plaintiff afterwards admitted it, although claiming that he furnished the money.

7. The court did not err in refusing to strike out the testimony of M. A. Bevans as to appellant's reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity. He said he knew his reputation and that it was bad. He admitted on cross-examination that he did not know that he had heard anybody say that Mr. Spotswood was a man of bad reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity, but "I know it myself. I have heard it discussed, but I cannot tell by whom or the number." It does not appear that his knowledge on the subject was too imperfect to preclude the court from considering his testimony. No objection was made to his competency.

We have examined all the assignments of error, and find nothing in any of them to justify a reversal of the judgment. Indeed, considering the equivocal nature of plaintiff's testimony and the fact of his impeachment by proof of contradictory statements, and that his general reputation for truth, honesty, and integrity was bad, and further keeping in view the testimony in behalf of defendant, it may be assumed that, if all the rulings of which complaint is made had been in appellant's favor, a different result would not have been reached. In this view of the case, the errors, if any, should be disregarded. Silvarer v. Hansen, 77 Cal. 587, 20 Pac. 136; In re Spencer, 96 Cal. 450, 31 Pac. 453.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

(4 Cal. App. 704)

PEOPLE v. WRIGHT. (Cr. 31.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 25, 1907.)

1. HOMICIDE — MANSLAUGHTER — APPEAL — CONCLUSIVENESS OF VERDICT.

A conviction of manslaughter will not be reversed on appeal, where there was evidence that defendant did not act in self-defense, though there was other evidence which would have sustained a conclusion that he did.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, §§ 700, 701.]

2. WITNESSES—PROOF OF DEFENDANT'S REPUTATION—RIGHT TO CROSS-EXAMINE.

Though the district attorney in a manslaughter trial stated he would not offer testimony to attack the reputation of defendant for peaceableness and quietness, it was not error to permit him to cross-examine witnesses as to such reputation, and to limit such witnesses to eight.

3. HOMICIDE — MANSLAUGHTER—INSTRUCTION —PREJUDICIAL ERROR.

Where a conviction for manslaughter in a murder trial was reversed on the retrial, defendant was not prejudiced by an incorrect instruction on the subject of murder, where a correct instruction on manslaughter was given, and the jury were instructed that because of the previous conviction, defendant could not be convicted of a higher degree.

4. WITNESSES — IMPEACHMENT—INCONSISTENT STATEMENTS—REBUTTAL.

Where, in a homicide trial, there was evidence that a witness for defendant had made a statement inconsistent with his testimony, and that his character as to honesty and integrity was bad, to rebut his impeachment it could not be shown that he had made prior consistent statements.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1260.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW — CONDUCT OF COUNSEL — SUPPORTING WITNESS' STATEMENT.

Where the defense in a homicide trial attempted to impeach a state's witness by showing that he had testified differently at a former trial, and asked him if he had not been asked certain questions and given certain answers and he denied that he had, the district attorney's statement in support of witness' denial, "I'll swear that he didn't, too," though improper, was not prejudicial, since the particular fact as to which it was sought to show witness had contradicted himself was cleared up beyond dispute.

6. SAME—ARGUMENT.

In a homicide trial, a district attorney in addressing the jury said, "You gentlemen know the law, and although" decedent's wife "has been divorced from this man, * * * if meretricious relations did exist between" defendant and decedent's wife, defendant objecting to the argument as improper, the court admonished the district attorney to refrain from referring to the matter, whereupon the district attorney stated, "We claim that what I have referred to and commented upon is the testimony brought out solely and exclusively by the defense in this case and not by the prosecution." Held that, though defendant excepted to the remarks, since he did not ask that they be withdrawn or challenged thereto or ask to instruct the jury to disregard them, such remarks did not afford a ground for the reversal of a conviction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2645.]

7. HOMICIDE—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in a homicide trial, defendants advanced the theory that decedent, when he was shot, had stooped to pick up a cap which it is claimed had dropped off the nipple of the second barrel of his gun, and that that accounted for his having received the shot in the back of his neck, testimony that about one month before the homicide witness was handling the gun and raised the hammer and the cap fell off was properly excluded.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; John C. Gray, Judge.

Hulburt R. Wright was convicted of manslaughter, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. E. Duncan, Jr., for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The defendant was informed against for the crime of murder, and was convicted of manslaughter. He appeals from the judgment of conviction and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. This is the second appeal of the case. Defendant was first convicted of manslaughter, and for errors committed at the trial the judgment was reversed, and the case remanded. People v. Wright, 144 Cal. 161, 77 Pac. 877. A statement of the facts will be found in the opinion of Mr. Justice Henshaw in the decision upon the first appeal, to which we refer for convenience. In some particulars the facts are not shown to be the same in the present record as are narrated by Judge Henshaw, and whether so or not are not conclusive in the present appeal. But for the purposes of this opinion it is not necessary to point out wherein the facts before us differ from those thus appearing. The killing of Farley by defendant is not denied. His claim is that he acted in self-defense. To state the evidence in all its phases would require much space and seems to us unnecessary.

1. Upon the sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict we need only observe, as it is questioned, that there was some evidence from which the jury might have drawn the inference that the life of defendant was not in actual danger or his body of some great injury at the time he fired the fatal shot. The circumstance that the shot entered the back of the neck of deceased and emerged at his chin, together with other facts, might have justified the inference that deceased had at that time withdrawn from or ceased the encounter. It is true deceased had a few seconds previously fired at defendant apparently with the purpose of killing him, and defendant might, under the circumstances, have had reason to believe that deceased would continue the assault, and that his only safety was to kill or disable deceased before the latter could again fire. There is evidence which would have sustained the jury in so finding. But these were matters for the jury to determine, and with their conclusion this court cannot interfere.

2. The district attorney was asked if he intended to attack the reputation of defendant for peace and quiet and answered, "No." Thereupon the court limited the number of defendant's witnesses to prove his reputation to eight. After these witnesses had been examined in chief the district attorney cross-examined them to test their knowledge of defendant's reputation in the particulars involved. Defendant objected to this and claimed that it was an indirect attack upon defendant's reputation, and that he should not be limited to the number stated by the court. We think it was proper for the district attorney to cross-examine the witnesses on the point, though he had declared that he would not attack defendant's reputation by witnesses. This was in no sense an attack upon defendant's reputation. Defendant was but supporting the presumption that his reputation was good for peace and quiet. In doing so it was proper for the people to test by cross-examination the extent of knowledge on the subject possessed by the witnesses. If upon the cross-examination it appeared that one or more of their witnesses knew nothing of the matter, defendant cannot complain, for it was his duty to know what they would testify to and what knowledge they had. Furthermore, the presumption remained in his favor unassailed. We discover no error in the court's ruling.

3. The court gave the following instruction: "There need be no appreciable time between the attempt to kill and the act of the killing. They may be instantaneous as successive thoughts of the mind. It is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by a concurrence of the will, deliberation, and premeditation on the part of the slayer, and if such is the case the killing, if unlawful, is murder in the first degree, no matter how rapidly these acts of the mind may succeed each other or how quickly that they may be followed by the act of killing." It is claimed that this was prejudicial error citing People v. Maughs (Cal. Sup.) 86 Pac. 187. The jury were instructed that by reason of the result of the previous trial the defendant could not now be convicted in any event of any higher crime than manslaughter. The court also instructed the jury as follows: "If you believe from the evidence to a moral certainty and beyond a reasonable doubt that the defendant is guilty of murder in the first degree, or murder in the second degree, or manslaughter, then your verdict should be, 'We, the jury, find the defendant guilty of manslaughter.'" No objection was made to these instructions. A somewhat similar point arose in People v. McFarlane, 138 Cal. 481, 71 Pac. 568, 72 Pac. 48, 61 L. R. A. 245, and in that case full instructions were given as to the elements constituting murder. It was contended that it was error to instruct as to murder, for, as was claimed, if the evidence showed that defendant committed murder, he could not be convicted of manslaughter. Among other things the court said: "It was perhaps unnecessary to instruct the jury fully as to what constitutes the crime of murder, as the defendant was not being prosecuted for, and could not be convicted of, that crime after making his plea of once in jeopardy for murder." The court added: "But inasmuch as the offense of manslaughter is necessarily involved in the offense of murder, we cannot see that the defendant was prejudiced by instructions defining the latter crime, and in telling the jury that if the evidence warranted a conviction of murder they should find the defendant guilty of manslaughter, and could not, in view of the former conviction, find him guilty of murder." Full and correct instructions were given defining the crime of manslaughter, and this was the only crime for which the defendant was on trial or could have been convicted. If the instruction complained of had been correctly given it would not have been prejudicial to the defendant (People v. McFarlane, supra), for he could not have been convicted of murder. Much less would an incorrect instruction have been prejudicial, unless it conflicted with the instruction given as to manslaughter, or was otherwise confusing and misleading, which we do not think was the case in this instance.

4. Witness Johnson had testified to certain threats he had heard deceased make against defendant. Later along the witness Hendricks testified that Johnson's character for honesty and integrity was bad. He also testified that at a certain time stated Johnson made some statements to him about what occurred when he, Johnson, met deceased, the purpose being to show that the statements differed from those given by Johnson at the trial. No objection was made to this evidence. Still later in the trial, in defendant's rebuttal, witness Evans was asked if he had a conversation with Johnson "shortly before the shooting in which Farley was killed." He answered, "Yes." He was then asked if he heard "Johnson say anything as to whether he had seen Farley waiting with a rifle about 200 yards from his house, or something like that." The question was objected to by the district attorney as irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent, and as not in rebuttal of anything brought out by the district attorney, and as hearsay. The objection was sustained, and exception noted. It is claimed that defendant had the right to show prior consistent statements by Johnson, and thus rebut to some extent his impeachment by the witness Hendricks citing People v. Doyell, 48 Cal. 85. The general rule is that a witness cannot be corroborated by showing previous consistent statements. There are some exceptions, but this is not among them. Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 398, 26 Pac. 213, 22 Am. St. Rep. 310, and cases there cited. In that case the prior consistent statements which were admitted by the lower court went to the question whether the witness was a truthful man, and the court said: "The evidence has no bearing upon the issue."

5. Misconduct of the district attorney is claimed for two causes. Defendant was attempting to impeach the witness Joe Farley by showing that he had testified differently at the former trial. A series of questions and answers was read to him, and he was then asked: "Q. Did you so testify? A. No, sir; I think not. Mr. Sexton (district attorney): I will swear that he didn't, too." Exception was taken to this remark. No motion was made to strike it out, and the court apparently took no notice of it. The particular fact as to which it was sought to show that the witness had contradicted himself was cleared up beyond dispute, namely, that deceased passed out of the bedroom with his gun through a window and not through the door leading into the bedroom. When he denied having given the testimony as read to him from the purported record of the former trial, it was improper for the district attorney to bolster up his denial; but we are satisfied that no prejudice resulted to defendant.

In his address to the jury the district attorney said: "You gentlemen know the law, and although Mrs. Farley has been divorced from this man and awarded the custody of the children, that if meretricious relations did exist between Mr. Wright and Mrs. Farley—" At this point counsel for defendant interrupted: "We object to that, and ask the court to admonish the district attorney to refrain from mentioning any such relations. The only assertion that has been made is what Mr. Farley stated concerning the breaking up of his family, and the notion he had in his head that Wright was making trouble in his family. "The Court: The district attorney will refrain from referring to those matters." Defendant thereupon took exception to the remarks of the district attorney above. "Mr. Sexton: We claim that what I have referred to and commented upon is the testimony brought out solely and exclusively by the defense in this case, and not by the prosecution." To these remarks defendant took exception, but did not ask that they be withdrawn, or challenge their truth, or request the court to instruct the jury to disregard the remarks. The judgment was reversed on the first appeal in part because the prosecution was permitted to show that deceased believed that improper relations existed between defendant and Mrs. Farley. In People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 154, 65 Pac. 295, the court, speaking of certain remarks made to the jury by the district attorney to which exception was taken, said: "This was improper, but its effect would have been removed if the defendant had asked the court to instruct the jury that it was improper, and to disregard it." There are instances where the mischief done by the improper conduct of the district attorney cannot be thus cured, as where he refers to the fact that the defendant failed to appear as a witness in his own behalf. But we do not think that the conduct of the district attorney in the present instance could be classed as incurable error. In view of the ruling of the Supreme Court in the former appeal, the district attorney should have refrained from making any reference to the matter. It was, however, not such error as would justify the reversal of the case upon the record before us. It may be remarked by way of caution to district attorneys generally that reversals are made necessary in too many cases because of a desire on their part for present victory regardless of the consequences to follow on appeal. This officer owes it not only to his own reputation, but to the court and the people whom he represents, to avoid all possible errors in the conduct of cases.

6. Defendant advanced the theory at the trial that deceased, when he was shot, had stooped to pick up the cap which it is claimed had dropped off the nipple of the second barrel of his gun, and that this accounts for his having received the shot in the back of his neck. Defendant offered to prove by a witness that about one month before the homicide he, the witness, was handling this gun, raised the hammer, and the cap fell off. The court rightly sustained the objection made to the testimony. Obviously it was too remote and would cast no light upon the kind of caps used by deceased on the day of the killing.

There are no other alleged errors in the record which call for notice.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

MAXWELL v. FRESNO CITY RY. CO.

(Civ. 287.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 5, 1907.)

1. CARRIERS—PASSENGERS—DUTY OF CARRIER.

Carriers are liable for the negligent injury of passengers, being required to use the greatest care in their transportation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, §§ 1085–1106.]

2. SAME—STREET RAILROADS—INJURY TO PASSENGER ALIGHTING—NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a street railway company for injury to a passenger alighting from a car and stepping into a depression, evidence held not to show as a matter of law that the company was not negligent.

3. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action against a street railway company for injury to a passenger alighting from a car and stepping into a depression, evidence held not to show as a matter of law that the passenger was guilty of contributory negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. F. Church, Judge.

Action by Mary Maxell against the Fresno City Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank H. Short and F. E. Cook, for appellant. Everts & Ewing, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought this action against defendant to recover damages for injuries sustained by her while a passenger on a car operated by defendant. The jury having rendered a verdict for plaintiff, defendant moved for a new trial, and this being denied, appealed from the order denying its motion for a new trial as well as from the judgment.

It is urged that the evidence in the case fails to show that defendant was guilty of any negligence, and that it does show that the plaintiff's own negligence was the cause of her injury, or contributed thereto. Plaintiff took passage on one of defendant's cars, and in stepping from such car to the ground, when the car had stopped for her to transfer to another car of defendant in order to complete her trip, her ankle was seriously injured. In her complaint she charges that defendant neglected to maintain a proper and suitable place for passengers to alight, and that on the occasion in question it carelessly and negligently operated its car so as to stop the same for plaintiff to alight at an unsuitable and dangerous place. Common carriers of passengers are bound to exercise a very high degree of care, and are liable for slight neglect. "A common carrier of persons for reward must use the utmost care and diligence for their safe carriage, must provide everything necessary for that purpose, and must exercise to that end a reasonable degree of skill." Civ. Code, § 2100. They are responsible for negligence, and are required to use the greatest care in the transportation of their passengers. Jamison v. San Jose, etc., R. R. Co., 55 Cal. 593; Wheaton v. North Beach, etc., R. Co., 36 Cal. 590; Carr v. Eel River, etc., R. R. Co., 98 Cal. 366, 33 Pac. 213, 21 L. R. A. 354; Fairchild v. Cal. Stage Co., 13 Cal. 599. "There can be no question that the relation of carrier and passenger continues while the passenger is expeditiously engaged in the act of carefully and prudently alighting from the car, and that the carrier is bound to exercise the same high degree of care in affording a passenger a reasonable opportunity to alight in safety as in carrying him safely." Cody v. Market St. Ry. Co, 148 Cal. 90, 82 Pac. 666. See, also, Ft. Worth & D. C. Ry. Co. v. Kennedy, 35 S. W. 335, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 654; Railway Co. v. Finley, 79 Tex. 85, 15 S. W. 266; Fairmont Ry. Co. v. Stutler, 93 Am. Dec. 714, 54 Pa. 375.

In examining the evidence in this case, it must also be borne in mind that whether the evidence shows negligence is peculiarly a question to be determined by the jury, and when different conclusions may reasonably be drawn from the proven facts, even where there is no conflict in the evidence, the question of negligence is for the jury. Hennesey v. Bingham, 125 Cal. 627, 58 Pac. 200; Fox v. Oakland Con. St. Ry., 118 Cal. 55, 50 Pac. 25, 62 Am. St. Rep. 216; Pacheco v. Manufacturing Co., 113 Cal. 541, 45 Pac. 833; Buchel v. Gray Bros., 115 Cal. 421, 47 Pac. 112; Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651; Wahlgren v. Market St. Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 656, 62 Pac. 308, 64 Pac. 993; Wikberg v. Olson Co., 138 Cal. 479, 71 Pac. 511. In the case last cited (Wikberg v. Olson Company, supra) it is said: "Negligence cannot be defined and measured by any precise standard. It is always relative to particular facts and circumstances upon which it is sought to be predicated. As a general rule, it is a question for the jury to determine from the facts and the logical inferences therefrom. It is only in cases where the facts are without dispute, or the deduction inevitably that of no negligence, that the court can say, as matter of law, that no negligence was proven. The case must be a clear one, which would justify the court in holding the evidence insufficient to sustain the verdict." To same effect see Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 Pac. 734.

With the foregoing principles in mind, we now proceed to an examination of the evidence in the case. Defendant, at the time of the accident in question, operated a street railroad in the city of Fresno. One of its tracks ran north and south on J street, and another ran east and west on Stanislaus street, and connected with the J street track at the intersection of the two streets. Each line was a single track line. The Stanislaus track, as it approaches the J street, divides into two spurs or tracks, one curving to the north and thus connecting with and running into the J street track, and the other curving to the south and thus running into the J street track. The plaintiff on the day of the accident boarded a car on the Stanislaus Street line for the purpose of going to the Southern Pacific Depot. This car did not go to such depot, and in order to complete her trip she was obliged at the intersection of Stanislaus and J streets to transfer to a J Street car going south. The car upon which she took passage consisted of an inclosed portion in the center for the use of passengers, and an open portion at each end, also fitted for and used by passengers. It is not perfectly clear to us whether the seats on the open portions of the car extended across the car, or ran lengthwise with the car, but we infer from what appears in the record before us that the seats extended lengthwise with the car. At any rate, the seats were reached by steps extending along the side of the open part of the car, so that passengers could get on or off the car immediately opposite any given seat on the open portion of the car. Plaintiff took a seat on the northerly or right-hand side of the Stanislaus Street car going westerly toward J street, on the front open portion next to the front window. When the car reached J street it took the northerly curve, and was stopped on the curve so that plaintiff might transfer to a J Street car going south. As the track curves around the northeast corner of J and Stanislaus streets the nearest track is five feet from the sidewalk curb at the corner. The street slopes from the track to the curb, the slope being greater as it approaches the curb, thus forming a gutter. The car was stopped so that the open portion on which plaintiff sat was opposite to the corner formed by the junction of the north gutter on Stanislaus street with the east gutter on J street, and the car stood practically at right angles to a line bisecting the angle formed by the north line of Stanislaus street and the east line of J street. This seems to be the only point where the gutter approaches within stepping distance of the step of a car standing on the track. The evidence shows that at this point the distance between the second or lower step of the car and the ground immediately below was 20 inches, and at 6 inches nearer the curb it was 24 inches. The step was 1 foot and 10 inches from the curb. The distance from the lower step to the ground on the south side of the car was 13 or 15 inches. The car to which plaintiff desired to transfer having stopped on J street somewhat in front of her car, she got off her car from the side upon which she sat, and in so doing stepped into the gutter, and thereby injured her foot.

At the trial of the case a diagram of the premises was used, which is not reproduced in the transcript, but in appellant's brief there is a diagram, the correctness of which is not challenged by respondent, except that it does not show the position of the J Street car in accordance with the evidence given by plaintiff. We have therefore in our examination of the evidence used the diagram attached to plaintiff's brief. From the evidence it appears that the car could have been stopped at a point where no portion of the car from which passengers could alight would have been opposite the corner formed by the junction of the gutters, and it is certain that the car could have been so stopped that plaintiff would not have been opposite such corner. Though it is true, as claimed by appellant, that defendant had no control over the grade of the street, it did have control of its car, and could have stopped it at a safe place, or at a place where there was no unusual depression into which plaintiff would be likely to step in getting off the car. The depression into which she stepped was one of circumscribed superficial area so far as it approached near to the car track, and for that reason, perhaps, all the more dangerous, as being more liable to be overlooked by a passenger in getting off the car. The general surface of the ground about the car was much less below the level of the lower step than was the ground immediately opposite where plaintiff was sitting. The car was 27½ feet long, and the switch or curved portion of the track was 125 feet long. It appears that the car could have been stopped so that neither the portion upon which plaintiff sat, nor any portion from which a passenger could alight, would have been within stepping distance of the gutter. The car could have been stopped at a convenient point for transferring passengers where the distance from the lower step to the ground did not exceed 15 inches. The facts above referred to, we think, tend to support the conclusion that defendant did not use the utmost care for the safety of plaintiff.

Neither can we say as a matter of law that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. She testified that though she had frequently ridden on the cars of defendant over this route, she had never specially noticed the conditions where she got off upon this occasion. That she did not think she had ever before sat on the north side of the car, as she lived on the south side of the street, and she was certain that she never before got off on the north side at that transfer point. When the car stopped on this occasion for her to make the transfer, she was looking at the ground in front towards the other car, and she did not take special notice of the ground onto which she stepped in alighting from the car. She had a grip with her. She said: "I looked at the ground to determine how far I should walk and where I should walk across to get the car. I stepped off the car and that is all." Although it is apparent that she made no careful examination of the ground on to which she stepped, we cannot say that the jury were obliged to say that she did not exercise the care that the average person would use under similar circumstances. By stopping the car as it did, and with steps immediately in front of her, the defendant in effect invited her to get off at that point. "While the carrier must exercise a high degree of care to safely transport and deliver its passengers, the passenger may rely somewhat on the carrier's care, and is only called upon to act as a reasonable person would under the circumstances." Nellis, Street Surface Railroads, 520.

The facts of the case at bar are in their essential particulars strikingly similar to Bass v. Concord St. Ry. Co., 46 Atl. 1056, 70 N. H. 170, where a car conductor stopped the car somewhat beyond the place where the plaintiff (a woman) desired to get off, and at a point where there was opposite to the place where she sat a depression in the ground from two to eight inches in depth, and "the distance from the running board to the ground, where one would naturally step, was greater than at the entrance to the cemetery" (the place at which she desired to alight). She testified in substance that when the car stopped she simply stepped off without making any special examination of the ground upon which she stepped. The accident occurred in the daytime. The verdict for the plaintiff was sustained, the court holding that there was sufficient evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant, and that the facts did not as matter of law necessarily show contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff. Upon this latter point the court said: "It may be conceded that if the plaintiff had looked, she would have refrained from stepping as she did, and still the defendant may be liable. The fact that more precaution on her part would have prevented the accident does not necessarily defeat a recovery. The question is whether some fair-minded men might say that, with her knowledge and in her situation, she acted with reasonable prudence, without further investigating the condition of the ground she was to alight upon. The test of her right to have the question of her care determined by a jury was not whether she did all that she could do in the way of taking precautions, but whether she did enough so that her conduct might be thought to be that of a person of average prudence." In the case at bar the jury and the trial judge visited and inspected the place where the accident occurred, and for that reason were better able to judge of the condition there than is this court.

We cannot say from the evidence before us that, as a matter of law, defendant was not guilty of negligence, or that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence. No other point is raised by appellant in its opening brief. In its reply brief defendant calls our attention to the refusal of the court to give certain instructions requested by defendant. It is only under exceptional circumstances that this court will consider questions not raised in the opening briefs. No such exceptional circumstances are suggested in this case. Kahn v. Wilson, 120 Cal. 643, 53 Pac. 24; Phelps v. Mayers, 126 Cal. 549, 58 Pac. 1048; Webber v. Clarke, 74 Cal. 11, 15 Pac. 431.

McLEAN v. BALDWIN et al. (L. A. 1,648, 1,573.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1907.)

QUIETING TITLE—PROCEEDINGS—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to quiet title to land, evidence examined, and held insufficient to support the judgment that plaintiff was not the owner of any part of the premises described in the complaint.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by Susan A. McLean against E. J. Baldwin and others. From a judgment for defendants, an order denying a motion to render a different judgment, and an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order denying new trial reversed. Order refusing to render a new and different judgment affirmed.

Graves, O'Melveny & Shankland, for appellant. Works, Lee & Works, for respondents.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to quiet title to a certain piece of land. The defendant Garvey made default, and defendant Temple disclaimed. Defendant Baldwin answered, denying that plaintiff had any title or right to the premises described in the complaint, averring his ownership thereof, setting up a certain judgment in bar of plaintiff's action, and praying for judgment decreeing that plaintiff has no title to said land, and that defendant is the owner thereof. The trial court found that plaintiff had no title or right to or in the premises, or any part thereof, and that defendant was the owner of certain land described in the judgment. There are two transcripts on appeal in the case, Nos. 1,648 and 1.573, and these transcripts present three appeals by plaintiff—one from the judgment, another from an order denying a motion made under section 663½, Code Civ. Proc., to render a different judgment, and the third from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial. They were all submitted at the same time and will be considered together.

The evidence, including testimony of witnesses, former judgments, and other documents, and the findings and judgments herein present a case which is confused, uncertain and unsatisfactory. Indeed, it is difficult to discover what, if anything, the findings and judgment do definitely determine. It might almost be imagined that the parties and their predecessors have been trying to keep open opportunities for the luxury of future litigation. The action is to quiet title to a small piece of land lying along the boundary lines between two large adjoining tracts of land—one known as the "Rancho Potrero de Felipe Lugo" lying on the east, and the other known as the "Rancho La Merced" lying on the west. In 1872 both of these ranches were owned by F. P. E. Temple, who was the common source of title of all the parties. In 1873 he gave to the son, John H. Temple, a piece of land lying along the boundary line of said ranchos, containing about 75 acres and known as the "John H. Temple homestead." The plaintiff in the case at bar claims, through mesne conveyances, from said John H. Temple, the deeds running from said Temple to one A. N. Davidson, from Davidson to E. H. Watkins, from Watkins to his wife, and from Watkins and wife to the present plaintiff.

The main question in the case is whether the land here in controversy is on the east or the west side of the boundary line between the two ranchos. Defendant contends that the boundary is a line called the "Stevenson line," to be noticed hereafter, while plaintiff contends that the line is "the westerly boundary line of the Rancho Potrero de Felipe Lugo as said line was surveyed by L. Seebold in August, 1874." If the Stevenson line is, for the purpose of this case, to be taken as the right line, then the judgment is correct. If the Seebold line is the right one then the judgment is erroneous, at least, as to a larger part of the land in controversy. Defendant pleaded in bar, and mostly relies upon a judgment rendered in the superior court, in an action brought by defendant herein as plaintiff therein against the said John H. Temple, and designated in the superior court as "Baldwin v. Temple, No. 5,817." That action was brought to quiet title to a piece of land which is described in the complaint therein as follows: "That certain tract of land bounded on the northerly side by the boundary line between the Rancho La Merced and the Rancho Potrero de Felipe Lugo, and on the westerly side by the road leading from the Old Mission San Gabriel to the schoolhouse known as the 'Temple Schoolhouse,' and on the easterly side by the San Gabriel river, and on the southerly side by the land heretofore occupied and used by one E. Bestwick, including within said boundaries ten acres of land, more or less, the same being located in the northwest corner of the said Rancho La Merced."

The defendant therein, Temple, answered, denying the averments of the complaint, and also filed a cross-complaint in which he averred that he was the owner of a piece of land described as follows: "That certain tract of land situated in the township of El Monte, county of Los Angeles, state of California, and which is bounded on the northerly side by the road leading from the Old Mission San Gabriel to the schoolhouse known as the 'Temple Schoolhouse,' said road known as the 'Old Mission road,' and on the easterly side by the western boundary of the Rancho Potrero de Felipe Lugo, said line was surveyed by L. Seebold in August, 1874, and on the southerly side by the San Gabriel river, and on the westerly side by the land heretofore occupied and used by E. Bestwick; said tract described being a part of the John H. Temple homestead." He also averred in his cross-complaint that "said described tract is the same land described in plaintiff's complaint"; and in his answer to the cross-complaint Baldwin "admits that the land described and claimed by the plaintiff in his complaint in said action is the same land and premises described in the said cross-complaint of the defendant." That action was commenced on the 15th of February, 1887, and judgment was rendered therein in favor of Baldwin on the 28th day of May, 1897. The judgment adjudicated that Baldwin was the owner and entitled to the possession of the land as described in the complaint, and also in the cross-complaint. At the time of the commencement of that action Baldwin was and had been the owner of the Rancho La Merced. At the commencement of that action he filed a lis pendens, which has been held to give constructive notice to and to bind the successors in interest of said Temple, including the plaintiff herein. See McLean v. Baldwin, 136 Cal. 565, 69 Pac. 259.

Therefore the judgment in No. 5,817 quieted Baldwin's title to a piece of land that was described as "bounded on the easterly side by the western boundary of the Rancho Potrero de Felipe Lugo as surveyed by L. Seebold in August, 1874." But after the entry of the judgment, which was not appealed from, Baldwin caused another line to be run by a surveyor named Stevenson—being the same hereinbefore mentioned—which was different from and easterly of the Seebold line, and which Baldwin claimed as the line between the two ranchos, and in accordance with which he was put into possession by the sheriff under a writ of possession. There was no warrant under the judgment for establishing the Stevenson line. In the case at bar the court finds the facts as to this line surveyed by Stevenson, but it is doubtful whether the findings expressly declare that the Stevenson line is the correct one, although by implication they seem to so declare, and other findings seem to assume such line as the correct one. However, the description of the land quieted to Baldwin in the case at bar adopts the descriptions in the judgment in said case No. 5,817, which, of course, again describes Baldwin's land as bounded on the easterly side by "the western boundary of the Rancho Potrero de Felipe Lugo as said line was surveyed by L. Seebold in August 1874." Defendants' counsel contend that, as the court found that plaintiff was not at the commencement of the action "and is not now, the absolute nor exclusive owner in her own right as her separate property, nor the owner at all, of that certain property situate in the county of Los Angeles, state of California, and bounded and described in the first paragraph of her complaint, or any of said described property situated within the Rancho La Merced in said county," therefore she would not be aggrieved, even though that part of the judgment which quiets certain described land to Baldwin be erroneous. But the very question whether the above finding against the plaintiff can be maintained depends upon the proper location of the disputed line between the two ranches. Counsel for respondent seem, at one place in their brief, to intimate that the alleged Seebold line has no existence and is a "myth." But documentary evidence introduced at the trial, and the testimony of witnesses, show that the Seebold line was a well-recognized line for many years. Moreover, in the case at bar the court finds that "the survey by Seebold was actually made by him on the ground in August 1874, is the same survey referred to in the pleadings in the case No. 5,817, and the Seebold line where it crossed the county road was indicated by a notch cut in the fence," and that the Stevenson line "was located upon the ground about five chains easterly from the line of the original survey by Seebold in August 1874." There is no room, therefore, for ignoring the said Seebold line.

From the foregoing it seems clear that, upon the evidence and findings as they appear in the case at bar, the Seebold line should have been taken, for the purposes of this case, as the line establishing the boundary between the land of plaintiff and defendant; and that therefore the finding that the plaintiff is not the owner of any part of the premises described in the complaint is not sustained by the evidence and is contrary to the other findings. For this reason, the judgment and order denying a new trial must be reversed. It may be noted that while the appeal from the judgment is expressed as an appeal from certain parts thereof, it is, in substance, an appeal from the whole judgment. We cannot, upon the record as it stands, reverse the order of the court below, refusing to render a new and different judgment—as set forth in transcript

5,817. To do so would be for this court to make new findings. That order is therefore affirmed.

There are many things in the record which we have not noted, and which, under the above views, are not necessary to be noticed. It is to be hoped that upon another trial the line between the parties may be definitely fixed, not merely by the name of the survey, but by an actual line traced on the ground, which will end all litigation upon the subject.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are reversed.

COMMERCIAL & SAVINGS BANK OF SAN JOSE v. POTT et al. (S. F. 3,802.)

1. Corporations—Stock—Sale—Evidence.

The fact of a sale of shares of stock, otherwise shown, is not negatived by the provision of the contract that the seller shall be the owner of all dividends on the stock; this being merely to define the rights of the seller while he holds the stock as security for payment of the notes given for the consideration, it being provided by the contract that the buyers shall have the right to sell the stock while it is so held as security.

2. Evidence—Parol Evidence.

The terms of a written contract of sale cannot be varied by evidence of the terms agreed on in the negotiations.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 1787.]

3. Bills and Notes—Defenses.

Where, by the contract of sale of stock by plaintiff to A. and P., the joint notes of A. and P. were to be given for part of the consideration, and their separate notes for the balance, the agreement of plaintiff with A. after the delivery of the notes and stock, that he would never have to pay any of the notes given by him, does not affect the liability of P. on the note given by him.

4. Evidence — Value — Qualification of Witnesses.

There is no error in rejecting testimony as to the actual value of stock, the witnesses not being shown to be qualified.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 2196, 2218.]

5. Same—Relevancy.

In an action for the purchase price of stock, testimony as to whether stock might have a fictitious market value was irrelevant, there being no evidence on which it could be claimed that the stock in question had such a fictitious value.

6. Bills and Notes—Issues Raised by Answer.

The special defense of nonliability for interest on the note sued on, under the provision of the contract for sale of stock, for purchase price of which the note and others were given, that the seller guarantied to the purchasers that the dividends on the stock would pay all interest on the notes, and that in case of deficiency the purchasers should receive credit on the notes for the deficiency, or the deficiency should be paid then in cash, at the option of the seller, is not raised by the allegations, in the special defense of fraudulent representations inducing the purchase, that by the terms of the contract, and in order to continue and consummate his fraud the seller agreed and guarantied to the purchasers that the interest on the purchase money notes would be fully paid by and out of the dividends on the stock; and that no dividends were declared or profits received by the corporation from which they could be declared.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Action by the Commercial & Savings Bank of San Jose against F. S. Pott and another. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendants appeal. Affirmed.

James H. Campbell and Edward F. Treadwell (Mastick, Van Fleet & Mastick, of counsel), for appellants. Cobb & Rea, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action is upon a nonnegotiable promissory note given by the defendants, F. S. Pott and wife, to A. G. Field, and by him indorsed and transferred to the plaintiff for value before maturity. It appears from the findings that about a month prior to November 1, 1892, the defendants F. S. Pott and P. P. Austin entered into negotiations to purchase from said Field his real estate and insurance business in the city of San Jose, and also 650 shares of the capital stock of the Western Granite & Marble Company, a corporation for many years organized and existing under the laws of this state, and having its principal place of business in said city of San Jose; that said Pott and Austin, having made due and proper investigation as to the value of said capital stock of said corporation, entered into and executed a written agreement with said Field whereby the latter sold and transferred to said Pott and Austin said real estate business and said capital stock for the sum of $45,750, to be paid $10,000 in cash, which was paid, the balance to be evidenced by the promissory notes of said Pott and Austin in various amounts bearing date November 1, 1892. Said stock to be held by said Field as collateral security for the payment of said notes. In addition to the notes above referred to, which did not represent the entire payment to be made and secured by said stock as collateral, it was provided that said Pott and Austin were to give two other promissory notes of $5,000 each, to be indorsed and secured in such manner as might be approved by said Field. It was further agreed that said Pott and Austin should have full and absolute power to sell and dispose of the said capital stock at any time. All the notes, including the latter two, were given as provided for, and this suit is on one of the latter notes given by the defendant, F. S. Pott and his wife; she having signed the same as the security provided for in the contract. In negotiating for the sale of the real estate and insurance business and the capital stock the value of the former was fixed at $10,000, and the cash payment which was made represented its purchase price; the value of the capital stock was fixed at $55 per share, amounting to $35,750, represented by the various notes given, including the one in suit. This action was commenced on the note in question some five years after the sale of the stock and delivery of the note. The defense interposed was that there was no consideration for the note, it being averred that the capital stock for the purchase price of which the note was given had no value at that time. In addition to this, it was further averred that the sale and delivery of the note was occasioned through the fraudulent concealment and representations of Field as to the business and affairs of the corporation and of the value of its stock. It is claimed that an additional defense was interposed, but that will be considered later. Upon the issues specifically mentioned above the court found against the defendants, and the judgment was rendered for plaintiff for the principal and interest on said note. A motion for a new trial having been denied defendants appeal from that order alone.

While various specifications appear in the bill of exceptions relative to the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the decision of the court, no discussion save as to one is made in the briefs. This is addressed to the finding of the court that there was a sale of the stock by Field to Pott and Austin. As against this finding, it is contended on the part of the appellants that the evidence shows that the arrangement between Field and Pott and Austin as to the shares of stock was not a sale, but simply an ingenious plan to raise money on the stock. There is no merit in this claim. By the terms of the contract it was a sale. The stock was transferred upon the books of the corporation to Pott and Austin. The contract provided for an option in Field to repurchase within two years from Pott and Austin such portions of the stock as might remain unsold. Pott and Austin paid an assessment on it long after it was transferred to them. They held it for several years after such transfer and ultimately disposed of it. The answer of the defendants treats the transaction as a sale and seeks to defeat the purchase of the note given by claiming that there was no consideration for it, and that the purchase was induced by fraudulent representations. The measures taken by Pott and Austin to ascertain the value of the shares of the capital stock pending negotiations for its purchase, and the testimony of witnesses on the trial show it was a sale. All these matters support the finding of the court that it was a sale, and there is no pretense from the evidence that it was anything else. In fact, the only basis which the counsel for appellants has for claiming that there was not a sale of the stock is that the agreement between Field and Pott and Austin recites that the latter "shall be the owners absolutely and completely of any and all dividends accruing to or payable upon said stock." It is claimed that this provision impliedly negatives ownership. We think, however, no such deduction follows. It is quite clear why this provision was inserted. The contract itself declared a sale to Pott and Austin of the stock, but provided that Field should hold it as collateral security for certain of the notes given for its purchase. In order, however, to clearly define what the rights of the purchasers should be while Field so held it, it was declared in the contract that Pott and Austin should have full and absolute power to sell and dispose of said stock while it was so held as security, and the provision quoted by appellant relative to dividends was for the purpose of giving them beyond any question the right to any dividends payable on said stock while it was so held. So that, from appellants' standpoint, there is nothing to disturb the decision of the court that it was a sale, while, on the other hand it is fully sustained by the facts which we have called attention to.

This disposes of the only point made as to the insufficiency of the evidence, and we now approach the next ground urged for a reversal, namely that the court erred in its rulings relative to the admission of evidence. Appellant offered to show that Field, the vendor of the stock, agreed to give a written guaranty to Austin that he would never have to pay any part of the principal of the note given by him for the purchase price of said stock, and it is insisted that the court erred in refusing to admit such evidence. We do not see how this evidence was material. The note sued on here is a note given by F. S. Pott, with his wife as the security required under the contract with Field. There was no privity between Austin and Pott on this note. Austin could not be held upon it. The stock was delivered upon the execution of the notes called for in the contract. It became the property of the vendees, was used by them as their own, and ultimately disposed of by them. The sale in that respect was fully executed. If any such arrangement was entered into by Field and Austin prior to the execution of the contract, it must be deemed to have been abandoned. It is no part of the written contract, and by the terms of that contract must the rights and obligations of the parties be determined. If this arrangement was entered into subsequent to the execution of the written contract, it could not affect that contract, because it would be a matter in which Austin and Field were alone concerned. Field had the right to release Austin from all obligation to him under the contract or upon the notes, and Pott could not complain that any of his rights were infringed on by reason of such release. Under the agreement Pott and Austin were to give Field their joint notes for $25,750 of the $45,750 to be paid for this capital stock and deliver to Field the stock as collateral security. In addition to this, and as part of the purchase price, they were to give two individual notes of $5,000 with other security approved by Field. In pursuance of this provision of the contract, Pott gave the note sued on with his wife as security. Austin could not be held on this note. He was not a party to it. If, as between Pott and Austin, the latter would be liable to Pott for his proportion of the amount paid on the note, any agreement between Field and Austin could not affect this liability. Independent, however, of these considerations, any agreement made prior to the contract under which the sale was consummated, or any subsequent agreement was inadmissible to change or vary the terms of the agreement as actually made and consummated.

It is further contended in this line that the court erred in rulings upon questions asked of the witnesses tending to show what the market value of the stock of the corporation was at the time of its purchase by Pott and Austin. Counsel refer to several rulings of the court in this respect, but when we examine the testimony of the witnesses during whose examination it is claimed these errors were committed, we find no ground for complaint. These inquiries were addressed to the actual value of the stock at the time of the sale, and there was no showing that the witnesses were qualified to speak on that subject, and as far as the inquiries were directed to the market value, it appears that the witnesses did testify upon the subject. Nor was any error committed on the question of a fictitious value of the stock. Counsel for appellant made inquiries of witnesses who were called by him to testify as to the market value of the stock in question as to whether stock may not have a fictitious value in the market. Conceding that it may, we do not perceive that any error was committed in refusing to allow witnesses in the case at bar to testify on that subject. There was no evidence of any facts upon which it could be claimed that the stock in question had a fictitious value, and proof that such a condition might exist as to stocks generally could have no relevancy. The very witnesses of whom this inquiry was made testified that the stock in question at the date of the sale had no market value at all, so that whether in the market stocks might have a fictitious value or not was of no consequence.

The last and the principal point made on this appeal (the point strongly urged by counsel appearing in place of those who originally filed the opening and reply briefs on this appeal, and who made no particular insistence on it) is that the court failed to find upon a material issue in the case, to wit, whether dividends were paid upon the stock sufficient to discharge the interest on the note. Counsel for appellants contend that this issue was before the court for determination, and counsel for respondent contends that it was not; that the court found on all material issues raised by the answer, which were only whether at the time of the sale the stock purchased was of any value, and whether the sale was made through fraudulent representations of Field as to the value of said stock. The contract which was entered into between Field and Pott and Austin at the time the note was given, and which is attached to the findings of the court as part thereof, contains the provision that "The said Field hereby agrees and guaranties to said Austin and Pott that the yearly dividends upon said capital stock will be sufficient in amount to pay and discharge all interest due and payable upon all said notes in case of any deficiency, or in case of any contingency whatever whereby such dividends are not sufficient in amount to liquidate and pay all of said interest, then said Austin and Pott are to receive credit upon said notes for such deficiency, or at the option of said Field said deficiency may be paid in coin."

The answer of defendants contained, among other allegations, the following: "That in and by the terms of said agreement, and in order to continue and consummate his said fraud, the said Field did agree and guaranty to said parties that the interest upon the said notes about to be executed in accordance with said agreement would be kept fully paid by and out of the dividends declared and paid upon said stock." And another allegation set forth further on in the answer stated "that no dividends whatever had been declared or paid by said corporation, or by the officers thereof, upon said or any stock of said corporation since the 1st day of November, 1892, nor have there been any profits whatever earned or received by said corporation, nor any other resources from which said dividends could have been declared."

These are the two allegations upon which it is contended by appellant that the issue was raised upon which the court failed to find that they constituted a special defense against the liability of the appellants for interest upon said notes. It is quite clear, however, when considered with relation to the main special defense interposed, and of which they formed part of the allegations—namely, fraudulent representations of the vendor Field as to the value of the property for the purchase price of which the notes were given—that these particular allegations were never intended to constitute the special defense which they are now urged to have presented. These allegations are found in a long continuous recital of facts constituting their special defense of fraud upon which appellants relied to defeat the entire action. Notwithstanding that this is clearly apparent, counsel for appellants insist that they have now a right to treat these allegations as a special defense on the subject of interest, commingled with the special defense of fraud. The difficulty, however, with this claim of a right to segregate is that there is nothing to segregate. There has been no commingling of defenses. The allegations upon which appellants rely as constituting a special defense to the payment of interest are not commingled with the other special defenses of fraud, but they are apt, material and proper allegations of facts supporting that claim alone, and were obviously not intended for any other purpose. Take the first allegation relative to the terms of the contract. It is distinctly made with reference to the defense of fraud. Up to this point in the answer the defendants were alleging fraudulent representations of Field leading up to the negotiations which eventuated in the making of the agreement, and in proceeding with their story in that respect alleged that, "in order to continue and consummate his said fraud," he made the agreement relative to the dividends. This was simply one of the particulars in which it was alleged the fraud consisted. It is not an allegation that by the contract the appellants were only under a contingent liability for interest, but it is one of the many fraudulent representations charged to have been made by Field of which appellants complained. As to the other allegation relied on that "no dividends whatever had been declared or paid," etc., this is not used in the answer in connection with the allegation last referred to except as relating to the special defense of fraudulent representations and the worthlessness of said stock when purchased, and which worthlessness they allege continued up to the filing of the answer. This is apparent from any prior and subsequent allegations. No mention is made in this allegation of interest, nor is there anywhere in all the allegations of the answer the slightest hint that these allegations, or any other allegations, have reference to a special defense of nonliability for interest. It is to be observed, too, that in the first allegation quoted the full terms of the contract between Field and the appellants with reference to liability for interest are not stated. Nor, as far as that liability is concerned, is it stated at all in the answer. The provision of the contract was that the dividends upon the capital stock would be sufficient in amount to pay and discharge all of the interest due and payable upon said notes, and in case of any deficiency, or in case of any contingency whatever whereby such dividends were not sufficient in amount to liquidate and pay all of said interest the makers of the note were to receive credit upon the notes for such deficiency, or, at the option of Field, said deficiency might be paid in coin. It will be perceived that in the allegation first quoted, which refers to such provision, only the first portion of it is alleged; only that portion in which it is agreed that the interest would be kept fully paid up out of the dividends on the stock. As constituting one of the particular misrepresentations relied on in the special defense of fraud, this was all that was necessary to be pleaded of the contract. On the other hand, had this allegation been intended to serve in a dual capacity—as an allegation of fraud and also as an allegation presenting a special defense of nonliability for interest—it need hardly be suggested that to have alleged the other portion of the provision of the contract as to the contingent liability of the makers, which was omitted, would have better indicated that nonliability as to interest was relied on. The fact that it was not alleged is some indication that the portion which was pleaded was only intended as a recital in aid of the special defense of fraud and for no other purpose.

It was also alleged in the complaint that "no part of the principal or interest of said promissory note had ever been paid and the whole thereof, principal and interest, is now due, owing and unpaid." This allegation was admitted by the defendants by failure to deny it, but to defeat the entire action thereon the defendants set up want of consideration and fraud. If the defendants had, in addition to specially pleading these defenses, also specially pleaded nonliability for interest the court might, while finding against them on the defense of want of consideration and of fraud, and that they were liable for the principal of the note, have yet found, if the evidence supported it, that under the terms of the contract they were not liable for interest. But, in order to avail themselves of this latter defense, it was their duty to plead it specially, and they did not do so. In fact, it is clear to our minds that the only special defense urged by appellants in their answer, aside from the want of consideration for the notes, was that of fraud, and that the allegations quoted were pertinent to that defense, had particular and sole relation to it and were intended to present it alone. This being true, we are aware of no rule of law which will permit us to wrest particular allegations from their plain position as part and portion of a continuous and apt recital of a special defense of fraud and treat them as allegations constituting another special defense, which it is not pretended was separately and specially pleaded, and which it is obvious they were not designed to support.

We perceive no reason why the order denying the motion for a new trial should not stand, and it is therefore affirmed.

DOHERTY v. COURTNEY. (S. F. 3,871.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1907.)

1. EJECTMENT — DEFENSES — EQUITABLE DEFENSES.

In ejectment by one claiming under a deed from the deceased owner, defendant, claiming the right to possession as tenant of the administrator of the deceased, may set up any defense available to the administrator if made a party, and may defend on the ground that the deed executed by the deceased was procured by the grantee's undue influence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Ejectment, § 109.]

2. SAME—ISSUES—EVIDENCE.

An answer in ejectment by one claiming under a deed from the deceased owner, which alleges that the deceased was at the time of the execution thereof much impaired and weakened in mind and body and incapable of properly taking care of property, renders the question as to the condition of the deceased's mind on the date of the execution of the deed material.

3. EVIDENCE — OPINION EVIDENCE — MENTAL INCAPACITY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, providing that the opinion of an intimate acquaintance respecting the sanity of a person may be given, a sister of a decedent, who had been living with her, is competent to give her opinion respecting decedent's mental condition.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 2198.]

4. EJECTMENT — ISSUES — EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY.

Where, in ejectment by a grantee in a deed from one who had acquired a conveyance from the deceased owner, defendant alleged that the deceased owner was mentally incompetent to execute a conveyance, and that the deed to the grantee was without consideration, defendant was entitled to prove that the grantee paid no consideration, and thereby subject the property in his hands to any infirmity attaching to the title of his grantor.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by John P. Doherty against Hanora Courtney. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

Jackson Hatch and Walter H. Linforth, for appellant. Jno. B. Carson and Riordan & Lande, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Action of ejectment, in which plaintiff recovered judgment. The defendant appeals from the judgment, and brings the case up on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

Both parties claim under Catherine Black, who died some months before the commencement of this action. Plaintiff claims under a deed alleged to have been made by Catherine Black to John Pius Murphy on April 11, 1898, and a deed from John Pius Murphy dated March 18, 1902. The defendant claimed the right to possession as tenant of the administrator of Catherine Black's estate. By way of defense, the answer pleaded, among other things, that John Pius Murphy had procured the making of the deed by Catherine Black through undue influence exerted by him upon her, and in this behalf alleged more particularly that at the time of the execution of the conveyance of April 11, 1898, Catherine Black was advanced in years "and much impaired and weakened in mind and body, and incapable of properly taking care of property or property interests"; that at that time the said John Pius Murphy was the spiritual adviser of Catherine Black, and as such had acquired and possessed great influence over her; that, without any consideration therefor, said John Pius Murphy, with the intent of depriving the legatees and devisees of said Catherine Black of their natural inheritance, and by reason of his influence over her, caused her to execute the deed to him. The answer further alleged that the deed from John Pius Murphy to the plaintiff was without consideration.

At the trial the plaintiff made out a prima facie case. The defendant, being called as witness on her own behalf, testified that she was the sister of Catherine Black, had been living on the premises with her sister until the latter's death, and that she had continued to live there ever since. She was then asked the following question: "What was the condition of your sister's mind on the 11th day of April, 1898?" This question was objected to, upon the ground that it was immaterial, irrelevant, and incompetent, and on the further ground "that she claims to hold the possession of the property as the tenant of the administrator of the estate of Catherine Black, who has no standing in court either for the prosecution of an action as against these deeds, or as a defendant in this action." The court sustained the objection, taking the view that the administrator (or the defendant claiming under such administrator) had no standing to attack a deed made by the decedent upon the grounds set up in the answer; that such attack could be made only by an heir or devisee of the decedent. We think this ruling was clearly erroneous. The defendant, claiming the right to possession as tenant of the administrator, was entitled to set up any defense which the administrator could have urged to the action. Under our system of procedure, where legal and equitable remedies are administered in the same tribunal, and there are no special forms of action, a defendant may set up by way of equitable defense any matter which would, if presented by him as the basis of an original bill in equity, have entitled him to a judgment for the relief sought by his answer. The rule has repeatedly been applied to actions of the character of the present one. In Willis v. Wozencraft, 22 Cal. 607, this court said: "A mere equitable title to land, if it is of such a character as entitles the holder to possession in equity, is a sufficient defense under our system of practice to an action for the possession, brought even by the holder of the legal title." See, also, Whittier v. Stege, 61 Cal. 238; Hicks v. Lovell, 64 Cal. 17, 27 Pac. 942, 49 Am. Rep. 679; Hyde v. Mangan, 88 Cal. 319, 26 Pac. 180.

Coming to the particular ground upon which the court below based its ruling, it is now no longer open to question that in this state an administrator or executor may maintain an action to set aside a deed made by his intestate or testator on the ground of undue influence exercised by the grantee. The question was fully discussed in Collins v. O'Laverty, 136 Cal. 31, 68 Pac. 327, in which the court said: "The sole test of the administrator's right of action is the right of the estate to the possession of the property. If the right exists, then the right of action exists; and it will make no difference if, in order to recover property to the possession of which the estate is entitled, it should become necessary to cancel a voidable deed, or otherwise—according to the equity practice—to dispose of an outstanding legal title." It follows that the defendant was entitled to offer evidence in support of the allegations of her affirmative defense above set forth. One of these allegations was that the decedent, at the time of executing the deed, was "much impaired and weakened in mind and body and incapable of properly taking care of property or property interests." The question asked the defendant was relevant to the issue thus raised, and was not open to any of the objections made to it. It is not claimed, and could hardly be, that the defendant, who had testified that she was the sister of the decedent and had been living with her, was not competent, under section 1870, Code Civ. Proc., to give her opinion respecting the mental condition of Mrs. Black. The effect of the ruling was to deprive the defendant of all opportunity of proving matters set up by her in her answer, which, as we have seen, would, if established, have been a good defense to the action.

The court also excluded evidence tending to show that the plaintiff had paid no consideration for the deed to him, and was holding merely as a representative of Father Murphy. This evidence should have been admitted. The defendant was entitled to show that the property in the hands of the plaintiff was subject to any infirmity attaching to the title of his grantor.

In view of the conclusion reached, the other points made by the appellant do not require consideration.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause remanded for a new trial.

L. W. BLINN LUMBER CO. v. McARTHUR (GOULD, Intervener). (L. A. 1,736.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 1, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 28, 1907.)

1. Abatement and Revival—Parties—Substitution.

Where, pending an action on a note and mortgage, they were assigned to decedent and upon his death his estate was distributed to his widow, she was properly substituted as plaintiff, under Code Civ. Proc. § 385, providing that on the death of a party in certain actions the court may allow the action to be continued by his successor in interest: her right of substitution being in no way affected, because neither her husband nor his representative had been substituted as plaintiff.

2. Bills and Notes—Action—Evidence—Weight.

Evidence held to sustain a finding that the note sued upon had not been paid.

3. Same—Burden of Proof.

Where it was conceded that a note was unpaid when sued upon, the burden was upon the party alleging that it had afterwards been paid to prove it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 7, Bills and Notes, § 1695.]

4. Same—Prima Facie Case.

Where the payee sued upon a note and mortgage and afterward assigned it to decedent, decedent's widow, having been substituted as plaintiff, by introducing the assignment and the decree of distribution of her husband's estate to her made out a prima facie case, and nonsuit was properly denied.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by the L. W. Blinn Lumber Company against Charles H. McArthur; Rebecca W. Moore being substituted as plaintiff, and Will D. Gould intervening. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant and intervener appealed to the Supreme Court; and, the case having been transferred to the District Court of Appeal and the justices of that court disagreeing, it comes before the Supreme Court again. Affirmed.

James H. Blanchard and Will D. Gould, for appellant. Miller & Page, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. Appeals were taken to this court by the defendant and the intervener from a judgment for the plaintiff and an order denying a motion for new trial. These appeals were subsequently ordered transferred to the District Court of Appeal for the Second appellate district for hearing and determination. The Justices of that court were unable to agree, and, upon their disagreement, the cause again came to this court.

Upon the hearing in the District Court of Appeal the following opinion, prepared by Gray, P. J., and concurred in by Allen, J., was filed:

"Action upon a promissory note and to foreclose a mortgage given to secure said note. After the suit was commenced, the note and mortgage were regularly assigned to P. R. Moore, and the land mortgaged was conveyed to the intervener, Gould. Subsequently, Moore died, and his estate having been distributed to his widow, Rebecca W. Moore, the latter was substituted as plaintiff in the case. The judgment was for the plaintiff, and the defendant and intervener appeal from said judgment and from an order denying a new trial.

"1. Rebecca W. Moore having, by means of the assignment of the note and mortgage in suit to her husband and the subsequent decree of distribution, regularly succeeded to all the interest of plaintiff in the subject of the action, it was perfectly competent for the original plaintiff to consent to her substitution after her husband's death, and perfectly proper for her to be so substituted as a 'successor in interest.' Code Civ. Proc. § 385. The fact that her husband in his lifetime, and his representative after his death, had neither of them been substituted as plaintiff, in no way affected her right of substitution.

"2. The principal contention of appellant is directed at the evidence, it being contended (1) that the court should have sustained appellant's motion for a nonsuit; and (2) that the evidence shows that the note and mortgage were paid in full on the 29th day of August, 1894, by Gould, and that ever since that date Gould has been the owner thereof. On April 17, 1894, the note in suit, upon which there appears to have been then due $487.29, was assigned to Dr. Moore. On the same date Gould and his wife executed another note and mortgage on another piece of real estate for the sum of $300. The testimony of Mr. Shankland, one of the attorneys for the original plaintiff, shows that he received Dr. Moore's check for $487.29 on said 17th day of April. The transcript of Moore's account with the Farmers' & Merchants' Bank for the said month of April shows clearly, when considered with Shankland's evidence, that this check was applied as the full purchase price of the note and mortgage in suit that day assigned to Dr. Moore; and the said amount was charged to him by the bank. The books of that same bank also show that on the same day Dr. Moore drew out of his account by means of a check the specific additional sum of $300, and Gould's account was credited with exactly $300 that day deposited. This sum of $300 was not drawn out of Gould's account that day, but remained on deposit and was thereafter checked out by him from day to day during the month in small sums ranging from $18 to $100. It is conceded that Dr. Moore held possession of the note and mortgage in suit from April 17th down to August 29, 1894. Gould testifies that on April 17th he paid $187.29 on account of the note here in suit. He also testifies, and a check is introduced in evidence to show, that he paid the whole of the $300 note, and it is shown also, I believe, that the mortgage securing that note was satisfied of record. There is no evidence at all, however, to show that the remaining $300 left unpaid on the note in suit on April 17th was ever thereafter or theretofore paid, except the fact of the possession thereof being in Gould from and since August 29, 1894. But the testimony of Gould, fairly construed, shows that nothing was paid on the note in suit on August 29th, or thereafter. Gould's theory is, as we gather it from a careful examination of his testimony, that the note in suit was held merely as collateral security for the payment of the $300, and that when he paid the latter note he received both notes. The final position taken by him in his testimony is to the effect that he came out of the transaction of April 17th owing nothing on account of the note in suit to anybody, but that it was on that date satisfied and extinguished in fact, but that the mortgage securing it was left unsatisfied and the note left in the hands of Dr. Moore that it might in some way be of benefit to Gould's title to the property upon which the mortgage rested. Standing alone, the fact that the note remained in possession of Dr. Moore after the 17th day of April would tend strongly to show that it was not paid on April 17th. It was for the trial court to determine whether the reasons given by Gould for the note remaining in the possession of Moore after April 17th were satisfactory. Of course, it would be of no value as collateral security if it had been paid on April 17th, and the theory that any portion of it was paid on that date is rendered improbable, not only by the fact that it remained in the possession of Dr. Moore after that date, but also by the peculiar condition of the several bank accounts of Moore and Gould for that month of April. These bank accounts may have also shaken the faith of the trial court in Gould's statement that he paid the $187.29 on the note in suit on April 17th. At the close of business on that date Gould had in the bank considerably over $300, and the state of the account fails to disclose that he devoted any of the money he had in bank to this payment of $187.29.

"The situation is well stated in respondent's brief as follows: 'The essential question in this case is whether Paul R. Moore did or did not loan to Will D. Gould $487.29 on the 17th day of April, 1894. If yes, then plaintiff should prevail on the merits. Both sides agree that on the same day Moore loaned to Gould $300 upon a note and mortgage for that amount, which was afterwards paid and the note and mortgage canceled and satisfied. Appellants claim that this was the only loan made by Dr. Moore, and, necessarily, admit that this was the only loan that was paid back to Dr. Moore. If Dr. Moore made the loan of $487.29, he took an assignment of the note and mortgage in suit as security for it—they passed to Rebecca Moore by decree of distribution of his estate, and she is entitled to foreclose them—and finding 5, which is the essential one as the record presents itself, is justified.'

"I am of opinion that the trial court was justified by the evidence in its conclusion that there were two amounts of money advanced by Dr. Moore, one of $487.29 and the other of $300, and that the former of these sums had not been paid. It is conceded that at the time the suit was commenced the note in suit was unpaid. The intervener in his pleading assumed the burden of proving that it had been paid off and extinguished after the suit was commenced, and of course the burden was upon him to prove payment as alleged. Melone v. Ruffino, 129 Cal. 514, 62 Pac. 93, 79 Am. St. Rep. 127; Roche v. Baldwin, 143 Cal. 191, 76 Pac. 956. The plaintiff had, by the introduction of the assignment of the note and mortgage to Dr. Moore and of the decree of distribution to herself, made out a prima facie case, and the motion for a nonsuit was properly denied.

"The finding that the intervener had possession of the note by reason of his being the attorney for the parties is a finding as to an evidentiary fact, and is not essential to the support of the judgment. The essential finding along this line is the one in which it is found that the note was not paid.

"There was no error in admitting the books of the bank in evidence. McLennan v. Bank of California, 87 Cal. 569, 25 Pac. 760; Pauly v. Pauly, 107 Cal. 8, 40 Pac. 29, 48 Am. St. Rep. 98."

After examining the record and briefs, and in the light of the oral argument made, we are entirely satisfied with the views and conclusions expressed in the foregoing opinion, and hereby adopt it as the opinion of this court.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Ex parte SCHMITZ. (Cr. 1,380.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1907.)

HABEAS CORPUS — NOMINAL RESTRAINT — EFFECT OF PROCEEDING.

Where, on a habeas corpus proceeding, it is shown that the petitioner is under a nominal restraint merely, and voluntarily submitted to for the purpose of making a case, the proceeding will be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Habeas Corpus, §§ 10, 12.]

In Bank. Petition for writ of habeas corpus by Eugene E. Schmitz. Proceeding dismissed.

Campbell, Metson & Drew (J. J. Barrett, of counsel), for petitioner. Wm. H. Langdon, Dist. Atty., and Francis J. Heney, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner, against whom has been found and presented an indictment purporting to charge him with the crime of extortion, seeks his discharge on habeas corpus from the custody of the sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco upon two grounds, viz.: (1) That one of the grand jurors who participated in the finding of the indictment was incompetent to act as a grand juror, by reason of the fact that he had served and been discharged as a juror by a court of record of this state within a year of the time that he was examined and impaneled to act as such grand juror; and (2) that the indictment does not charge a public offense.

Upon the hearing it was made to appear to this court—in fact, expressly admitted by the petitioner—that, being at large upon bail, he had procured himself, immediately before the application for a writ of habeas corpus, to be surrendered to the custody of the sheriff, solely for the purpose of presenting these questions for determination by this court, and that immediately upon the issuance of the writ he gave bail, in the same amount as had been previously required upon the indictment; in other words, that the alleged custody from which he seeks to be discharged was self-invoked and voluntary, submitted to only for the purpose of making a case on habeas corpus. We are unable to see why these circumstances do not bring this case fully within the rule laid down in the case of In re Gow, 139 Cal. 242, 73 Pac. 145. It there appeared that the surrender to the officer was merely for the purpose of suing out the writ, and lasted no longer than was necessary to file the petition and procure the order. It was there declared to be an abuse of the remedy by habeas corpus to apply it in cases where there is no actual imprisonment and no restraint, except that which is invited and voluntarily submitted to, in order that a merely nominal prisoner may resort to the courts for the determination of the validity of an ordinance, or some question of that sort. It was said: "Our conclusion is that such a practice ought not to be countenanced, and hereafter the court will make strict inquiry in this class of cases whether the alleged imprisonment is actual and involuntary; and if it is found to be, as in this case, a merely nominal restraint, voluntarily submitted to for the purpose of making out a case, the proceeding will be dismissed." We deem the rule here declared a most salutary one, entirely in accord with the objects and purposes of the remedy by habeas corpus, and adhere thereto. See, also, In re Dykes, 74 Pac. 506, 13 Okl. 339; In re Dill (Kan.) 11 Pac. 672; Com. v. Green, 185 Pa. 641, 40 Atl. 96; 21 Cyc. 290.

The writ is discharged, and the proceeding is dismissed.

PEOPLE v. O'BRIEN. (Cr. 32.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 1, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—APPEALABLE ORDERS.

Under Pen. Code, § 1237, subd. 3, providing that an appeal may be taken by defendant from any order made after judgment affecting his substantial rights, an order correcting the minutes in respect to the plea, entered by accused charged with crime, is appealable, the order affecting substantial rights.

2. SAME—REVIEW—EXCEPTIONS.

On an appeal from an order refusing to vacate an order correcting the minutes with respect to the plea entered by one charged with crime came up authenticated by the certificate of the trial judge, and showed that the order correcting the minutes was made on the ex parte application of the district attorney. Held, that the order appealed from was reviewable, though it did not appear to have beeen excepted to, since Code Civ. Proc. § 647, provides that an order made on an ex parte application shall be deemed to have been excepted to.

3. SAME—JUDGMENT—RECORD—AMENDMENT.

The record in a homicide case showed that accused entered a plea of not guilty, that subsequently he was brought into court "for sentence," accompanied by his attorney, that he was informed of the indictment against him for murder, and his subsequent withdrawal of said plea, "and of his entry of his plea of murder in the first degree * * * as charged," and that he was asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which he replied that he had none, and that he waived time and asked that judgment be pronounced. Held, that there was enough on the face of the record to show that accused intended to enter a plea of "guilty of murder in the first degree," authorizing the court to correct the minutes on the district attorney's ex parte application therefor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sacramento County; E. C. Hart, Judge.

Charles O'Brien was, on his plea of guilty to the charge of murder, adjudged guilty and sentenced, and he appeals from an order refusing to vacate an order correcting the minutes in respect to the plea entered by him. Affirmed.

Sutherland & Barbour, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

CHIPMAN, P. J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to vacate an order correcting the minutes in respect of the plea entered by defendant.

The minutes show that on October 11, 1882, O'Brien and two other defendants, indicted for murder, were in court, each appearing by counsel. "The indictment presented and filed herein was read with the indorsements thereon and a copy given to attorneys for defendants, and, upon motion of defendants' attorneys, it is ordered by the court that defendants be and are hereby allowed until next Monday at 10 o'clock a. m." —presumably to plead. The minutes then show that on October 16, 1882, defendant, O'Brien, "appears at the bar of this court with his counsel, and the defendant being called upon to plead enters his plea of not guilty." The minutes next show that on November 28, 1882, "the court met pursuant to adjournment," and proceeds: "The People of the State of California vs. Chas. O'Brien et als., Defendant. Convicted of Murder of the First Degree. For Sentence. The district attorney with the defendant and his counsel F. D. Ryan came into court. The defendant was duly informed by the court of the indictment found against him for the crime of murder on the 5th day of October, 1882, of his arraignment and plea of not guilty of murder, and of his subsequent withdrawal of said plea of murder and of his entry of his plea of murder of the first degree on November 28, 1882, as charged in said indictment. The defendant was then asked if he had any legal cause to show cause why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which he replied that he had none, and no sufficient cause being shown or appearing to the court, and defendant having waived time and asked judgment be now pronounced herein. Thereupon the court renders its judgment. That whereas, the said Charles O'Brien has been duly convicted in this court of the crime of murder of the first degree. It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said Chas. O'Brien be punished by imprisonment in the State Prison at San Quentin, Cal., for the term of his natural life. The defendant was then remanded to the custody of the sheriff of the county of Sacramento, to be by him delivered into the custody of the proper officer of said State Prison at San Quentin, Cal." The court, as appears from the transcript, called witnesses who were present at the trial, namely, Mr. C. T. Jones, who was associated with the district attorney, and Mr. William B. Hamilton, clerk of the court, by whom it was shown that defendant "withdrew his plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty of murder in the first degree." The record then sets forth the following: "It appearing to the court that the said minutes in said proceeding as above set forth do not conform to the facts and evidence having been taken and the court being fully advised and satisfied, it is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the record of the proceedings in said cause of the People of the State of California vs. Chas. O'Brien et al., defendants, be, and the same is, hereby corrected so as to read as follows, to wit:" The amended minutes are then set forth, and are substantially the same as the original except that the clause there reading: "The defendant was duly informed * * * of his arraignment and plea of not guilty of murder and of his subsequent withdrawal of said plea of murder, and of his entry of his plea of murder of the first degree on November 28, 1882, as charged in the indictment," was amended to read as follows: "The defendant having heretofore entered his plea of not guilty of the crime of murder as charged in the indictment filed against him, the District Attorney moved the Court that the defendant be permitted to withdraw his plea of not guilty heretofore entered herein and allowed to enter a plea of guilty of the crime of murder of the first degree as charged in said indictment." It will be observed that the amendments consisted of introducing the fact that the district attorney moved the court for leave to defendant to change his plea and the further fact that defendant entered "a plea of guilty of the crime", etc., whereas the minutes formerly read, "plea of murder," etc., omitting the words "guilty of." The judgment followed the phraseology of the minutes as they appear in the original record, omitting the words "guilty of," etc.

The proceedings leading up to the amendment of the minutes were ex parte, no notice thereof having been given defendant or his attorney, and there was no appearance for him. Subsequently defendant's attorney moved the court to set aside and vacate the order correcting the minutes as aforesaid. The motion was denied, and this appeal is from the order. There is an appeal also from the judgment and from the order amending the record of the minutes. The two latter appeals were dismissed upon stipulation without prejudice, it appearing that the appeals were not taken in time.

The attorney-general makes the point that the order denying the motion "to vacate the order of November 25, 1905, cannot be reviewed," for the reason that there was no exception stated against the ruling of the court. An order made upon ex parte application, and an order or decision made in the absence of a party, are deemed to have been excepted to. Code Civ. Proc. § 647. An appeal may be taken by the defendant from an order made after judgment, affecting the substantial rights of the party (Pen. Code, § 1237, subd. 3). See People v. McNulty, 95 Cal. 594, 30 Pac. 963, as to the scope of this provision of the statute. The order affected the substantial rights of defendant. Ward v. Dunne, 136 Cal. 19, 68 Pac. 105. Granting that the order is appealable, and that it is deemed to have been excepted to, it is still urged that it cannot be reviewed because the exception nowhere appears in the transcript. The appeal comes up authenticated by certificate of the judge who heard the motion, as follows: "The foregoing statement was presented in due time, and is correct, and is allowed and settled as correct, and it contains all the evidence taken in said proceeding." While in the certificate of the judge it is denominated a statement, it bears no designation on its face, and is in effect a bill of exceptions in support of the appeal from the order. It contains the proceedings taken by the district attorney on his motion to correct the minutes, the evidence then used, being oral testimony of witnesses who were present at the trial, the minutes of the trial and the judgment of conviction, the minutes as corrected, the order of the court making the correction, the motion to vacate said order and the order denying the same. It clearly appears that the entire record was before his honor, Judge Hart, when he passed upon the motion to vacate, and is sufficiently authenticated. The order authorizing the minutes to be amended is in the record thus authenticated, and as the law deems it to have been excepted to we can see no reason for requiring that the statement should show what the law provides for. The law has, in effect, incorporated the exception into the transcript. Appellant concedes that the judgment was sufficient in form, though not stating the plea of the defendant, and that it was not necessary for the plea to be stated in the judgment. His contention is that "it is void because the judgment roll fails to show any minutes of a plea after the withdrawal of the defendant's plea of not guilty"; that the judgment roll shows an entire absence of the minute entry of any plea contemplated by section 1017, Pen. Code, which plea is essential to the validity of any judgment by the court in a criminal case.

It is also contended that the court erred in amending the record without notice first having been given to defendant. It is undoubtedly the law that where clerical misprision has occurred, of which the record affords the evidence, a court may at any time, on its own motion or on the motion of an interested party, with or without notice, amend a judgment. Scammon v. Bonslett, 118 Cal. 93, 97, 50 Pac. 272, 62 Am. St. Rep. 226. But where an inspection of the record does not show the error, and resort must be had to evidence aliunde, courts will require notice to be given of a motion to amend a judgment to the parties affected thereby. Id. It is a general rule that an application to amend a record should be on notice to the adverse party, that he may have opportunity to show cause against the proposed alteration. 17 Am. & Eng. Ency. Pl. & Pr. 923. But it is also there stated that a record may be corrected with respect to matters of form without notice; also that where the courts have held to the doctrine that a record may be amended only by some matter of record, a nunc pro tunc entry may be made though no notice be given to the opposite party. In People v. Ward, 141 Cal. 628, 75 Pac. 306, the subject of amendments to minutes was considered at some length. In that case notice was given. The court sustained the amendment on the ground that "it satisfactorily appears that the omission was due to the neglect of the clerk, and that the place of imprisonment (which was the only substantial uncertainty) designated by the court in rendering the judgment was the State Prison at Folsom." The question as to the character of evidence competent to show an error in the recorded judgment, was passed over, "for," as the court said, "it is universally established that if the record itself furnishes the means of correction the court may order the amendment without further proof." See, also, Kaufman v. Shain, 111 Cal. 16, 43 Pac. 393, 52 Am. St. Rep. 139.

The question here, then, seems to be this: Does the record in itself show sufficient to justify the amendment as a mere clerical misprision? If the question may be answered in the affirmative, the evidence taken may be disregarded as immaterial and unnecessary in aid of the amendment; for it only established by evidence aliunde what the court could determine without it, namely, that the defendant did in fact plead not guilty of the crime charged. It appears from the record that defendant had entered a plea of not guilty; that subsequently he was brought into court "for sentence," accompanied by his attorney; that he was duly informed of the indictment found against him for the crime of murder, of his arraignment and plea of not guilty of murder, and of his subsequent withdrawal of said plea, "and of his entry of his plea of murder of the first degree on November 28, 1882, as charged in the indictment." It appears further that "he was asked if he had any legal cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, to which he replied that he had none"; that he waived time, "and asked judgment to be now pronounced." It seems to us that there is enough on the face of the record to show that the defendant intended to enter a plea of guilty of murder in the first degree. When he entered a plea of murder it could by no interpretation be said to mean not guilty. He was brought into court "for sentence," the record also stating: "Convicted of murder of the first degree," from which it would appear that some steps had been taken by defendant towards his receiving sentence, upon coming into court, which could only have been done upon a plea of guilty. His declaring that he had no cause to show why judgment should not be pronounced against him, his waiving time and asking immediate judgment for the crime with which he stood charged, his long acquiescence in that judgment, and other facts appearing, all tend to show that he did, in fact, enter a plea of guilty. The proceedings are entirely consistent with this view and are utterly inconsistent with the idea that he pleaded not guilty or entered no plea at all. It is not entirely clear but that, when the whole minute record is considered, the plea, as shown, means that defendant admitted that he had committed murder of the first degree as charged in the indictment, from which it would follow that he was guilty and meant to so plead.

People v. Monaghan, 102 Cal. 229, 36 Pac. 511, is much relied upon by appellant. In that case it appeared that defendant first pleaded not guilty, but withdrew the plea for the purpose of filing a demurrer and having it argued. Later the cause was continued "for defendant to plead." The minutes failed to show that any plea was thereafter entered. When the trial commenced the clerk stated to the jury that a plea of not guilty had been entered, but this was no part of the minutes. The cause went to trial without objection by defendant that he had not pleaded. Evidence was put before the jury, and a verdict of guilty rendered. When called for judgment the defendant objected and moved in arrest of judgment on the ground that he had not been legally convicted. The Supreme Court held with defendant. The features distinguishing that case from this one is that there was no plea and no issue, and it was not claimed that there was. The defendant was put upon his trial without a plea, and it was held error for the reason that there must be a plea preceding the trial. But here there was no trial; defendant withdrew his plea of not guilty, and threw himself upon the mercy of the court by submitting his case on what, we think, was clearly intended to be and was in effect a plea of guilty as charged. The prescribed code plea is: "The defendant pleads that he is guilty of the offense charged." The plea entered was clearly not intended to be "not guilty," for he had just withdrawn that plea. It could not have been intended as a plea of jeopardy nor of former conviction, nor of any other plea open to him but that of guilty. The language used forbids any other conclusion. When he pleaded murder of the first degree as charged in the indictment, the plea could have meant nothing but guilty, for he was, in the indictment to which he referred in his plea, charged with being guilty of murder. In using the language "murder of the first degree," he indicated his intention to plead guilty, for in no other form of plea could he have properly mentioned the degree. In People v. Monaghan, supra, there was no plea of any kind, and no attempt to make a plea; but here was a plea against which the only thing that can be said is that it was an imperfect plea. As was said in People v. Ward, supra, we think that to reverse the order "would be to surrender substance to form, common sense to the most extreme technicality."

The order is affirmed.

We concur: BURNETT, J.; HART, J.

4 Cal. App. 760

LANIGAN v. NEELY. (Civ. 261.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California.
Feb. 6, 1907. Rehearing Denied March
7, 1907; Denied by Supreme Court
April 5, 1907.)

1. BREACH OF MARRIAGE PROMISE — ACTION — PLEADING.

In an action for breach of marriage promise, seduction may be pleaded as an element of punitive damages, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 374, giving a woman a right of action for her own seduction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Breach of Marriage Promise, § 46.]

2. SAME—DAMAGES—EXCESSIVE DAMAGES.

Under the rule that appellate courts will not interfere with an award of damages unless it is so grossly excessive as to shock the moral sense, and raise a reasonable presumption that the jury was influenced by passion or prejudice, an award of $8,000 damages for breach of marriage promise and seduction by one owning property worth $14,000 or $16,500, will not be set aside as excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Breach of Marriage Promise, § 47.]

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—QUESTION OF FACT.

A verdict on conflicting evidence will not be disturbed on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3935–3937.]

4. SAME — HARMLESS ERROR — ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

Any error in admitting evidence in an action for breach of marriage promise, that the plaintiff was "wet nursing" was harmless where the same evidence had been previously admitted.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4161–4170.]

5. Breach of Marriage Promise—Action—Admissibility of Evidence.

In an action for breach of marriage promise and seduction, evidence as to which relatives of the plaintiff knew of the birth of a child to her was admissible.

6. Witnesses — Impeachment — Inconsistent Statements.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 2052, providing that a witness may be impeached by evidence that he has made statements inconsistent with his testimony, but if they are in writing they must be shown him before any question is put to him concerning them, where the defendant, in an action for breach of marriage promise, gave a deposition which could not be used at the trial, it was proper, after showing him the deposition, to ask whether he had not stated therein that when he was a young man he had auburn hair, to contradict his testimony at the trial that it was then dark.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1240.]

7. Same—Cross-Examination.

Where plaintiff, in an action for breach of marriage promise, testified that when she informed defendant of her pregnant condition he advised her to consult a physician, and gave her money to pay the fee, and requested her to write to him the result of the examination by the doctor, and she did so, but received no reply, and defendant in his direct testimony denied any promise to marry plaintiff, denied having been sexually intimate with her, and having given her money to pay the doctor, it was proper to ask him on cross-examination if he had received the letter.

8. Same — Examination — Repetition of Questions.

Sustaining an objection to a question to a witness was not error, where he had in the course of his examination already given the testimony sought to be brought out.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 827.]

9. Appeal—Review—Harmless Error—Exclusion of Evidence.

In an action for breach of marriage promise, the exclusion of testimony as to defendant's reputation for integrity was harmless, where several witnesses had testified that his reputation for chastity and morality was good.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4195.]

10. Evidence — Opinions — Examination of Experts—Hypothetical Questions.

In an action for breach of marriage promise and seduction, where defendant testified that he had never abused himself, had never had venereal trouble or blood diseases of any character except rheumatism, and had never found it necessary to use a catheter or other instrument to open the canal of his organ of generation to pass water, a question to a physician, embracing these facts, and asking whether under such circumstances defendant could perform the act of copulation, was within the evidence.

11. Trial—Remarks of Counsel—Action of Court.

In an action for breach of marriage promise, the court's action in striking out and instructing the jury to disregard the statement of plaintiff's counsel, challenging a denial that he had offered to dismiss the suit if defendant would marry plaintiff and legitimize the child, cured the irregularity.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 316.]

12. Same—Instructions—Requests.

The refusal of instructions is not error, where they are covered by instructions already given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 651–659.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; John Ellsworth, Judge.

Action by Mary Lanigan against David Neely. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Snook & Church, for appellant. Sullivan & Sullivan, for respondent.

HART, J. This is an action for damages for breach of promise of marriage. The case was tried by jury, the plaintiff obtained a verdict for the sum of $8,000, and thereupon the court caused judgment to be entered in her favor in the amount found by the jury. Defendant appeals from the judgment and an order denying his motion for a new trial.

The complaint, after alleging that both plaintiff and defendant are unmarried, their mutual agreement and promise to marry, the violation and breach by defendant of such agreement and promise, and other facts sufficiently well pleaded to render the complaint immune from successful attack by a general demurrer, proceeds in paragraph six thereof: "After said promise to marry was made by defendant, as aforesaid, he seduced and had sexual intercourse with plaintiff. Said seduction and sexual intercourse were brought about and accomplished by means of said promise previously made, through defendant's persuasions and importunities, and by reason of plaintiff's reliance upon the good faith of defendant, in making said promise, and her belief that defendant intended to and would marry her, in pursuance of his said promise." Further, in paragraph 8 it is averred: "By reason of defendant's breach of his said promise to marry plaintiff, and her seduction by defendant, plaintiff became greatly distressed in mind and body, suffered humiliation and disgrace, and will suffer humiliation and disgrace the remainder of her life, became and is now sick and will remain sick for a long time to come, all to her damage in the sum of $25,000." The defendant demurred specifically and generally to the complaint, the demurrer was overruled by the court, and thereafter an answer filed, specifically denying all the material averments of the complaint. Appellant has specified a number of errors (in addition to that claimed in the order of the court overruling the demurrer), involving rulings of the court, insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, or what is tantamount thereto, excessive damages under the evidence as presented by the record, and instructions given and refused. We will take up the points in the order in which they are presented.

Undoubtedly, the theory upon which counsel for respondent drafted the complaint in this action, and, manifestly, the one upon which it was tried by the court below, was that for the breach of a marriage contract, with averments of seduction for the purposes merely of enhancement or aggravation of damages. But appellant contends that the demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, because there is contained therein a misjoinder of causes of action, in that an action ex contractu has been improperly united with an action ex delictu, claiming that if respondent attempted to rely upon her action upon contract, with allegations of seduction only in aggravation of damages, she has failed to accomplish her purpose, because it appears from the complaint itself that the character and manner of the averments of seduction necessarily involve the statement of a substantive cause of action in tort, independent of and distinct from that of contract, upon which she declares in the first count of her pleading. Appellant also contends that, assuming the complaint is not obnoxious to the criticism thus made, and that seduction is therefore well pleaded for the purpose of enhancement of damages, he was nevertheless entitled to the ruling on his demurrer, inasmuch as plaintiff is given, by the express terms of the statute (Code Civ. Proc. § 374), a right of action for her own seduction. This claim has its inspiration in the reasoning of some of the cases cited by appellant, to be hereafter noticed. And it is further claimed that if she be permitted in her action for breach of promise of marriage to allege seduction in aggravation of damages, she is thereby allowed to do indirectly what the law does not permit to be directly done, that is, uniting an action upon contract with an action upon tort. But a much more serious result, which is seen by appellant in pleading seduction in aggravation of damages in an action upon a breach of promise of marriage, is that if she should in such a case obtain judgment, she could still prosecute and maintain her action for seduction, because the judgment in the former treated properly, of course, as an action upon contract, could not be set up in bar of the latter. We have not been able to find, nor have counsel in their briefs cited us to, any California cases which discuss and adjudicate the precise questions thus presented by the demurrer. An instruction to the jury, in Moore v. Hopkins, 83 Cal. 273, 23 Pac. 319, 17 Am. St. Rep. 248, to the effect that "a man who enters into a contract of marriage with a woman with improper motives, and then ruthlessly and unjustifiably breaks it off, does a wrong to the woman for which she is entitled to exemplary damages," was criticised and held to be error, because "there was no evidence whatever in the record to show that the defendant, if he entered into a marriage contract with the plaintiff, intended to make any effort to undermine her chastity, or to do any other improper act of that sort." The court in that case does not decide that allegations in the complaint which would make the quoted instruction pertinent would be proper or improper, but neither does it hold that the matters to which the instruction would relate, and which would be the basis of an action ex delictu if relied upon alone, could not be pleaded in the action for breach of promise in aggravation of damages.

The crux of the whole matter, as appellant views it, seems to be in paragraph 8, and it is charged that therein are contained "substantive averments of the ground of damages resulting from seduction." Is this true? After alleging mutual promises to marry, refusal on part of defendant, etc., appellant is alleged in paragraph 6 to have succeeded in seducing and having sexual intercourse with plaintiff—we construe the allegation in our own language—through and by reason and as the result of said "promise previously made," and that the same were "brought about and accomplished" how? In the language of the paragraph in question, "by means of said promise previously made, through defendant's persuasions and importunities (founded on the promise of marriage), and by reason of plaintiff's reliance upon the good faith of defendant, in making said promise and her belief that defendant intended to and would marry her in pursuance of his said promise." There can be nothing clearer than that paragraph 6 intends to and does allege seduction only in enhancement of damages. And we do not think that an analysis of paragraph 8, keeping in view the averments of paragraph 6, will justify the criticism to which it is subjected by appellant. It, in reasonably clear language, states facts which describe the effect upon plaintiff, resulting from the breach of the promise and the seduction accomplished by means of such promise—facts, it may be said, which common experience teaches would ordinarily be the consequences of such conduct. It merely charges, to paraphrase the paragraph, "that because of the violation of the contract heretofore alleged, and because of the seduction of plaintiff, as the result of the alleged broken contract," plaintiff became greatly distressed in mind and body and became sick, etc. Strike out the allegation of seduction, and still the language of the paragraph that she became "greatly distressed in mind and body, and became sick, suffered humiliation and disgrace," etc., would not necessarily be inappropriate nor without truth, because it would be by no means unnatural that such consequences would flow from the violation of a marriage contract, unintensified by the fact of seduction. The act of seduction alleged against appellant is charged to have grown out of and been the direct result of his promise to marry, and it is reasonably certain from the averments of the complaint that seduction would not have occurred but for the previous promise of marriage. We can perceive no analogy between this case and Lamb v. Harbaugh, 105 Cal. 680, 39 Pac. 56, cited by appellant. There, in the third paragraph of the complaint, plaintiff alleges a trespass upon her real property as a ground for damages. In the fourth paragraph she sets out personal injury as a ground for damages. The court said: "The complaint cannot be sustained upon the ground that the action is brought to recover damages merely for a trespass upon the real property of the plaintiff under circumstances of such aggravation as entitle her to exemplary damages. It is not in terms limited to a recovery for such trespass, but the fourth paragraph thereof contains substantive averments of the other grounds of damage above shown; and that the complaint was not so considered by the plaintiff is shown by the fact that at the trial she offered proof of the injuries to her person, and of the effect produced thereby upon her health, not merely at the time of the trespass, but continuing down to the day of trial."

In the trial of the case at bar, as suggested at the outset of this discussion, the case was treated by the lower court upon the theory that it was an action for a breach of promise, under circumstances of such aggravation as to entitle plaintiff to exemplary damages, and the instructions to the jury upon the question of seduction were given upon the hypothesis that the evidence thereon was to be limited, and confined to a consideration and determination of the question of exemplary damages alone.

The other points urged under the demurrer, that the allegation of seduction in enhancement of damages is not permissible for the reason plaintiff has her right of action for seduction for such injury, and that a judgment secured in a case of breach of promise, with seduction averred in aggravation, could not be offered in bar of an action for seduction, we believe to be, under the authorities, equally as untenable as the first. Some early cases have appeared to hold a different view from that entertained by us on this question; but we believe the weight of authority and the best-reasoned cases sustain our position. It would indeed be a singularly unreasonable rule in pleading and practice, which would prevent full disclosure of all the facts necessarily growing out of and connected with the breach of a contract of the nature of the one under consideration which would show or tend to show the extent of the injury to the complaining party by reason of the violation of the terms of the agreement. We do not assail the position of the Supreme Court of Indiana, in Felger v. Etzell, 75 Ind. 420, cited as an authority by appellant, in the declaration that "illicit sexual intercourse is not the natural, necessary, or even customary concomitant or the result of the mere promise of marriage," nor do we claim that the fact is of itself a circumstance tending to prove such a promise, but we do say that if it can be shown that it was the result of a promise to marry, then there is no conceivable reason, either in law or in logic, why it should not be pleaded and proved as an essential part and element of the injury sustained by the breach of the promise. This practice surely would, without, we think, offending against section 427, Code Civ. Proc., conform to the spirit of the reformed procedure, intended to simplify the practice and minimize the trouble, confusion and expense often attending litigation, and one of whose fundamental and central conceptions was to allow, as far as it could be done consistently with well-established rules of pleading and practice, all cognate matters of difference between the same parties to be litigated and finally adjudicated in one and the same action. It is said in some of the early cases that, although an action upon a breach of promise of marriage is assumpsit in form, it has always, as to measure of damages, been classed with actions of tort. Chitty on Pl. 148, and cases cited. And it must be admitted that the effect upon the complaining party resulting from the injury in cases of breach of promise, unaccompanied by seduction, although the wrong arises primarily through the breaking of a contract, so nearly approximates that resulting from acts of strictly a tortious character, that the former are differentiated from actions of tort more in the degree and extent of the injury than from any actual or intrinsic distinction. Even under the rigorous rules of common law procedure, with its stubborn and unyielding forms and numerous fictions, in an action upon breach of promise of marriage, it was allowable to plead and prove seduction under the promise as an element of punitive or exemplary damages. To now hold that under our modern procedure, distinguished for its simplification of methods for the administration of justice, this cannot be done, must, it seems to us, force the admission that in this respect at least our procedure has made no advance upon that of the common law.

In King v. Kersey, 2 Ind. 402, it was held that in an action for breach of a marriage contract, the plaintiff might prove seduction to enhance damages. In Cates v. McKinney, 48 Ind. 565, 17 Am. Rep. 768, the Supreme Court uses language which would seem to overrule its former decisions on this point. It is there said: "When the cases in this court were decided, a woman could not prosecute an action for her own seduction. Now, by the Civil Code, she can maintain such action. If, in an action for a breach of marriage contract, she can receive damages for seduction also, without alleging it, she can contrary to all rules of correct pleading, evidence and practice, sue upon one cause of action and give in evidence and recover upon two. And if she can unite them in the same complaint or paragraph, she can unite a cause of action upon contract with another founded upon a tort"—citng Parsons on Contracts, 70. But even in that case the court declines to decide whether or not in an action for violation of a marriage contract seduction can be alleged and proved. It says: "All that we need decide, and all that we do decide, is that under a complaint in such case, which contains no allegation of seduction, evidence of that fact cannot be admitted to enhance the damages." Perkins v. Hersey, 1 R. I. 494, supports the view that seduction cannot be alleged to enhance damages in a breach of promise action, because "we have a statute which affords the plaintiff a remedy for the injury thus done her in more appropriate form." Conn v. Wilson, 2 Overt. (Tenn.) 234, 5 Am. Dec. 663, is to the same effect, as are also Weaver v. Bachert, 2 Pa. 80, 44 Am. Dec. 159, and Gring v. Lerch, 3 Atl. 843, 112 Pa. 244, 56 Am. Rep. 314. The case of Gillet v. Mead, 22 Am. Dec. 578, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 193, also cited by appellant, is not in point. That was an action for seduction, for debauching plaintiff's servant, for damages for loss of service. Evidence was admitted of defendant's promise of marriage to her previous to having carnal knowledge of her. The master (plaintiff) was in no way interested in any contract between the female and the defendant. His injury, which rested alone in tort, consisted in the loss of service of the female. He was not and could not be injured in any manner or degree by a breach of the contract of marriage, if any existed. Hence, averments and evidence thereof were immaterial. Judge Parsons, in his work on Contracts (volume 2 [9th Ed.] p. 71), seems to be of opinion that exemplary damages for seduction are not recoverable in an action for breach of promise, and adds, "that by strict rules of law should, we think, be excluded, where the plaintiff was in actual or constructive service, or lived in a state in which the statute law gave her an action for the seduction, and not otherwise."

The case of Felger v. Etzell, supra, relied upon by appellant, was where the trial court struck out of the complaint for breach of promise of marriage allegations of seduction in enhancement of damages. Upon the trial, however, the court permitted the plaintiff to prove that at about the time the defendant promised to marry her, as alleged, they engaged in illicit sexual intercourse. The evidence was admitted upon the theory that the circumstance was one competent to be considered in the determination of the question of whether or not a contract was made by the parties to the action, and in its instructions the court limited the consideration of the fact of seduction by the jury to that question alone, saying that it could not be considered as affecting the question of the amount of the damages which they might assess against defendant. The Supreme Court, upon the authority of Cates v. McKinney, supra, as to the point that the evidence could not be considered in enhancement of damages because the fact of seduction was not pleaded, and upon principle as to the purpose for which it was admitted and to which it was limited by the trial court, reversed the case. We have examined all the cases cited by appellant bearing upon the point under discussion, and, while some of them seem to sustain his view, we yet feel sure of our position that it is not well taken. If it be admitted that the cases reported in 48 and 75 Indiana support the contention of appellant (and we do not concede that they clearly and explicitly do so) then the rule therein enunciated has been subsequently changed and reversed, not only by the Supreme Court of Indiana, but by all the courts of last resort where the precise question has been presented. And we think, as we have before asserted, that the reasoning in the cases cited by respondent upon the point is by far and infinitely stronger and more conformable to principle than that which leads to the other conclusion.

In the case of Haymond v. Saucer, 84 Ind. 9, an action of breach of promise and seduction in aggravation of damages, the court says: "There is some plausibility in the suggestion, that to uphold the instruction results in combining in the same action matters of contract and of tort; but this objection, we think, ought not to prevail. It would exclude the consideration of seduction, also, as an element of damages in such a case, the admissibility of which, when pleaded, this court, as well as others, has often recognized"—citing a large number of cases. In that case the court further says: "The fact that seduction, accomplished under some circumstances, is a crime, is no reason why it may not be the subject of a civil action; and if, instead of making a separate cause of action, the injured party chooses to plead it as a cause for aggravation of damages in a suit for a breach of the promise of marriage, under which it was accomplished, there is no good reason why it may not be done." In Indiana, at the time of the decision in Haymond v. Saucer, there was a statute, similar to our own, authorizing an unmarried female to maintain an action in her own right for seduction. In Spellings v. Parks, 104 Tenn. 351, 58 S. W. 126, upholding the ruling denying the demurrer to a complaint in a suit for breach of promise and seduction, the court said: "This is not error. The seduction is merely alleged in aggravation of damages, and it has been held in a number of our cases that in an action for breach of a marriage contract the plaintiff may give in evidence, in aggravation of damages, that she was seduced by the defendant." In that state was also, when that case was decided, a law giving an unmarried female a right of action for her own seduction. "It is well settled," says the court. in Davis v. Pryor, 58 S. W. 660 (an Indian Territory case), 3 Ind. T. 396, "that evidence of seduction is admissible in aggravation of damages," in an action for breach of a marriage contract. In Poehlmann v. Kertz, 204 Ill. 420, 68 N. E. 467, it is said: "But aside from this consideration, it was competent, under the pleadings, to prove the seduction if it occurred in consequence of the promise. It is permitted, in such a case, to be shown in aggravation of the damages." The court then quotes as follows from Fidler v. McKinley, 21 Ill. 308: "In a case of a breach of promise accompanied with a seduction, the injury is infinitely greater than where there is only a breach of promise." The court proceeds: "Counsel argues that seduction is not the natural result of a promise of marriage. Certainly not; but when seduction follows in consequence of the promise, degradation, loss of character and happiness are the direct result of a breach of that promise. In other words, the injury results from the breach—not the making of the contract." And it is so held in Leavitt v. Cutler, 37 Wis. 46; Giese v. Schultz, 69 Wis. 521, 34 N. W. 913; Musselman v. Barker, 26 Neb. 737, 42 N. W. 759; Fleetford v. Barnett, 11 Colo. App. 77, 52 Pac. 293; Liese v. Meyer, 143 Mo. 547, 45 S. W. 282; McKinsey v. Squires, 32 W. Va. 41, 9 S. E. 55; Osmun v. Winters, 25 Or. 260, 35 Pac. 250. The Oregon statutes allow an action for seduction by an unmarried female over the age of 21 years. Section 35 of the General Laws of Oregon. In the Oregon case cited (Osmun v. Winters) the court said that: "The common-law practice is substantially uniform in admitting such evidence (of seduction in enhancement of damages), and is, we think, based upon sound principles." In Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 219, the opinion of Justice Campbell is so interesting and the reasoning so cogent that we quote therefrom in extenso: "The seduction which is allowed to be proven in these cases is brought about in reliance upon the contract, and is itself in no very indirect way a breach of its implied conditions. Such an engagement brings the parties necessarily into very intimate and confidential relations, and the advantage taken of those relations by the seducer is as plain a breach of trust in all its essential features as any advantage gained by a trustee, or guardian, or confidential adviser, who cheats a confiding ward, or beneficiary, or client, into a losing bargain. It only differs from ordinary breaches of trust in being more heinous. A subsequent refusal to marry the person whose confidence has been thus deceived cannot fail to be aggravated in fact by the seduction. The contract is twice broken. The result of an ordinary breach of promise is the loss of the alliance and the mortification and pain consequent on the rejection. But in case of seduction there is added to this a loss of character, and social position, and not only deeper shame and sorrow, but a darkened future. All of these spring directly and naturally from the broken obligation. The contract involves protection and respect, as well as affection, and is violated by the seduction as it is by the refusal to marry." And the learned justice then meets the claim by appellant here that there is danger, if seduction can be pleaded and proved in such an action, that it would not operate as a bar to a second action by plaintiff for seduction, in the following language: "And it is better for all parties, and more consonant with public policy, that where justice can be fully accomplished in one suit, no one should be driven to begin more than one. And where this rule is respected, there can be no danger of injustice by a second prosecution. The maxim 'that no one shall be twice vexed for the same cause of action' will always prevent any plaintiff from suing twice for the same damages. If they can be recovered in this action under the pleadings, a recovery in this will necessarily be a bar to any future action."

There are many other cases which are in line with those from which we have quoted. We have examined them with care, and find that they clearly and by unimpeachable reasoning sustain the contention of respondent that under our system it is permissible to plead seduction in aggravation of damages in an action for the violation of a marriage contract. We will not take the time to present excerpts from all those decisions, for we think it sufficient to say, finally, that from our investigations of the questions discussed we feel persuaded of the soundness of the rule contended for by respondent, and are further convinced that a recovery in an action for breach of promise where seduction is alleged in enhancement of damages would, if pleaded, be a bar to an action for seduction founded upon the same facts set up in the former suit.

It is urged that the damages awarded to the plaintiff are excessive, and that for this reason the verdict should be set aside. The rule in this state is so well settled by judicial decision that it has become elementary, that the appellate courts will "not interfere in such cases unless the amount awarded is so grossly excessive as to shock the moral sense and raise a reasonable presumption that the jury" in the rendition of its verdict was actuated and influenced by passion or prejudice. Marshall v. Taylor, 98 Cal. 55–63, 32 Pac. 867, 35 Am. St. Rep. 144; Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 386; Harris v. Zanone, 93 Cal. 59, 28 Pac. 845; Wheaton v. N. B. & M. R. R. Co., 36 Cal. 590; Howland v. Oakland C. St. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 513, 42 Pac. 983; Aldrich v. Palmer, 24 Cal. 513. In Lee v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 101 Cal. 118, 35 Pac. 572, it is said: "While the verdict in these cases, as in all others, is subject to review by the court, it will not be disturbed merely upon the ground that the damages are excessive, nor because the opinion of the court differs from that of the jury, but only where it appears that the excess has been given under the influence of passion or prejudice."

But in the case at bar it is argued that because the principal testimony in the cause on behalf of plaintiff was that given by plaintiff herself, and that the same was "squarely contradicted" by that of the defendant, and because, further, the defendant's physician gave testimony tending to show impotency in the defendant and his consequent incapacity to perform the act of sexual intercourse, it is the duty of this court to set aside the verdict. This we cannot do. There is no rule more firmly settled or better understood than the one which removes from within the practice of appellate courts the duty of weighing the testimony or of settling and reconciling discrepancies in the testimony. This duty, under our system, is, happily, committed to the jury who see and hear the witnesses, and who, having thus heard the evidence, must weigh it by the light of all the tests afforded by legal rules, and finally determine the truth concerning the questions in dispute. And when they have thus reached a conclusion in cases upon evidence in which there appears a substantial conflict, their findings are conclusive upon us, and cannot be disturbed. But do the facts disclosed by the evidence justify the contention of counsel that the verdict is excessive? The rule that the pecuniary condition of the defendant may be considered in determining this question is conceded. According to his own testimony, the defendant owned, at the time he is alleged to have agreed to marry plaintiff, money and real property of the aggregate value of $14,009.83. To this amount, it is contended by plaintiff, should be added the sum of $2,500, which defendant claimed to have paid to his nephew. This would bring the extent of his wealth, measured in money, up to a total of $16,509.83. It is insisted that the amount of the verdict, when compared to the total value of defendant's possessions, is so excessive as to warrant us in declaring or indulging the presumption that it was brought about by passion or prejudice. We think that, under all the circumstances of the case as found by the jury the verdict is not excessive in any view of the case, even if the item of $2,500 mentioned is not to be computed in estimating the value of his estate. The injury inflicted upon the plaintiff by the conduct of the defendant is irreparable. The acts superinducing that injury were incomparably reprehensible. We must believe the facts as the jury found them, and, so believing, we do not hesitate to say that there is even no act denounced as criminal of which the meanest of the human family is capable so diabolical and dastardly as the impulse which prompts any man, old or young, in the full possession of his intellectual faculties, to wantonly and ruthlessly rob, by means as false as they were ignominious, a young and inexperienced maiden, without the protecting care and cautious solicitude of a father, and, still worse, the daughter of a life-long friend, between whom and his family the most cordial and intimate social relations had existed, of the richest and most cherished of the traits which go to form human character. Mercilessly thrown out into the world, so to speak, rejected by the man who deliberately and by false pretenses betrayed her, and, thus dismantled of the priceless armor of virtue and honor, and exposed to the scorn and contumely of her friends and acquaintances, and, it may even be added, to relentless humanity in general, is it possible that money damages can repair, in any degree, so grievous an injury? We think the verdict is not excessive. The defendant, advanced in years, and to a point in life where the probability of his living much longer does not exist, with no one dependent upon him for sustenance and support, is still left with a competence upon which he can subsist by the practice of ordinary habits of frugality. If, under these circumstances, he cannot do this, then, in the absence of other features of the record than those urged justifying us in declaring the verdict to be excessive, we must leave him to reap the fruits of his own folly and perfidy. The rule that appellate courts will not disturb the verdict where there is a substantial conflict in the evidence renders it unnecessary for us to take up a detailed discussion of the testimony in this case; yet there can be no impropriety in saying that the record shows much more evidence than merely the testimony of the plaintiff and the "flat contradiction" (as it is put by appellant) of the same by the defendant, as is contended. Indeed, there are many circumstances testified to by the mother and sister of the plaintiff which tend strongly to corroborate the story of the plaintiff. The cross-examination of the defendant revealed weaknesses in his statement, and it may be added that if we felt called upon to search for reasons why the jury discredited the testimony of defendant, we need go no farther than that portion of his testimony in which he declared that he had sold a piece of his realty for $2,500 and had paid the money to his nephew to liquidate, as he termed it, "a debt of honor." He said that this relative had told him in the lifetime of his wife, that the latter had borrowed from him certain sums of money; the exact amount of which he never apprized defendant of. He said that he had never mentioned the matter to his wife, and, when pressed for an answer as to how much the "debt of honor" amounted to, he replied that he did not know how much it was, whether it was $10 or $1,000—but that all that he did know about it was what his nephew had told him. So improbable a story, coming from a man whose intelligence is not impeached, could not be believed even by the most credulous.

Certain rulings of the court are complained of. The mother of plaintiff was asked on her direct examination, "What is your daughter doing?" referring to the time just previous to and about the date of the trial. She replied: "She is wet nursing." This question was objected to. The plaintiff had previously been asked a similar question and returned a similar reply. If there was error in overruling the objection (and we do not decide that there was), the reply of the witness was harmless. The plaintiff was asked: "State, Miss Lanigan, the names of any of your relatives, if there be any, who knew of the birth of this child." Objection to this question was overruled and she replied: "My mother and sister. I haven't seen any of my other relations. I don't know whether they know it or not." In Reed v. Clark, 47 Cal. 198, evidence was introduced that the plaintiff, within a few days after the proposal of marriage by defendant and acceptance by her, had announced the fact of the engagement to a number of ladies with whom she was intimate and whom she invited to attend the wedding. The evidence was objected to but allowed. The Supreme Court, in approving the ruling of the lower court, said: "It cannot be doubted that knowledge of the fact of a marriage engagement by the intimate friends and relatives of a party to the contract, with whom she has frequent and familiar intercourse, would increase in a considerable degree the annoyance and mental suffering occasioned by a sudden discontinuance of the relationship." The fact was offered as an element to be considered in the estimation of damages, and the evidence limited to that point by the trial court. To the same purport is the ruling in Liebrandt v. Sorg, 133 Cal. 572, 65 Pac. 1098. We can see no distinction in principle in the rulings in those cases and the one now under consideration in the case at bar. If, as we have held, seduction may be proved in aggravation of damages, when pleaded, what reason can be suggested why the knowledge of the fact of the birth of the child, claimed to have been the result of the seduction alleged, by other people, offered as an element in the assessment of damages, would not be relevant, material and competent testimony? We know of no reason. The answer of the witness could not, however, in any view, have done the defendant injury, as the mother and sister of plaintiff had previously testified, without objection, that they knew of the fact of the birth of the child, and the answer of the witness only involved a fact of which the jury had already been made cognizant.

Before the trial, the deposition of the defendant was taken at the office of the attorneys for the respondent. The deposition was transcribed, but was not read to the witness and corrected and subscribed by him, required as a prerequisite to its use as a deposition by section 2032 of the Code of Civil Procedure. At the trial, on cross-examination, the defendant was asked as to the color of his hair when he was a young man. In reply he stated that its color then was dark. The purpose of the question was evidently to establish a resemblance between defendant and the child born to plaintiff and which was in court during the trial. Counsel, upon the answer thus given by defendant, then asked him if he did not testify when giving his deposition that his hair, when he was a young man, was of auburn color. The question was read from the deposition, time, place, and persons present being given; but there was no objection to the form of the question or upon any other ground, except that the purported deposition was not one in fact or in law, because it had not been read to the defendant and an opportunity given him to correct it if he so desired, and that he had not subscribed his name thereto. The objection was without merit and the court's ruling thereon eminently proper. "A witness may also be impeached by evidence that he has made, at other times, statements inconsistent with his present testimony; but before this can be done the statements must be related to him, with the circumstances of times, places, and persons present, and he must be asked whether he made such statements, and if so, allowed to explain them. If the statements be in writing, they must be shown to the witness before any question is put to him concerning them." Section 2052, Code Civ. Proc. The document upon which this cross-examination was based was offered to the defendant to read before requiring a reply. That the question propounded was clearly within the rule authorizing the impeachment of a witness is beyond doubt. The late case of Gasquet v. Pechin, 143 Cal. 521, 77 Pac. 481, puts the question beyond all cavil. There are, however, many California cases in support of the correctness of the ruling of the lower court. People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 176, 52 Pac. 307; People v. Bushton, 80 Cal. 160, 22 Pac. 127, 549; People v. Gardner, 98 Cal. 132, 32 Pac. 880; People v. Turner, 65 Cal. 540, 4 Pac. 553; People v. Bosquet, 116 Cal. 75, 47 Pac. 879.

The defendant, according to the testimony of plaintiff, when the latter informed him of her condition, advised her to consult a doctor, and gave her a small sum of money with which to pay the fee. He requested her to write to him from her home in San Francisco the result of the examination by the doctor. In accordance with this arrangement, the plaintiff consulted a physician, and was told by him that she was in a delicate condition. She thereupon addressed a letter to the defendant, imparting to him this information. No reply was made to the letter. Upon cross-examination he was asked if he had received such letter, and was required, against the objection of his counsel, to answer the question. It is claimed that this was not proper cross-examination. We do not think the court erred in its ruling. The defendant had in his direct testimony made denial of a promise to marry plaintiff, denied having been sexually intimate with her, denied having given her money for the purpose of paying the doctor, and, in short, denied in toto all the inculpatory statements against him testified to by plaintiff. The question was in principle the same as if he had been asked if he had not been personally accused by plaintiff of the paternity of the child and had made no reply to the accusation. The plaintiff testified that the letter not only conveyed to defendant the information concerning her condition, as the doctor had diagnosed it, but reminded defendant "that he must now keep his promise [of marriage], as there was no time to lose." If the defendant received such a letter and remained silent under the charges which by inference it contained, then the fact of its receipt and his failure to reply might tend in a degree to contradict his denial of the promise of marriage and seduction, or at least discredit to some extent his testimony. "Great liberality should be allowed in the cross-examination of a witness, for the purpose of testing his accuracy and credibility; and where questions asked appear to relate to facts and circumstances within the general scope of the direct examination, it is error to exclude them." People v. Westlake, 124 Cal. 452, 57 Pac. 465. And "the extent to which the cross-examination of a witness shall be carried is, in some degree, a matter of discretion in the trial court; and its ruling will not be disturbed upon appeal if no abuse of discretion appears." Grimbley v. Harrold, 125 Cal. 24, 57 Pac. 558, 73 Am. St. Rep. 19. We think the question was within the general scope of the direct examination.

On direct examination Dr. Rowell, defendant's physician, was asked: "State whether or not the objective symptoms confirmed the subjective symptoms upon your examination in 1900?" The court sustained an objection by plaintiff to this question. The ground of the objection, that it was irrelevant and incompetent, and not proper redirect examination, was perhaps not well taken, but the court refused to allow the question to be answered because it was a mere repetition of what the witness had already testified to. The witness on direct had fully explained, referring to defendant's alleged impotency, that in his examination of defendant the subjective and objective symptoms of such incapacity concurred; or, in other words, the physical condition of the defendant coincided with what the defendant had told him of his symptoms as they manifested themselves to him. There was no necessity of repeating the testimony, and, while no harm could have come from permitting the answer, we can perceive none in refusing it. A number of witnesses were permitted to testify on the part of defendant as to his general reputation where he resided for chastity and morality. The witness Schmidt, in addition to the question propounded as to his knowledge of defendant's general reputation for the traits mentioned, was also asked, having said that he knew the general reputation of defendant for integrity, whether it was good or bad. To this question the court sustained an objection. Counsel for appellant insists that the ruling was error because the word "integrity" means, among other significations, "moral soundness," which, he says, is a trait involved in the charge of seduction. Schmidt had already testified, without objection, as had several other witnesses, that defendant's reputation for chastity and morality in the community in which he lived was good. Assuming the ruling to be error, which it is not necessary for us to decide here, we do not think it was prejudicial in view of the other evidence admitted directly bearing upon his reputation for chastity and morality. The hypothetical question propounded to Dr Fraser, called as an expert witness for the plaintiff, was within the evidence. The objection was that the question assumed facts not in proof. The defendant was called to the witness stand by plaintiff in rebuttal and asked a number of questions, the answers to which involved information as to whether or not in his lifetime he had ever suffered from any disease of the genital organs, or had in any manner abused himself so as to affect or impair the vitality of those organs. His replies to these questions were to the effect that he had never abused himself, had never had venereal trouble or blood disease of any character, except rheumatism, and had never found it necessary to use a catheter or other instrument to open the canal of his organ of generation in order to pass water. The hypothetical question embraced all these facts and was whether or not, "under such circumstances, and assuming them to be true, that man could perform the act of copulation?" The answer was: "He could, without doubt." There was no error in the ruling on this question.

It is charged that the attorney for plaintiff in the course of his argument to the jury was guilty of misconduct which prejudiced the rights of defendant. Counsel used this language: "We challenge counsel to deny that we offered to dismiss this suit, if the defendant would marry the plaintiff, and legitimize this child." There was no evidence offered or received which warranted the use of the quoted language. It seems to have been used in reply to certain comments made by counsel for defendant in his argument upon matters foreign to the record. It would save much trouble and expense and serious disappointment to litigants if lawyers could practice and acquire an equanimity of temperament which would prevent the exhibition of the inordinate zeal during the trial of a case which often leads to prejudicial error. The language imputed to counsel, and which, in fact, he admits to have used, was wholly without warrant from the record, but we think the court's action in striking it out and immediately instructing the jury to disregard it, cured the irregularity. It is claimed, however, that the irregularity complained of is not properly before the court, because, under sections 657, 658 of the Code of Civil Procedure, when an application for a new trial is made for "irregularity in the proceedings of the court, jury, or adverse party," it "must be made upon affidavits." It is not necessary, in the view we have taken of the point, to decide this question. Objections to certain instructions given by the court involve the points we have discussed, and disposed of against the contention of appellant raised on the court's order overruling the demurrer. It is insisted, however, that the court erred in refusing to give instructions 16 and 20, requested by defendant. We have carefully examined the instructions given by the court, and think the law of the case was fully covered by them. Instructions 24, 25, and 28, which were read to the jury, embrace all the matters contained in the rejected instructions. This was sufficient. We know of no rule of law requiring the court to repeat its instructions upon any point in a case, where the law applicable thereto has already been given in clear and perspicuous language.

We have given the record careful consideration, and have not been able to find any errors prejudicial to the rights of the defendant.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

4 Cal. App. 730

PEOPLE v. YEE FOO. (Cr. 67.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 4, 1907. Rehearing Denied April 5, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—ORDER OF PROOF—DEFENSE—REBUTTAL.

Where, in a homicide case, accused offered evidence in support of the defense of alibi, the prosecution was entitled to call witnesses in rebuttal on the question of alibi.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 1615.]

2. SAME.

Where, in a homicide case, accused offered evidence in support of the defense of alibi that he was at the time of the homicide in San Francisco about 200 miles from the place of the homicide, evidence that on the day following the homicide accused was seen near the place thereof purchasing a railroad ticket, and there boarding a train bound for San Francisco, was admissible in rebuttal to contradict the defense of alibi, though it also showed flight.

3. WITNESSES—IMPEACHMENT—FOUNDATION.

Where a witness on cross-examination was asked with respect to his having made statements to a third person and understood the circumstances of time and place, a sufficient foundation was laid for the introduction of the testimony of the third person as impeaching testimony.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, §§ 1233–1242.]

4. SAME.

Where a witness for accused denied, on cross-examination, that he had attempted by corrupt means to dissuade a witness for the prosecution from attending the trial, or from giving certain evidence, the prosecution was entitled to offer evidence to contradict him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 1267.]

5. CRIMINAL LAW — RECORD — REVIEW—PRESUMPTION.

In the absence of a showing to the contrary, it will be presumed that the court in a homicide case admonished the jury not to converse among themselves nor with any one else on any subject connected with the trial, or to form or express any opinion until the case is finally submitted as required by Pen. Code, § 1122.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2761.]

6. HOMICIDE—MURDER IN THE FIRST DEGREE—PREMEDITATION.

To constitute murder in the first degree, there need be no appreciable space of time between the intention to kill and the act of killing—they may be as instantaneous as successive thoughts of the mind—and it is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by a concurrence of will, deliberation, and premeditation; and where such is the case, the killing is murder in the first degree, no matter how rapidly the acts of the mind may succeed each other, or how quickly they may be followed by the act of killing.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 26, Homicide, §§ 36–38.]

7. CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where, in a homicide case, the court charged that the presumption of innocence "attaches to every stage of the proceeding," and that the burden on the prosecution to prove each fact beyond a reasonable doubt "remains through the entire case," the refusal to charge that the presumption of innocence does not cease at any time during the trial nor when the case is finally submitted, but that accused is presumed to be innocent through the case, and the jury in their deliberations must examine the testimony in the light of that presumption, was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1991, 2011.]

8. SAME—ARGUMENT OF COUNSEL—HARMLESS ERROR.

Where, in a homicide case, the theory of the prosecution was that the killing was the result of an order of a Chinese society known as "Highbinders," and there was evidence that a third person belonged to the society, and that accused was employed by him, and that accused in attempting to prove the defense of alibi attempted to show that he was with the third person at his residence, the argument of the district attorney that the society was an "alibi factory," and that if another person named had been a member and accused and his associate highbinders had killed him on the night of the homicide, and they had gone back from the place of the homicide to the residence of the third person, and had reported to him and given an account of what they had done, accused would not be retained in the employ of the third person for other murders, etc., was not reversible error.

9. SAME—RECORD—REVIEW.

Where the record in a homicide case shows that certain language of the district attorney was excepted to as unsupported by evidence and as prejudicial to accused, but there was nothing to show that the court was asked to strike out the objectionable language, or that it ruled on the exceptions, there was nothing on appeal to review.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2681.]

10. Same—Argument of Counsel.

It is not error for the district attorney in a homicide case to merely refer to the failure of one jointly indicted with accused to testify in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1670–1673.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; George E. Church, Judge.

Yee Foo was convicted of murder in the first degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

W. D. Tupper and Everts & Ewing, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen. (Frank Kanke, of counsel), for the People.

COOPER, P. J. Defendant was charged by the district attorney of the crime of murder in killing one Louie Mong with malice aforethought on the 3d day of October, 1905, in the city of Fresno. After a trial, he was found guilty of murder in the first degree, and judgment was accordingly entered, sentencing him to imprisonment for life. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial.

There was evidence to the effect that shortly after 10 o'clock p. m. of the day named in the information the deceased was shot and killed while in his room in Chinatown in the city of Fresno by the defendant, who had just entered the room accompanied by four other Chinamen, all of whom were armed, and some of whom took part in the killing. After the killing the defendant and the four other Chinamen, who were evidently acting in concert with him, left the room and came out of the stairway of the house into the lighted alley with their guns still in their hands. No claim is made as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict; but it is argued that certain errors of law occurred during the trial to defendant's injury, for which a new trial should have been granted, and of such character as to call for a reversal of the judgment by this court.

The first claim made by defendant is that the court erred in allowing the prosecution to call witnesses in rebuttal upon the question of an alibi relied upon by defendant, who had introduced several witnesses to prove that he was in San Francisco and not in Fresno at the time of the homicide. The claim is made that the testimony so received is not rebuttal, and that it was incumbent on the prosecution to prove as a part of its original case the whereabouts of defendant at the time of the killing, and to make such proof by all the witnesses it intended to call upon the question under any circumstances. In other words, the proposition contended for is that if the prosecution should prove the commission of a crime at a certain time and place by the two or three witnesses who were present, and the defendant afterwards calls 10 witnesses who each testifies to the effect that at the same time the defendant was at a certain room in a certain house in a different place, the people should not be allowed to call any witnesses in rebuttal. If such a proposition could be maintained, the people in many cases would be powerless, and crime would go unpunished. The district attorney might have evidence to show that each of the 10 witnesses was not in the place testified to by them, but in a different place at the time and at the moment of the homicide, and yet the rule contended for would preclude him from showing it. The defense of an alibi is an affirmative one, and, if established, a complete one, and the burden is upon the defendant to prove it. The object of the trial is to get at the truth, and while the rights of the defendant should be always carefully guarded, and the procedure designed for his protection substantially followed, yet the law will not reduce its rules to an absurdity in order to prevent a fair and full investigation by the prosecution. The district attorney had no reason to anticipate the defense of an alibi, and the evidence was competent, and in rebuttal. State v. Lewis, 69 Mo. 92; Commonwealth v. Moulton, 4 Gray (Mass.) 39; State v. Maher, 74 Iowa, 77, 37 N. W. 2; Goldsby v. U. S., 160 U. S. 70, 16 Sup. Ct. 216, 40 L. Ed. 343; Wade v. Thayer, 40 Cal. 584.

One Leu Tun was called by the prosecution, and, under defendant's objection, was allowed to testify in rebuttal that on the 4th day of October, 1905, the day after the homicide, the defendant purchased a ticket at Madera, and there boarded the north-bound train for San Francisco, and that witness went to San Francisco with him on the same train. It is said that the testimony was not rebuttal, but independent evidence tending to show flight of the defendant from the scene of the homicide. The evidence, if true, showed that the defendant was going from the vicinity of Fresno toward San Francisco the day after the homicide. The defendant claimed and endeavored to establish by witnesses that he was at a certain room in San Francisco on the night of October 3d when the homicide was committed. The fact that a little after noon on the following day he was seen to purchase a ticket and board a train at a station north of Fresno, and nearly 200 miles south of San Francisco, tended at least in some degree to disprove the defendant's claim that he was in San Francisco at the time of the homicide. It also tended to prove the theory of the prosecution that he was in Fresno and committed the murder. The fact that the evidence might have tended to prove the flight of the defendant did not make it, for this reason, inadmissible. The main purpose and object of the testimony was to be considered in determining its admissibility. If all evidence should be excluded because it might be objectionable on certain theories for certain reasons, or because it might tend in a more or less degree to prove indirectly some other fact, the administration of justice would be impracticable, and in many cases impossible. The law aims to arrive at the truth upon broader lines and by all legal means which tend to prove the fact under investigation.

Defendant's counsel argues at considerable length that the court erred in permitting evidence tending to impeach defendant's witness, Jue Doe Men, who testified in direct examination that he was at the Chinese theater in the city of Fresno at the very time of the homicide, and that he then and there saw Wong Dock, who is jointly charged with defendant, at the theater. In cross-examination the district attorney called the attention of the witness to a conversation with one Edgar, who was a witness for the prosecution, in which conversation the witness was asked, in effect, if he did not offer, or intimate to Edgar, that he would give him $20 if he would testify that he was not positive that he saw defendant in Fresno about the time of the homicide. The conversation to which the attention of the witness was called, if true, would tend to show that he was an interested witness, and not worthy of credit. It is said that the attention of the witness was not called to the parties present at the time of the alleged conversation. This was not one of the grounds of objection to the question, and if it had been it would not have been a valid objection. The objection on this ground should have been to the impeaching testimony of Edgar when offered. It appears by the record that this was done, and Edgar's testimony objected to upon the ground that the proper foundation had not been laid. The better course would have been to have called the attention of the witness, Jue Doe Men, to the persons present at the alleged conversation, but the omission to do this is not necessarily fatal to receiving the impeaching testimony. The attention of the witness was called to the circumstances of time and place, and it clearly appeared that he understood the occasion referred to, and the conversation to which his attention was directed. He gave his version of the conversation, and denied that he offered Edgar $20. His words were: "I say this way, I say: 'You know darn well Yee Foo never came on train. You see one. You never know him.' I say: 'You know darn well not Yee Foo.' I say: 'I bet you I pick 50 Chinamen, just like workingmen, take them in China theater, you can't pick Yee Foo out.' That is what I told him." If the witness understood the circumstances of time and place, the object of this section of the Code is satisfied. Lewis v. Steiger, 68 Cal. 200, 8 Pac. 884. Where a witness for defendant has attempted corruptly to dissuade a witness for the prosecution from attending the trial, or from giving certain evidence, and denies on his cross-examination that he has done so, the plaintiff is entitled to give evidence to contradict him in this respect. A distinction is made between the right to contradict a witness as to any fact relating to his conduct in connection with the action on trial and the right to impeach him by showing that he is not a man worthy of credit generally. Lewis v. Steiger, supra; People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 Pac. 307; Barkly v. Copeland, 86 Cal. 483, 25 Pac. 3.

The record fails to show that the court admonished the jury at each adjournment, as required by section 1122 of the Penal Code, not to converse among themselves nor with any one else on any subject connected with the trial, or to form or express any opinion thereon until the cause is finally submitted. In the absence of a showing to the contrary we will presume that the court did its duty, and gave the proper admonition at each adjournment. In the case of People v. Coyne, 116 Cal. 295, 48 Pac. 218, it appeared affirmatively that the court did not admonish the jury at a certain adjournment of court, and the court said: "But the error in this regard is technical, and not of that importance to demand a reversal of the judgment and a new trial." In People v. Thompson, 84 Cal. 598, 24 Pac. 384, cited by defendant, it appeared affirmatively that the court did not admonish the jury, and yet the court said: "In the present case no injury appears to have resulted, and there may have been no prejudicial error." In People v. Maughs (Cal. Sup.) 86 Pac. 187, the opinion does state that the record should disclose the fact that the jury were admonished, but the case was not reversed on this point. The learned judge who wrote the opinion in the Maughs Case cites no authority for the statement that the record should disclose the fact of such admonition being given. The only case cited is People v. Thompson, and it expressly states that the court did not admonish the jury.

The court, at the request of the prosecution, instructed the jury as follows: "There need be no appreciable space of time between the intention to kill and the act of killing—they may be as instantaneous as successive thoughts of the mind. It is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by a concurrence of will, deliberation, and premeditation on the part of the slayer; and if such is the case the killing is murder of the first degree, no matter how rapidly these acts of the mind may succeed each other, or how quickly they may be followed by the act of killing." It is seriously urged that the court erred in giving the above instruction, and it is claimed that the Supreme Court expressly so held in People v. Maughs, supra. It is said that the instruction should have read: "It is only necessary that the act of killing be preceded by and the result of a concurrence of will," and so forth, and that the omission of the words "result of" is fatal, because under the instruction as given a killing, which was not the result of deliberation and premeditation, but which had at any time been preceded by it, would be murder in the first degree. The argument would be plausible in the case of a killing in a sudden quarrel or heat of passion, or under circumstances that might authorize the jury to find a verdict of manslaughter or murder in the second degree, but in this case there is no pretense of any evidence that would justify any such verdict. The defendant had left San Francisco, armed himself, and with four associates entered the room of deceased and began shooting, and without any attempt at justification killed the deceased. There was no question of self-defense. There was no conflict as to who began the shooting. There was not even a word said by the deceased to justify the defendant in becoming angry at him. But aside from this the defendant's counsel did not insert in their brief two very important sentences which immediately precede the instruction. This part of the instruction, which must be read with it and as a part of it, is as follows: "The intent to kill must be the result of deliberate premeditation. It must be formed upon a pre-existing reflection, and not upon a sudden heat of passion sufficient to preclude the idea of deliberation." By this the jury are expressly told that the killing must be the result of deliberate premeditation. We cannot conceive that a reasonable person of common understanding would be misled by this instruction as given. An instruction identical with the one complained of here was given in People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093, as appears by the transcript in that case. It was approved by the court in bank. In People v. Weber (Cal. Sup.) 86 Pac. 671, the instructions were approved and held not to be erroneous, and the transcript in that case shows an instruction in the same language as the one complained of here. The same instruction in effect was approved in People v. Nichol, 34 Cal. 215; People v. Iams, 57 Cal. 115; People v. Williams, 43 Cal. 344. In the Maughs Case there was testimony that the defendant in self-defense shot decedent, a young and vigorous man, his physical superior, who was making an assault upon him with a deadly weapon. The case was reversed upon several grounds, and not solely upon the instruction omitting the words "result of." Not only this, but the instruction was not preceded by language similar to that quoted as part of the instruction in this case. We, therefore, are not disposed to extend the doctrine of the Maughs Case beyond its own facts, and we apprehend there will be few cases in which it cannot be distinguished.

The court refused to give, at the request of the defendant, the following instruction: "The presumption of the defendant's innocence does not cease at any time during the taking of the testimony or of the argument, nor does it cease when the case is finally submitted to you for your consideration, but this defendant is presumed to be innocent all through the case, and, in your deliberations in the jury room, you are to examine the testimony in the light of that presumption." The instruction might well have been given, but the failure to give it is not such error as to justify a reversal of the case. The jury were elsewhere told that the presumption of innocence "attaches to every stage of the proceeding," and that the burden is upon the prosecution to prove each material fact beyond a reasonable doubt and to a moral certainty, and that this burden "remains through the entire case."

We have examined the other alleged errors as to giving and refusing instructions, and find no occasion for discussing them separately. The instructions as a whole gave to the jury a full and fair statement of the law pertaining to each and every phase of the case.

Counsel have devoted a great part of their brief to discussing certain remarks made by the district attorney in his address to the jury. We have carefully read the record and the briefs, and conclude that the matter to which our attention is called would not justify a reversal of the case. District attorneys, in their zeal to obtain convictions, often overstep the proper bounds, and by intimation, innuendo, or statement, get before the jury matters not in evidence. When such course has been willfully pursued, or where something is stated and represented as a fact, and the statement is damaging and not borne out by the record, the courts of appeal have not hesitated to reverse the case and grant a new trial. But in the argument of a case, where counsel has become zealous in his cause, and upon his own view of the case works his mind up to believe certain things, he is apt to exaggerate and draw upon his imagination. We apprehend that this is well known to juries, and for this reason it would have to be a clear case of such misconduct on the part of the district attorney to justify a reversal. In the case at bar it is evident that the theory of the district attorney was that the killing was the result of a decree or order of the Highbinders, or of a society known as the "Bing Kung Tong." There is evidence that one Jake Num, living at 41 Sullivan alley, in the city of San Francisco, belonged to the Bing Kung Tong. One Hammel was employed as his bodyguard. Defendant was the cook employed by Jake Num. Other Chinamen were there, and it was at this place, 41 Sullivan alley, where defendant attempted to locate himself at the time of the homicide by the testimony of several witnesses. The district attorney, after referring to the society and what he called "the alibi factory," used the language of which most complaint is made, and which appears the most objectionable, which is as follows: "Suppose Lew Suey had been a member, and Yee Foo and his associate Highbinders had killed him on that evening, and they had gone back, as he did go back, by a conveyance to Madera, and from there to San Francisco, and had reported to Jake Num and given an account of their stewardship, and he said: 'What have you done—killed Louie Mong?' 'We killed him.' 'Is that all?' 'Well, there was another fellow there, and we thought we best kill him.' 'Yes; but who was he?' 'Why, it was Lew Suey, a member of the Bing Kung Tong.' Now, I don't suppose that Yee Foo would be retained in the employ of Jake Num for other murders if, when he goes out to do his bidding to kill one man of the Hip Sing Tong, that he at the same time, and simply for the purpose of covering up his tracks, kills a man of the Bing Kung Tong, one of their own members."

It is evident that the district attorney was partly drawing upon his imagination by way of illustration. He finally said, "Now, I don't suppose Yee Foo would be retained in the employ of Jake Num for other murders if," etc. Defendant appeared from the testimony to have been in the employ of Jake Num. The evidence justified the district attorney in claiming that defendant committed murder in the case in which he was tried. As to whether or not he would be retained for other murders had reference to the future. He did not accuse the defendant of having ever committed any specific crime other than the one for which he was being tried. He did not state anything as a fact against defendant that was not in evidence. In the leading case of Tucker v. Henniker, 41 N. H. 323, the court said: "The right of discussing the merits of the case, both as to the law and the fact, is unabridged. The range of discussion is wide. He may be heard in argument upon every question of law. In his addresses to the jury it is his privilege to descant upon the facts proved or admitted in the pleadings; to arraign the conduct of parties; impugn, excuse, fortify, or condemn motives, as far as they are developed in the evidence; assail the credibility of witnesses, when it is impeached by direct evidence, or by the inconsistency or incoherence of their testimony, their manner of testifying, their appearance on the stand, or by circumstances. His illustrations may be as varied as the resources of his genius, his argumentation as full and profound as his learning can make it, and he may, if he will, give play to his wit, or wings to his imagination." This case was referred to and approved in People v. Molina, 126 Cal. 505, 59 Pac. 34. In People v. McMahon, 124 Cal. 436, 57 Pac. 224, the district attorney, after speaking of the defendant as "Old Harris, the whiskey seller," said that he "ought to be in the penitentiary," and the court held that the language was not sufficient to call for a reversal of the case. In People v. Wheeler, 65 Cal. 77, 2 Pac. 892, it was held not to be error when the district attorney said to defendant: "You sought this trouble with him and made a cowardly attack on him." In People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 159, 72 Pac. 965, the language of the district attorney was (referring to defendant): "When this foul fiend of hell sent Trewella to his maker, the motive came from a heart as black as the crime committed." It was held not to constitute error. In People v. Soeder (Cal. Sup.) 87 Pac. 1016, the remark was, "This man Leon Soeder would cut another man's throat any day in the week, whether he wanted to marry Catherine Flatley or not," and it was held not to constitute error. In People v. Weber, supra, the Attorney General stated his solemn belief in the guilt of defendant, and it was claimed that he committed error in so doing. The court said: "A prosecuting officer, therefore, has the right to state his views, his beliefs, his conviction as to what the evidence establishes." See, further, People v. Romero, 143 Cal. 460, 77 Pac. 163; People v. Salas (Cal. App.) 84 Pac. 295; Hawkins v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 71 S. W. 756; State v. Millmeier, 72 N. W. 275, 102 Iowa, 692.

We have discussed the latter point upon its merits, but we might well have held the remarks not subject to review for another reason. The record merely shows that the language of the district attorney "is excepted to as unsupported by any evidence, and as prejudicial to the substantial rights of the defendant." The court was not asked to strike out the objectionable remark, nor does it appear that the court ruled upon the exception. It is but fair to require defendant's attorney, in case of objectionable remarks by the district attorney, to call the court's attention to them then and there, and invoke the aid of the court to prevent the remarks from injuring the defendant, before he will be allowed to urge the matter as error in this court. In such case this court will not hold the remark error upon which to reverse the case. People v. Shears, 133 Cal. 159, 65 Pac. 295; People v. Beaver, 83 Cal. 419, 23 Pac. 321; People v. Ah Fook, 64 Cal. 383, 1 Pac. 347; People v. Kramer, 117 Cal. 650, 49 Pac. 842; Lunsford v. Dietrich, 93 Ala. 565, 9 South. 308, 30 Am. St. Rep. 79.

There was no error in the reference of the district attorney to the failure of Wong Dock, who was jointly charged with defendant, to testify in the case. No reference was made to the failure of the defendant to testify, and no reason occurs to us why the remark was not legitimate argument as to a codefendant. The law does not exempt a defendant, who is jointly charged, from being a witness either for or against his codefendant. Ex parte Stice, 70 Cal. 51, 11 Pac. 459; People v. Plyer, 121 Cal. 162, 53 Pac. 553. If such codefendant should be called, and should refuse to testify on the ground that his evidence might tend to incriminate himself, that would present a different question. Wong Dock was a competent witness, and was in the county jail, and subject to the process of the court. He could have been called by the prosecution or by the defendant. The cases cited by defendant were most of them where the law, under which the decision was rendered, makes the wife, or husband, or codefendant, an incompetent witness. Of course, if the law were such that Wong Dock was prohibited from being a witness, the cases cited would apply, and there would be much reason for following them. The case principally relied upon by defendant (People v. Smith, 121 Cal. 355, 53 Pac. 802) is not in point. There the district attorney, after commenting on the fact that defendant had not called John Smith, his brother, who was present at the shooting, continued, after objection was made, and said: "The defense is afraid of it, or they would never squeal;" and again, after a further objection was made, the district attorney said: "The presumption of the law is that if John Smith had testified before you gentlemen as to the facts in this case—the presumption of the law is that his testimony would have been adverse to the defense." The defendant's counsel, objecting to the statement of the district attorney, asked the court to instruct him not to pursue it, and the court overruled the objection, and apparently approved the conduct of the district attorney, and told defendant's counsel not to "interrupt him any more." The court below, by its rulings, had, as the Supreme Court said, "impliedly told the jury that both the statement of fact and the deduction made by the district attorney were proper matters for their consideration." In the case at bar there was nothing said to the jury as to a presumption from the failure to call Wong Dock. The court's attention was not called to the matter, and no ruling made. The defendant merely excepted to the statement. That it is not error for a prosecuting attorney to refer to the fact that a codefendant has not been called to testify has been held in State v. Mathews, 98 Mo. 125, 10 S. W. 144, 11 S. W. 1135. See, further, State v. Millmeier, 72 N. W. 275, 102 Iowa, 692; United States v. Candler (D. C.) 65 Fed. 308; Commonwealth v. McCabe, 39 N. E. 777, 163 Mass. 98; Commonwealth v. Clark, 14 Gray (Mass.) 367; Hall v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 22 S. W. 141.

We have carefully read the affidavits in regard to newly discovered evidence. The main portion of them relates to statements as to evidence that would be cumulative. Several of them relate to statements that could only be admissible by way of impeachment. There were counter affidavits, and the learned judge who tried the case considered them in the light of all that had occurred during the trial. The court does not appear to have abused its discretion in denying the motion on this ground. People v. Rushing, 130 Cal. 449, 62 Pac. 742, 80 Am. St. Rep. 141; People v. Warren, 130 Cal. 683, 63 Pac. 86; People v. Clarke, 130 Cal. 642, 63 Pac. 138; People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169; People v. Weber, supra.

ELLIOTT v. CLARK. (Civ. 330.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 8, 1907.)

TRUSTS—CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS—ESTABLISHMENT—ACTION—LACHES.

Where a complaint alleged that plaintiff's intestate gave defendant's intestate a sum of money to be invested for plaintiff's intestate, and that defendant's intestate purchased real estate, taking title in his own name, and it was sought to enforce a trust, but it appeared that the transaction occurred 45 years before the bringing of the action, the complaint was demurrable for laches.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trusts, §§ 568–573.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by F. A. Elliott, as administrator of the estate of Ada M. Hudson, deceased, against Charlotte K. Clark, as special administratrix of the estate of George Hudson, deceased. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

M. C. Hassett and D. H. Whittemore, for appellant. Wm. H. Chapman and R. F. Mogan, for respondent.

HALL, J. Appeals from judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of Ada M. Hudson, deceased, brought this action against Charlotte K. Clark, as special administratrix of the estate of George Hudson, deceased, to obtain a decree that certain real property, the legal title to which was in said George Hudson at the time of his death, was acquired and held by him in trust for Ada M. Hudson, and for her estate since her death, and for an accounting of the rents, issues, and profits of said property. Defendant demurred to the complaint on the ground that the complaint did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The court overruled the demurrer, and defendant now urges that the court erred in so doing, and we think this contention must be sustained. The real point of the demurrer is that the complaint upon its face shows such laches on the part of plaintiff and his intestate as to bar any right of action upon the matters set forth as plaintiff's cause of action. That this defense may be raised by general demurrer to the complaint where the laches is apparent upon the face of the complaint is well settled in this state. Kleinclaus v. Dutard, 147 Cal. 245, 81 Pac. 516; Bell v. Hudson, 73 Cal. 285, 14 Pac. 791, 2 Am. St. Rep. 791.

This action was commenced on the 16th day of June, 1899. It is alleged in the complaint that Ada M. Hudson and George Hudson intermarried on the 21st day of December, 1853, and continued to be husband and wife until the death of Ada M. Hudson, which occurred on the 17th day of May, 1897. George Hudson died March 12, 1898. It is further alleged that prior to the said marriage Ada M. Hudson did deliver to George Hudson the sum of about $4,000 to be invested for her by him; that he did, on the 21st day of November, 1853, purchase a certain piece of real estate, and as a part of the purchase price thereof paid the said $4,000, but took the title thereto in his own name; that he thereafter sold said property for $13,000, and, with the consent of his said wife, invested the proceeds in real estate, and thereafter in various ways invested her money, so that when he died he held in his own name several described pieces of real property. It is alleged "that, as a portion of the consideration for the conveyance to him of all of said real property so owned by him at the time of his death, the said George Hudson did pay and deliver the said moneys, and the accumulations thereof, of said Ada M. Hudson, so delivered to him by said Ada M. Hudson in trust to invest the same for her use and benefit." In other words, it is charged that a portion of the property held by George Hudson at the time of his death was purchased with proceeds arising from the $4,000 delivered to him by Ada M. Hudson in 1853. It is further alleged that neither said George Hudson nor the defendant ever rendered an accounting "of such moneys received by said George Hudson as aforesaid." It is thus seen that plaintiff is endeavoring to obtain the aid of a court of equity to establish and enforce a trust and claim growing out of a transaction that occurred more than 45 years before the bringing of the action; the action being brought after both parties to the original transaction have died.

We think the facts set forth in the complaint bring this case within the rule laid down in Kleinclaus v. Dutard, supra, where the defense of laches, raised by demurrer to a complaint to enforce an alleged trust growing out of a transaction 35 years old, was sustained. In this latter case the suit was brought by the brother and sister of Hypolite Dutard, and the administratrix of the estates of the father and mother of said Hypolite Dutard, against the executors of the will of said Dutard. It was alleged that on the death of the father of said Dutard in 1865 he took possession and charge of a produce business of the father, in trust to manage and conduct the same for the benefit of his mother, brothers, and sisters, and himself. He managed the business until the death of the mother in 1875, and then again repeated his promises to manage and conduct the business and property for the benefit of his brothers and sisters and himself. It was expressly alleged that "he never denied or repudiated said trust or his said agreements and promises, but always kept and lived up to them"; that "he did always, from his father's death until his death, admit and acknowledge his said promises; and that he always promised to account and pay over the respective shares whenever the same were demanded." It was also in terms alleged that he had never accounted or paid over to any of the beneficiaries anything, except that he had in part supported his mother during her life. It appeared that from the proceeds of the original business Dutard accumulated a large fortune. It was held that a court of equity in such a case should refuse to entertain the action by reason of the laches of plaintiffs. It was there said: "Following the maxim that 'equity aids the vigilant and not those who slumber on their rights,' it has been universally declared that only conscience, good faith, and reasonable diligence can call a court of equity into activity, and that, entirely independent of any statutory period of limitations, stale demands will not be aided, where the claimant has slept upon his rights for so long a time, and under such circumstances as to make it inequitable to enter upon an inquiry as to the validity thereof. Where such is the condition, the demand is, in a court of equity, barred by laches. * * * The doctrine of laches may be invoked in every class of cases, even in the case of an express trust."

In the case at bar the alleged trust arose out of a transaction occurring more than 45 years before the bringing of the action, and after both parties to the original transaction were dead. The alleged trust arises out of the investment of $4,000 belonging to Ada M. Hudson, who was then Mrs. Elliott, in a piece of property bought by George Hudson in his own name, and the entire purchase price of which is not given in the complaint. It is simply alleged that the $4,000 was paid "as part of the purchase price of the said real property." If this were true, a resulting trust arose in favor of Ada M. Hudson to an interest in said property in the proportion that $4,000 bore to the entire purchase price of the property. It is next alleged that the property was subsequently sold for $13,000, and the proceeds of such sale again invested by said George Hudson. Under the allegations of the complaint some part of that $13,000 was presumptively the property of George Hudson. It is next alleged that George Hudson in various ways did invest the money of Ada H. Hudson, and was at the time of his death the owner of five several pieces of land, a portion of the purchase price of which was paid out of the money delivered by her to him and the accumulations thereof. From the whole complaint it is apparent that the court could only arrive at the respective rights of the parties by going into an investigation of the particulars of purchases and sales of property covering a period of over forty years.

Both parties to the original transaction, out of which plaintiff's alleged claim arose, being dead, it is manifest that it would be practically impossible for a court at this late day to do complete justice. This is a ground for a court of equity to refuse relief. Story's Eq. Jurisprudence, § 1520a; Kleinclaus v. Dutard, supra; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 105.

We think the complaint upon its face shows such laches as to bar any right of action in plaintiff, and the demurrer should have been sustained. The conclusion to which we have come on this point makes it unnecessary to discuss the question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the findings of the court.

The judgment and order are reversed, and the cause remanded, and the court directed to sustain the demurrer.

WILLIAMS v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO.

(L. A. 1,711.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1907.)

1. Appeal — Record — Review — Presumptions.

Where, in an action for trespass, a demurrer was sustained to an amended complaint on the ground that limitations had barred the action, if the original complaint was filed within the period fixed by statute for bringing the action, the burden is on plaintiff on appeal to make that fact appear in the record.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 3670.]

2. Limitation of Actions — Trespass — Accrual of Cause.

Where defendant company constructed a railroad on plaintiff's land without commencing condemnation proceedings, the injury was of a permanent nature, the entire cause of action for damages accruing therefor when the trespass was committed, and hence plaintiff's cause for damages brought four years later was barred, under Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 2, providing that an action of trespass must be brought within three years after accrual of the cause of action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 303.]

3. Same.

The fact that a complaint in an action against a railroad company for damages for trespass prays also for an injunction against the railroad company does not change the action from one for trespass to one governed by some other period of limitation.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by A. B. Williams against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. A. Storke, for appellant. Henley C. Booth, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. A demurrer to an amended complaint was sustained, and, on plaintiff's declining to amend, judgment was entered in favor of the defendant. From this judgment, the plaintiff appeals.

The amended complaint was filed on March 23, 1904. It alleged that plaintiff was the owner of a parcel of land in the town of Lompoc, extending along and to the center line of Laurel avenue, a public highway; that on January 1, 1900, while plaintiff's predecessor in interest was the owner of the property, the defendant, a railroad corporation, without the consent of the owner, and without any condemnation proceedings, had entered upon the part of said land within Laurel avenue, and laid a railroad track thereon; that ever since said last-named date the defendant had operated its railroad over said track, and occupied said lands within the lines of the street, to the exclusion of the plaintiff, thereby obstructing said street, and depriving the plaintiff of access and approach to the street, and diminishing the value of his premises in the sum of $600. The prayer was for judgment for $600 damages, "or that the defendant be permanently enjoined from operating said railroad along said street." The demurrer was based on various grounds, but it will not be necessary to consider any but those setting up the bar of the statute of limitations. The principal provisions pleaded in the demurrer were sections 335, 338, subd. 2, and section 339, subd. 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The complaint alleges a trespass upon plaintiff's land. Under subdivision 2 of section 338, an action for trespass upon real property must be commenced within three years after the accruing of the cause of action. If the cause of action here sued upon accrued at the date of defendant's entry, it would seem to fall within the purview of this statute, since more than four years have elapsed between the date of such entry and the filing of the amended complaint. (The record as presented does not contain the original complaint, nor show the date of its filing. If such original complaint was filed within the three years, it was incumbent upon the appellant, who alleges error, to make that fact appear.) The appellant seeks to avoid the bar of the statute by the contention that, since the injury complained of (viewing it either as a mere trespass, or as a trespass constituting a nuisance) was in its nature continuing, a new cause of action arose at each moment of its continuance, and that successive actions might be brought, in each of which the plaintiff might recover damages accruing up to the time of the commencement of the action. This rule is properly applicable in cases where the injury or trespass is temporary in character, since in such cases it is not presumed that the wrongful conduct will be continued. The plaintiff in such cases can recover only the damages which have accrued up to the institution of the action. 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 684. It follows that an action may be brought at any time to recover the damages which have accrued within the statutory period, although the original trespass occurred before that period, provided that the plaintiff has not permitted such time to elapse as will vest in the defendant a right by prescription. On the other hand, where the injury or trespass is of a permanent nature, all damages, past and prospective, are recoverable in one action, and the entire cause of action accrues when the injury is inflicted or the trespass committed. 8 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) 684. As this court said in Beronio v. S. P. Co., 86 Cal. 415, 24 Pac. 1093, 21 Am. St. Rep. 57: "Whenever by one act a permanent injury is done, the damages are assessed once for all." Civ. Code, § 3283. The action must consequently be commenced within the statutory period after the doing of the wrongful act. Indianapolis, etc., R. R. Co. v. Eberle (Ind.) 11 N. E. 457; Strickler v. Midland R. R. Co., 25 N. E. 455, 125 Ind. 412; Stodgill v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Co., 5 N. W. 495, 53 Iowa, 341;

Powers v. Council Bluffs, 45 Iowa, 652, 24 Am. Rep. 792; Town of Troy v. Cheshire R. Co., 23 N. H. 83, 55 Am. Dec. 177; Conlon v. McGraw, 33 N. W. 388, 66 Mich. 194. See, also, Daneri v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 122 Cal. 507, 55 Pac. 243.

The injury complained of in this instance is the construction and operation of a steam railroad. The great weight of authority is to the effect that such an act is permanent in its nature, and an action to recover damages for the injury inflicted thereby must be commenced within the statutory period after the original infliction of the injury. Frankle v. Jackson (C. C.) 30 Fed. 398; City of Denver v. Bayer, 2 Pac. 6, 7 Colo. 113; Railroad Co. v. Loeb, 8 N. E. 460, 118 Ill. 203, 59 Am. Rep. 341; Doane v. Railway Company, 46 N. E. 520, 165 Ill. 510, 36 L. R. A. 97, 56 Am. St. Rep. 265; Rosenthal v. Railway Company, 15 S. W. 268, 79 Tex. 325; Railway Company v. Matthews, 10 South. 267, 99 Ala. 24, 14 L. R. A. 462; Railway Company v. Lockwood, 15 South. 327, 33 Fla. 573; Railway Company v. O'Neill, 78 N. W. 521, 58 Neb. 239; Strickler v. Midland Railway Company, supra; Stodgill v. C., B. & Q. R. R. Company, supra; Town of Troy v. Cheshire R. R. Company, supra. In Robinson v. Southern California Railway Company, 129 Cal. 8, 61 Pac. 947, it was held that an action to recover damages for a wrongful entry by a railroad company upon the land of plaintiff, and the construction of its railroad thereupon, without proceedings for condemnation, and without plaintiff's consent, is barred if not commenced within three years after the road was built and operated. Upon the principle declared in these cases, which we think to be sound, the demurrer was properly sustained. It is true that there are authorities laying down a contrary rule. Prominent among them is a line of New York cases, of which Uline v. Railroad Company, 101 N. Y. 98, 4 N. E. 536, 54 Am. Rep. 661, and Galway v. Railroad Company, 128 N. Y. 132, 28 N. E. 479, 13 L. R. A. 788, are examples. These cases rest upon the proposition that "no action at law can be maintained by an owner to recover prospective damages for injuries inflicted upon real property," a proposition which is not in accord with the law of this state where the injury complained of is permanent in character. Civ. Code, § 3283; Beronio v. S. P. Company, supra. The rule of these New York cases, says the Supreme Court of the United States, "has not prevailed in analogous cases decided in other jurisdictions." N. Y. E. R. R. Company v. Fifth National Bank, 135 U. S. 433, 10 Sup. Ct. 743, 34 L. Ed. 231. The cases of Hopkins v. W. P. R. R. Co., 50 Cal. 190, and Ford v. Santa Cruz R. R. Co., 59 Cal. 290, also seem to decide that in a case of this character only the damages accruing up to the time of the commencement of the action can be recovered. While these cases have not been in terms overruled, the later decisions above referred to are inconsistent with them, and they cannot be regarded as declaring the law of this state in the particular under discussion. It may be remarked that the plaintiff himself regarded and treated the injury here alleged as permanent in character. This is shown by the allegation that the acts of the defendant have diminished the value of plaintiff's premises in the sum of $600, the amount sought to be recovered. This was evidently intended to show a permanent injury to the land, and not merely damage sustained up to the time of the filing of the complaint.

The fact that an injunction is sought as an alternative to the prayer for damages does not affect the conclusions above reached. The provisions of our Code relative to limitation of actions make no distinction between equitable and legal proceedings. Boyd v. Blankman, 29 Cal. 19, 44, 87 Am. Dec. 146. Under our system there is but one "form of civil action." Code Civ. Proc. § 307; Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 255, 10 Pac. 674. The sections providing periods of limitation refer to actions for the enforcement of various rights, and are to be applied "so as to make the right sought to be enforced, and not a form of procedure, the test as to whether or not the statute applies." Redwood County v. W. W. & St. P. L. Co., 40 Minn. 512, 41 N. W. 465, 42 N. W. 473; Bristol v. Washington County, 177 U. S. 133, 20 Sup. Ct. 585, 44 L. Ed. 701. "The nature of the cause of action, and not the form of the action, determines the applicability of the statute of limitations." Miller & Lux v. Batz, 131 Cal. 402, 63 Pac. 680; Murphy v. Crowley, 140 Cal. 141, 73 Pac. 820. No doubt the prayer of a complaint will, in many cases, be of assistance in ascertaining the nature of the cause of action relied on, and accordingly in determining the section of the statute of limitations which may be applicable. But it is not contended here that the prayer for injunction has the effect of changing the cause of action from one for a trespass upon real property to one governed by some other period of limitation. It still remains an action for trespass upon real property, and in such action the right to relief, whether legal or equitable, is barred in three years.

The judgment is affirmed.

PIERCE v. EDWARDS et al. (L. A. 1510, 1518.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1907.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER — CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT—GIVING POSSESSION OF PROPERTY.

Where a vendor agrees in writing to sell a ranch and "to deliver such ranch" to the vendee by a specified date, the vendee agreeing "to take" the ranch and pay the price, the vendor must turn over the actual physical possession of the property before he can demand payment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Vendor and Purchaser, §§ 113–121.]

2. EVIDENCE—PAROL EVIDENCE—CONTRADICTING TERMS OF WRITTEN CONTRACT.

Where a vendor agrees in writing to sell a ranch and "to deliver such ranch" to the vendee, the vendee agreeing "to take" the ranch and pay the price, evidence of a contemporaneous oral agreement that the tenants on the land should remain and become tenants of the purchaser is inadmissible, since it directly contradicts the terms of the writing.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

Action by Annie J. Pierce against Hannah M. Edwards and Hiram C. Pierce. From judgments in favor of defendant Hannah M. Edwards, the plaintiff and the remaining defendant appeal. Affirmed.

W. S. Day and B. F. Thomas, for appellants. H. P. Starbuck and Canfield & Starbuck, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, Annie J. Pierce, brought this action to recover damages for the breach, by the defendant Hannah M. Edwards, of a contract whereby said Hannah M. Edwards agreed to buy of the codefendant, Hiram C. Pierce, a certain tract of land. The plaintiff sought to establish a cause of action in herself by alleging that Hiram C. Pierce, who was her husband, had taken title to the land under circumstances which, as she claims, made him a constructive trustee for her, and accordingly entitled her to receive the fruits of any contract made by him respecting the land. Hiram C. Pierce answered, denying the facts on which the claim of a trust relation is based, and filed a cross-complaint in which he sought, on his own behalf, to recover damages from Mrs. Edwards for breach of the contract of purchase. In effect, therefore, the Pierces were separately, as plaintiffs, seeking to recover from Mrs. Edwards damages for the alleged breach of the same contract. Demurrers of Mrs. Edwards to a second amended complaint of plaintiff and to an amended cross-complaint of defendant Hiram C. Pierce were sustained, and, further amendment being waived, judgments were entered in favor of Mrs. Edwards against the plaintiff and against the defendant Hiram C. Pierce. From these judgments, respectively, the plaintiff and the defendant Pierce appeal.

The only question that need be considered here is whether either the complaint or the cross-complaint demurred to states a cause of action against Mrs. Edwards. Omitting the allegations which are inserted in the said complaint for the purpose of showing the plaintiff's right to enforce the contract, the two pleadings in question contain a number of allegations in common. Thus, each sets out in full the contract relied on, which was in writing, and reads as follows: "Samuel Edwards Orchard Farm. Saticoy, Ventura Co., Cal. March 24, 1902. Santa Barbara, Cal. I, Hiram C. Pierce, agree to sell to Mrs. Samuel Edwards my ranch in the Santa Ynez Valley called 'San Lucas Rancho' for the sum of Thirty-five thousand dollars, $35,000 Cash—and I hereby agree to deliver said Rancho to Mrs. Samuel Edwards by the first of May—said Rancho consists of Tracts A & B of the subdivision of the Rancho 'Lomas de la Purificota'; and Mrs. Samuel Edwards agrees to take said rancho and pay the above sum. Hiram C. Pierce. Annie J. Pierce. Hannah M. Edwards." (The "Mrs. Samuel Edwards" named in this writing is the defendant Hannah M. Edwards.)

It is alleged in both the second amended complaint and in the amended cross-complaint "that said memorandum of contract was not intended to and did not embrace all the details of the contract." It is also alleged that at the time the contract was made the property was subject to a trust deed to secure indebtedness and to two mortgages. Both the second amended complaint and the amended cross-complaint contain an allegation that on the 1st day of May, 1902, the plaintiff (cross-complainant) tendered to the defendant Hannah M. Edwards a good and sufficient deed of the premises, a duly executed reconveyance releasing the trust deed, and good and sufficient releases of the mortgages, and that said defendant refused to accept said tenders or to pay the said sum of $35,000. There is no allegation in either pleading under consideration that delivery or possession of the property was tendered to Mrs. Edwards.

We are of opinion that under the contract above quoted the purchaser was entitled to be put in the actual possession of the ranch, and that until such possession was tendered her she was not in default. That the contract provides for a delivery of possession as well as a transfer of title is, we think, obvious from a mere reading of its terms. The vendor agrees to sell the ranch for the sum of $35,000, and agrees "to deliver said rancho to Mrs. Samuel Edwards by the first of May." The purchaser agrees to take the rancho and pay the above sum. If the agreement had contemplated merely a transfer of the title in consideration of the payment of a certain sum, it would not have been necessary to say anything more than that the vendor agreed to sell the ranch and the purchaser agreed to pay the specified sum. The parties, however, inserted the additional clause binding the vendor "to deliver" the property at a certain time, and binding the vendee "to take" said property. The obligation assumed by the vendor to deliver the property, as used in this connection, cannot be taken to mean anything else than an obligation to turn over the actual physical possession. The case is very similar to Benson v. Shotwell, 87 Cal. 49, 25 Pac. 249. In that case there was a contract of sale which contained these words: "Possession of lot given and guaranteed to purchaser on transfer of title." It was held that under this contract the purchaser was entitled not only to a transfer of title, but to a delivery of possession before being called upon to make his payment. The court said: "The word 'possession,' as used in this connection, is to be understood and construed in its ordinary and popular sense." While in the contract here under consideration we do not find the word "possession," we think the language here used, i. e., an agreement to deliver the rancho, is to be interpreted as requiring a delivery of the physical possession.

Both the plaintiff and the cross-complainant in framing their pleadings saw the force of this point and sought to evade it by further allegations. The plaintiff alleges in her second amended complaint, as has been stated, that the written instrument was not intended to and did not embrace all the details of the contract, and avers that "it was also stipulated and agreed between the parties and as a part of said contract that the tenants on said land should remain and become the tenants of the purchaser, Hannah M. Edwards." Under the well-established rule requiring pleadings to be construed most strongly against the pleader, it must be inferred from this allegation that the land was in the possession of tenants, and that an actual delivery thereof was not tendered to the purchaser. Did this clause obviate the necessity of such actual delivery? We think not. "The execution of a contract in writing, whether the law requires it to be written or not, supersedes all the oral negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument." Civ. Code, § 1625. "When the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, it is to be considered as containing all those terms, and therefore there can be between the parties and their representatives no evidence of the terms of the agreement other than the contents of the writing." Code Civ. Proc. § 1856. And these sections declare a rule of law so long and so well established that it is needless to cite further authority in its support. It is true that there is an exception to this rule; that it does not apply where the parties have not incorporated into the instrument all of the terms of their agreement (Guidery v. Green, 95 Cal. 630, 30 Pac. 786; Sivers v. Sivers, 97 Cal. 518, 32 Pac. 571; Sav. Bank v. Asbury, 117 Cal. 96, 103, 48 Pac. 1081); and the plaintiff has sought to bring herself within this exception by her allegation that the memorandum of contract "was not intended to and did not embrace all the details of the contract." But the exception allowing oral evidence of terms of an agreement not included in a writing is itself subject to the qualification that the oral stipulations sought to be proved are not inconsistent with the terms embraced in the writing. Guidery v. Green, supra; Sivers v. Sivers, supra; Sav. Bank, etc., v. Asbury, supra. Here the contemporaneous understanding relied upon is directly in conflict with the terms of the writing. By the writing the parties agreed to deliver the property, an agreement which means, and can mean, only that they were to transfer the actual possession. An agreement that the possession was not to be transferred, and that the persons in possession should hold under the vendee, instead of under the vendor, is not an addition to the terms of the writing, but a direct contradiction of them. The following language from the decision in Benson v. Shotwell, supra, illustrates the divergence between the written instrument and the asserted additional understanding: "It is claimed on the part of respondent that the tenants who were under lease from plaintiff said while there that they would acknowledge the defendant as their landlord and attorn to him, and that this was all that was required. But this was not the measure of plaintiff's obligation, according to the letter of his bond. According to that paper, defendant was entitled to an actual possessio pedis of the whole lot. The language of the contract implied nothing less. Constructive possession, and the duty to attorn, would follow the title; and, if that was all that was meant, there was no need to have said anything about possession in the contract." So here, if the contract had said nothing about delivery, the mere transfer of the title would have entitled the grantee to receive the rents from the tenants. Civ. Code, § 1111. To allow any force to the stipulation that the tenants on the land should become the tenants of the purchaser would be equivalent to striking from the contract the provision that the vendor agreed to deliver the rancho to the vendee by the 1st of May. For these reasons we think that the second amended complaint failed to state a cause of action against the defendant Edwards, and it is therefore unnecessary to consider the further point made by the respondent that the facts averred were insufficient to show a constructive or resulting trust in the contract in favor of the plaintiff.

The allegations of the amended cross-complaint are somewhat different. There is no averment of an agreement by the vendee to accept any of the tenants as her tenants. In this behalf the cross-complainant alleges merely "that said premises were leased at the time to one Newel Kane, who consented and agreed to and with said Hannah M. Edwards to become and be her tenant on said premises." If the construction heretofore given to the writing be correct, this cross-complaint comes even more clearly than the complaint within the reasoning of Benson v. Shotwell, supra. It is not alleged that this agreement of the tenant was a part of the contract between Hiram C. Pierce and Hannah M. Edwards. All that is said is that the tenant in possession of the land undertook to acknowledge the purchaser as his landlord. But this was not sufficient. The purchaser was entitled to actual possession, and since the cross-complaint not only fails to allege a delivery of such possession, but shows affirmatively that the possession was in the third party, no cause of action is stated. It is claimed that the matter alleged shows a waiver by the purchaser of actual delivery, but this cannot be. It is not alleged that such purchaser agreed to accept Kane as her tenant. The most that can be said is that Kane agreed to become her tenant—a thing which, as we have seen, he would under the law have been obliged to do without any agreement. Again, the vendor was not a party to any such agreement, and cannot take advantage of it for the purpose of relieving himself from the effect of failure to perform the stipulations of his contract.

It is suggested that the fact that the purchaser knew, at the time she made her contract, that the property was in the possession of tenants, should be considered in construing the contract so as to make the obligation to deliver merely an obligation to deliver the land in the condition in which it was, i. e., as subject to lease and in the possession of tenants. But we see no force in this. The same argument would lead to the result that an agreement to sell land which is known by the purchaser to be subject to certain incumbrances requires the purchaser to take and pay for the land notwithstanding such incumbrances. The purchaser, knowing that the land was in the possession of third parties, stipulated for its delivery to her. She is entitled to stand upon this stipulation, which may have been insisted upon for the very reason that she knew of the tenancies. The contract bound the seller to terminate the tenancies, or in some other way place himself in position to comply with his undertaking to deliver the rancho by the 1st of May.

Each of the demurrers was properly sustained. The judgment is affirmed.

SAN DIEGO REALTY CO. v. CORNELL et al. (L. A. 1,709.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1907.)

1. Taxation—Restraining Sale for Taxes.

Where county officers propose to execute a tax deed to the state containing a description legally sufficient to charge property with delinquent taxes, and thereby create the presumption of the regularity of the antecedent proceedings, the owner is entitled to relief in equity to prevent the execution of the deed, on the ground that it will cast a cloud on his title, though the description of the property given in the assessment roll is void.

[Ed. Note—For cases in point, see Cent Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1500.]

2. Same.

An owner of real estate, in a suit to restrain the issuance of a tax deed conveying his land because of the invalidity of the assessment, tendered the legal amount for which the property could have been taxed, and the court decreed that the amount should be received by the tax collector, and granted the relief prayed for. Held, that the county officers could not complain that the owner had been decreed to pay the legal amount for which the property could have been taxed.

3. Same.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 187, providing that, when jurisdiction over any matter is conferred, all means necessary to carry the same into effect are conferred with it, as well as independent of the provision, the court, in a suit to restrain the issuance of a tax deed because of the invalidity of the assessment, has authority to decree that the sum which the state has fixed as due for taxes shall be paid before it will grant the relief prayed for.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by the San Diego Realty Company against A. F. Cornell and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Geo. A. Sturtevant, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Cassius Carter, Dist. Atty., for appellants. Smith & Collier, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought this action against the defendants, who are county officers of San Diego county, for the purpose of enjoining them as county officers from issuing tax deeds to certain of its property, following assessment and sale. Plaintiff alleges that the assessment was void, and avers that the defendants propose to execute the tax deed to the state of California, conveying their land so attempted to be assessed by the void assessment; that the deed so made will cast a cloud upon plaintiff's title; that, had the property been assessed according to law, the taxes assessed against it would have amounted to the sum of $2.08 for all the years wherein the property was not legally assessed and for which taxes were not paid and for which the property could now be reassessed. Plaintiff has tendered this sum of $2.08 to the proper officers, who have refused to accept it. It continues its offer to pay this money, and upon payment asks the decree of the court restraining the officers from clouding the title to its realty. The court found in accordance with the complaint, accepted the tender directing payment of the money to the county treasury, and granted the injunction sought. Defendants appeal.

The description given in the assessment roll which is attacked is as follows: "In the county of San Diego, state of California, and described thus: Lot 1, block 17, Ocean Beach." This description is admitted by appellants to be void, upon the authority of Labs v. Cooper, 107 Cal. 656, 40 Pac. 1042, and Miller v. Williams, 135 Cal. 183, 67 Pac. 788; but appellants argue that, as the assessment is void, no cloud is cast upon the title, and that there is therefore no occasion for the interposition of equity. The answer to this is found in the allegations of the complaint that the defendants propose to execute a deed to the state by a description legally sufficient to charge the property, and by this, together with all the presumptions which follow such a deed, with the prima facie regularity of antecedent proceedings which it carries with it, a cloud will be cast upon the property and injury to the plaintiff thus result.

The second proposition advanced by appellant is that the court was without jurisdiction to find and declare that the sum of $2.08 was the just and legal amount for which the property could have been taxed, and to direct the reception of this sum by the tax collector. It is said, if the assessment complained of was merely irregular, it might be conceded that, under appropriate allegations tendering a payment of what in equity and good conscience should be paid, a court of equity might have rendered assistance (Esterbrook v. O'Brien, 98 Cal. 673, 33 Pac. 765; Ellis v. Witmer, 134 Cal. 253, 66 Pac. 301); but that, because plaintiff contends and proves that the assessment is void, then and therefore nothing was due, nothing need be tendered, and the tender, if made, was but an idle act. But this contention, even if upheld, cannot avail appellants. The fact that a litigant going into equity offers to do more than equity has never been held a ground for refusing him the relief to which he is entitled. If a tender and payment were unnecessary, it scarcely lies in appellants' mouths to complain that their adversary has been decreed to pay that which in equity he was not called upon to pay. Still further, their counsel, who takes this position in this case, successfully contended for the opposite in Couts v. Cornell, 147 Cal. 560, 82 Pac. 194, 109 Am. St. Rep. 168. The gravamen of his attack in the Couts Case—an action in character precisely like the one here under consideration, and based upon assessments void for the same defect which vitiates this one—was that the complaint did not make tender of the amount equitably due, and this court held that relief would not be granted, in the absence of such tender; that there was distinctly a moral obligation to pay, as well as a quasi legal obligation, which latter the state could easily cast into the form of a strictly legal obligation by authorizing an amendment to the assessment, or by reassessing.

A further contention of the appellants is that the action of the court in finding and declaring the amount due for taxes, and its recordance and acceptance of the tender which had been made, with directions that the money should be received and deposited in the county treasury on account of the taxes upon the property, was a judicial usurpation of a function of government, which function is vested in the Legislature alone; that it was an attempt by the court to impose taxes and to regulate their collection. This difficulty is purely imaginary. Of course, if it had become necessary for the court, in determining the amount due from plaintiff, to value the property, to make an assessment, or to fix a rate, no court for a moment would undertake to perform these purely legislative duties. But in every case where a court without usurpation of the functions of the fiscal department can determine the amount due from a plaintiff in equity, it will fix that amount and decree its payment. Here there was no question of the court being called upon to exercise the machinery of the taxing power in levying taxes. All that had been done by proper authority. The amount of taxes, the value of the property, the tax rate, and the amount due had all been fixed. In effect, all that the court was called upon to decide was whether the penalties and impositions for delinquency were justly chargeable against the property where the assessment was void. It held, and properly held, that it was not, but decreed that the sum which the state had fixed as due for taxes should be paid before it would grant relief. Thus the court was not called upon to reassess or to make a new rate, but merely to adopt those already made, those which the taxing officers themselves would have had to readopt if a new assessment had been made under the law. St. 1893, p. 290, c. 207. If there could be any question of the general powers of a court in equity to render such a decree, there can be none as to its power in this state by virtue of section 187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that, whenever jurisdiction over any matter is conferred, all means necessary to carry the jurisdiction into effect are conferred with it.

The judgment and order appealed from are therefore affirmed.

Habeas Corpus—Dismissal of Writ—Writ of Error—Effect to Stay Proceedings on Indictment.

Where a party under indictment and awaiting trial in the Superior Court was granted a writ of habeas corpus, but upon a hearing was remanded to custody, and obtained a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States on the claim that the order of remand was in contravention of his rights under the United States Constitution, the writ of error does not stay proceedings in the court having jurisdiction of the indictment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Habeas Corpus, §§ 109, 110.]

In Bank. Application by Abraham Ruef for writ of prohibition, prayed to be directed against the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and Hon. Frank H.

Dunne, judge thereof, to restrain defendants from proceeding with his trial. Writ denied.

Samuel M. Shortridge, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The petitioner, who was under indictment and awaiting trial in the superior court, applied to another department of the same court for a writ of habeas corpus, which was granted. Upon a hearing he was remanded to custody, and thereupon applied for, and obtained from the judge or court issuing the writ of habeas corpus, a writ of error to the Supreme Court of the United States; it being claimed that the order of remand was in contravention of petitioner's rights under the Constitution of the United States. The proceedings necessary to perfect the issuance and service of the writ of error and the citation thereunder were taken. The petitioner now applies for a writ of prohibition to restrain the court in which the indictment is pending from proceeding with his trial. We are satisfied that the writ of error, if it was properly issued, does not operate to stay proceedings in the court having jurisdiction of the indictment.

The petition is denied.

Ex parte RUEF. (Cr. 1,391.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1907.)

1. Grand Jury—Qualifications of Jurors—Presence of Incompetent Juror—Effect on Indictment.

Code Civ. Proc. § 199, provides that no person is competent to serve as a grand juror who has served and been discharged as a juror by a court of record of the state within a year of the time he was summoned and impaneled as grand juror. Pen. Code, § 995, enumerates the grounds upon which an indictment may be set aside; one being any which would have been good ground for challenge to any individual grand juror. Section 896 enumerates the grounds for challenge to an individual grand juror, none of which are that he has served as a juror in a court of record in the state within the year. Held, that the fact that one of the grand jurors had within the year served as a juror in a court of record of the state would not invalidate an indictment; any statutory incompetency not made a basis for challenge under Pen. Code, § 896, being regarded as a mere direction to the court impaneling the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Grand Jury, § 15.]

2. Habeas Corpus—Questions Reviewable—Sufficiency of Indictment.

Where an indictment purported to charge extortion, a crime defined by Pen. Code, § 518 et seq., and within the jurisdiction of the superior court, the question whether the facts charged are sufficient to constitute such offense will not be inquired into on habeas corpus.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Habeas Corpus, § 92.]

3. Same — Admission to Bail — Petition — Sufficiency—Proceedings—Statutes.

Where a petition for a writ of habeas corpus does not show that the defendant has not appeared for trial, under Pen. Code, § 1129, giving the court discretion to grant or refuse bail to a defendant who has appeared for trial, the court may refuse to admit him to bail.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 25, Habeas Corpus, § 99.]

In Bank. Proceedings by Abraham Ruef for a writ of habeas corpus directed against W. J. Biggy, an elisor appointed by the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco. Writ denied.

Samuel M. Shortridge, Frank J. Murphy, Chas. H. Fairall, and Henry Ach, for petitioner. Wm. H. Langdon, Dist. Atty., and Francis J. Heney, Asst. Dist. Atty., for respondent.

PER CURIAM. A petition for a writ of habeas corpus is presented by A. Ruef, who alleges that he is restrained of his liberty and held in custody under bench warrants issued by the superior court upon five indictments purporting to charge him with the crime of extortion. Three grounds for the issuance of the writ are urged.

1. It is alleged that one of the members of the grand jury which found and returned the indictments was not competent, by reason of the fact that he had served and been discharged as a juror by a court of record of this state within a year of the time that he was summoned and impaneled to act as such grand juror. Code Civ. Proc. § 199. We are of opinion that this does not affect the validity of an indictment found by the grand jury. The Penal Code enumerates the grounds upon which an indictment may be set aside. Pen. Code, § 995. One of these grounds is "any ground which would have been good ground for challenge—to any individual grand juror." Penal Code, § 896, provides for a challenge to an individual grand juror for six specified grounds only. The particular incompetency here relied on is not included. We think that the Legislature, in declaring that persons who had been discharged as jurors within a year should not be competent, and at the same time denying to a defendant indicted by a grand jury including one or more such persons any remedy by way of motion or challenge, in effect provided that, if the statutory rule prohibiting the service of such persons were not obeyed, the departure should not invalidate any indictment found. Cf. Pen. Code, § 901. Any statutory incompetency which is not made a basis for a challenge under Penal Code, § 896, must be regarded as a mere direction to the court impaneling the jury.

2. It is claimed that the indictments fail to state a public offense. On habeas corpus the inquiry into the sufficiency of an indictment is limited. We think the true rule is that, where an indictment purports or attempts to state an offense of a kind of which the court assuming to proceed has jurisdiction, the question whether the facts charged are sufficient to constitute an offense of that kind will not be examined into on habeas corpus. Here the indictments clearly attempt to charge extortion, a crime defined by section 518 et seq. of the Penal Code, and within the jurisdiction of the superior court.

Without expressing any opinion as to whether these indictments should be held to be good on demurrer or other direct attack, they are at least not, under the rule stated, so defective as to permit us to hold them void in this proceeding.

3. It is claimed that the writ should issue to admit the petitioner to bail, it being alleged that the superior court has refused to so admit him. Under section 1129 of the Penal Code, the trial court has discretion to grant or refuse bail to a defendant who has appeared for trial, and may commit him to custody to abide the judgment or further order of the court. The petition before us does not show that the defendant has not appeared for trial. This showing should be made affirmatively, in order that a case be presented entitling petitioner to bail.

In re HAINES' ESTATE. (L. A. 1,878.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 9, 1907.)

1. WILLS—CONSTRUCTION—CREATION OF LIFE ESTATE.

A will devising certain lands to the two grandchildren of testatrix, providing that their mother should have full control and all incomes of the lands during her life, except that she should every year put out $100 at interest (to be divided between her two children) until her youngest child attained the age of 20 years, gave a life estate to the mother, subject only to a charge of $100 per annum in favor of the two grandchildren ($50 for each) until the younger child attained the age of 20 years.

2. PERPETUITIES—DIRECTION FOR ACCUMULATION OF INCOME—VALIDITY.

Civ. Code, §§ 723, 724, allow the accumulation of the income of property directed by will, etc., only during the minority of the beneficiary. Section 725 provides that, if the direction for accumulation is for a longer term than during the minority of the beneficiaries, the direction is void as to the time beyond such minority. Testatrix devised certain lands to her two grandchildren, providing that their mother should have full control and all incomes during her life, except that she should "every year put out $100 at interest (to be divided between her two children) until her youngest child attains the age of 20 years." Held, that the direction for accumulation was valid in the case of each child for the period of his minority, and void as to the time beyond such minority.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Perpetuities, §§ 67–73.]

3. WILLS—TRUSTS—CREATION.

Testatrix, by directing that all her moneys, notes, etc., should be divided between her two daughters and four grandchildren, the daughters to have exclusive control of their children's money and invest it as they thought best until the children became of age, intended as to the share of each grandchild to create a trust in its mother, to continue during its minority; the bequest to be subject to such trust.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, §§ 1575, 1576.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Charlotte Haines, deceased. Appeal from a decree of final distribution. Modified, and, as modified, affirmed.

H. L. Poplin, for appellants. B. T. Williams and Williams & Bowker, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from a decree of final distribution. The deceased died testate, leaving two surviving daughters, S. Maude Henderson and Edith M. McDivitt, and four surviving grandchildren, viz., Haines T. Henderson and Gladys Henderson, children of S. Maude Henderson, and Frank Paul McDivitt and Edith Bernice McDivitt, children of Edith M. McDivitt. All the children are minors. By her will, which was olographic, she first made certain absolute bequests and devises to her daughters. The will then proceeded as follows: "To my grandchildren, Haines T. Henderson and Gladys Henderson, I give 38 acres in lot 19, Norway survey; also 3 acres in the same lot; * * * also one-half of my interest in subdivision 91 of Los Posas tract, containing 532 acres. To F. Paul McDivitt and Edith Bernice McDivitt, my grandchildren, I give and devise 42.53 acres on lot 34, Norway survey, being my home place; also one-half of my Los Posas land: Provided that my daughters, Maude Henderson and Edith McDivitt, shall have the full control and possession and all rentals and incomes of the lands willed to their children during their natural lives, except that each one shall every year put out $100 at interest (to be divided between her two children) until her youngest child attains the age of 20 years. All moneys, notes, etc., which I may have to be divided between my two children and four grandchildren, and my daughters to have exclusive control of their children's money and invest it as they think best until they (the children) become of age." The controversy here is as to the effect of the proviso in the devises to the McDivitt grandchildren and the provision giving the exclusive control of the personal property bequeathed to them to their mother, until they become of age; such grandchildren being the only appellants, and appealing only from such portions of said decree as relate to these provisions.

The court below distributed to each of said children the realty described in the devises to them, with this proviso, viz.: "Providing that Edith M. McDivitt, the mother of said children, shall have the full possession and ownership of all the land, issues and profits thereof, during her natural life," in one case; and the following, viz.: "Provided * * * that Edith M. McDivitt, the mother of Frank Paul McDivitt and Edith Bernice McDivitt, shall have the full possession and ownership of the rents, issues, and profits of her children's share thereof during her natural life." In another part of the decree, and as a distinctly independent provision having no reference to the lands devised, it was ordered that said Edith M. McDivitt "each year place the sum of $100 on interest in some safe interest-bearing securities, to be approved by this court, to the credit of her two children, Frank Paul McDivitt and Edith Bernice McDivitt, to be divided equally between the said children upon the said Edith Bernice McDivitt arriving at the age of 20 years." To each of said grandchildren was distributed $1,634.-73, "provided, however, that Edith M. McDivitt, the mother of said child, shall have the exclusive control of said sum of money, and to invest the same in interest-bearing securities, to be approved by this court," until the said child shall have attained the age of majority.

There is no great difficulty in determining the intention of the testatrix from the provisions of her will, notwithstanding that this intention might have been expressed in more apt language by one versed in legal phraseology. As to the land concerning which the devise to the grandchildren was made, it was clearly intended to give a life estate to their mother, subject only to a charge of $100 per annum in favor of the two children ($50 for each), until the younger child attains the age of 20 years, and to subject the devise to the grandchildren to this estate for life in the mother. The devise to the grandchildren is expressly made subject to the proviso, and the proviso is that the mothers "shall have the full control and possession and all rentals and incomes of the lands willed to their children" during their natural lives. Herein is to be found every element going to make up a life estate. The exception as to the $100 per annum that is to be put out at interest for the children, which creates a charge upon such life estate, also makes clearer the intention of the testatrix that the respective mothers were to have life estates in the lands otherwise given to their children. It is elementary that it is the duty of the courts to carry into effect the intention of the testator as the same is expressed in his will, provided that such intention be consistent with the rules of law. It cannot, of course, be successfully claimed that there is any rule of law that is violated by a devise of an estate for her life to the mother, burdened with an annual charge on the rents and profits in favor of her living children for a specified time, and a devise of the lands subject to such life estate to such children.

It is claimed, however, that the exception as to the $100 per annum for the benefit of the children constitutes a direction for the accumulation of the income of property for a period longer than the minority of the beneficiaries, the youngest child being the daughter, Edith Bernice, who is five years younger than her brother, Frank Paul, and that such exception is, therefore, void under the provisions of sections 723 and 724, Civ. Code, which allow such accumulations only during the minority of the beneficiaries, and that it is also void for the reason that it may unduly suspend the absolute power of alienation. The provision simply is that the mother shall "every year put out $100 at interest (to be divided between her two children) until her youngest child attains the age of 20 years." The necessary implication from this language appears to us to be that each child was to have, so long as he or she lived, until the youngest child attained the age of 20 years, or would have attained that age if living, the sum of $50 per annum out of the life interest given to the mother, and that these sums were to be invested for his or her benefit and remain at interest during said period. Reading the provision in connection with the provisions immediately preceding it, it is plain that to the extent stated it is an attempted disposition of the income of the real property and a direction for the accumulation thereof. So construed, however, there is no forbidden suspension of the absolute power of alienation; such suspension being permitted for a period not longer than during the continuance of lives of persons in being at the creation of the limitation or condition. We have here two provisions, one for the accumulation of $50 per annum for the older child until the younger attains, or would, if living, attain, the age of 20 years, and one for the accumulation of $50 per annum for the younger child for the same period. The provision for accumulation for each child, being for the sole benefit of such child, cannot by any possibility suspend the absolute power of alienation for a longer period than during the life of such child. If the older child die before the specified time, the trust for accumulation for his benefit at once determines for lack of a beneficiary, and the property already accumulated immediately vests in his heirs. The same is true as to the younger child. In neither case can the trust for accumulation continue longer than during the life of the designated beneficiary in being at the time of the creation of the trust. Civ. Code, §§ 715, 716; Estate of Hendy, 118 Cal. 656, 50 Pac. 753; Estate of Steele, 124 Cal. 533, 539, 57 Pac. 564. Under the provisions of section 724, Civ. Code, the accumulation cannot be for a longer term than the minority of the beneficiary. Section 725, Civ. Code, provides that, if the direction for accumulation is for a longer term than during the minority of the beneficiaries, "the direction only, whether separable or not from other provisions of the instrument, is void as respects the time beyond such minority." It follows that the direction for accumulation here should be held valid in the case of each child for the period of his or her minority, and void as respects the time beyond such minority.

As to the "money, notes, etc.," divided between her two children and four grandchildren, it is clear that as to the share of each grandchild the testatrix intended to create a trust in his or her mother, to continue during his or her minority, and that the bequest of the property is subject to such trust. No reason appears why this intention could not be carried into effect. See Estate of Reith, 144

Cal. 314, 77 Pac. 942. In view of what has been said, it is apparent that the court below did not err in the manner of distribution of the $1,634.73 awarded to each of the appellants. Substantially this property is distributed to the trustee for the purposes of the trust, and, subject to such trust, to the appellants. See Estate of Reith, supra. Nor did the court err in distributing to the mother of appellants, for her natural life, the full possession, and ownership of all the rents, issues, and profits, of the land devised to them, which we take to be the effect of the decree in this regard. But, for the protection of appellants' respective rights created by the provision as to the annual investment of $100 for their benefit, the distribution to the mother should have been made subject, in terms, to the annual charge upon the property distributed of $50 for each appellant. This result is not accomplished by the independent provision in the decree as to the annual investment of $100 by the mother. Nor is that provision entirely in accord with the intention of the testatrix, so far as that intention can be legally carried into effect.

The decree should be modified to the extent of adding to the so-called provisos in favor of the mother in the distribution of the lands to appellants the following, viz.: "The life estate in the above-described land hereby distributed to Edith M. McDivitt is distributed to her subject to the following charges, which shall constitute liens on said interest, to wit: (1) The sum of $50 each and every year during the continuance of said life estate until her daughter, Edith Bernice McDivitt, attains the age of 20 years, or would attain that age if living, for the benefit of her son, Frank Paul McDivitt, the same to be during the whole period of the minority of said Frank Paul McDivitt kept by said Edith M. McDivitt on interest in some safe interest-bearing securities to be approved by this court, and accumulated for his benefit; provided, always, that, in the event of the death of the said Frank Paul McDivitt before the time specified above, said annual charge shall thereupon cease and determine, and all accumulations thereof at once vest in his heirs. (2) The sum of $50 each and every year during the continuance of said life estate until her daughter, Edith Bernice McDivitt, attains the age of 20 years, for the benefit of said daughter, Edith Bernice McDivitt, the same to be during the whole period of the minority of said Edith Bernice McDivitt kept by said Edith M. McDivitt on interest in some safe interest-bearing securities to be approved by this court and accumulated for her benefit; provided, always, that, in the event of the death of the said Edith Bernice McDivitt at any time before attaining the age of 20 years, said annual charge shall thereupon cease and determine, and all accumulations thereof at once vest in her heirs." The provision now in the decree as to the annual $100 investment should be stricken out.

It is ordered that in the respects suggested the portions of the decree appealed from be, and the same are, hereby modified, and, so modified, the decree is hereby affirmed.

CARTER v. OSBORN. (L. A. 1,735.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 7, 1907.)

1. TAXATION—TAX SALE—STAMPING SUBSEQUENT ASSESSMENT ROLL.

The statute is sufficiently complied with, and the owner given notice of the fact of sale, so as not to render void a tax sale where the assessment roll, for the year ensuing that for the taxes of which sale was made, was stamped with the words "sold to state," merely, without a statement that it was "sold for taxes."

2. SAME—CERTIFICATE OF SALE.

The statute providing for a certificate of sale having been repealed before a tax sale was made, the sale, which was for the correct amount, was not invalidated by a mistake in computation in the certificate of sale which was made, as the certificate may be disregarded.

3. SAME — DELINQUENT LIST — SHOWING AMOUNT DUE.

A tax sale is not void because in the delinquent list the amount due was indicated only by the word "amount," and immediately under it the figures "4 00," without any dollar sign, but with a space between the figure 4 and the two ciphers, as they usually appear when intended to mean dollars.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by Robert S. Carter against Kitturia B. Osborn. Judgment for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Reversed and remanded for new trial.

P. B. Lloyd, for appellant. O. B. Carter, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. This is an action to quiet plaintiff's title to a piece of land in the city of Los Angeles, county of Los Angeles, described as "lot fifty-four (54) of the Wiesendanger tract as per map recorded in Book 9, p. 68, miscellaneous records of said county." Judgment went for plaintiff, and from this judgment defendant appeals.

The plaintiff had the legal title to the lot in question; the same having been conveyed to him on February 3, 1904, by one Berger Kallander, who then owned it, unless such title passed from said Kallander and vested in defendant by virtue of certain tax proceedings and deeds. The defendant claims title through an assessment for the year 1894, a tax deed to the state executed July 6, 1900, and a deed to defendant from the state. The court made only two findings of ultimate facts, namely, that plaintiff "is the owner" of the land in question, and that defendant has "no right, title or interest therein." However, the bill of exceptions and the points of counsel show upon what theory the case was tried. That theory was that the tax proceedings and deeds were, for various reasons, void, and conveyed no title. Objections to the introduction of the tax deed to the state were sustained; the main objection being that the "deed does not recite the time when the right of redemption had expired." Various objections were also sustained to other documents and to the assessment for 1894. But nearly all these points were decided against the contention of respondent and adversely to the rulings of the court in the recent case of Baird v. Monroe et al. (L. A. 1,623, Cal. Sup.) 89 Pac. 352, the opinion in which was filed February 16, 1907. It was there held that the alleged defect in the tax deed to the state was cured by the act of the Legislature approved February 28, 1903 (St. 1903, p. 63, c. 59), the purpose of which act was to "confirm, validate, and legalize" certain tax deeds. In the case at bar respondent contends, and the court must have found, that said act was unconstitutional; but the question was elaborately discussed in Baird v. Monroe, and the act held to be constitutional and valid. It was there also held that the objections made in the case at bar to the said assessment are not well taken. Indeed, nearly all the points made by the respondent in the case at bar, and sustained by the court, were decided in Baird v. Monroe adversely to respondent's contention, and it would be useless to restate here the reasoning of the exhaustive opinion delivered in that case. It is sufficient to refer to it as determinative of those points.

One or two points are made in the case at bar which, perhaps, were not covered in the Baird Case, and they will be here noticed. It is contended that the tax sale was void because on the assessment roll for the next ensuing year, 1895, there was stamped the words "sold to state," without a statement that it was "sold for taxes," and the date of the sale. We think, however, that the words used sufficiently comply with the statute, and fully answer the purpose of giving notice to the owner of the fact of such sale.

A certificate of sale was introduced, and it is objected that, while the total amount of the tax is correctly given at $3.10, yet the items given amount to only $2.43, which with a penalty of 90 cents, makes only $3.33, instead of $4, for which it was sold. The assessment showed the total amount of tax to be the $3.10, which, with the 90 cents penalty, makes $4. We do not deem it necessary to consider whether this slight mistake in the computation would, in any event, affect the validity of the sale which was made for the correct amount, because we are of the opinion that the certificate may be disregarded, for the reason that at the time of the sale sections 3776 and 3777, which provide for such certificate, had been repealed (St. 1895, p. 19, c. 11), and the attempt afterwards to amend the repealed sections (St. 1895, pp. 327, 328, c. 218) was of no effect (Pol. Code, § 330; Fletcher v. Prather, 102 Cal. 418, 36 Pac. 658).

It is contended that the tax sale was void because in the delinquent list the amount due was not stated. There is in said list the word "amount," and immediately under it are the figures "4 00"; there being a space between the figure 4 and the two ciphers as they usually appear when they are intended to mean "dollars," but there is no dollar mark. For this contention respondent relies on certain early California cases—Hurlbutt v. Butenop, 27 Cal. 50; Braly v. Seaman, 30 Cal. 610; People v. S. F. Sav. Union, 31 Cal. 132; People v. Hastings, 34 Cal. 571—and also the later case of Emeric v. Alvarado, 90 Cal. 444, 27 Pac. 356, which merely refers approvingly to the said early cases. In those cases it does not clearly appear how the figures intended to represent dollars were written, although it does appear that there were no dollar marks, and we will assume that, if they had been exactly as those in the delinquent list in the case at bar, the rulings would have been the same. But in all those cases the defect was in the assessment itself, not in any subsequent document, as, for instance, the delinquent list. In People v. S. F. Sav. Union, supra, it was contended that the omission by the assessor to make a valuation of assessed property might be amended by the auditor by prefixing the dollar mark to the figures; but the court said that the assessment roll "is the basis of all subsequent proceedings," that under the Constitution the assessor must fix the valuation of property which is to be taxed, and that the "valuation is the very foundation of proceedings for enforcing and collecting the tax upon property" and "is essential to the validity of a property tax." Indeed, the assessment is very much in the nature of a judgment, and must therefore be in every way definite and precise, and the court in the case just quoted from illustrates its meaning by supposing a judgment which merely awarded to a party certain naked figures without any designation of what they represented. But we do not think that this stringent rule as to the original assessment, which is the foundation and source of the asserted tax, is applicable to all subsequent proceedings. The delinquent list in the case at bar, with the word "amount" and under it "4 00," clearly gave notice to any intelligent person that dollars were meant, and the absence of the dollar mark does not invalidate the assesment or the tax sale.

There are no other points calling for special notice.

The judgment appealed from is reversed, and the cause is remanded for a new trial, to be conducted in accordance with the views expressed in this opinion and in the opinion in the said case of Baird v. Monroe (Cal. Sup.) 89 Pac. 352.

REYNOLDS v. PENNSYLVANIA OIL CO.

(L. A. 1,492.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 8, 1907.)

1. BANKRUPTCY — STAY OF PROCEEDINGS IN STATE COURT.

Bankr. Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, § 16, 30 Stat. 549 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3426], provides for a stay of proceedings on the filing of a petition in bankruptcy until after an adjudication or the dismissal of the petition, and that, if there is an adjudication of bankruptcy, such action may be stayed until 12 months after the date of such adjudication, and that "the court may order the trustee to enter his appearance and defend any action pending against the bankrupt." Held, that the filing by defendant of a certified copy of an order adjudging him a bankrupt, and a notice that defendant would move to dismiss the proceedings by reason thereof, was no ground for suspension of the proceedings, as it was discretionary with the bankruptcy court to order suspension or order the trustee to enter and defend.

2. COMPOSITIONS WITH CREDITORS — NATURE AND REQUISITES.

In an action on a note of a corporation, it appeared that plaintiff's assignor and other creditors of the corporation had signed an agreement with the maker, whereby it was to deliver to trustees certain property for the benefit of all parties and to pay debts of the corporation, including the note in question. The agreement did not purport to transfer all the maker's property nor to be signed by all the creditors, and did not provide for the time within which payments might be made, but provided that the agreement should remain in force until all the claims were paid. The agreement did not provide that creditors who had signed it should be barred from prosecuting actions, and there was no covenant on the part of creditors to discharge their claims on payment of less than the full amount. Held, that the agreement lacked essential covenants of a composition agreement, and was no bar to an action on the note.

3. PLEADING — VERIFICATION — EXECUTION OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENTS.

In an action on a note, the answer set up a composition agreement, a copy of which was annexed to the answer, signed by plaintiff by an attorney. Held that, as plaintiff did not file an affidavit denying due execution of the contract, the authority of the attorney to sign was admitted, under Code Civ. Proc. § 448, providing that a document so relied on shall be deemed duly executed unless denied by affidavit.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by W. P. Reynolds against the Pennsylvania Oil Company. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appealed to the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, and the cause was certified to the Supreme Court on the disagreement of the justices of the Court of Appeal. Reversed.

George A. Corbin, for appellant. Tanner & Taft and Mr. Odell, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This cause was certified to this court upon the disagreement of the justices of the District Court of Appeal of the Second District. While the action was pending before that court, the following opinion was prepared by Judge York, justice pro tem., called in for the purpose of the hearing and decision of this case. That opinion is hereby adopted as the opinion of this court, and its completeness renders unnecessary any further elaboration of the questions presented: "This action was prosecuted by plaintiff and appellant to obtain a judgment against defendant and respondent upon a claim assigned to appellant by A. M. Cates for services as an attorney and counsellor at law, and upon a promissory note made by respondent in favor of Mrs. M. B. Dorland and indorsed and assigned to appellant. The respondent has filed in this court a certified copy of an order made by the United States District Court adjudging respondent a bankrupt, which order was made subsequent to the appeal in this case. The respondent has not presented the bankruptcy proceedings to this court in any other form except by a notice that it would move to dismiss this appeal by reason of said adjudication in bankruptcy. In the absence of any appearance to make the motion noticed, we assume respondent's position to be that the adjudication of respondent's bankruptcy deprives this court of jurisdiction to proceed against it. Section 11 of the bankruptcy statute (Act July 1, 1898, c. 541, 30 Stat. 549 [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 3426]) provides for a stay of proceedings on the filing of a petition in bankruptcy against a party until after an adjudication or the dismissal of the petition, and that, 'if such person is adjudged a bankrupt, such action may be further stayed until twelve months after the date of such adjudication'; and, also, that 'the court may order the trustee to enter his appearance and defend any pending suit against the bankrupt.' "

The utmost, therefore, that can be contended for in behalf of the respondent is that it is discretionary with the bankruptcy court to order the parties to this action to suspend proceedings, or order the trustee to enter his appearance and defend the action on behalf of the creditors of the bankrupt. In Collier on Bankruptcy the author says: "It is in no sense the duty of the state court to stay merely because it hears of the bankruptcy of a suitor. It must be informed of the fact by proper pleadings." Page 128. "Save in the interval between the filing of the petition and the adjudication, a stay is always discretionary." Page 129. "A court of bankruptcy may but need not order the trustee to intervene in a suit against a bankrupt. The state court cannot, on the other hand, compel him to intervene." Page 131. "When the right of the state court is to be questioned, it can be done by the intervention of the trustee only." Brandenburgh on Bankruptcy, § 251. It follows that the proposition that this court must in this case take judicial notice of the bankruptcy proceedings on a showing of their pendency only, and suspend proceedings in this cause, finds no support in reason or justice. Metcalf v. Barker, 9 Am. Bankr. Rep. 37, 23 Sup. Ct. 67, 187 U. S. 165, 47 L. Ed. 122; Pickens v. Roy, 9 Am. Bankr. Rep. 47, 23 Sup. Ct. 78, 181 U. S. 177, 47 L.

Ed. 128. See, also, Brandenburgh on Bankruptcy, §§ 276, 277, and 282. We therefore conclude that respondent's having been adjudicated a bankrupt is not in the way of a decision of this appeal on the merits.

The sole defense to this action urged by respondent is a certain agreement, as follows:

"This agreement, made on the twenty-fifth day of January, 1902, between the Pennsylvania Oil Company, an incorporation, and the undersigned creditors of said corporation, witnesseth: That it is hereby agreed between said company and its said creditors that the company will forthwith deliver into the possession of three trustees, representing said creditors, viz., A. J. Munn, Corry B. White, and S. T. Peet, its plant, wells, tanks, pipes, pipe lines, franchises and all personal property and equities, oil on hand, books and accounts, and contracts, to be by said trustees administered for the mutual benefit of all parties hereto, and particularly for the payment of the debts of the corporation hereinafter enumerated, upon terms and conditions here following, to wit: Said trustees shall execute their said trust without compensation for their said services. They shall proceed in a proper manner to operate the pumping plant and take the products of the wells, being empowered to employ for such purposes all necessary help, and they shall carry out all existing contracts now binding upon said corporation, for the sale of products, operation of the plant, et cetera, and from the proceeds they shall: First. Pay all operating expenses, including help bills, necessary repairs and current obligations, inclusive of interest upon notes or other evidences of indebtedness, and all proper and necessary expenses for executing said trust, and also any and all claims not herein represented, which may become, or, in the judgment of the trustees are liable to become, liens upon the property of said company. Second. They shall, from the net proceeds of such operation, make the following payments: (A) The note due Emma A. Summers, February 5, 1902, for $1,200.00 and interest in full. (B) The following claims, which, for the purposes of this agreement are hereby established as preferred, upon which payments shall be made as often as funds on hand will warrant, pro rata (provided, that if the claim of the Crane Company for $818.90, interest and costs, shall, or is liable to become a special lien against the property of the company, or collectible out of the bond given in the proceedings heretofore instituted by said company in the superior court, then the trustees may, before paying anything upon the other preferred claims, discharge said obligation to said Crane Company in full: [Here follows a list of said claims, stating the names of the claimants and the amounts due each, including Crane Company, $818.90.] (C) After the payment of said preferred claims, said trustees shall, in like manner, pay the following claims: [Here follows a list of said last-mentioned claims, stating the names of the claimants and the amount due each, including appellant's assignors, viz.: "Mrs. M. B. Dorland, 300.00; A. M. Cates, 362.25."] Said trustees are hereby authorized to pay interest upon all of the above claims, which are in the form of accounts stated, at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum, from the day when the same become due. And it is further agreed and understood that the foregoing marshaling of claims, both preferred and otherwise, is solely for the purposes of this agreement, and that in case the trustees shall, for any reason, fail to administer said trust to its contemplated conclusion, then each and every of said claims, or what may remain unpaid of any of them, shall be restored to the legal status it occupied prior to the execution of this agreement.

"It is further agreed and understood that the statement of the amounts of all the foregoing claims is subject to correction, and no such correction shall in any way invalidate the force and validity of this agreement as to any creditor. And the undersigned, A. J. Munn, hereby agrees that as long as this trust is administered by said trustees at a net profit from the business of not less than $500.00 per month, he will extend the time of payment upon the principal of his admitted claim of $2,000.00, which is not included in the above composition. And it is agreed that this contract shall remain in full force and effect until all of said claims are fully paid; provided that said corporation may, at any time, repossess itself of whatever property and rights which may be in the hands of said trustees, upon payment to them of an amount sufficient to discharge what then remains due upon the claims intended to be paid under this trust. And said trustees will, when they have fully performed the duties cast upon them hereunder, and have made full payment of the amounts as hereinbefore set forth, deliver to said company, its successors or assigns, all of the property, rights and equities whatever at that time in their possession. In case of the death, disability or resignation of any trustee hereunder, the remaining trustees shall select his successor from among the creditors enumerated herein. It is further expressly understood and agreed by and between the parties hereto that in no case shall this trust endure for a longer time than the lives of the natural persons in being, parties hereto or the survivors of them.

"In witness whereof, said corporation has, by resolution duly adopted by its board of directors, and entered in its minutes, authorized the execution of this agreement by its vice president and secretary, and attested by its seal. Pennsylvania Oil Company, by Geo. T. Gillette, Vice President, and C. C. Harris, Secretary. [Seal of the Pennsylvania Oil Company—Incorporated. 1900.]

"And the creditors above enumerated have set their hands the day and date first in this agreement written; this agreement being executed in duplicate. [Here follow the names of the creditors whose names appear in the contract, including signatures as follows: "Mrs. M. B. Dorland, by A. M. Cates, Her Attorney." "A. M. Cates."]

"We, the undersigned, hereby accept the above trust on February 1st, 1902. A. J. Munn. C. B. White. S. T. Peet."

Defendant had judgment in the superior court. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial.

Appellant contends that said contract is not a bar to his prosecution of this action. The contract does not purport to transfer all respondent's property to its trustees for its creditors. For aught that appears in the contract, it might have had ample property for the payment of all its debts. Neither does the contract purport to have been signed by all its creditors. It does not provide for any time within which payments may be made upon claims of the class of appellant's, and yet it provides that the contract shall remain in force and effect until all of said claims are fully paid. For aught that appears in the contract, nothing might be received by the trustees in excess of operating expenses. There is nothing whatever in the contract providing that the creditors who have signed it shall be debarred from prosecuting actions upon their respective claims. There is no covenant on the part of the creditors to discharge their claims against the debtor on the payment of less than the full amount of their claims. As a composition agreement it lacks essential covenants. In Pierson v. McCahill, 21 Cal. 123, the contract which was set out in full in the opinion of the court is more definite and certain than the contract under review in this case. In that case there was as assignment of the debtor's stock of goods and his accounts and notes and a covenant that when the creditors should have received 50 cents on each dollar of the indebtedness he should be replaced in possession of the remaining stock. But it was not deemed sufficient, without reformation, to bar an action by one of the creditors who had signed the agreement. In speaking of a composition agreement in Kullman v. Greenebaum, 92 Cal. 403, 28 Pac. 674, 27 Am. St. Rep. 150, the court, quoting approvingly from Solinger v. Earle, 82 N. Y. 393, say: "A composition agreement is an agreement as well between the creditors themselves as between the creditors and their debtor. Each creditor agrees to receive the sum fixed by the agreement in full of his debt." In Wilson v. Samuels, 100 Cal. 514, 35 Pac. 148, a "composition agreement" between debtor and creditors is defined as "an agreement made upon a sufficient consideration between an insolvent or embarrassed debtor and his creditors, or a considerable proportion of them, whereby the latter, for the sake of immediate or sooner payment, agree to accept a dividend less than the whole amount of their claims, to be distributed pro rata, in discharge and satisfaction of the whole."

The only clause that respondent could contend would have the effect of barring plaintiff's cause of action is that wherein it is stipulated that "the foregoing marshaling of claims, both preferred and otherwise, is solely for the purposes of this agreement, and in case the trustees shall for any reason fail to administer said trust to its contemplated conclusion, then each and every of said claims, or what shall remain unpaid of any of them, shall be restored to the legal status it occupied prior to the execution of this agreement." Considering the whole contract so as to give effect to every part, if reasonably practicable, there is only an inference that the contract wrought a change in appellant's "status." A "status," as applied to a claim such as those upon which this action was brought, can mean nothing more than its standing, state, or condition. Anderson's Dic. of Law, 968. There was a change in the status of appellant's claim in this: His assignors having assented to the transfer of certain of respondent's property to trustees for respondent's creditors, and having joined with respondent's creditors in that contract, one of the terms of which was that certain claims were to be paid in the execution of that trust in preference to the claims of appellant's assignors, their right to proceed against that property was lost or suspended. A restoration of that status, therefore, would have the effect of enabling appellant's assignors or appellant to cause the property so transferred to trustees to be levied upon to secure said indebtedness. We therefore hold that said contract was not a bar to plaintiff's action.

The signature of Mrs. M. B. Dorland to said contract, signed "M. B. Dorland, by A. M. Cates, Her Attorney," was called in question on the trial of the case, and A. M. Cates testified with regard to his authority to sign the name of Mrs. M. B. Dorland, wherein it appears that said Cates was not authorized to sign Mrs. Dorland's name to said contract. The court, on motion, struck out this testimony, presumably on the ground that the plaintiff did not, within 10 days after receiving a copy of respondent's answer, file an affidavit denying the due execution of the contract, as required by section 448 of the Code of Civil Procedure. We think that the action of the court was correct. This was substantially decided in the case of Knight v. Whitmore, 125 Cal. 198, 57 Pac. 891. In that case the defendant had set out in her defense an agreement in writing, signed "Knight, Simpson & Harpham, by C. M. Simpson." The execution of the agreement was not denied by affidavit, as provided in said section, and it was held that the genuineness and due execution of the instrument should have been deemed to have been admitted for all the purposes of the trial. It was claimed by the plaintiffs on the trial that the firm of Knight, Simpson & Harpham had been dissolved prior to the signing of said instrument, and that said Simpson had no authority to bind the plaintiffs by the contract he entered into with defendant in behalf of plaintiffs. It was held that plaintiffs, by their failure to deny by affidavit within 10 days the due execution of the contract signed as above stated, admitted the genuineness and due execution of the contract; that such admission carried with it the genuineness of the signatures and the fact of its execution, and also, necessarily, the further fact that Simpson had authority to sign the names of the plaintiffs to the document. On this point we fail to see any distinction in principle between the case at bar and the case last above cited; and on the authority of that case we hold that the trial court did not err in striking out the evidence of Cates with regard to his authority to sign Mrs. Dorland's name to the contract above set forth.

It follows, however, from our interpretation of the contract, that the court erred in rendering judgment in favor of the defendant in said action.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment and order appealed from be reversed.

OSCAR BONNER OIL CO. v. PENNSYLVANIA OIL CO. (L. A. 1,441.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 14, 1907. Rehearing Denied April 10, 1907.)

1. BANKRUPTCY — STAY OF PROCEEDINGS IN STATE COURTS.

Where defendant showed that he had been adjudged a bankrupt, and moved that the trustee in bankruptcy be substituted in his place, but it did not appear that the court in bankruptcy had directed the trustee to intervene, and the trustee himself made no motion, the application would be denied.

2. CORPORATIONS—AUTHORITY OF OFFICERS.

On an issue as to whether the secretary of a corporation to which another was indebted had authority to sign a composition with creditors, executed between such other person and creditors, the secretary testified that he had no authority to sign the agreement, but that he had asked the president of the company about it, and he stated that, while he was not in favor of it, if the secretary could get the consent of the other directors, the president would have no objection; that he never consulted any one further, but signed the agreement believing that his action would be ratified. It appeared that the by-laws of the corporation provided that the president and secretary should constitute an executive committee which should audit and pay bills, and that prior to the making of the composition agreement the directors had passed a resolution that the president and treasurer should sign checks and drafts. Held, that the signature of the secretary was not binding on the corporation.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by the Oscar Bonner Oil Company against the Pennsylvania Oil Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Tanner & Taft, for appellant. George A. Corbin, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover upon a promissory note executed by defendant for $515, with interest, in favor of plaintiff. The complaint set forth a copy of the note sued on dated August 14, 1901, and alleged nonpayment. The complaint then further alleged the making on January 25, 1902, of a composition agreement between the defendant and certain of its creditors whereby certain designated property of the defendant consisting of its plant, wells, pipes, pipe line, etc., was delivered to trustees to be managed and operated by them for the mutual benefit of the company and its creditors signing the agreement, and whereby the proceeds from the operation of the plant, etc., were to be applied to the payment of the debts due the creditors of the company, as particularly set forth in the agreement; that said agreement purported to have been consented to and executed by plaintiff through its secretary, it being signed "Oscar Bonner Oil Company, by A. M. Cates, Secy."; that the consent of plaintiff was never given to the making of said contract, nor was it ever ratified or authorized by resolution of its board of directors, nor was it signed or executed by any officer of plaintiff authorized to do so. The answer admitted the execution of the note and its nonpayment and the making of the composition agreement as alleged in the complaint (the agreement was appended to the complaint as an exhibit and made part thereof), denied nonexecution thereof by plaintiff as alleged in the complaint, and set up affirmatively that the plaintiff duly and legally caused said agreement and contract to be signed and executed by its secretary; that thereby the same became binding on plaintiff; that by its terms the obligation to pay—the note sued on—and its maturity were postponed, and that at the time this action was commenced there was nothing due or payable to plaintiff on said note. Upon these issues the case was tried, and the court found that the consent of plaintiff was never given or obtained to the making of said composition contract; nor was it ever authorized or ratified by resolution of its board of directors; nor was it ever signed, executed, or delivered by any officer thereunto authorized, nor under the corporate seal of said plaintiff company. Thereupon judgment was rendered for plaintiff for the sum of $515, with interest, and from the judgment and an order denying its motion for a new trial defendant appeals.

Before considering the appeal upon its merits, it will be necessary to refer to and dispose of a suggestion and motion made and submitted when this appeal came up for argument in this court. The suggestion was that on May 15, 1905, in the District Court of the United States for the Southern District of California, the appellant had been adjudged a bankrupt. The motion was that C. B. White, the trustee in bankruptcy, be substituted as appellant in place of the Pennsylvania Oil Company. No reason was given, when the suggestion and motion were presented, why it was necessary to have the trustee in bankruptcy intervene by substitution, nor how any benefit could possibly accrue to the bankrupt's estate, as far as creditors are concerned, by the substitution. This action was commenced against defendant in 1902 long prior to the adjudication in bankruptcy. In Brandenburgh on Bankruptcy, § 276, it is said: "Suits begun against a bankrupt before the latter's bankruptcy may be defended or stayed in the discretion of the court of bankruptcy according as the interests of the bankrupt's creditors may require, and if it is decided to defend them the trustee is entitled to be made a party, and the bankrupt will be enjoined from interfering. The court in which an action is pending against the bankrupt will not compel the trustee to become a party." And Id. § 251: "When the right of the said court is to be questioned, it can be done by the intervention of the trustee alone." In Collier on Bankruptcy, it is stated (page 131): "A court of bankruptcy may, but need not, order the trustee to intervene in a suit against the bankrupt. The said court cannot, on the other hand, compel him to intervene." Now, it does not appear from anything in the suggestion or motion that the court in bankruptcy has directed the trustee in bankruptcy to intervene in this appeal, nor is the trustee himself moving to intervene, nor asking that this court substitute him as a party appellant in the action. The application is made solely by and on behalf of the appellant and presented by the attorneys for the appellant. But appellant, as the bankrupt, has no right to make such motion for the trustee. This, according to the rules above stated, must proceed from the trustee himself, and, as he has not sought to intervene, the appellant is not warranted in injecting him into the case on his own volition. The motion to substitute is therefore denied. See Reynolds v. Penn. Oil Co. (L. A. 1,492, filed March 8, 1907) 89 Pac. 610.

Now, as to the merits of the appeal: The only defense urged in the trial court was the composition agreement referred to, and it is insisted by appellant that the finding of the court respecting it is not sustained by the evidence. As to the evidence upon the subject of the execution of that contract: A. M. Cates was called as a witness upon the trial, and testified that he was secretary of the plaintiff corporation at the time the note sued on was delivered by defendant to plaintiff; that no part of said note had been paid; that he was also secretary of plaintiff corporation at the time the agreement sued on in plaintiff's complaint was executed; that he signed the name of plaintiff to said agreement as secretary, but that he had no authority to do so; that he had asked his brother, Dr. H. G. Cates, who was then a director and also the president of the company, whether he should sign the agreement on behalf of the company, and his brother replied that he was not personally in favor of the company's executing it, but that, if he (the secretary) could get the consent of all the other directors of the company, he (the president) would have no objection; that he never spoke to any of the other directors about the matter and never obtained their consent or direction about it, but signed the name of the company to the agreement on his own motion, believing that his action would be ratified; that it was not ratified, as there had been no meeting of the board of directors of the plaintiff corporation since that time; that there was no consideration moving to the plaintiff company for his signature to the agreement; that he was never the attorney of the plaintiff company, and was never an officer of the defendant company. On cross-examination he testified that there had been no meeting of the board of directors of plaintiff since June 28, 1901; that the board of directors of plaintiff never authorized the acceptance of the note sued on; that witness accepted it from defendant as secretary of the plaintiff corporation without any authorization; that he was at the time of the execution of the agreement set out in the answer as the attorney for defendant corporation, and was present at the meeting of the creditors at which said agreement was made. H. G. Cates, president of the plaintiff corporation, testified to the same matters stated by the secretary with reference to the signing of the agreement, before it was signed; and, further, that, when informed by the secretary that he had signed it, the witness told him he should not have signed the articles, that he did not do anything further with regard to the secretary's action, did not call the board of directors together, and did nothing until about the time of the institution of this action, when he authorized the bringing of it. The defendant offered the following by-law of the plaintiff corporation: "The president and secretary of this company shall constitute ex-officio an executive committee, who shall attend to the business of the company, and who shall audit and pay the current bills of the company, all under the general direction of the board of directors"—also the following from the minutes of the board of directors held on July 21, 1900: "Resolved, that H. G. Cates, president, or Simpson McClure, vice president, and J. W. Hinton, treasurer of this corporation, be, and they are hereby, authorized to sign checks and drafts for and on behalf of this corporation, and that each of them be and he is hereby authorized to endorse checks and drafts payable to this corporation." Evidence was further offered by defendant to show that A. M. Cates was the attorney of the defendant corporation and secretary of the plaintiff corporation, and that he had acted as the representative of the plaintiff in the transactions leading up to the execution of the note sued on herein.

We think that under this evidence the court was fully warranted in making the finding it did. It certainly appears that A. M. Cates had no direct authority to sign the corporate agreement, unless it was derived from the by-law and the resolution offered in evidence; but under the by-law it is quite apparent that no authority was conferred upon the secretary to execute contracts of the character here involved, and it is equally apparent that, whatever business he and the president were authorized to attend to could only be done by them conjointly. The resolution offered did not even remotely suggest any authority to execute such a contract, and certainly does not confer any power at all upon the secretary of the corporation to do anything. It is claimed by appellant, however, that, if the secretary did not have express authority to execute the contract, he was at least the ostensible agent of the corporation for that purpose, and that his act is binding on it. But we cannot perceive anything in the evidence which can support a claim of ostensible agency. There is nothing in it to show that at any time A. M. Cates represented the plaintiff in the execution of any written contract by it of any kind whatever. It seems that he received from the defendant the note sued on and represented it in the transactions which led to its execution; but that circumstance could not constitute him the agent, ostensible or otherwise, of the plaintiff, to bind it by signing the composition agreement concerning the note. We do not think that there was substantial conflict in the evidence as to want of authority upon the part of the secretary to execute this contract. In fact, we do not think that under the evidence any other finding could properly be arrived at.

It is claimed by respondent that, independent of this finding, plaintiff had the right, even under the composition agreement, to maintain this action; that there is nothing, directly or inferentially, in the contract, precluding the subscribing creditors from prosecuting actions upon their respective claims; but, as we have concluded that the finding by the court that the plaintiff never executed the contract is sustained by the evidence, the construction of that contract is properly eliminated from consideration.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. LOS ANGELES FARMING & MILLING CO.

(L. A. 1,720.)

1. QUIETING TITLE—DETERMINATION OF ADVERSE CLAIMS—NATURE—STATUTORY PROVISIONS.

An action to determine adverse claims to real property is not brought within Code Civ. Proc. § 749, providing that the complaint in an action to determine adverse claims may include as defendants all unknown persons, etc., to be described as "all other persons unknown," etc., by the fact that certain persons are made defendants under fictitious names; it being alleged that their names are unknown to plaintiff, but not that the persons are unknown nor that the action is against all unknown persons.

2. JUDGMENT—DEFAULT—PROOF OF CAUSE OF ACTION.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 585, providing that judgment may be had if defendant fail to answer the complaint in certain cases, and that, if the taking of an account or the proof of any fact is necessary to enable the court to give judgment, the court may take the account or hear proof, etc., where defendant defaults in an ordinary action to determine adverse claims to real property, the court need not hear evidence in proof of plaintiff's case.

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County, M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by the city of Los Angeles against the Los Angeles Farming & Milling Company. From an order denying defendant's motion to set aside a default and judgment, it appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. Wedney, for appellant. W. B. Mathews, H. T. Lee, and J. R. Scott, for respondent.

SHAW, J. On July 24, 1903, plaintiff recovered judgment against the defendant above named. The judgment was rendered upon the default of said defendant, duly entered, for its failure to appear after due personal service of summons. On October 24, 1904, more than a year afterward, the defendant served on plaintiff a notice of motion to set aside the default and judgment. The ground of the motion, as stated in the notice, was that the judgment is void on the face of the record for want of jurisdiction. The motion was denied, and the defendant appeals from the order.

The complaint states, in the usual form, a cause of action to determine adverse claims to real property, as provided in section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The summons is in the form prescribed in section 407 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The service was made on the president of the defendant, the default was regularly entered, and the judgment was given in all respects in the regular mode provided for judgments in such actions. No ground for the motion is apparent.

The contention of the defendant is that the cause of action stated in the complaint is not an action under section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but that it is a cause of action against all persons, whether known or unknown, who make any adverse claim, an action of the the character authorized by sections 749, 750, and 751 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and that the entire proceeding is void because it is not in compliance with the special provisions of those sections regarding that special proceeding. We need not particularly consider the merits of the argument made in that behalf. The premises on which the argument is based are lacking. The cause of action stated is, as already said, an action under section 738. It alleges the title of the plaintiff in fee to the real property described, and in the usual manner avers that the defendants, without right, make some claim thereto adversely to plaintiff's title and estate. There are no allegations of actual, exclusive, and adverse possession by plaintiff continuously for 20 years, nor any of the special averments required in an action under section 749. The action was begun on April 25, 1903, which was after the act of March 8, 1903, amending sections 749, 750, and 751, took effect, and therefore the question whether or not it is a proceeding under those sections is to be determined by the terms of the sections as then amended. We have no doubt it was an ordinary action, and not a proceeding as in those sections authorized. Four other persons were made defendants under the fictitious names of John Doe, Richard Roe, Jane Doe, and Mary Roe; it being alleged that their names were unknown to plaintiffs. This does not bring the case within section 749. It is not averred that the persons are unknown. Nor is the action against all unknown persons, nor even against all persons whose names are unknown. It is against four certain persons who make adverse claim, and their true names only are unknown.

We would not be understood to intimate by anything in this opinion that a judgment in a proceeding under sections 749, 750, and 751 against a named defendant who was personally served with the summons would be void if the proceedings were lacking in the respects in which it is claimed the present proceedings fail. As this is not such a proceeding, it is unnecessary to consider whether or not the alleged defects would render it void, if it was a proceeding of that character.

It is claimed that the judgment is void because the record does not show that the court heard or required evidence in proof of the plaintiff's case. This was not necessary on default in an ordinary action where the summons is personally served, except where the taking of an account, or the proof of damages or of some other fact, is necessary to enable the court to give judgment or carry it into effect. Code Civ. Proc. § 585. Here no such proof was required. The default of the defendant in an ordinary action of this character admits, so far as such defaulting defendant is concerned, the absolute verity of all the allegations of the complaint. No amount of evidence could establish the facts more effectually for the purpose of rendering the judgment as against such defendant.

The order is affirmed.

JANSEN v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Civ. 248.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 9, 1907.)

1. NEGLIGENCE—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE AS PROXIMATE CAUSE—INSTRUCTIONS.

Where the negligence of a person injured, assuming it to exist, continued, up to the very moment of the accident, unbroken by any new independent cause, and without which that event would not have occurred, there could be no controversy as to whether his contributory negligence was proximate or not, and an instruction omitting the word "proximate," or its equivalent, was not error.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, § 391.]

2. APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—INSTRUCTIONS.

In an action for personal injuries, where there was no evidence and no issue raised as to any wanton and intentional injury by defendant, an instruction on that question was not prejudicial to plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4220.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; S. P. Hall, Judge.

Action by Robert P. Jansen against the Southern Pacific Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. M. Delmas and Gibson & Woolner, for appellant. P. F. Dunne, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an action for damages. It was occasioned by serious personal injuries received by appellant at Encinal Station, Alameda, on the railroad of respondent, and which were due, so it is alleged, to the negligence of respondent in running its train "at an improper and negligent rate of speed and at an improper and negligent point of time without notice or warning of any kind whatever, and so negligently that it ran upon said plaintiff and threw him to the ground." The case is somewhat unique, in this: That no objection by either party was made to any of the testimony; only five simple instructions were requested by appellant and three by respondent; without substantial modification they were all given by the court; and the verdict of the jury was in favor of the corporation.

By the learned counsel for the appellant, only one point is deemed sufficiently vulnerable to merit attention and invite attack. With commendable brevity and simplicity it is urged that prejudicial error was committed by the court in giving the following instruction: "I instruct you that it was the duty of the plaintiff to have a reasonable regard for and pay such reasonable attention as a reasonable man under such circumstances should pay to the preservation of his own life and limb, and if the jury believe from the evidence that he did not on that occasion exercise such reasonable and ordinary care as the average reasonable man would exercise under like conditions, he cannot recover in this action, whatever may have been his injuries, or whatever the negligence of the defendant, unless the negligence of the defendant was gross, willful, and intentional and exhibited an intentional purpose to hurt him." It is suggested that this instruction is open to two objections; that is, in attempting to state the rule of contributory negligence the essential element of "proximate" contribution has been omitted, and, again, that it takes no account of the doctrine of the "last clear opportunity," or, as aptly expressed by appellant's counsel: "It tells the jury, in effect, that, even though the engineer discovered the plaintiff in time to have avoided injuring him by the use of ordinary care, yet he was not guilty of actionable negligence, though he failed to use such care, unless he purposely ran over him, with the intention of hurting him." In support of each objection one authority is cited, and no fault can be found with the doctrine of either. The first is found in Deering's Digest, vol. 2, p. 2058, No. 123, and is as follows: "The rule releasing a defendant from responsibility for damages because of the negligence of the plaintiff is limited to cases where the act or omission of the plaintiff is the proximate cause of the injury." It is hard to conceive of any authority holding differently. In support of the second objection appellant invokes the case of Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 514, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85, wherein it is declared that "no purpose or design * * * to injure was essential to defendant's liability."

In the consideration of the first objection is involved the significance of the expression "proximate cause." The term scarcely needs definition, as it is so familiar to the profession. Shearman & Redfield, in their work on Negligence, § 26, however, declare that "the proximate cause of an event must be understood to be that which in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new independent cause, produces that event, and without which that event would not have occurred." "Proximate contributory negligence," then, must be that negligence which "in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new independent cause," contributes to the injuries, and without which the injuries would not have occurred. But, it is apparent from the evidence in the case that the occasion did not demand the definition of "proximate contributory negligence," and it is equally obvious that the omission from the instruction of the word "proximate," or its equivalent, could not have prejudiced the appellant. This is indubitably so because there could be no controversy as to whether appellant's "contributory negligence" was proximate or not. The evidence all shows that appellant's negligence, assuming it to exist, continued up to the very moment of the accident, "unbroken by any new independent cause and without which that event would not have occurred." This is manifest from the testimony of appellant himself. In his account of the accident, he says: "I boarded the first car, the smoking car—next to the tender. I was going to the city. After I got on the platform, I turned around and saw my wife. She made a motion with her hand, as I understood to recall, signaling to come back. * * * My intention was to come down again the way I came up on that platform, but there were people getting on there still, so I stepped off on the other side, the north side of the train. * * * My purpose was to go to the sidewalk and wait until that train had withdrawn from the station and go to my wife and see what she required of me when she recalled me. * * * The train was headed towards the west, and I was turned northeast with my back towards the engine. I was going to the northeast corner of Lafayette street and Encinal avenue. In order to do that I had to cross the northerly track. The northern and southerly tracks are 11.95 feet apart. During the six years I had traveled there I had observed that the trains never met there at the station, according to a rule of the company, of which I had read, that the train should not pass on the double track in Alameda, at stations. After stepping off the car, I was not conscious of anything. I didn't even feel the blow. As I got off to cross that track on the northerly side of the train I was leaving, I did not turn at all in the direction in which the train might be coming from the mole. I stepped down with my back in that direction. I did not stop to look or listen or to see if any train was coming. I may have taken two or three steps. I couldn't say whether I got to the track, whether I was between the rails or at the side of the track. I think I got hit almost immediately after I got off the train."

From the foregoing account, it could be argued plausibly that, at any moment from the time he left the train until he was struck, plaintiff could have avoided the accident by the use of ordinary caution—such caution as "a person of ordinary prudence would use for his own protection under the same circumstances, in view of the danger to be avoided." That plaintiff's negligence was the "proximate" contributing cause of the injury is not open to discussion, if he was guilty of any negligence at all. That he was actively at fault in voluntarily exposing himself to danger, without making any effort to ascertain whether a train was approaching from the opposite direction, seems established by the weight of authority. The doctrine of the cases is embodied in the following quotation from Shearman & Redfield, § 476: "It is a rule of almost invariable application that a traveler who knows or is bound to know that he is about to cross the track of a railroad, upon which trains may lawfully run at greater speed than ordinary vehicles upon highways, must both look and listen for approaching trains before even attempting to cross the track. He must do this every time that he crosses the track, even if he goes to and fro. He should in this manner make sure that the crossing is safe and clear before using it. He ought not to take any chances. A traveler must look in every direction from which engines could possibly come. * * * One who stands or lingers on the track must continually look and listen. * * * It is no excuse for failure to look and listen that the traveler did not think, just then, about the railroad or its dangers, or that his attention was diverted by some trivial matter, or that he believed that all trains stopped short of the crossing, or that no regular train was due, or that a train had recently passed, or that the usual or statutory signals of approaching trains were not given."

The decisions of our supreme court are to the same effect. Holmes v. South. Pac. C. Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 Pac. 834; Bailey v. Market St. Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 323, 42 Pac. 914; Everett v. Los Angeles, etc., Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 105, 43 Pac. 207, 46 Pac. 889, 34 L. R. A. 350; Sego v. S. P. Co., 137 Cal. 406, 70 Pac. 279. Hence with some reason defendant might have contested the propriety of submitting to the jury at all the question of negligence. However, in view of the conflict in the evidence as to whether respondent transgressed its rule in reference to trains passing at the station, and as to whether the usual signals were given, and keeping in mind the testimony of appellant that he relied upon said rule, it may have been proper to allow the jury to determine whether, under all the circumstances, appellant was chargeable with such contributory negligence as to preclude recovery. But assuredly no question could arise as to whether that "contributory negligence" was proximate or otherwise. Again, the instructions must be read together, as the authorities hold, and it is not necessary for one to contain all the elements, when the omission is supplied by other instructions. What the court meant by the negligence of plaintiff is shown by four instructions given at the request of plaintiff. They conclude with this caution: "Unless you further find that the plaintiff was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to his injuries." There could have been on the subject no misunderstanding in the minds of the jurors.

What has been said will apply in part to the further animadversion of appellant. There was no room for the application of the doctrine of "earlier and later negligence," or, as some of the decisions express it, "of the last clear opportunity." The negligence of plaintiff and the negligence of defendant, assuming them to exist, were, without controversy, contemporaneous and concurrent, and extending up to the very time of the accident; and, if we are to apply the strict doctrine of Everett v. Los Angeles Co., 115 Cal. 128, 43 Pac. 207, 46 Pac. 889, 34 L. R. A. 350, the rule could not apply because of the continuing neglect of plaintiff and his ability at any moment up to the time of the accident, by the exercise of the slightest care and effort, to put himself out of danger. But, to justify the instruction of which complaint is made, it is not necessary to go to the limit of the Everett Case. It is sufficient to say that there was no evidence of any last clear opportunity, or to show that the negligent acts of the parties were distinct and independent of each other, and that the engineer could have stopped the train after knowing of plaintiff's danger. Indeed, as a complete answer to appellant's contention, it is submitted that all the evidence shows that the engineer, after his discovery of plaintiff's dangerous situation, notwithstanding his right to assume that plaintiff would avoid the accident, did all that he could to prevent it. The only evidence that could arouse a suspicion to the contrary is found in the testimony of one R. S. Wheeler, an apparently honest witness, who thinks that when plaintiff stepped upon the track the train was 20 or 30 or 50 feet away. This, however, is merely a guess on his part. In this connection, it must be remembered that the doctrine of later negligence rests upon the assumption that the engineer must have been actually aware of plaintiff's danger in time to obviate it, and not upon the proposition that by the exercise of more or less diligence he might have discovered plaintiff's peril earlier. Herbert v. S. P. Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651; Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., supra. The latter case, cited by appellant, affords him no comfort. In that case there was evidence of a "last clear opportunity," and that deceased, realizing his danger, made an earnest effort to escape. The court there, nevertheless, declares that the duty of exercising ordinary care by the defendant to avoid injuring plaintiff arises only when he discovers plaintiff in a dangerous position, and under such circumstances as preclude the assumption that the injured party will or can get out of the way. Of course, in any event, the defendant would have no right to injure the plaintiff wantonly, willfully, and with "an intentional purpose to hurt him"; but, in view of the fact that in the case at bar there was no evidence and no issue raised as to any wanton and intentional injury, this feature might have been eliminated from the instruction in question; but its presence there could not possibly injure appellant.

AMES v. BELL. (Civ. 315.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 7, 1907.)

1. PLEADING—BILL OF PARTICULARS—MOTION TO STRIKE.

Where defendant for five months raised no objection to a bill of particulars filed by plaintiff pursuant to an order of the court made as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 454, the court properly denied a motion, made on the day the case was called for trial, to strike the bill of particulars and to order a further bill.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 992, 1130.]

2. SAME—BILL OF PARTICULARS—SUFFICIENCY—ATTORNEY AND CLIENT—ACTIONS FOR COMPENSATION.

A bill of particulars in an action by an attorney for legal services, showing that between specified dates the attorney examined accounts of creditors of a deceased and petitions of creditors for the sale of real estate and a return of sale thereon, and that on a specified date he prepared answers to the petitions of creditors, and that between specified dates he was obliged to appear in court at hearings and trials of said proceedings in relation to matters connected with the administration of the estate, is sufficient to notify defendant of the nature of the services rendered, and to authorize evidence of the character of the services performed in connection with the administration of the estate.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 954–962.]

3. SAME—BILL OF PARTICULARS—AMENDMENT.

An amended bill of particulars supersedes former bills, and may include services rendered for defendant not included in the former bills.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Fisher Ames against Teresa Bell. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

T. Z. Blakeman, for appellant. Theo. J. Roche, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover $8,500, balance alleged to be due plaintiff for services as an attorney and counselor at law, performed at defendant's instance and request. The case was tried with a jury, and a verdict rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $3,000, upon which judgment was entered. Defendant made a motion for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment and the order denying the motion.

It is not claimed that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, nor is there any suggestion that the instructions to the jury were in any respect erroneous. The main contentions of the defendant relate to a bill of particulars furnished by the plaintiff to the defendant, concerning which error is claimed in the refusal of the court to make an order striking out the bill, in the refusal of the court to compel the plaintiff to furnish such bill as it is claimed the court ordered, and the refusal of the court to grant the defendant's motion for a continuance until such time as the plaintiff should have furnished a bill of particulars to comply with the order of the court. As these alleged errors all relate to the one question as to the bill of particulars, we will consider them under the one head.

On November 17, 1902, upon demand of defendant, plaintiff furnished her a bill of particulars which contained the item of $2,012.50 for 805 consultations between September 21, 1895, and October 27, 1898, and the item of $5,587.50 for legal services rendered at the request of defendant in the matter of the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased, and in the matter of the guardianship of the minors. Upon motion of the defendant, and on the 30th day of January, 1903, the court made an order directing plaintiff to make and deliver to defendant a further bill of particulars, specifying separately the services rendered in the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased, and for defendant as guardian of the minors, and the dates and general subject and nature of the 805 consultations. On February 14, 1903, the plaintiff delivered to the defendant an amended bill of particulars in response to the order that had been made by the court. Defendant claims that the amended bill of particulars did not comply with the order of the court in certain respects, and on the 6th day of March, 1903, the court at the request of the defendant, made an order directing the plaintiff to furnish defendant with "an amended and further bill of particulars." On the 28th day of April, 1903, in response to the second order of the court, the plaintiff served defendant with an amended and further bill of particulars, in which he gave at great length statements of services in the various matters connected with the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased, the guardianship matters, and his various services for defendant as her attorney. This amended and further bill of particulars goes into detail as to dates, times, places, time occupied, and kind of services rendered for the defendant. It takes up 187 folios, or nearly half the transcript, and evidently was an attempt in good faith to comply with the order of the court. It was not objected to, except as hereinafter stated, and the case was set down for trial at the request of the parties. The deposition of the defendant was taken. The case was not reached on the trial calendar of the court until October 6, 1903, and during the time intervening after the last bill of particulars was served and up to October 5, 1903, a period of over five months, no objection was made to the last bill of particulars, and no intimation by defendant that she would not be ready for trial. On the day the case was called for trial, and upon only one day's notice, defendant made a motion to strike from the files the last bill of particulars, and asked for an order to compel the plaintiff to furnish another bill of particulars, and for a continuance of the case until the plaintiff should comply with the orders of the court already made in regard to the bill of particulars. The court denied each of said motions, and directed the parties to proceed with the trial. In this the court did not abuse its discretion. As to whether or not the defendant should have used more diligence, and asked for relief in regard to the bill of particulars before the trial, so as not to interfere with the orderly conduct thereof, and as to whether or not the amended bill of particulars substantially complied with the order of the court, were matters resting largely in the discretion of the trial judge. It is provided in section 454, Code Civ. Proc., that when the items of an account are not set forth in a pleading the pleader "must deliver to the adverse party, within five days after a demand therefor in writing, a copy of the account, or be precluded from giving evidence thereof. The court or judge may order a further account when the one delivered is too general, or is defective in any particular." The purpose of the above section is to give the adverse party reasonable notice of the items constituting the claim which he is required to meet, so that he may prepare for trial. It is in the nature of an amplification of the pleading to which it relates, and is to be construed as a part of it for certain purposes. It has the effect of restricting the evidence and limiting the recovery to the matters and things set forth therein, provided proper objections are made, and the court's attention called to any material departure from it. When the court or judge orders a further account or bill of particulars, as the section provides may be done, the further or amended account is to be construed as an amended pleading for certain purposes. We therefore have in this case an application made by defendant, at the time the case is ready for trial, for an order requiring the plaintiff to serve a further account or bill of particulars. The court may well have denied the motion, for the reason that defendant, having made no objection to the last bill of items served upon her for over five months and not till the moment of the trial, the motion came too late. Dennison v. Smith, 1 Cal. 437; Connor v. Hutchinson, 17 Cal. 279; McCarthy v. Mt. T. L. & W. Co., 110 Cal. 687, 43 Pac. 391; Silva v. Bair, 141 Cal. 601, 75 Pac. 162.

Plaintiff was allowed to testify, under defendant's objection, to services in examining the claims of seven creditors of the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased, one being a claim for $16,000, and also to services in the contested claim of one Butler against the estate for $1,600, and other items of like character. The main ground of objection to the evidence was that the amended bill of particulars was not sufficiently specific, did not set forth the dates on which the several items of services were performed, and that the bill of particulars did not comply with the order of court. The matters concerning which plaintiff was testifying were not wholly omitted from the last bill of particulars, and we are of opinion, from what has already been said, that the defendant had waived the right to any further bill of particulars, or to object to any testimony within the general scope of the complaint and the amended bill. The bill of particulars contained the following items:

"Between the 15th and 18th days of said month (October, 1895) he examined the accounts of seven creditors of said deceased, and thereafter the petitions of two of said creditors, one for a sale of real estate, and the other for an order to show cause; also a return of sale thereon."

"On November 26, 1895, he prepared and filed the answers of defendant to said petitions of said creditors; thereafter, and during said month, he received a demurrer to said answers, and examined claims of P. F. Butler and Roos Bros. against said estate."

"During said period of time, between said 21st day of September, 1895, and said 27th day of October, 1898, plaintiff was obliged to and did appear repeatedly in court, upon the hearings and trial of said proceedings hereinabove specified, and in relation to matters connected with the administration of said estate."

This was sufficient to notify the defendant of the nature of the charge in the estate of Thomas Bell, deceased, and the amount of the charge as attorney for the guardian of the minors. This authorized evidence as to the nature and character of the services performed under each heading in connection with the estate or the guardianship respectively.

The defendant complains that while the plaintiff made no charge in his first bill of particulars for his services rendered plaintiff in and about the guardianship of the Bell minors, he did make such charge in the last bill. The amended and last bill of particulars superseded the others, and we know of no reason why it might not include all services rendered to and for defendant at her special instance and request. A further answer to the last contention is that the evidence given by plaintiff relative to the guardianship was given without objection, and no motion was made to strike it out. Counsel for defendant, after the testimony was in, moved to strike out the statement of plaintiff as to consultations with defendant in regard to a petition to revoke her letters of guardianship, but the motion only went to the statement as to consultations.

The objection to the inventory and appraisement being received in evidence as to the value of the estate of Bell is extremely technical, and the ruling not of sufficient importance to justify a reversal of the case. Not only this, but it is not clear from the record that the counsel objected on the ground that the inventory and appraisement were incompetent because hearsay.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

KILILLEA v. WILSON et al. (Civ. 340.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 8, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 7, 1907; Denied by Supreme Court April 8, 1907.)

JUDGMENT—DEFAULT JUDGMENT—PLEADINGS TO SUPPORT—ALLEGATIONS—CONCLUSION OF LAW.

An allegation that defendants became indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum is a sufficient allegation of the incurring of the indebtedness sued on to sustain a judgment by default, and is not defective as a conclusion of law.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 168–173.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Nellie Kilillea against Kate Wilson and another. From a default judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

J. B. Gibson, for appellants. Davis & Klein, for respondent.

HALL, J. This is an appeal from a judgment taken by default against the defendants, who neither answered nor demurred to the complaint.

The only point raised upon the appeal is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and therefore does not support the judgment. The complaint simply charges "that defendants are husband and wife, and within the two years last past became indebted to the plaintiff in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, in the sum of nine hundred ($900) dollars," followed by allegations that no part thereof has been paid, save $280; that the sum of $620 is now due; that defendants have refused to pay the same, or any part thereof, although demand has been made therefor. It is insisted that the general allegation of indebtedness is but an allegation of a conclusion of law, and is not an allegation of a fact, and therefore the complaint states no cause of action. Without in detail discussing the various cases cited by appellant in support of his position, it is sufficient to say that, in a case later than any cited by appellant, it has been held that an allegation of a conclusion of law, which cannot be distinguished in principle from the allegation in this case, is sufficient to support a judgment by default. Penrose v. Winter, 135 Cal. 289, 67 Pac. 772. In this latter case, there was no allegation of nonpayment of a debt secured by mortgage, save that a specified sum "is now due and owing." The court, however, upon an appeal from a default judgment, held the allegation sufficient to support a default judgment, expressly overruling Ryan v. Holiday, 110 Cal. 337, 42 Pac. 891, where the contrary was held. The court said: "It is true that the allegation was made in the form of a legal conclusion, in which the material fact was merely implied; but, in the absence of any demurrer, such faults of pleading are cured by the judgment." The allegation that a certain sum "is due and owing" is an allegation of a conclusion of law of the same kind as is the allegation that defendants became indebted to plaintiff in a certain sum. There is no difference in principle between the two forms of pleading. The case of Penrose v. Winter, supra, is decisive of the point now under discussion.

Judgment is affirmed.

SIMMONS v. ROWE et al. (Civ. 245.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 6, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—REVIEW—ERROR WAIVED IN APPELLATE COURT.

Where appellant attempts to overthrow the judgment by attacking certain findings only, it will be assumed that he has abandoned every other point of attack.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4256–4261.]

2. PARTITION — PARTNERSHIP — SETTLEMENT AND ACCOUNTING — SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

In an action for partition of real property, evidence examined, and held sufficient to support a finding that defendant in a partnership settlement and account had surrendered all interest in the property which was to remain assets of the partnership subject to a mortgage thereon to defendant.

3. JUDGMENT—CONSTRUCTION.

In an action by a retired partner to foreclose a mortgage on partnership real estate, the answer alleged that the note and mortgage was given to secure the payment of the mortgagee's interest in the partnership, and that, if the estimated value of his interest should prove to be excessive or erroneous, the note and mortgage would be held good only for the amount actually due him. Held, that a judgment decreeing that the mortgagee recover nothing was an adjudication that he had fraudulently overvalued his interest; that he had agreed to enforce the mortgage only for the amount actually due him; and that, when he brought the action, he had received all he was entitled to for his interest.

4. SAME—ABSENCE OF FINDINGS—EFFECT.

The facts that findings are waived does not derogate from the potency of a judgment.

5. ESTOPPEL—DEALING WITH PERSON ASSERTING TITLE.

Where a retiring partner, without objection, permitted the remaining partners to mortgage to him the entire interest in the partnership property to secure the payment of his interest, he was thereafter estopped to deny that they were vested with a complete title.

6. LIS PENDENS—RIGHTS OF PURCHASERS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, providing that a judgment is, in respect to the matter directly adjudged, conclusive between the parties and their successors in interest by title subsequent to the commencement of the action, litigating for the same thing under the same title and in the same capacity, provided they have notice, actual or constructive, of the pendency of the action, where a decree in an action to settle and adjust partnership interests adjudged that one of the partners was not entitled to any interest in the real estate, another partner having notice of the pendency of the action was bound by the judgment, and took nothing under a conveyance of the first-named partner's interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by Alonzo R. Simmons against William T. Rowe and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant Philip Simmons appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. W. Slack, for appellant. Edw. C. Harrison, for respondent Simmons. R. L. Simpson, for respondent executors. Leonard S. Clark, for S. Young.

BURNETT, J. For a proper understanding of the controverted questions involved in the case it is deemed advisable to make a somewhat extended statement of the pleadings and proceedings presented by the record. In doing so no substantial departure is made from the admirable recital contained in the brief of the learned counsel for appellant. The action was brought for the partition between plaintiff and the Rowe estate of certain real estate in San Francisco, and also to have it decreed that appellant "has no equitable title to any interest or share in or of said real estate or any portion thereof," and to require him "to make, execute, and deliver any conveyance that may be necessary to properly perfect the title thereto of said plaintiff and said estate of Wm. B. Rowe, deceased." The lower court found in favor of plaintiff and the Rowe estate, and made its interlocutory decree accordingly. From this, and from the order denying his motion for new trial, Philip Simmons, who was adjudged to have no interest in the property, has appealed.

The complaint, in appropriate phraseology, alleges that on and prior to February 20, 1868, the plaintiff, Alonzo R. Simmons, and William B. Rowe and Joseph Simmons and the defendant, Philip Simmons, were partners engaged in business in the city and county of San Francisco, under the firm name of Simmons, Rowe & Co., and that on said date they purchased for use in their partnership business, with partnership funds, the property in question. This allegation is not denied. The deed, executed by Albert Jacobs, and dated February 20, 1868, and granting the property to "Joseph S. Simmons, Wm. B. Rowe, Alonzo R. Simmons and Philip Simmons, partners in trade and doing business under the firm name of Simmons, Rowe & Co.," was received in evidence. The complaint further alleges that the partnership continued until May 20, 1872, when the defendant Philip Simmons retired therefrom and sold and transferred to the other members of the firm all his interest and share in and of the partnership property, including the property in controversy, and the partnership was thereafter continued by the other three until January 9, 1892, when it was dissolved by the death of Joseph S. Simmons. Appellant denies in his answer the sale and transfer by him. The court found it as alleged in the complaint. The complaint further alleges the death of Wm. B. Rowe, December 29, 1895, leaving a last will, its admission to probate, the appointment of executors and the disposition of his estate by will to certain of the defendants. There is no denial of these allegations. It also appears from the complaint that on May 18, 1877, Wm. B. Rowe began an action against plaintiff and Joseph S. Simmons for a dissolution of the partnership and settlement of its affairs, and that on October 17, 1899, by judgment rendered, the property in controversy was allotted to plaintiff herein and to the estate of the said Wm. B. Rowe. There is no denial of these allegations. The judgment roll in the action referred to was introduced in evidence. It appears therefrom that appellant, Philip Simmons, was not originally a party, but he was made so by an amended and supplemental complaint filed August 25, 1895, in which it was alleged that he had in his possession and under his control large assets of the firm for which he refused to account. He answered, denying that he had any assets of the firm, setting up the dissolution of the firm by his retirement in May, 1872, and pleading laches and the statute of limitations. The court found that he had retired from the firm, as alleged, and that the cause of action as to him was barred by laches and the statute of limitations. Judgment was entered accordingly May 19, 1894. As to the other parties to that action on October 17, 1899, the court found that Philip Simmons, as a partner, owned a one-fourth interest in the property from about January 1, 1863, until May 20, 1872, which interest he then resold and restored to his three copartners; that Joseph S. Simmons was indebted to the firm in the sum of $49,000, and that the only property of the firm consisted of this indebtedness and the real property here in controversy. The decree followed, awarding the said real property, as hereinbefore set out, in equal undivided shares to Alonzo R. Simmons and the estate of William B. Rowe, who had died during the pendency of the action.

The complaint in the present action proceeds that plaintiff is an owner of an undivided half of the property, and that certain defendants, as residuary devisees under the will of William B. Rowe, are the owners of the other half, subject to the right of possession in the executors for purposes of administration. This is denied by defendant. The court's finding was in favor of plaintiff. It is further alleged that the defendant claims an interest in the property by virtue of a deed to him from Joseph S. Simmons, which deed was executed after the commencement of the said action for dissolution of the partnership, and while Joseph S. Simmons was indebted as aforesaid to the firm in the sum of $49,000, a sum largely in excess of the value of the property, and was taken by said Philip Simmons with full knowledge of the pendency of said action and of said indebtedness. Furthermore, that said Philip Simmons claims some interest in said property by virtue of the fact that on May 20, 1872, no formal conveyance of it was delivered by him to his partners; but that a full settlement was then had in which he received full credit for the value of his interest, and it was then understood and agreed that the said property should continue to form a part of the assets of the partnership, after his retirement therefrom, and that he should have no further interest therein other than the mortgage thereon, which was at the time given him, and that he has no equitable interest in the said property. The answer of Philip Simmons denies these allegations, except as to his claim of ownership, and alleges that he became the owner of an undivided one-fourth interest in the property by virtue of the said deed from Albert Jacobs, February 20, 1868, and of another undivided one-fourth by said deed from Joseph Simmons. The court found in favor of plaintiff's claim. The executors and the trustees under the will of William B. Rowe filed an answer admitting the allegations of the complaint to be true, and they also filed a cross-complaint containing similar allegations to the complaint, which were similarly answered by Philip Simmons. Respondent, in his brief, explains the theory of his complaint based upon certain fundamental and somewhat elementary principles of partnership, and he cites numerous authorities to sustain his theory; but we may pass by this part of the discussion, as appellant does not question the sufficiency of the complaint. Appellant, however, attempts to overthrow the judgment by attacking two of the findings. It must be assumed that he has abandoned every other point of attack.

1. He claims that the evidence is insufficient to support the finding to the effect that it was, on May 20, 1872, understood upon the settlement and accounting then had between the parties and as a part thereof, that the real estate should continue to be a part of the assets of the partnership; that Philip Simmons should have no further interest therein, other than the mortgage thereon which was given him pursuant to said settlement; and that it was then agreed and understood that the settlement was effective to vest in the remaining partners the whole title to said real estate. Whether there is any substantial evidence to support this finding can be answered only in the affirmative. As pointed out by the able counsel for respondent, Philip Simmons himself testified: "I was a member of the firm when the property here in controversy was bought from Mr. Jacobs. It was with partnership money and for a place of business for the partnership. The building was constructed with partnership money. My connection with the partnership was terminated in May, 1872. The other partners agreed to give me $15,000 for my interest, and the papers were drawn up. No accounts were drawn off the books at that time that I know of. I then surrendered my position in the firm and went East. I retired from the firm as a partner, and thereafter did not pay any of the firm bills, nor collect any of the firm accounts, nor take any part in the management of the firm business. I sold my interest in the firm. At the time I retired from the firm and went East, I signed a deed to the property and acknowledged it. I don't know where the deed is now, but it was never delivered. They were to have the deed, but I never delivered it to them." Alonzo R. Simmons testified: "I heard Philip Simmons say that Joseph had agreed to give him $15,000 for his interest, and that the papers were all made out—the deeds and mortgages, or whatever it was, mortgages, and so forth. Joseph said in the presence of Philip that, if I would sign those papers, if there was anything wrong with them they would make it right." Also, the deed of Albert Jacobs, received in evidence, conveyed the property to "Simmons, Rowe & Co.," and the mortgage, also, to Philip Simmons of May 22, 1872, covered the whole of said property. The chattel mortgage, likewise, of the same date, transferred all the goods and chattels of the firm. Besides, in support of this finding, there is found in the record the judgment roll in the action for the foreclosure of said real estate mortgage in the Fifteenth district court. In the answer and cross-complaint in that action it is alleged that, on account of illness, Philip Simmons desired to sell to the other partners his interest in the partnership; that it was distinctly understood and agreed by the parties that, in case the estimated value of $15,000 should prove to be erroneous or excessive for Philip's interest, the note and mortgage therefor would be held good only for the amount actually due him. The answer of Philip to said cross-complaint contained no denial of his desire to sell, and that the note and mortgage were given in payment of his interest, but he avers that his interest was of the full value of $15,000. The judgment was in favor of the other parties and against Philip Simmons, and decreed that he recover nothing in his action of foreclosure. This was an adjudication that he had fraudulently overvalued his interest, that he had agreed to enforce the mortgage only for the amount actually due him, and that at the time of the bringing of the action he had received all that he was entitled to for the sale of his interest in the partnership property. It is true that findings were waived, but this circumstance does not derogate from the potency of the judgment. In Crew v. Pratt, 119 Cal. 149, 51 Pac. 42, the Supreme Court said: "It may be stated, as a general proposition, that a judgment is conclusive, not only as to the subject-matter in controversy upon which it is based, but also in all other actions involving the same question, and upon all matters involved in the issues which might have been litigated and decided in the case; the presumption being that all such issues were really met and decided"—citing Freeman on Judgments, § 253; Parnell v. Hahn, 61 Cal. 131; Lillis v. Emigrant, etc., Co., 95 Cal. 553, 30 Pac. 1108; Woolverton v. Baker, 98 Cal. 631, 33 Pac. 731; Howell v. Budd, 91 Cal. 342, 27 Pac. 747; Burris v. Kennedy, 108 Cal. 338, 41 Pac. 458; Estate of Hudson, 63 Cal. 457.

It is significant, also, that in the action to foreclose the mortgage there was no suggestion in the pleadings that the mortgagors were not the owners of the entire property, and it would seem under all the circumstances that appellant is estopped from denying that they were vested with a complete title, since he permitted them without objection to mortgage to him the entire interest. If the finding is not supported by the evidence, it is difficult to conceive how the omission could be supplied. It is not a case of the repudiation of the burden and the appropriation of the benefit of a contract, as appellant suggests. The cases cited by him are not in point. There was no repudiation, but an affirmance of the contract as made by the parties. It was and is insisted that effect be given to the real agreement of the parties, and the balance due to appellant, if any, be correctly determined and settled. In the foreclosure proceedings it was ascertained and adjudged by the court that the defendants in that case had discharged their obligations to the plaintiff therein, that they owed him nothing, and it is too late for appellant to question that judgment now.

2. The contention is made, also, that support is lacking for the finding in reference to the deed from Joseph S. to Philip Simmons; that it was executed while Joseph was in debt to his partners in excess of his interest in the firm, that Philip at the time had knowledge of this fact; and that the deed was ineffective to convey any interest. The only argument in this behalf made by appellant is that "the evidence shows that the deed was taken by Philip Simmons in good faith, on account of what the firm owed him, as well as money owing him by Joseph S. Simmons individually. It is the contention that the deed is valid in the absence of an attack for fraud." This argument is based upon the assumption that Philip was a firm creditor. But adversely to this position the question was settled by said judgment in the foreclosure suit. This judgment was rendered October 19, 1881, while the deed under which appellant claims was executed November 21st of the same year. Again, there was evidence before the court in the testimony of appellant from which the inference arises that the deed was taken by him on account of what "Joseph owed him generally." It is to be observed, also, that the deed itself purports to convey simply all the right, title, and interest of Joseph Simmons individually in and to the particular piece of property, and it was so understood by appellant, as shown by his answer herein, as he claims only one-fourth of the property by virtue of said deed. "It is well settled that a partner cannot transfer an individual interest in any specific article belonging to the firm. A transfer of the partner's interest, either by voluntary act or legal process, merely entitles the transferee to receive such partner's share of what may remain after a settlement of the partnership affairs and the payment of the partnership debts." Noonan v. Nunan, 76 Cal. 47, 18 Pac. 98; 22 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 104. And, finally, the decree in the action to settle and adjust the partnership interests adjudged that Joseph was not entitled to any interest in the real estate, and by said judgment the whole of said property was awarded to this plaintiff and the Rowe estate. Hence, at the time he executed said deed, Joseph Simmons had nothing to convey, and Philip, having notice of the pendency of that action, is bound by the judgment. Section 1908, Code Civ. Proc. The case seems to have been fairly tried and justly determined, and there is no error apparent in the record.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. PALERMO LAND & WATER CO. (Cr. 280.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 31, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court March 28, 1907.)

CORPORATIONS — CRIMINAL RESPONSIBILITY — JURISDICTION—JUSTICES OF THE PEACE.

Const. art. 6, § 5, provides that the superior court shall have original jurisdiction in all criminal cases amounting to felony, and in cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for. Article 6, § 11, authorizes the Legislature to fix the powers of justices, provided they shall not trench on the jurisdiction of courts of record. Code Civ. Proc. § 115, confers jurisdiction on justices of all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment. Pen. Code, § 7, provides that the word "person" includes a corporation. Held, that a corporation accused of an offense, the punishment for which is by a fine not exceeding $200 or by imprisonment not exceeding 100 days, or by both fine and imprisonment, must be prosecuted before a justice; Pen. Code, §§ 1390–1397, relating to proceedings against corporations, providing simply a mode of procedure against corporations charged with crime which, if not applicable to prosecutions before a justice, would not divest the justice of jurisdiction, but Code Civ. Proc. § 187, permitting the use of any suitable mode of procedure, would apply.

Appeal from Superior Court, Butte County; E. P. McDaniel, Judge.

The Palermo Land & Water Company was convicted of the crime of failing and refusing to sell and deliver water for irrigating purposes, and appeals. Reversed, with directions to dismiss.

Carlton Gray and A. F. Jones, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

BURNETT, J. By an information filed by the district attorney in the superior court of Butte county, appellant was accused of the crime of "failing and refusing to sell and deliver water for the purpose of irrigating the orchard of William Hilemon." A motion was made to set aside the information on the ground "that before the filing thereof the defendant had not been legally committed by a magistrate." The motion was denied. A demurrer to the information was also interposed, setting forth: (1) That the court has no jurisdiction of the offense charged therein; (2) that it does not substantially conform to the requirements of sections 951 and 952 of the Penal Code; (3) that the facts stated do not constitute a public offense." The demurrer was overruled. Appellant was tried by a jury and convicted, and was sentenced by the court to pay a fine of $100. The appeal is from the judgment and an order denying the motion for a new trial.

The charging part of the information is as follows: "The Palermo Land & Water Company, being at all times herein mentioned a corporation, duly organized and existing under the laws of the state of California, for the purpose of selling, distributing and renting water, and having water to sell, rent and distribute, did, on or about the first day of July, 1905, at Butte county, state of California, and before the filing of this information, wrongfully, unlawfully, willfully, and maliciously refuse and fail to sell and deliver six inches of water to said William Hilemon for irrigating his orchard, after being tendered 75 cents payment in advance for one day's supply thereof, the said corporation having then and there water to sell, contrary to and in violation of the provisions or Ordinance No. 211, passed by the board of supervisors of Butte county, state of California, February 27, 1905; the orchard of the said William Hilemon being then and there within the limits of the unincorporated town of Oroville, in Butte county, state of California, and not within the limits of any incorporated town, city or village, contrary to the form, force and effect," etc.

Ordinance 211, upon which the prosecution was based, among other things provides:

"Section 1. The rate or compensation to be collected by any person, company or corporation in the county of Butte for the use of water supplied to any unincorporated city or town, or the inhabitants thereof, is hereby fixed and established as follows: * * * (29) For water used for irrigation or mining ditches, for irrigation of vineyards, orchards and similar uses, the rate shall not exceed 10 cents per inch, miner's measure, for day of twenty-four hours. * * *

"Sec. 3. Any person, company or corporation having water to sell, who shall refuse to deliver water to any person tendering payment therefor, in advance, for one day's supply, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof, shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200.00, or by imprisonment in the county jail not exceeding 100 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment."

Among the grounds of demurrer, as already observed, is one involving the determination of the question of the jurisdiction of the superior court to try the offense charged against the appellant. The claim is made that it is within the exclusive jurisdiction of the justice court to try offenses wherein the punishment "does not exceed a fine of $500 or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment." In the present instance the maximum punishment provided by the ordinance is a "fine of $200 and imprisonment for 100 days in the county jail."

To the consideration of this vital question of jurisdiction our attention will be directed. In the discussion it will be assumed that the ordinance in question is sufficiently pleaded, so that the court could take judicial notice of its terms. The jurisdiction of the superior court is conferred directly by the Constitution of the state; that of the justice court arises from the act of the Legislature. Section 5, art. 6, of the Constitution provides: "The superior court shall have original jurisdiction * * * in all criminal cases amounting to felony and cases of misdemeanor not otherwise provided for." The authority delegated to the Legislature in respect to the jurisdiction of the justice court is found in section 11 of said article 6. The provision is: "The Legislature shall determine the number of justices of the peace to be elected in townships, incorporated cities and towns, or cities and counties, and shall fix by law the powers, duties and responsibilities of justices of the peace; provided, such powers shall not in any case trench upon the jurisdiction of the several courts of record," etc. In consonance with this grant of power the Legislature has clothed the justice court with jurisdiction over certain misdemeanors. The test and measure of its said jurisdiction are presented in section 115, Code Civ. Proc., as follows: "The justices' courts shall have jurisdiction of the following public offenses committed within the respective counties in which such courts are established: * * * (3) Breaches of the peace, riots, routs, affrays, committing a willful injury to property, and all misdemeanors punishable by fine not exceeding $500, or imprisonment not exceeding six months, or by both such fine and imprisonment." Therefore it would seem that the misdemeanor of which appellant has been convicted is "otherwise provided for" and not cognizable within the scope of the original jurisdiction of the superior court. The subject has received elaborate treatment from the Supreme Court on different occasions. If authority be needed to determine what seems so clear from the said provisions of the Constitution and Code of Civil Procedure, reference may be made to the following cases: Ex parte Wallingford, 60 Cal. 103; Gafford v. Bush, 60 Cal. 149; Green v. Superior Court, 78 Cal. 556, 21 Pac. 307, 541; People v. Joselyn, 80 Cal. 544, 22 Pac. 217; People v. Lawrence, 82 Cal. 182, 22 Pac. 1120; People v. Hamberg, 84 Cal. 468, 24 Pac. 298; People v. Tom Nop, 124 Cal. 150, 56 Pac. 786; and People v. Haagen, 139 Cal. 115, 72 Pac. 836.

The case at bar, however, is sought to be distinguished from the others on the ground that appellant is a corporation. In this behalf it is argued that the Supreme Court had jurisdiction to try defendant by virtue of the provisions of chapter 9, tit. 10, pt. 2, of the Penal Code, entitled "Proceedings Against Corporations." In the first place, independent of said chapter, it is clear that as far as jurisdiction of the offense is concerned, it can make no difference whether the accused be a corporation or an individual. Section 7 of the Penal Code provides that the word "person" includes a corporation as well as a natural person, and it would be judicial legislation to hold that "all misdemeanors" mean "all misdemeanors committed by a natural person." There is no reasonable foundation in the nature of things or such intrinsic difference between corporations and natural persons, of which I am aware, that requires the application of a measure of jurisdiction over an offense committed by a corporation different from that to be invoked where an individual is charged with the same or similar crime. The general rule in criminal cases where corporations are amenable to the criminal law, when limited to the officers through whom the corporation performs its corporate acts, is the same as in civil cases. "Private corporations in respect to their liability for the acts of their agents or servants stand before the law on the same footing as individuals." 10 Cyc. 1204, and cases cited. Nor do the provisions of Penal Code, §§ 1390 to 1397, inclusive, cited by respondent, affect the question at issue. That chapter simply provides a mode of procedure against corporations charged with crime. It is well settled that "the jurisdiction of the offense is not determined by the form of procedure by which it is prosecuted, but by the nature of the offense itself." Ex parte Wallingford, supra. Even if it be conceded that the form of procedure provided is applicable only to cases tried in the superior court, and that it seems to contemplate that all criminal charges against corporations shall be submitted to such tribunal, it still remains true that the test of jurisdiction afforded by the statute indubitably sustains appellant's contention.

In conclusion, it may be suggested that the procedure provided by section 1391 et seq. of the Penal Code may be made available to the justice court in the prosecution of corporations, although it must be remembered that the "means by which the defendant has been brought within the jurisdiction of the court does not affect its right to try him." Ex parte Ah Men, 77 Cal. 198, 19 Pac. 380, 11 Am. St. Rep. 263; People v. Pratt, 78 Cal. 345, 20 Pac. 731; Mahon v. Justice, 127 U. S. 708, 8 Sup. Ct. 1204, 32 L. Ed. 283. If this procedure be not apt and adequate, then resort must be had to the sections of the Code in reference to the trials of persons, and also to section 187, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "in the exercise of its jurisdiction, if the course of proceeding be not specifically pointed out by this Code or the statute, any suitable process or mode of proceeding may be adopted which may appear most conformable to the spirit of this Code."

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed, and the court below is directed to dismiss the proceedings.

PEOPLE v. PALERMO LAND & WATER CO.

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1907.)

In Bank. Application for rehearing denied.

For opinion in Court of Appeal, see 89 Pac. 723.

PER CURIAM. The application that the above-entitled cause be heard and determined by this court, after decision in the District Court of Appeal for the Third Appellate District, is denied.

In denying the application, it is proper to state that section 1427, Pen. Code, as amended in 1905 (Ann. St. 1905, p. 706), apparently furnishes a rule of procedure in the case of a corporation charged with a misdemeanor triable in a justice's or police court.

WRIGHT v. FOX et al. (L. A. 1,703.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 20, 1907. Rehearing Denied April 9, 1907.)

1. Taxation — Assessment — Description of Property—Sufficiency.

An assessment described the property as city or town lots within a designated county and on a designated street, without aiding the description by reference to map, plat, or tract. The property was not within the corporate limits of any city or town. Held, that the assessment was void under Pol. Code, § 3650, requiring the assessor to list all property within the county, and describe the same, etc.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, §§ 722, 729.]

2. Same—Tax Deed—Validity.

A tax deed made under a void assessment is void.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1470.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by W. M. Wright against Edwin R. Fox and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Edwin R. Fox appeals. Affirmed.

Cole & Cole, for appellant. O. B. Carter, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. Plaintiff brought this action to quiet title in himself against the defendant Edwin R. Fox and others to certain pieces of land. All the defendants, save defendant Fox, made default. Fox answered, denied plaintiff's title, and asserted title in himself; his claim of title being based on tax deeds which he offered in evidence. To the introduction of these plaintiff objected, upon the ground they were irrelevant, immaterial, and incompetent. It was stipulated that, if the defendant failed to establish title in himself by virtue of the tax deeds, then title was in plaintiff, and the decree should be given accordingly. The court found the invalidity of the tax deeds and rendered its decree quieting title in plaintiff's favor. Defendant Fox moved for a new trial, and, his motion being denied, appeals from the judgment and from that order.

Section 3650 of the Political Code requires the assessor to prepare an assessment book with appropriate headings, in which must be listed all property within the county under the appropriate head. The assessment in this case is in the following language:

In Los Angeles County. In Jefferson St.
City or Town Lots.

Lot	Block

It would seem to be an assessment drawn under subdivision 3 of section 3650 of the Political Code; that is to say, an assessment of city and town lots. So regarded, it fails to designate the city or town. It describes property as being in the county of Los Angeles, in some city or town, and upon Jefferson street therein, lot 5 in block 3. Not only is no effort made to aid this description by references to map, plat, or tract, but we are advised by appellant that the land was not within the corporate limits of any city or town. We then have extraurban land assessed as being lot 5, block 3, in Jefferson street, a description which, of course, is fatally and radically defective. Labs v. Cooper, 107 Cal. 656, 40 Pac. 1042; Miller v. Williams, 135 Cal. 183, 67 Pac. 788. This is not at all the case presented in Baird v. Monroe (decided by this court on February 16, 1907) 89 Pac. 352, first, because here there was no attempt to aid the assessment by evidence; and, in the second place, this assessment pretends to fix property, not as in any tract, but as in Jefferson street, so it would seem impossible, even if the effort had been made, to aid so defective a description by evidence of a map.

The assessment being thus void, all subsequent proceedings, and the deed made thereunder, are likewise void. Grotefend v. Ultz, 53 Cal. 666; Greenwood v. Adams, 80 Cal. 74, 21 Pac. 1134; Dranga v. Rowe, 127 Cal. 506, 59 Pac. 944. The conclusion thus reached renders unnecessary a consideration of any of the further propositions of respondent against the sufficiency of the tax deed.

For the foregoing reason, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

In re DE CIGARAN'S ESTATE. (L. A. 1,821.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1907. Rehearing Denied April 18, 1907.)

1. Bastards—Inheritance From.

Since Civ. Code, § 1388, which declares that where an illegitimate child, not acknowledged by his father, dies intestate, without issue, his estate goes to his mother, or on her decease to her heirs, provides a rule of succession for a special case, notwithstanding sections 1386 and 1387, providing that where the decedent leaves a surviving husband and neither issue nor parents, etc., the whole estate goes to the surviving husband, etc., the separate estate of an illegitimate daughter, not acknowledged by her father, passes on her death intestate and without issue, leaving surviving a husband, to another illegitimate child of her predeceased mother by another father, who had not acknowledged her as his child, and not to the surviving husband.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 6, Bastards, §§ 257–262.]

2. Same.

The rule of succession as to the whole estate of an illegitimate child, not acknowledged by her father, and who dies intestate, without issue, provided by Civ. Code, § 1388, has reference solely to the separate property of the deceased illegitimate, for sections 1400–1402 provide for the disposition of the community property owned by her and her husband.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 6, Bastards, §§ 257–262.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Rosario de Cigaran, deceased, to determine the rights of persons to her estate. From a judgment awarding the whole estate to the surviving husband of the deceased, Refugio Padilla appeals. Reversed and remanded.

H. H. Appel, Henry T. Gage, and W. I. Foley, for appellant. J. Wiseman McDonald, for respondent.

ANGELLOTTI, J. This is an appeal from the judgment given in a proceeding brought under section 1664 of the Code of Civil Procedure to have determined the rights of all persons to the estate of Rosario de Cigaran, deceased. There is no dispute as to the material facts, which are as follows: Deceased died intestate. She was an illegitimate child, and had never been acknowledged or adopted by her father. At the time of her death she was the wife of Vicente de Cigaran, who survives her. She died without issue, legitimate or illegitimate. There also survived her one Mrs. Refugio Padilla, who was also an illegitimate daughter of the mother of deceased by a different father, and who likewise had never been adopted or acknowledged by her father. The mother of these illegitimates died prior to the death of deceased, having never been married, and, so far as appears, leaving no issue other than decedent and Mrs. Padilla. All the property of the deceased was her separate property; she having owned the same prior to her marriage. The only claimants of the estate, or any interest therein, are the surviving husband and Refugio Padilla. The judgment of the lower court awarded the whole estate to the surviving husband, and Refugio Padilla appeals therefrom.

The questions presented by this appeal turn upon the proper construction of various provisions of our statutes relating to succession, as the same existed at the date of death of the deceased; certain of said provisions having been amended since the death of deceased.

Respondent bases his claim on subdivision 5 of section 1386, Civ. Code, the general section relating to the succession to the property of intestates. That subdivision was as follows: "If the decedent leave a surviving husband or wife, and neither issue, father, mother, brother, nor sister, the whole estate goes to the surviving husband or wife." The theory of respondent in this regard is that appellant, by reason of illegitimacy, was not a sister or half-sister of deceased within the meaning of said section 1386. If this theory be well founded, as we think it is, there could, of course, be no question as to respondent's right under this provision of law to succeed to the entire estate, were it not for the illegitimacy of the deceased. The principal question on this appeal is as to the effect of this illegitimacy. By the express terms of section 1386, Civ. Code, the rules of succession therein laid down are applicable only "unless otherwise expressly provided for in this Code and the Code of Civil Procedure." Under this language in the general section whenever different rules are laid down for special cases, those rules are paramount to the general rules of section 1386, Civ. Code, and this is so whether or not such section can be construed as having any direct reference to the estates of illegitimates in the absence of provision therefor elsewhere. Section 1388, Civ. Code, which is the only provision of our law referring in terms to succession to property of illegitimates, provided as follows: "If an illegitimate child, who has not been acknowledged or adopted by his father, dies intestate, without lawful issue, his estate goes to his mother, or in case of her decease, to her heirs at law." This section provides a rule of succession for a special case, and must govern in every such case, notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in section 1386, Civ. Code. It is upon this section that appellant bases her claim. The mother of deceased being dead, she claims the estate of deceased as her mother's heir at law.

There can be no doubt that the facts of this case bring it within the provisions of this section, if they be taken literally, and construed without reference to any other provision of the law. Deceased was an illegitimate child, she had not been acknowledged or adopted by her father, she died intestate, and she died without issue of any kind, legitimate or illegitimate. Her mother had died before her. Appellant was sole heir at law of the mother of deceased, by reason of section 1387, Civ. Code. That section declares: "Every illegitimate child is an heir of the person who, in writing signed in the presence of a competent witness, acknowledges himself to be the father of such child; and in all cases is an heir of his mother; and inherits his or her estate, in whole or in part, as the case may be, in the same manner as if he had been borne in lawful wedlock." Such mother not having left a husband surviving, her surviving issue, if legitimate, would have taken her (the mother's) whole estate under subdivision 1 of section 1386, Civ. Code, and as section 1387 put appellant in the same position, so far as the right to inherit is concerned, as if "born in lawful wedlock," she, as the only child, was the mother's sole heir at law. The contention that the further provision of section 1386, that such illegitimate child, although in certain cases the heir of his father, and in all cases the heir of his mother, "does not represent his father or mother by inheriting any part of the estate of his or her kindred, either lineal or collateral, unless, before his death, his parents shall have intermarried, and his father, after such marriage, acknowledges him as his child, or adopts him into his family," precludes appellant from taking the estate of her deceased illegitimate half-sister as the heir of her mother—is answered by the decision of this court in Estate of Magee, 63 Cal. 414, where the same question was directly involved. There the deceased, Suez, who was illegitimate, died after her mother, Susan. There had been another illegitimate daughter of Susan, Elizabeth, who also died before Suez, leaving a legitimate son. It was held that this son, as the lawful issue of the deceased illegitimate Elizabeth (who, by section 1387, was the heir of her mother, as if born in lawful wedlock), took the whole estate as against the legitimate children of Eliza, a deceased sister of the mother, Susan, not "perhaps" as heir of the deceased, Suez, but as heir of Susan, the mother of deceased. Subdivision 1 of section 1386, Civ. Code. Referring to the proviso last quoted from section 1387, Civ. Code, the court said: "This proviso does not apply to the case before us. If Eliza, the other daughter of Sabra, the common ancestor, had died leaving estate, the illegitimate children of Susan (Elizabeth or Suez), or their descendants, could not have represented Susan for the purpose of inheriting from Eliza. Eliza's estate would rather have escheated. We think the word 'kindred,' used in the above quoted clause, relates to the kindred referred to in section 1386, meaning lawful kindred. * * * By the rules of the common law, terms of kindred, when used in a statute, include only those who are legitimate, unless a different contention is clearly manifest. [Citing authorities.] In using the word 'kindred' in section 1387, the Legislature intended to preclude from the general words preceding it the construction that an illegitimate might by representation inherit from those whom the common law or section 1386 acknowledges as kindred." This case is conclusive upon the proposition that appellant was entitled to take, as her mother's sole heir at law, whatever of the estate of deceased such mother would have taken under section 1388, had she survived deceased.

It would appear, therefore, that under the express terms of section 1388, Civ. Code, appellant is entitled to the whole estate of deceased, to the exclusion of the surviving husband. Respondent contends that section 1388 was never intended to exclude the surviving husband or wife of an illegitimate, and that, construing it in connection with sections 1386 and 1387, Civ. Code, it is clear that section 1388 was intended to be operative only in the absence of surviving spouse and issue. We can see no sound basis for such contention, even granting, as we are inclined to do, contrary to views expressed in Estate of Magee, supra, which were obiter dicta, that section 1386 does apply to the estates of illegitimates in the absence of contrary provision elsewhere, and that sections 1387 and 1388, Civ. Code, do not make complete provision as to illegitimates so far as the Legislature has seen fit to declare.

The language of section 1388, Civ. Code, is such that, even when considered in connection with sections 1386 and 1387, it would not permit a construction making it anything else than the rule of succession applicable as to the entire estate of the illegitimate not acknowledged or adopted by his father, who dies intestate, without lawful issue. The rule prescribed is utterly at variance with that contained in section 1386, subd. 2, where it is declared, "if the decedent leaves no issue, the estate goes one-half to the surviving husband or wife, and the other half to the decedent's father and mother," etc., while here, if he dies without lawful issue, "his estate goes to his mother," etc. (The italics are ours.) It is also directly opposed to the rule declared in subdivision 5 of section 1386, Civ. Code, upon which respondent relies, and which has already been quoted. By express provision of section 1386, Civ. Code, that section is applicable only in the absence of express provision otherwise elsewhere. The Legislature saw fit to prescribe in section 1388 the absence of lawful issue of the illegitimate as the sole condition precedent to the succession of the mother, or, in case of her death, the mother's heirs, to the whole estate. It will be observed that, if respondent's theory as to the effect of section 1386 be correct, the lawful issue of such an illegitimate was, equally with the surviving spouse, protected by such section from the application of section 1388, Civ. Code, even if not mentioned therein, and yet provision was expressly made as to it in section 1388, while no mention was made as to a surviving spouse. Having in mind the possibility of marriage on the part of the illegitimate, as is shown by this provision as to lawful issue, the Legislature must also be presumed to have had in mind the possible survival of the other spouse, and its omission to specify his or her failure to survive as a condition precedent to the application of the rule must be deemed to have been intentionally made.

It is urged that, construing section 1388 according to its terms, a conflict is apparent between it and section 1387, in that, by section 1387, an illegitimate "in all cases is an heir of his mother," while by section 1388, in the absence of "lawful issue," the estate of an illegitimate goes to his mother, or, in case of her decease, to her heirs at law. Thus, it is said, where both the mother and the child are illegitimate, section 1387 makes the child the heir of his mother, while section 1388, taken alone, excludes him, and this is urged as a reason for such a construction of section 1388 as would make it subject to the provision of sections 1386 and 1387 so far as the rights of the surviving spouse and children are concerned. But we do not think that sections 1387 and 1388 are in conflict upon the point suggested. If they can be reasonably so construed as to avoid such a conflict, that construction must, of course, be adopted. Either section 1387, which has to do solely with the right of illegitimates to inherit, is to be construed as applicable only to inheritance by an illegitimate from a parent who is legitimate, or, for purposes of inheritance, the illegitimate child by reason of section 1387, Civ. Code, is to be held to be within the terms "lawful issue," as that term is used in section 1388, Civ. Code. See Estate of Wardell, 57 Cal. 484; Cherry v. Mitchell, 55 S. W. 689, 108 Ky. 1; In re Gorkow's Estate, 56 Pac. 385, 20 Wash. 563; Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 25 S. W. 179, 120 Mo. 275; Bennett v. Toler, 15 Grat. 588, 78 Am. Dec. 638.

The language of section 1388 is plain and unambiguous. But one effect can be given to it if we take it as it is, and this we are compelled to do. The intention of the lawmaking power must be ascertained solely from the language it has used, where that language is so plain that it permits of but one construction, and the result of that construction is not so absurd as to make it manifest that it could not have been intended. Certainly, we cannot say that the exclusion of the surviving spouse from participation in the estate of a deceased husband or wife, even under the circumstances here appearing, is such a result, however unjust or improper it may be. The question as to whether such a surviving spouse should inherit is one solely for the Legislature, and the courts cannot substitute their own views thereon for the views of the lawmaking power. In Estate of Ingram, 78 Cal. 586, 21 Pac. 435, 12 Am. St. Rep. 80, the question was as to the right of the children of the deceased brother or sister to take as against the surviving husband; there being no issue, father, mother, brother, nor sister. Under subdivision 2 of section 1386, such children were entitled to their deceased parent's share where there was also a surviving brother or sister of the deceased, but subdivision 5 of section 1386, which has been before quoted herein, declared that the whole estate goes to the surviving husband or wife "if the decedent leaves a surviving husband or wife and neither issue, father, mother, brother nor sister," making no provision as to a child of the deceased brother or sister. It was held that the husband was entitled to all. The court said: "It is vain to argue against the injustice of the rule, or to contend that in a case like the one at bar the children of a deceased ought to have a share in the estate when there is not any surviving brother or sister, as well as when there is. Succession to estates is purely a matter of statutory regulation, which cannot be changed by courts." See, also, Estate of Carmody, 88 Cal. 616, 620, 26 Pac. 373. This is clearly in point here. We may not be able to see any good reason for the exclusion of the surviving spouse of the illegitimate where she dies without lawful issue, and the giving of the estate to the mother of her heirs in preference to such spouse, but that fact is immaterial where the Legislature has said in unmistakable terms that it shall so be. That it did so say by section 1388, we can have no doubt.

Our conclusion is that section 1388 provides the rule of succession as to the whole estate of an illegitimate, not acknowledged or adopted by his father, who dies intestate, without lawful issue, except in so far as it may be qualified by section 1387, Civ. Code, and that this rule, being contrary to the general rules of succession prescribed by section 1386, must prevail over everything contained in that section. The case here is one where, in the language of section 1386, it has been "otherwise expressly provided," and by the express terms of such section it has no application here.

It should be observed that what we have said has reference solely to the separate property of the deceased husband or wife. Section 1400, Civ. Code, provides that the preceding sections, as to the inheritance of the husband and wife from each other, apply only to the separate property of the decedents, and sections 1401 and 1402, Civ. Code purport to provide the rules as to community property.

The judgment of the superior court is reversed, and the matter remanded for such further proceedings as are not inconsistent with the views herein expressed.

5 Cal. App. 55

DOYLE v. ESCHEN et al. (Civ. 238.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 21, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 23, 1907.)

1. TRIAL—NONSUIT—ADMISSIONS BY MOTION.

A motion for nonsuit being substantially a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence, and the court having no right to pass on the weight of the evidence, every fact plaintiff's testimony proves or tends to prove must be taken by the court to be proven, and in the strongest light against defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 374.]

2. NEGLIGENCE—ACTION FOR INJURY—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE — QUESTION FOR JURY.

In an action for injury to plaintiff by falling into a vessel's uncovered hatchway, left open by defendant stevedores, whether plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence held, under the evidence, a question for the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Negligence, §§ 333–346.]

3. EVIDENCE—CONCLUSION OF WITNESS.

Where plaintiff sued for an injury resulting from falling into a vessel's uncovered hatchway at night, it was improper to overruled defendants' objection to a question whether any candle light around the hatchway would have enabled him to see the hole, if there was no light in the hold of the vessel; the question calling for a conclusion.

4. APPEAL — REVIEW — HARMLESS ERROR — STATEMENT OF WITNESS' CONCLUSION.

The overruling of an objection to a question calling for the witness' conclusion is harmless error, where a witness had been permitted to state substantially the same conclusion without objection.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4166.]

5. SAME—ERROR CURED BY INSTRUCTION.

If, in an action for injury to plaintiff who fell into a vessel's uncovered hatchway at night, the admission of plaintiff's conclusion that, if there had been candle light around the hatchway, he could not have seen the hole unless there was light in the vessel's hold, was erroneous as in effect telling the jury that it was important to know whether candles placed, as defendants' witnesses said they were placed, would enable one approaching the hatch to see the opening itself, whereas the real purpose and only one required was to give warning that the hatch cover was off, the error became harmless when the court instructed to the effect that it made no difference whether the opening was illuminated or not, if the lights were placed there by the defendants, they were absolved from liability.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4180–4182.]

6. COSTS—STATUTE NOT REPEALED.

The act of 1895 (St. 1895, p. 268, c. 207), to establish the fees of county officers, jurors, witnesses, etc., did not repeal Act Feb. 9, 1866 (St. 1865–66, p. 66, c. 91), entitled "An act to regulate fees in the city and county of San Francisco," providing that the prevailing party shall be allowed 5 per cent., not exceeding $100, on the amount recovered, together with disbursements to be included in a judgment against the adverse party, etc.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Edward Doyle against James C. Eschen and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Van Ness & Redman, for appellants. Sullivan & Sullivan, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This is an action for damages. It was occasioned by respondent falling into the hold of a vessel through a ballast hatch in the lower deck. This hatchway, it is claimed, without the knowledge of respondent and without notice to him, and when he had reason to believe and did believe it was closed, was left open and unprotected and without any lights about it, through the negligence of appellants, who were stevedores engaged in ballasting said vessel. Defendants in their answer, either positively or on information and belief, denied the material allegations of the complaint, and alleged that "immediately after said hatch was uncovered and before said accident the employés of these defendants put a guard and fender around it and also placed lights near by it, which lights were burning at the time plaintiff fell into said hatch." The case was tried before a jury. A verdict in favor of plaintiff for $7,500 was rendered. Defendants appealed from the judgment and the order denying their motion for a new trial, and also from an order refusing to strike from plaintiff's memorandum of costs the item of $100, "alleged legal percentage on the judgment in favor of plaintiff herein." At the close of plaintiff's evidence, defendants moved for a nonsuit, which was denied.

Among the reasons urged for reversal, appellants seem most confident of their contention that by reason of contributory negligence respondent was not entitled to relief, and that their motion for a nonsuit should have been granted by the learned judge of the trial court. As so often affirmed by the higher courts, it is conceded that, "when a given state of facts is such that reasonable men may fairly differ upon the question as to whether there was negligence or not, the determination of the matter is for the jury. It is only where the facts are such that all reasonable men must draw the same conclusion from them that the question of negligence is ever considered as one of law for the court." Texas C. Ry. v. Gentry, 16 Sup. Ct. 1104, 163 U. S. 353, 41 L. Ed. 186. And, furthermore, that usually the consideration of negligence, including "contributory negligence," involves "a mixed question of law and fact, in which it devolves upon the court to say, as a matter of law, what is or amounts to negligence, and upon the jury to say as matter of fact whether or not in the particular case the facts in proof warrant the imputation of negligence. The court furnishes the standard. The jury adjusts the facts and pronounces them as up to or falling short of the requirements of the standard. When, however, the facts are clearly settled, and the course which common prudence dictates can be readily discerned, the court should decide the case as matter of law." Van Praag v. Gale, 107 Cal. 438, 40 Pac. 555; Shearman & Redfield on Negligence, § 26; Davis v. Pacific Power Co., 107 Cal. 575, 40 Pac. 950, 48 Am. St. Rep. 156; Wahlgren v. Market St. Ry. Co., 132 Cal. 656, 62 Pac. 308, 64 Pac. 993.

It is also not controverted that the motion for a nonsuit is substantially a demurrer to the plaintiff's evidence, and this being so, and the court having no right to pass upon the weight of evidence, every fact that plaintiff's evidence proves or tends to prove must be taken by the court to be proved. It must be taken in the strongest light as against the defendant (Purnell v. Raleigh & G. R. Co., 29 S. E. 953, 122 N. C. 832), and "at the hearing of such motion the evidence should be interpreted most strongly against the defendant." Wright v. Roseberry, 81 Cal. 87, 22 Pac. 336; Warner v. Darrow, 91 Cal. 309, 27 Pac. 737; Hanley v. Bridge Co., 127 Cal. 236, 59 Pac. 577, 47 L. R. A. 597.

It is only in comparatively rare cases when the court is justified in saying as a matter of law that a given state of facts constitutes contributory negligence and precludes the plaintiff from recovery. It is easy to formulate a rule of contributory negligence, but it is much more difficult by that rule to measure the facts and determine incontestably the only conclusion warranted by the standard of ordinary prudence, caution, and discretion. In the accidents, occasioned by persons passing over the tracks of steam railroads, in order to obviate the imputation of contributory negligence, the concensus of the opinion of men of ordinary care and prudence has become crystalized into the demand, recognized by all the courts, that the injured party must stop and look and listen before placing himself in a position of such manifest peril. But in the multifarious positions of hazard involved in the varied pursuits and environments of modern civilization it is apparent that seldom can the law prescribe with precision what specific acts of omission or commission shall prevent the recovery of damages for injuries received. In most cases, under proper instructions, the determination of the question should be left to the decision of a jury.

In the present instance, considering the evidence most favorably to respondent, is it true that only one conclusion could be drawn by men of average caution and intelligence? And is that irrestible conclusion to the effect that respondent was guilty of such contributory negligence as to preclude recovery, notwithstanding the negligence of defendants? It is so insisted by appellants. The plaintiff testified that for two weeks he had been engaged at work as foreman ship carpenter in constructing and placing waterways in said vessel, as alleged in the complaint; that, when he began his work, the hatchways were all covered by spiked plank; "that there were three decks on the vessel and four ballast hatches on each of the two lower decks and none on the upper deck, and these hatches were only used for ballast; that during his work there the men and himself were accustomed daily to traverse the lower deck, walking over these hatches, which were nailed down, and carrying timbers on their shoulders; that when he left at 12 o'clock, March 18th, the trimming or ballast hatches were all covered up; that they worked upon the ship with candle light and it was too dark to do without it; that when he came back from lunch, about 1 o'clock, he went down the forward hatch and then walked aft on the lower deck; that he could not see much there, although there were a few lights scattered around with the men working; he walked on the starboard side in the same direction in which he had been accustomed to walk for two weeks and he fell into the ballast hole, and there was neither light, fender, guard, no rails there, and he could not see the hole in the darkness prevailing at the time; there was no person there to warn him, he had not been warned, and he did not know the ballast hatchway had been opened; and that was the first time it was open in two weeks. The hatch is only about three feet square. There was very little ballast in the hold at the time, but some came down upon him after he fell in. He knew the usual way of guarding hatchways. Some have ropes and stanchions; some have boxes put down into these holes, so that the ballast can go through them when they are working, and when they are idle they have covers. They are supposed to be covered all the time. The ballast was thrown through the side port into the between decks and wheeled aft to the trimming hatch in the middle deck and dumpinto that and so went through the corresponding hatch of the lower deck into the hold of the vessel. There was no cargo in the vessel and the work kept the coal dust moving all the time, especially on the lower deck."

In the cross-examination the additional circumstances brought out which may be of some moment are as follows: The ship was partially ballasted before it was brought to Spear Street Wharf where the accident occurred. Respondent did not know the ballasting was not completed at the time of the accident. That earlier in the day he had seen on the ship Mr. McDonald, the foreman of defendants, but he had no conversation with him, and he could not say what Mr. McDonald was doing there. That he did not know of any other men on board except those in his employ. He supposed McDonald was there to do ballasting, but he did not ask him and he did not take the trouble to go and see if the trimming hatch was open or shut, because he had no business to do so and because he knew the hatch was shut when he went to lunch. It is usual to put a light at the hatch when it is opened up. If he had seen one, it would have been notice to him to look out that the hatch might be open; that, when he came back from lunch, he saw them putting ballast from the outside onto the between decks. It is piled up there, and then wheeled and thrown down the trimming hatch. He did not know how much they had put in at that time. At the time he went down onto the lower deck he knew they were ballasting the ship, but took no pains to ascertain whether they were putting it through the center or the forward or the trimming hatch, and he did not hear any ballast dropping into the hold of the vessel. They would move the ballast with wheelbarrows from the middle deck to the place on the lower deck where they wished to deposit it in the hold. He did not see any wheelbarrows, nor any one near the ballast holes. He did not have any candle with him. During the two weeks before the accident, the only holes on the lower deck were the main hatch. The bulk of the ballast is put in through the main hatch, only a small portion through the trimming hatch. In walking about on the lower deck you could see probably nine or ten feet in front of you, but where this trimming hatch was you could not see more than two feet. There were lights on the lower deck on the starboard side of the vessel put there by his men but not near the trimming hatch.

In my judgment, the one circumstance lending some support to appellants' contention and adding some plausibility to their argument is the admission of respondent that, when he returned from lunch, he noticed the men engaged in the work of putting ballast into the ship. But the point at which they were loading was on the deck above and 40 or 50 feet away from the trimming hatch into which he fell. Besides, construing the testimony most favorably to respondent, it must be held that he had no knowledge or notice that they were using at that time any of the trimming hatches, or that the hatch in question had been opened; and it must be conceded that neither guard, nor fender, nor light was placed about or near the opening to warn him of danger. Under the circumstances, keeping in view the fact that he had traversed this deck daily for two weeks, that his work called him there, that when he left for lunch the hatch was closed as it had been all the time for two weeks while he was at work, that he was without warning that it had been changed, and recalling his observation that, "when the triming hatch is opened, it is customary to place a fender and lights about it to prevent accidents," can it be said that the law inexorably demands the conclusion that an ordinarily prudent and cautious man would not have followed the course pursued by respondent in this particular instance? It involves a question, in my opinion, open to candid disputation. Concerning it, a difference of opinion among intelligent men is justified and to be expected. It was proper to submit it to the jury.

While each case, owing to its peculiar facts, is somewhat of a "law unto itself," the higher courts with jealous care have guarded from unwarranted invasion the province of the jury to pass upon the question of contributory negligence where it is open to reasonable controversy. In Mosheuvel v. District of Columbia, 24 Sup. Ct. 57, 191 U. S. 247, 48 L. Ed. 170, the facts were these: "A water box was in the sidewalk at the bottom of three steps leading from plaintiff's house and there was no other place of egress from the house to the street. The box was so situated about midway of the steps that, in order to go from the lowest step to the sidewalk, it was necessary to go either to the right or the left, which it would have been safe to do, or to take a step longer than usual in order to step over the box and clear it. It was about four inches square, projecting irregularly above the level of the street, and was without covering of any kind. * * * It was in the same dangerous condition at the time of the beginning of plaintiff's occupancy of the house, about nine months before the accident, and so remained without change, and it was visible from plaintiff's house. The plaintiff stumbled over it once before, and she usually went on one side or the other, and not over the box, as she knew an unusually long stride was necessary. * * * She testified that from the time she left her door she had the box in view a part of the time, and had it in mind all the time and remembered its dangerous character, but on this occasion she attempted to step over it, did not take a sufficiently long step, and put her foot into the hole and was thrown, with the result that she suffered serious injury." The United States Supreme Court said that the question of contributory negligence was one for the jury and not for the court.

Van Praag v. Gale, 107 Cal. 438, 40 Pac. 555, is another persuasive case. In the opinion the following facts are detailed, as shown by plaintiff's evidence: "For 10 years prior to March 1, 1893, the plaintiff had kept a cigar store on the west side of Polk street, between Sutter and Bush streets. Defendant for eight years had owned a building consisting of two stores north of and adjoining plaintiff's cigar store. The store of defendant next to plaintiff was a candy store, and in front of it and close to the building defendant had trapdoors placed in the sidewalk 4 feet wide by 4 feet 4½ inches in length, which opened on hinges from the center, and when opened were turned back flat upon the sidewalk. A stairway led from the opening to the basement which was used by the tenants of defendant's building. The iceman usually came in the morning at 7 o'clock, the ashman about 9 a. m., and the gasman at intervals, and these doors were opened to give them access to the basement. The sidewalk was 15 feet wide, of which 11 feet were clear of the trapdoor. Plaintiff was entirely familiar with the opening and had often been up and down the stairs, had seen it daily for years, and had spoken to defendant about it being dangerous. The opening had no railing nor protection around it. On the morning of March 1, 1893, about 9 o'clock, plaintiff being on the sidewalk in front of his store, was called by Mr. Weinshenk, who kept a jewelry store next north of the candy store, and went to the jewelry store either over or past the trapdoors, which were closed, talked with the jeweler a few minutes, during which interval the ashman came and one of the trapdoors was opened to admit him to the basement, and the plaintiff while returning south towards his store, thinking of what the jeweler had said to him and perhaps looking at a paper with some figures upon it, fell into the opening and was seriously injured. Plaintiff had seen the ashman drive up, but had not seen the trapdoor opened." Our Supreme Court held it was a proper case to submit to the jury.

If the law was properly declared in those two cases, then it cannot be held in the case at bar that the only reasonable conclusion that can be drawn from the evidence is that respondent was guilty of contributory negligence. It is claimed by appellants that the Van Praag Case is an extreme one, but it has been quoted with approval by the Supreme Court in subsequent cases, and it is in line with many other decisions of different courts, among which may be cited the following: Muller v. Hale, 138 Cal. 163, 71 Pac. 81; Sellers v. Market St. Ry. Co., 139 Cal. 268, 72 Pac. 1006; Woods v. City of Boston, 121 Mass. 337; McGuire v. Spencer, 91 N. Y. 305, 43 Am. Rep. 668; Lyman v. Co. of Hampshire, 140 Mass. 311, 3 N. E. 211; Engle v. Smith, 82 Mich. 1, 46 N. W. 21, 21 Am. St. Rep. 549.

It may be admitted that plaintiff's testimony was somewhat inconsistent, and portions of it seem absurd, but that was a consideration to be submitted to the jury, and it does not present a question of law to be determined by this court.

2. Complaint is made of the court's action in overruling the objection of appellants to the following question: "Q. State whether or not any candle light, even around the trimming hatch, around this hole, would enable you to see the hole itself, if there was no light at all in the hold of the vessel. A. No. Q. Why? A. The hold was black, and the deck was black, and there was coal dust moving around all the time. It was impossible to see the hole, unless there was a light below, or a hanging light, hanging lantern about there. Candles are no good." In my opinion the objection should have been sustained, as the question called for a conclusion, but it is apparent that the error was without prejudice.

The argument is made by appellants that the testimony in effect told the jury that it was important to know whether candles placed as defendants' witnesses say they were placed would enable one approaching the hatch to see the opening itself, whereas the real purpose and the only one required was to give warning that the hatch cover was off. But the answer to that is this: Respondent without objection had already testified substantially to the same effect when he said in cross-examination that "candles were no good," and that "they would not enable you to see on account of the coal dust." But, granting to the testimony the full effect claimed by appellants, it was completely nullified and the question rendered harmless by this instruction of the court: "If from the evidence you find that prior to the time that the plaintiff Doyle fell into the lower deck starboard ballast hatch lights had been placed around said hatch by the employés of the defendants, and that said lights were at said hatch before and at the time the plaintiff fell into the hatch, then and in that case your verdict should be against the plaintiff and in favor of the defendants." This instruction in effect told the jury that it made no difference whether the opening was illuminated or not. If the lights were placed there by defendants, they were absolved from liability.

3. Contention is made that $100 should have been stricken from the cost bill. This allowance was made by virtue of section 6 of "An act to regulate fees in the city and county of San Francisco, approved Feby. 9, 1866" (St. 1865–66, p. 68, c. 91), which is as follows: "The prevailing party shall be allowed five per cent. on the amount recovered, together with any sum by him so paid in a cause, as costs and disbursements, to be included in the judgment against the adverse party; provided said five per cent. shall be allowed only in litigated cases and said percentage shall not be allowed to exceed one hundred dollars in any one judgment." The validity of the statute has been upheld in Corwin v. Ward, 35 Cal. 198, 95 Am. Dec. 93; Whitaker v. Haynes, 49 Cal. 597; Fanning v. Leviston, 93 Cal. 188, 28 Pac. 943; Golden Gate L. Co. v. Sahrbacher, 105 Cal. 114, 38 Pac. 635. But it is claimed that it has been repealed by the statute passed in 1895, entitled "An act to establish the fees of county, township and other officers and of jurors and witnesses in this state.' St. 1895, p. 268, c. 207. The statute of 1895 does not, however, in express terms nor by implication repeal section 6 of the act of 1866. The title of the act of 1895 does not not purport to affect the question of costs in litigated or other cases. The reasoning of the Supreme Court in the case of Hilton v. Curry, 124 Cal. 84, 56 Pac. 784, seems decisive of this question in favor of respondent.

There is no other point requiring attention. The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial and the order denying the motion to strike out the $100 percentage from the cost bill are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

WATKINS et al. v. GLAS et al. (Civ. 281.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 23, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 23, 1907.)

1. PARTY WALLS—RIGHT OF CONTRIBUTION.

Under an agreement that on the erection of a party wall by either of two adjoining owners the other owner would pay half the cost of the wall, an action lay by the assignees of the owner building the wall against the other to recover one-half the cost, even though the party building the wall had not paid for the construction thereof.

2. TRIAL—ORDER OF PROCEEDING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 607, providing that the trial must proceed in the following order, unless the judge, for special reasons, otherwise directs: "the plaintiff after stating the issue and his case must produce the evidence on his part" —the court properly denied defendants' motion to open the cause by introduction of evidence in support of their plea in abatement and plea in bar.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 47, 57.]

3. PARTY WALLS—ACTION FOR CONTRIBUTION —EVIDENCE.

In an action for contribution under a party wall agreement, the contract between the owner building the wall and the contractors, specifying the extent of the work to be done and showing that under its terms the contractors were to erect the wall in question, was admissible in evidence.

4. CORPORATIONS — CONTRACTS — EXECUTION —SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE.

An assignment by a corporation of a claim for contribution under a party wall agreement, signed by the president and secretary of the corporation and attested by its corporate seal, prima facie showed the due execution of the instrument, and was sufficient in the absence of evidence overcoming it.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 1797.]

5. PARTY WALLS—ACTION FOR CONTRIBUTION —APPRAISEMENT—BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for contribution under a party wall agreement providing that the cost of the wall should be fixed by an architect, the burden was on defendants to show any error or mistake in the appraisement made by the architect prejudicial to them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Madera County; M. L. Short, Judge.

Action by J. W. Watkins and another against Frank Glas, Jr., and another. From a judgment for plaintiffs and from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial, they appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Larew, for appellants. Francis A. Fee, for respondents.

HART, J. Appeal from the judgment and an order denying a new trial.

The plaintiffs brought this action to recover from the defendants the sum of $475 alleged to be due under an agreement for the erection of a party wall. The plaintiffs, it is alleged, became the owners of the claim against the defendants under an assignment of the same to them by Wehrman & Meilikie, a corporation, incorporated and organized under the laws of California. Wehrman & Meilikie, in their corporate capacity, and the defendants were the owners, respectively, of adjoining lots in block No. 40 of the town of Madera, in the county of Madera. Having in view the erection of brick structures, with a party wall on the line of their respective properties, upon said lots, the said corporation and the defendants, on the 9th day of October, 1903, entered into an agreement in writing, by the terms of which said parties were to bear in equal proportion the actual cost of the erection of such party wall. This agreement is made a part of the complaint, and is inserted in hæc verba in the findings. On the 31st day of October, 1903, the said Wehrman & Meilikie, corporation, entered into a written contract with plaintiffs, by the terms of which the latter agreed for and in consideration of the sum of $1,903 to erect and complete, within a certain designated period of time, on the land of said corporation mentioned in the said party wall agreement, a one-story brick building, 25 by 80 feet in dimensions, with "a party wall on the easterly side thereof, and being the party wall referred to in the agreement of October 9th, 1903, aforesaid, and to furnish all of the labor and materials necessary for the erection, construction and completion of said building, including said party wall." The complaint alleges that the said sum of $1,903, for which plaintiffs agreed to erect said building, did not include the defendants' one-half of the cost of the construction of the party wall. The building, the erection of which was thus contracted for, was completed by the 1st day of February, 1904. Prior to the commencement of this action, the said corporation, Wehrman & Meilikie, in the language of the complaint, "by an instrument in writing, and under its corporate name and seal, and in pursuance of a resolution of its board of directors duly adopted and entered upon its minutes, authorizing the same, assigned and transferred to the plaintiffs its said account, claim and demand against the defendants, arising by reason of the construction of said party wall as provided in said agreement of October 9th, 1903, together with all its rights to receive from said Frank Glas Jr. and W. H. Glas, the one-half cost of said party wall." The facts of the transaction are fully set out in the complaint. A general and special demurrer to the complaint was overruled. The point urged under the special demurrer, involving the question of the running of the statute of limitations against the action, seems not to have been well taken, and, in fact, is not urged here. The complaint is verified.

The answer specifically denies the averments of the complaint, except that it admits that "the easterly wall of the building, erected by Wehrman & Meilikie, and referred to in the complaint as 'the party wall,' was erected partly upon the lands of defendants and partly upon the lands of Wehrman & Meilikie," and then sets up a special defense, alleging that the party wall was not so "constructed as to be useful and beneficial to the defendants equally with Wehrman & Meilikie, but, on the contrary, defendants allege that said party wall, so called, was not so constructed that the defendants could properly connect their buildings therewith," and then charges that "defendants' building afterwards joined thereto [the party wall] was badly cracked and damaged to the loss and damage of defendants in the sum of $500," etc. The defendants also set up, by way of a special plea in bar, a judgment alleged to have been made and entered on the 7th day of November, 1905, in their favor and against the plaintiffs, in an action in which these plaintiffs were plaintiffs and the defendants, Frank and W. H. Glas, and Wehrman & Meilikie, corporation, were defendants, "upon and on account of the same action set forth in plaintiffs' complaint herein; that said judgment was rendered and entered after the trial of the action upon its merits." The same judgment is pleaded in abatement of this action, and in this connection the answer alleges that said judgment is not final, and the action, therefore, still pending, because the "six months within which an appeal may be taken therefrom" have not expired.

The party wall agreement, which is the basis of this action, or so much thereof as is material to the controversy, reads: "* * * Now, therefore, in consideration of the premises it is agreed, that either the party of the first part [Wehrman & Meilikie] or the parties of the second part [defendants] may construct and complete the said party wall, and it is agreed that if the party of the first part constructs and completes said party wall, that the parties of the second part will, upon completion thereof, pay to the said party of the first part, the one-half (½) of the actual cost of the erection and completion of said party wall, vice versa, it is agreed that if the parties of the second part erect and complete the said party wall, the said party of the first part will, upon completion thereof, pay to the parties of the second part, the one-half (½) of the actual cost of the erection and completion of said party wall, and it is further agreed, that the westerly one-half of said party wall shall be the property of the party of the first part, and that the easterly half of said party wall shall be the property of the parties of the second part, and it is agreed that the value or actual cost of the erection and completion of said party wall shall be fixed and determined by Julian Mourot, Architect of Modesto, California, and we agree to conform to and abide his decision and valuation of the same. * * *" It is stated in the complaint that "after the completion of said building and said party wall, and on or about the 1st day of February, 1904, said Julian Mourot did, in pursuance of said agreement of October 9, 1903, ascertain and determine that the one-half of the cost of the erection and construction of said party wall, was the sum of $475," and that defendants on or about the same date were notified that the sum had been by Mowrot ascertained to be one-half of the actual cost of the party wall. The answer does not traverse this allegation, but merely denies that the sum mentioned or any other sum is due or owing the plaintiffs on account of the construction of the party wall. Plaintiffs were given judgment, from which and from the order denying a motion for a new trial this appeal is taken.

Appellants contend that the complaint does not show that the corporation, or assignor of plaintiffs, had acquired any right from the defendants which they could assign. The right arising under the party wall agreement is, it is claimed, the same as that accruing to a surety who, having satisfied the obligation of the principal debtor, may sue to require his co-sureties to contribute their shares of the burden, and that, therefore, the failure of the complaint to show that the assignor of the plaintiffs had actually paid the contractors for the entire cost of the party wall, and thus had paid out money for and on behalf of defendants on account of the cost of the erection of such wall, renders it amenable to the objections of the demurrer. In other words, it is urged that this is nothing less than an action by a surety against his co-surety for contribution, and that the complaint falls short of stating a cause of action because it does not appear therefrom that the assignor of plaintiffs has expended any money for which he is entitled to contribution or reimbursement by the defendants. In their opening brief, appellants state their position, and it may best be presented in their own language: "This is an action against the defendants to compel the payment of contribution by the defendants on account of a party wall erected by the plaintiffs at the instance of Wehrman & Meilikie. It is settled law that an action for contribution will not lie until actual payment has been made by the party entitled to receive the contribution—in this case, Wehrman & Meilikie, a corporation. Having actually paid nothing on account of the defendants, Wehrman & Meilikie could not themselves have maintained an action for contribution against the defendants. It follows they had no right of action to assign."

The first question is whether the court erred in its order overruling the demurrer. The complaint is not a carefully drafted pleading, for it is not altogether free from the criticism of uncertainty. A special demurrer to this point was not interposed, however, and we think its averments and the manner thereof sufficient to withstand the attack of a general demurrer.

It is, of course, clear that the duty of contribution to which a coterminous owner of a party wall may become liable, and that of the contribution to which a surety is entitled at the hands of his co-sureties upon his extinguishment of the obligation of the principal debtor, both originate in the equitable consideration that those who have assumed a common burden ought to bear it equally. In the very nature of the case, as between co-sureties, one is not entitled to contribution until he is damnified by actual payment, and it is settled that he has paid more than his share. It is, in other words, only where one surety has discharged the entire burden that he is authorized to maintain an action against his co-sureties to compel contribution of their just proportion of the obligation. In the case before us the same event, in principle, has occurred, which would authorize a surety to institute suit. As we have seen, in the principles from which the duty of contribution in both cases arises, there is no distinction. The only difference perceivable between the two is in the manner of the discharge of the "principal obligation." As, in the case of a surety suing for contribution, he must necessarily plead and prove that he has discharged the principal obligation or paid more than his share of the debt, so in the case of the party erecting the wall he must plead and prove that he has erected the wall or caused it to be erected, and that the defendant has made use of it without contributing his part of the cost of its erection. In an action by a surety against his co-sureties it would not for a moment be conceived to be necessary for him to allege that he had not borrowed the money with which to extinguish the common obligation. It would make no difference, so far as his cause of action was concerned, whether he had or not; and, of course, it could be no defense against his claim to say that he had. So, in an action for contribution for a party wall, we do not understand it to be required that the plaintiff shall allege that he has actually paid the cost of the erection of the wall, and we do not apprehend that it would be a defense against such contribution to say that the party erecting the wall has not settled with or paid the builder for the labor and materials bestowed upon its construction. In other words, in a suit for contribution by a surety against his co-sureties, the gist of the action is essentially the payment by the plaintiff of the money due under the principal obligation. There is, of course, in such case no other cause for damnification than the fact of having been compelled to discharge a burden which it was not incumbent upon him to bear alone. On the other hand, in an action for contribution for a party wall the gravamen of the complaint is the building of the wall by one and its subsequent use by the other coterminous owner. In such case, the injury or damnification suffered by the plaintiff is in the fact of having built the wall and its subsequent equal use without compensation by the defendant.

The complaint in the case before us alleges the agreement between the parties to bear an equal proportion of the expense of the erection of the wall. It alleges that the wall was erected by one of said parties—the assignor of the plaintiffs—and avers that the cost thereof was appraised by the architect upon whom the parties had agreed should perform that office and the notification of defendants of such appraisement, and alleges that the defendants have made use and are making use of the wall, and have not paid their share of the burden of its erection. We think that this was sufficient to fortify the complaint against the attack of the demurrer. The allegations of the complaint show that by reason of the obligation flowing from the party wall agreement the relation of debtor and creditor was established between the defendants and the corporation, and that the latter thereby became vested with a right of or chose in action against the former. It is not questioned that a thing in action is assignable, and it cannot be doubted that the corporation in this case had a right to assign its claim as a chose in action against the defendants to plaintiffs (section 954, Civ. Code; Burlock v. Peck, 2 Duer [N. Y.] 98), or that such a claim may be assigned either for a valuable consideration or for the purposes of collection, subject, of course, to any defense, set-off or counterclaim which might have been interposed in a suit upon the claim by the original owner. Sections 368, 440, Code Civ. Proc.

There are other specifications of error, some of which involve the point we have been discussing, and of which we have disposed against the contention of appellants. There was no proof offered upon the special defense that the wall was so defectively constructed as to have caused damage to the building of defendants by adjoining the building to the wall, and there is therefore no attack upon the finding of the court that the allegations of such special defense are untrue. It is urged that the court erred in refusing to permit appellants to introduce in evidence a certain judgment in support of their special pleas in abatement and in bar of the present action. The transcript shows the following proceeding upon this point: "The defendants moved the court that they be permitted to open the cause by introduction of evidence in support of their plea in abatement and plea in bar. The motion was denied by the court, and defendants excepted." The ruling was proper. Section 607, Code Civ. Proc. Trial courts, in the exercise of their discretion, may depart from the orderly procedure prescribed by that section for the conduct of a trial; but error cannot ordinarily be predicated upon their refusal to do so. The onus was, of course, upon the plaintiffs to prove the issue tendered by the pleadings, and the court was proceeding only in the orderly way when it refused to grant the motion of counsel, and required plaintiffs to first present their case. No effort was subsequently made during the progress of the trial to introduce the alleged judgment in evidence. The proper time for its offer was after the plaintiffs had closed their case. We cannot speculate as to what the ruling of the court might have been had the judgment been offered in evidence at the proper time. If it had been pertinent to the issue raised by the special pleas set up by the answer, no doubt it would have been admitted.

The contract between the corporation and the plaintiffs for the construction of the building of the former was admitted in evidence, under an objection that "the evidence was irrelevant, incompetent, immaterial and contained nothing tending to establish a right of recovery in the plaintiffs." The contract contains, of course, a provision specifying the extent of the work to be done, and shows that under its terms the contractors were to erect the party wall in question. As a circumstance tending to show the fact of the construction of the wall by the contractors under their contract with the assignor of plaintiffs, the instrument was properly admitted in evidence. Nor is there any force in the objection to the admission in evidence of the assignment to plaintiffs by Wehrman & Meilikie of the claim against the defendants. The specific objection to this evidence is that "no assignment was proven in the manner required by section 1940 of the Code of Civil Procedure." The assignment was signed by the president and secretary of the corporation and attested by its corporate seal. This was a prima facie showing of the due execution of the instrument, and, in the absence of other evidence overcoming it, it was sufficient. There was no proof offered by the defendants that the assignment was not what it purported to be.

The attack upon the appraisement of the cost of one-half of the erection of the party wall by the architect agreed upon by the parties cannot be sustained. Defendants were notified of the appraisement made by the architect at or near the time the same was made. There is no challenge of this appraisement in the answer, nor was there any evidence offered in support of the objection here made to it. The facts as disclosed by the pleadings and the evidence do not sustain appellants in the declaration that the appraisement is void upon its face. It appears to have been conducted substantially in accordance with the terms of the party wall agreement. If there was any error or mistake prejudicial to the defendants by such appraisement, the burden was upon them to show it. This they have not done.

The fourth finding of the court is assailed upon the ground that there is no evidence in the record to sustain it. The part of the finding to which objection is made is that the one-half of the cost of erecting and completing said party wall to be borne and paid for by the defendants "was not a part of said consideration sum of $1,903, but was in addition thereto." The "consideration sum of $1,903" referred to is the amount for which the contractors agreed to erect the building of the corporation. The contention of appellants is that there is no evidence to warrant the finding. There is considerable discussion in the briefs upon this point, the basis of which is the affirmation of the fact by the plaintiffs and its denial by the defendants in the pleadings. And it might be suggested that the position of counsel for defendants upon this question, considered in connection with his contention as to the prerequisites necessary to establish a right of action in the assignor of plaintiffs, is disingenuous. If, as he contends, the item of the half of the cost of the construction of the party wall, to be borne by defendants, was included in the consideration price of $1,903 paid by the corporation for the construction of its building, what becomes of his position attempted to be maintained both upon the demurrer and upon a review of the evidence that the assignor of plaintiffs had acquired no right of action, and consequently nothing that it could assign, because it had paid nothing for defendants on account of their half of the cost of the party wall? But in our view of the case, and of the legal relations existing between the parties, as heretofore expressed, the proposition is immaterial. We have held that the erection of the party wall by the assignor of plaintiffs and the subsequent use thereof by the defendants created a liability in favor of the former against the latter. This, as we have endeavored to explain, was upon the theory that the contractors, having under their contract with their assignor constructed the building of the corporation, including the party wall, could legally look to no one for compensation for the entire wall but the corporation. Its building having been erected previous to the construction of the building of the defendants, it was necessary for it to build the entire wall. It is therefore, in our conception of the case, unimportant whether or not the half of the cost of the wall to be paid for by the defendants was included in the "consideration price of $1,903" for the erection of the building of the corporation, for, as we have said, the fact remains that, in any event, so far as this record shows, the corporation was legally bound to pay for the erection of the entire wall. The contract for the construction of the corporation's building contained a proviso to the effect that the cost of one-half of the party wall was to be paid for by defendants. The record does not disclose the specific reason why that proviso was inserted in the contract between the plaintiffs and the corporation. The testimony of J. W. Watkins, one of the plaintiffs, shows that the contracts for the erection of both buildings were awarded at about the same time. Plaintiffs did not secure the contract for the erection of the building of the defendants. If it were important to find the reason, the insertion of that proviso in the contract might be accounted for upon either one of two theories. The one that the parties to that contract were under the belief that the plaintiffs would also secure the contract for the erection of the building of the defendants; the other that the proviso was designed as an assignment to plaintiffs of the claim of the corporation against the defendants for the latter's half of the cost of the wall. But whatever may have been its purpose, or the reason for its insertion in the contract, we repeat that we are of the opinion that the fact which the proviso, as is claimed by appellants, tends to prove, is of no importance or materiality; that is, the fact of whether or not the item of the half of the cost of the wall to be borne by the defendants was included in the sum of $1,903 paid by the corporation to plaintiffs for the construction of its building. If, however, the finding is of any importance, we think the testimony of Mr. Watkins sufficiently supports it.

There are no other assignments of error, except that it is declared in a general way that the evidence does not sustain the judgment. All of the evidence, with the exception of that of Mr. Watkins, was of a documentary nature. There was no evidence offered by the defendants. We think the judgment is well supported by the evidence. We have reached a conclusion in this case upon a somewhat different theory from that presented by the attorneys in their briefs. We have preferred to confine ourselves in the determination of the principal point in issue to a consideration alone of the history of the entire transaction as disclosed by the record evidence. It is clear that the wall was erected by the plaintiffs under a contract with their assignor. It is, of course, equally clear that the plaintiffs are entitled to their pay for the work, and that the defendants should, from every consideration of equity and fair dealing, under the circumstances presented by the record, be required to pay their just proportion of the expense incurred in the erection of the wall, cannot be disputed.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

BISHOP v. OWENS et al. (Civ. 243.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 25, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 23, 1907.)

1. APPEAL—NOTICE—CONFORMITY TO RECORD.
Where the appeal record discloses that a preliminary injunction had been granted, a notice of appeal from "the order denying plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction" was ineffective.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 2145.]

2. SAME—EFFECT OF NOTICE.
A notice of appeal from an alleged order denying plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, entered July 1, 1903, was ineffective as an appeal from an order dissolving a preliminary injunction previously granted, entered July 8, 1903.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 2145, 2146.]

3. INJUNCTION—IRREPARABLE INJURY.
A complaint alleged, that the defendants were repeatedly entering on the roof of plaintiff's building, and hanging ladders and falls with ropes attached thereto from an adjoining building on the west of plaintiff's building, preparatory to further entering upon such premises, and are threatening to continue the commission of such acts, and to suspend other articles, materials, and things therein. It also alleged that defendants threatened to, and would, unless restrained, continue to enter on plaintiff's above-described property, and that an action at law would not afford an adequate remedy because such trespasses would be so frequent that a multiplicity of suits would be necessary, and that defendants' acts, if permitted to continue, would ripen into an easement, etc. Held, that the general averment that the injury to plaintiff would be irreparable was not sustained by the facts, and did not justify an injunction on that ground.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, § 14.]

4. SAME—GROUNDS OF EQUITABLE RELIEF—STATEMENT.

In a suit to restrain certain alleged trespasses, a mere declaration in the complaint that complainant's property will suffer irreparable injury, unless an injunction be granted, and that a multiplicity of legal actions can be avoided thereby, is insufficient to sustain the issuance of an injunction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 27, Injunction, §§ 223–232.]

5. PLEADING—CONCLUSIONS.

Allegations that defendant's continued trespass on plaintiff's property "will ripen into a right and easement on plaintiff's property," and will "constitute and create an obstruction to the free and peaceable use" of such property, were mere conclusions of the pleader, and insufficient to sustain an injunction restraining such acts.

6. APPEAL—THEORY OF TRIAL COURT.

Where an order sustaining a demurrer was correct, the reasons on which the ruling was founded in the trial court were immaterial on appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3408, 3412.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Suit by Lewis H. Bishop against Len D. Owens and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Chas. E. Naylor, for appellants. Henry C. McPike, for respondent.

HART, J. Suit brought for an injunction to restrain certain acts complained of by plaintiff. A preliminary injunction was granted upon the verified complaint and an order to show cause why the same should not be made permanent. Defendants interposed a general demurrer to the complaint. On August 23, 1903, the court entered an order sustaining the demurrer, with leave to plaintiff to amend within 10 days. The plaintiff failed to amend within the time allowed, and thereupon judgment was entered in favor of defendants herein. From this judgment plaintiff takes this appeal.

On the 8th of July, 1903, the court, upon motion and application of defendants, made an order upon the complaint alone dissolving the preliminary injunction and discharging the order to show cause. There is in the transcript a "notice of appeal from the order denying plaintiff's motion for a preliminary injunction, made and entered herein on the 1st day of July, 1903"; but, as the record shows that a preliminary injunction had been granted by the court, there is no ground upon which such an appeal may be presented. Presumably, it was designed to take an appeal from the order dissolving the temporary injunction. If so, the attempt was abortive; but, as we think the court below committed no error in its order sustaining the demurrer, it becomes immaterial whether or not an appeal has been properly taken from the order dissolving the temporary injunction, because, if the facts are insufficient under a general demurrer to state reasons for the final relief prayed for, certainly they were not sufficient to warrant the continuance of the temporary restraining order. The stating part of the complaint alleges: "That all of said defendants repeatedly and continually are entering upon the roof of the building hereinafter named, and are engaged at the present time in hanging and suspending ladders and falls with ropes attached thereto from an adjoining building on the west of the aforesaid building, over and above the roof of the aforesaid No. 506 Market street and No. 7 Sutter street, and in the space above said roof, preparatory to continue and further enter upon said premises, and have and are threatening to continue daily, hourly, repeatedly, and continuously to continue in the commission of said acts, and have threatened and are threatening to suspend other articles, materials, and things therein. That all of said defendants, and each of them, threaten to and will, unless restrained by order of this court, continue to enter upon plaintiff's said described premises, and the whole thereof, repeatedly and continuously, daily and hourly, and that actions at law would afford plaintiff no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, for the reason that such trespasses will be so frequent and of interminable and numerous duration that such a multiplicity of suits will be necessitated thereby, and the injury resulting from each act of trespass would be so trifling in amount as compared with the expense and inconvenience of prosecuting actions at law to recover damages therefor, as to leave plaintiff without adequate remedy, and, furthermore, such acts of the defendants, if permitted to continue, will in all probability result in a breach of the peace of this community, because, unless defendants be restrained by the court, plaintiff must resort to necessary force in preventing the violations of his rights of property consequent upon such trespasses; and, furthermore, such acts, if permitted to continue, will ripen into a right and an easement on plaintiff's property aforesaid, and such imminent, threatened, and actual pending acts of defendants as aforesaid do and will so constitute and create an obstruction to the free and peaceable use of the aforesaid property of plaintiff as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of said property, and will injuriously affect the said plaintiff in the reasonable possession thereof."

It is impossible to ascertain from the complaint exactly what the nature of the acts is which plaintiff charges interfere, and will continue to interfere, with the full and peaceable enjoyment of his property, and which, he alleges, will, if not restrained, crystallize into a "right and easement" on his property. We are not advised by his pleading whether a structure is to be constructed above the roof of his building, or whether the acts of defendants will result in the establishment of some mechanical or other contrivance that will cause a nuisance and consequently an interference with the comfortable enjoyment of his property, or will result in suspending some article over or near his roof that is likely to fall upon his building and thus damage it; nor, in fact, does he allege any fact or facts in such manner as to clearly inform us what acts the defendants have committed, or are committing or threatening to commit, which will result in permanent or irreparable injury to his property. The averment that the defendants are "repeatedly and continually entering upon the building hereinafter named," and "are engaged at the present time in hanging and suspending ladders and falls with ropes attached thereto from an adjoining building on the west of the aforesaid building, over and above the roof of the aforesaid No. 506 Market street and No. 7 Sutter street, and in the space above said roof," certainly furnishes no light by which we can determine how the plaintiff's property will be permanently injured.

The allegation that the plaintiff will be driven to a multiplicity of suits involving trivial amounts, and will thus be put to vexatious, troublesome, and expensive litigation, is a mere conclusion, having no support in the other pleaded facts. In Gilbert v. Arnold, 30 Md. 29, it is said: "A court will not grant an injunction to restrain a trespasser merely because he is a trespasser, yet it will interfere where the injury is irreparable, or where full and adequate relief cannot be obtained at law, or where the trespass goes to the destruction of the property in the character in which it has been held and enjoyed, or where it is necessary to prevent a multiplicity of suits." But "these grounds of the jurisdiction," says the editor of the American Decisions (footnote, p. 500, vol. 11), "when closely examined, resolve themselves into one—that of irreparable injury." The test for the determination of the question of whether or not a particular injury will be irreparable seems to be this: Will a verdict of damages at law afford complete compensation for it? If so, then the fundamental ground for invoking the power of equity is lacking, to wit, a want of adequate remedy at law. "But an injury resulting from trespass may be incapable of compensation in damages from a variety of reasons: (1) It may be destructive of the very substance of the estate; (2) it may not be capable of estimation in terms of money; (3) it may be so continuous and permanent that there is no instant of time when it can be said to be complete so that its extent may be computed; (4) it may be vexatiously persisted in, in spite of repeated verdicts at law; (5) it may be committed by one who is wholly irresponsible, so that a verdict against him for damages would be entirely valueless." Jerome v. Ross, 11 Am. Dec. 501, footnote. The question of whether irreparable injury will result from the trespass must, of course, depend and be determined upon the facts of the particular case. The court must be fully advised by the pleaded facts of what the acts of the alleged trespasser are so that it can readily be determined whether the injury complained of meets the criterion of "irreparable injury." "Before a court of equity will interfere to restrain a trespass, it must appear that the injury to result from the trespass will be irreparable in its nature. And it is not sufficient simply to allege that fact, but it must be shown to the court how and why it will be so." Mechanics' Foundry v. Ryall, 75 Cal. 602, 17 Pac. 703; Branch Turnpike Company v. Board of Supervisors, etc., 13 Cal. 190; Waldron v. Marsh, 5 Cal. 120. "The facts must be stated, that the court may see that the apprehensions of irreparable mischief are well founded." Carlisle v. Stevenson, 3 Md. Ch. 499; Pomeroy's Code Remedies, 680, and cases there cited. "* * * It will be observed that it [the complaint] contains only a general averment as to the injury caused or to be caused by the acts of the defendant. No facts are set out showing how or why the supposed injury would be irreparable; but to obtain an injunction, when irreparable injury is relied upon, such a showing is necessary." California, etc., Co. v. Union, etc., Co., 122 Cal. 643, 55 Pac. 591. Tested by the foregoing principles, we think the complaint falls short of stating a cause calling for the equitable relief demanded. The mere declaration that plaintiff's property "will suffer irreparable injury," and that a "multiplicity of legal actions" can be avoided by equitable interference, is not, as we have said, enough.

In this case, while it is charged in paragraph 6 of the complaint that the defendants have threatened to continue committing the acts charged in paragraph 2, we are unable to determine from the complaint, as we have before suggested, how and in what manner and why the alleged threatened continuation of such acts would result in permanent and irreparable injury to the plaintiff. The mere allegations that the continued trespass "will ripen into a right and easement on plaintiff's property," and will "constitute and create an obstruction to the free and peaceable use of the aforesaid property," are only the conclusions of the pleader. The facts alleged do not, as they should, speak for themselves as to the nature and extent of the injury threatened. There is an allegation in the complaint, as we have seen, that the defendants are "engaged at the present time in hanging and suspending ladders and falls with ropes attached thereto from an adjoining building on the west of the aforesaid building, over and above the roof." The purpose of these "ladders and falls with ropes attached thereto," and the threatened suspension of "other articles, materials, and things therein," is not disclosed by the complaint. In any event, as we have said, there is nothing in the averments from which we can determine how or why, if at all, these acts would cause irreparable injury to plaintiff's property. If we understand the complaint, the ladders, falls, etc., are not attached to and suspended from plaintiff's building, but to and from an adjoining building. Of course, if by clear and appropriate allegations it appeared from the complaint that the attachment of the ladders and falls to and their suspension from the building of an adjoining owner would interfere with and obstruct plaintiff's free, full, and peaceable use of his property, and in consequence would inflict upon him a permanent and an irreparable injury, to redress which there was no adequate remedy at law, then and in such case plaintiff would be warranted in invoking the equitable remedy of injunction; but, to secure this remedy, as we have shown by the authorities, there must be a clear case disclosed by the pleaded facts of threatened irreparable injury which could not adequately be repaired by any of the existing legal remedies. If a full statement of all the facts and circumstances of the alleged trespass by the defendant upon plaintiff's property were clearly shown by the complaint (and surely they have not been), it might appear that the defendants "might be crowded out of the way by a molliter manus imposuit" (Mechanics' Foundry v. Ryall, supra), or it might appear that the plaintiff is afforded a complete remedy at law.

In his reply brief, appellant complains that counsel for respondents, in his presentation of his side of the cause on this appeal, has abandoned the position taken by him in the court below. In the lower court, he says, the defendants argued that the facts stated in the complaint show that the acts of the defendants were protected under the doctrine of damnum absque injuria, and that it was upon that view and theory that the learned judge of the court below sustained the demurrer. The sufficiency of the facts to state a cause of action was necessarily challenged by the demurrer, whatever may have been the specific moving cause of the ruling. We cannot perceive, however, how, from the face of the complaint, it could be determined that the facts bring the acts charged within the rule of damnum absque injuria. As we have before observed, the purpose for which the alleged acts have been committed and are threatened to be continued is not disclosed by the facts stated in the complaint. Indeed, the pleaded facts do not even furnish ground from which a conjecture as to the purpose of the acts complained of might be ventured. We do not, therefore, see how it can be determined from the complaint whether the alleged acts of defendants were and are excusable under that rule or not; but we are not concerned with the particular reasons upon which the ruling in the court below was founded.

It is enough for us to be convinced that the ruling was correct, and, being so convinced, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

5 Cal. App. 19

LEONHART v. CALIFORNIA WINE ASS'N.

(Civ. 294.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 16, 1907.)

1. APPEAL — HARMLESS ERROR — RULINGS ON DEMURRER TO PLEADINGS.

A complaint, for the breach of a buyer to carry out his contract to buy specified quantities of four different kinds of grapes for $16 a ton for three kinds and for $15 a ton for the fourth kind, alleged that, by reason of a delay of the buyer in accepting the grapes as they matured, a large portion of them which were delivered had shrunk to an amount exceeding 40 tons. The complaint did not specify the kinds of grapes thus damaged, but showed that but little over three tons of the $15 a ton variety were delivered, and the evidence disclosed that the shrinkage was in one of the kinds sold at $16 per ton. Held, that the error in overruling a demurrer to the complaint, on the ground that it could not be determined what portion of the shrinkage occurred in the different kinds, was harmless.

2. EVIDENCE — PAROL EVIDENCE—CUSTOM TO CONTRADICT WRITTEN CONTRACT.

A written contract for the sale of specified quantities of specified kinds of grapes for specified prices, to be delivered at the winery of the buyer, without limitation as to the amount of the daily deliveries, cannot be contradicted by proof of a custom relating to the daily deliveries at the winery.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 1945–1952.]

3. APPEAL — RECORD—SPECIFICATION OF ERRORS.

Where the record fails to specify what instructions were requested by the party complaining, or on what issues he desired a special verdict, no error is pointed out.

4. EVIDENCE — ADMISSIBILITY — BREACH OF CONTRACT.

In an action by a seller of grapes for breach of contract of sale by the buyer caused by his delay in accepting grapes at his winery as they matured, evidence that other sellers were delayed in the delivery of their grapes was admissible to show the congested condition and lack of facilities at the winery for accepting grapes.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; Geo. E. Church, Judge.

Action by P. R. Leonhart against the California Wine Association. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro and Johnston & Jones, for appellant. L. L. Cory, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action brought by the respondent against the appellant to recover damages, claimed to have been sustained by respondent through the failure of appellant to carry out the terms of a contract for the purchase of grapes. The amended complaint alleges that respondent delivered to appellant a certain quantity of different kinds of grapes specified in the contract, and, by reason of the delay of appellant in accepting the grapes as they matured, a large portion of the grapes which were delivered had shrunk in weight to an amount exceeding 45 tons; that a portion of the grapes, the Malagas, was rejected altogether; that the Malaga grapes were then sold for the highest market price, and the appellant charged the difference between the amount actually realized and the contract price. The action was tried before a jury, which rendered a verdict in favor of the plaintiff. The appeal is from the judgment, and from the order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

Appellant demurred specially to the amended complaint, on the ground that it could not be determined therefrom what portion of the shrinkage in an amount exceeding 45 tons occurred in the Zinfandel grapes delivered, what portion occurred in the Burger grapes delivered, what portion occurred in the Faher Zagos grapes delivered, and what portion occurred in the Sultana grapes delivered. The contract fixes the price for each of the first three kinds named at $16 a ton, and that of the last kind named at $15 a ton. Had the price to be paid for each variety of grapes been the same, it would have been immaterial how the shrinkage was distributed. The complaint is uncertain in the respect pointed out in the demurrer, and it should have been sustained. The error, however, is highly technical, and concerns a mere trifle in amount. Only a very small proportion of the loss could have been in the $15 a ton variety, for the complaint shows that but a little over three tons of that variety were delivered, and then again the evidence discloses that the shrinkage was in the Zinfandels alone. The error is harmless, and does not affect the case. The court will not reverse a judgment for such an error. In the case of Alexander v. Central L. & M. Co., 104 Cal. 536, 38 Pac. 411, it is said: "It is not in all cases where error has been committed by trial courts in overruling demurrers to complaints upon the grounds of ambiguity or uncertainty that this court will order a reversal of a judgment based upon a trial of the issues made by the complaint and answer. The same rule applies to errors of this character as is invoked as to all other errors of the court. It must not be a mere abstract error, but it must be prejudicial and injurious error in order to avail appellant; otherwise he has no cause of complaint." See, also, Holland v. McDade, 125 Cal. 353, 58 Pac. 9; Stephenson v. Deuel, 125 Cal. 656, 58 Pac. 258.

The appellant in its answer set up as a special defense that the crushing capacity of the winery at which these grapes were to be delivered did not exceed 100 tons per day; that the amount of grapes which might be delivered at the winery under ordinary conditions was in excess of 9,000 tons during a season lasting usually about 90 days; that, because of the impossibility of handling at the winery at one time all the grapes of one season, it was known and understood by all persons delivering grapes, including respondent, to be customary for each person to deliver each day at the winery only such proportion of the daily capacity of the winery as all the grapes to be delivered by each individual for each season bore to the whole amount of grapes to be delivered to the appellant during such season; that this custom was well known to respondent at the time of entering into the contract, and constituted one of the conditions thereof; and that it was in accordance with this custom that appellant notified respondent not to deliver his grapes at the winery during the season of 1904 at a greater rate than one or two loads per day. The contract provides that respondent will sell and deliver his grapes at certain prices, etc., "and payment will be made as the grapes are delivered." The trial court took the view that these allegations did not constitute a defense to the written contract sued on by respondent. Under the terms of the contract, respondent could make as many deliveries within a given time, say a day, as he pleased, and upon delivery he was entitled to payment. The written contract makes no limitation as to deliveries. The alleged custom would have limited the deliveries to one or two loads a day, and in that respect would have been inconsistent with the written contract. A custom inconsistent with the terms of a written contract is not the proper subject-matter of a defense. In the case of Withers v. Moore, 140 Cal. 591, 74 Pac. 159, the defendant contended that the contract sued upon was subject to a certain custom. In that case, at pages 596, 597 of 140 Cal., pages 160, 161 of 74 Pac., it is said: "The contract as made by the cablegrams and explained in the letter is not uncertain with respect to the point in question. It is a positive agreement by the defendant to buy the coal in question of the plaintiff at the price of 24s. 3d. per ton, to be delivered to him free of any expense of freight, insurance, exchange, or duty, all of which were to be paid by the plaintiff. To attach to this contract the custom of San Francisco, the effect of which would be that if the cargo was not received until after July 1, 1894, the defendant would pay 35 cents less per ton than the price agreed upon, would be to vary the terms of a written contract by parol evidence. The Code provides that evidence may be given of 'usage, to explain the true character of an act, contract, or instrument, where such true character is not otherwise plain; but usage is never admissible, except as an instrument of interpretation.' Code Civ. Proc. § 1870, subd. 12. And in accordance with this principle it has been held that it is not competent to vary a written contract by parol proof of a custom where the contract is certain in its terms. Holloway v. McNear, 81 Cal. 156, 22 Pac. 514; Milwaukee Co. v. Palatine Co., 128 Cal. 74, 60 Pac. 518; Ah Tong v. Earl Fruit Co., 112 Cal. 681, 45 Pac. 7; Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 363, 33 Pac. 916.

The appellant urges that the trial court should have submitted to the jury certain special issues requested by it. Upon this point the bill of exceptions shows only this: "The defendant California Wine Association requested the court in writing to direct the jury to find a special verdict in writing upon certain issues in the case specified in such written request, but the court declined to direct the jury to find a special verdict in writing upon all or any of the issues as requested by this defendant, and this defendant duly and regularly excepted to the failure of the court to so instruct the jury." The record fails to specify what the request was, or upon what issues the appellant desired a special verdict. It fails to point out any error. Error will not be presumed; all intendments being in favor of the regularity of the action of the trial court. Sheehy v. Shinn, 103 Cal. 325, 37 Pac. 393; In re Yoakam, 103 Cal. 503, 37 Pac. 485; Rudel v. Los Angeles Co., 118 Cal. 281, 50 Pac. 400; McLennon v. Wilcox, 126 Cal. 51, 58 Pac. 305; People v. Clark, 121 Cal. 633, 54 Pac. 147.

The plaintiff was permitted, over the objection and exception of the defendant, to show that persons other than the plaintiff were delayed in the delivery of their grapes. To take the testimony of one witness by way of example, speaking of deliveries, T. R. Chipman said: "My experience was I got from one to two loads; very seldom two loads. * * * I saw 36 teams delivering there. I didn't stay there night and day. I left my wagon and would go there next day with my team, and get in; if I couldn't, I would wait all day and go back home at night again, and go again. That is the way I got my grapes delivered. That was the condition as long as I was there. I had to get a number from the office. Each man went in in rotation in accordance with the number he got from the office. They would not accept them in any other way." The testimony was not admitted to show that, because others were delayed in the delivery of their grapes, plaintiff was also delayed. It was admitted to show the congested condition and lack of facilities at the winery for accepting grapes.

It is claimed the court erred in other of its rulings on the admission of evidence, and that it erred in the rejection of certain evidence, and in a motion to strike out certain testimony. We have examined the rulings, and are of the opinion that no error was committed regarding them.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

5 Cal. App. 25

RILEY v. LOMA VISTA RANCH CO. et al.

(Civ. 340.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 18, 1907.)

1. Appeal—Order of Reversal—Effect.

Where the order of reversal was not qualified by any specific direction, but was general, on the ground that the findings were not justified by the evidence, the effect of the reversal was to award the parties a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4626.]

2. Same—Proceedings After Remand.

A judgment for one of the defendants, a corporation, was reversed on appeal on the ground that the findings were not justified by the evidence, without any specific directions as to the further proceedings in the case. After remand plaintiff, having recovered against the other defendants, moved for judgment against the corporation defendant, which the court granted, the order reciting that the cause came on to be heard on plaintiff's motion for judgment against defendant corporation on remittitur from the Court of Appeals, and it appearing to the court that all questions of fact were finally adjudicated by the judgment against the other defendants, and, good cause being shown therefor without objection, it was ordered that judgment be rendered against the corporation. Held, that such proceedings did not constitute a new trial, to which the corporation defendant was entitled, as defined by Code Civ. Proc. § 656, and that the judgment was therefore erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4684–4690.]

3. Same—Right of Appeal—Waiver.

Defendant corporation did not waive its right to appeal from the judgment so entered by its failure to object to the proceedings in the trial court.

4. Same—Vacation of Findings.

Where on a former appeal, a judgment in favor of defendant was reversed, because the findings were not justified by the evidence, such findings thereby became of no further effect, and were unavailable to sustain a subsequent judgment for such defendant in the trial court, under Code Civ. Proc. § 657, subd. 6, providing that a former verdict or decision may be vacated and a new trial granted on the application of the party aggrieved for insufficiency of evidence to justify the verdict or other decision.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by William Riley against the Loma Vista Ranch Company and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff against defendant ranch company, it appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Barstow & Variel, for appellant. Will D. Gould and James H. Blanchard, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The appellant issued to one Howard its warehouse receipt for a quantity of hay. A part of the hay had been delivered when, by assignment, the respondent acquired title to this receipt, demanded the balance of the hay, and upon failure to deliver the same instituted suit against the Loma Vista Ranch Company for the value thereof, making as parties defendant in said suit Howard and one W. L. Riley, who was respondent's immediate assignor. Upon the trial he obtained judgment against Howard and W. L. Riley; but as against the Loma Vista Ranch Company it was adjudged that plaintiff's (respondent's here) complaint be dismissed and that said company have judgment for its costs. The respondent moved for a new trial, which motion was, by order of court, denied, and on his appeal therefrom this order was reversed without any qualification. William Riley v. Loma Vista Ranch Co., 1 Cal. App. 488, 82 Pac. 686.

On November 24, 1905, and after the remittitur had been filed in the superior court, judgment was rendered on motion in favor of respondent William Riley, and against the Loma Vista Ranch Company, and from this judgment the latter appeals on the judgment roll.

The order of reversal was general and not qualified by any specific direction, the ground assigned therefor being that the findings were not justified by the evidence. The effect of this reversal was to award to the parties a new trial of the case. Falkner v. Hendy, 107 Cal. 49–54, 40 Pac. 21, 386; Myers v. McDonald, 68 Cal. 163, 8 Pac. 809; Irwin v. Towne, 43 Cal. 23; Kellogg v. King, 114 Cal. 378, 46 Pac. 166, 55 Am. St. Rep. 74.

The position occupied by the parties was identically the same under this reversal as though no trial had ever been had. "A new trial is a re-examination of any issue of fact in the same court after a trial and decision by a jury or court, or by referees." Code Civ. Proc. § 656. They were left free to make such proper amendments to the pleadings as the trial court might allow, and upon the trial to introduce any and all competent evidence. The case was before the court for trial de novo. Heidt v. Minor, 113 Cal. 385, 45 Pac. 700.

It appears that no trial within the meaning of said section 656, Code of Civil Procedure, was ever had. The judgment from which the appeal is taken recites that the cause came on to be heard "on plaintiff's motion for judgment against defendant Loma Vista Ranch Company, a corporation, upon remittitur from the District Court of Appeals"; that the parties were present in court by counsel, the rendition of the former judgment, motion for new trial and order denying same, and that on appeal the same was reversed and, "it appearing to the court that all questions of fact in said cause were determined and finally adjudicated by judgment heretofore entered against W. W. Howard and W. L. Riley, and good cause being shown therefor, and no objection being made thereto, it is ordered," etc. It thus appears that there was an entire absence of the procedure necessary in a re-examination of the issues of fact joined by the pleadings. No findings were made, and, in view of the recitals in the judgment, we cannot, in aid thereof, indulge in the presumption that they were waived. People v. Forbes, 51 Cal. 628. The findings made upon the former trial were brought up in the transcript, but the facts then found by the court supported, not this judgment, but the former judgment, and embodied the decision, which this court then held was not justified by the evidence.

The fact that counsel for appellant did not object to the procedure cannot be construed as consent thereto. Failure to object was not a waiver of its right to appeal from any erroneous order or judgment.

Respondent insists that the transcript does not contain the notice of motion made for judgment. This is no part of the judgment roll, and, further, appellant not only concedes that the notice was served, but makes no point on account of its absence. It is apparent that the judgment was rendered through misapprehension and inadvertence of both the respondent and the court, and that counsel for appellant did not conceive that the interest of their client demanded that they enter any objection to the procedure. Want of criticism should not be construed as commendation of the position assumed by appellant in this behalf.

It is urged that the trial court should now be directed to enter judgment for appellant on the findings made on the former trial. Section 657, Code Civ. Proc. provides that "the former verdict or other decision may be vacated and a new trial granted, on the application of the party aggrieved, for any of the following causes, materially affecting the substantial rights of such party: * * * (6) Insufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict or other decision." This court in its opinion on the former appeal held that the findings upon which appellant now bases its claim for a judgment were not justified by the evidence and reversed the order of the trial court denying a motion for a vacation of the decision, and, in effect, ordering that a new trial be granted. These findings having been set aside, and the record excluding the presumption that any were waived, and none other having been made in any subsequent trial, it follows that there are no findings to support any judgment.

The judgment is reversed and the cause remanded for a new trial, as heretofore ordered.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

SPENCER v. SAN FRANCISCO BRICK CO. (Civ. 137.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 28, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 29, 1907.)

1. Damages — Punitive Damages — Negligence.

Under Civ. Code, § 3294, authorizing an award of punitive damages in an action not arising from contract, where defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, or malice, express or implied, an award of punitive damages cannot be based on simple negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Damages, § 200.]

2. Trespass—Punitive Damages—"Oppression."

Defendant constructed a bulkhead adjoining plaintiff's property for the purpose of retaining dirt, gravel, sand, etc. The bulkhead was negligently constructed, so that after it had remained standing for two years it gave way, following a period of wet weather, and precipitated gravel, dirt, etc., onto plaintiff's premises, destroying a portion of his fence and chicken house. Held, that such facts were insufficient to show gross negligence, wantonness, or oppression, required by Civ. Code, § 3294, in order to justify an award of punitive damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trespass, § 144.]

3. Same—Excessiveness.

A bulkhead negligently erected on defendant's property gave way during wet weather, and allowed earth to escape onto plaintiff's premises, and destroyed a portion of plaintiff's fence and chicken house. Plaintiff testified that the fencing was worth $125 and the chicken house $30, while a carpenter testified that the fencing and chicken house could both have been restored to their original condition at a cost of $25. Held, that a verdict allowing plaintiff $600 damages was excessive.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trespass, § 145.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by Carl Spencer against the San Francisco Brick Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Reversed.

Fisher Ames, for appellant. Robert P. Troy and Andrew Thorne, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff sued defendant for damages caused to his premises by the giving way of a bulkhead upon the premises of defendant, and recovered a judgment for the sum of $600. Defendant moved for a new trial upon the grounds of excessive damages, and errors of law occurring at the trial. The motion was denied, and defendant appealed from the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial.

The action was for damages to the premises of plaintiff resulting from the giving way of a bulkhead on the premises of defendant, whereby dirt, gravel, sand, etc., fell against the fence and chicken house of plaintiff, and injured the same, and gravel, dirt, etc., fell upon the plaintiff's premises, and timbers of the bulkhead were projected onto and over plaintiff's premises.

Plaintiff is the owner of a lot in the city and county of San Francisco 25 feet in width, the rear of which abuts against a lot owned by defendant, and used by it for the purpose of dumping dirt. To retain this dirt, defendant, some two years previous to the accident causing the injury complained of, built a bulkhead which, on January 15, 1901, following a spell of rainy weather, gave way. Plaintiff's lot was occupied by a dwelling house, and the rear portion of the lot was inclosed with a board fence, and in the corner was a chicken house nine feet square and eight feet high, built of boards, and two sides of which were formed by the rear and side fences of plaintiff. The giving way of the bulkhead, and the consequent falling of the heaped-up earth, pushed the fence and chicken house out of position, broke some of the boards from the fence, as well as caused some of the beams and timbers of the bulkhead to project into and over the rear portion of plaintiff's lot. Plaintiff testified that the fencing affected was worth $125, and the chicken house $30, while a carpenter called by the defendant testified that the fencing and chicken house could have been restored to their original condition at a cost of $25. There is no evidence that the dwelling house was in any way injured. Indeed, a photograph of that portion of the premises claimed to have been injured, attached to the transcript, shows that the injury was confined to the rear portion of the lot, which was used for a chicken yard. It is perfectly apparent from the evidence in the record that the actual damage could not have exceeded $155, even if the chicken house and fences had been destroyed, which they were not, but only pushed out of position and considerably damaged.

It is only upon the theory that the case was one where punitive damages may be given that the verdict and judgment can be sustained. "In an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, where the defendant has been guilty of oppression, fraud, malice, express or implied, the plaintiff, in addition to the actual damages may recover damages for the sake of example, and by way of punishing the defendant." Civ. Code, § 3294. Simple negligence will not justify an award of punitive damages. Moody v. McDonald, 4 Cal. 297; Sloane v. Southern Cal. Ry. Co., 111 Cal. 687, 44 Pac. 320, 32 L. R. A. 193. There is no evidence in this case that the injury was willfully or wantonly done, or that defendant was guilty of gross negligence in the construction of the bulkhead, or in the use of its lot, and there is no pretense of any fraud in the case. It was simply shown that after standing for two years the bulkhead gave way, following a spell of wet weather. From this it may be presumed that it was negligently constructed, or that too much earth was negligently heaped against it.

In the case of Chicago Ry. Co. v. Scurr, 59 Miss. 456, 42 Am. Rep. 373, cited with approval in Mabb v. Stewart, 133 Cal. 556, 65 Pac. 1085, it is said: "We are prepared to go a step further, and say that in any and all actions for damages, where the proof fails to show anything that will warrant an implication of willfulness, recklessness, or rudeness, it is the duty of the court to inform the jury, where requested so to do, that they cannot inflict punitive damages. Not to do so in a case free from doubt would be an abdication of judicial authority, and a permission to the jury to violate the settled principles of law." In the case at bar there was no evidence of recklessness, willfulness, or rudeness in the original trespass, but it is claimed on the part of the plaintiff that there is evidence of oppression, in this: that after the accident had happened plaintiff requested defendant to repair the damage, and it neglected to do so. It is in evidence that immediately after the accident plaintiff notified a bookkeeper of defendant to fix up plaintiff's property, and again in May following the accident he made the same request of the secretary of the defendant, which he repeated to the president of the defendant in the following July, but nothing was done by the defendant until after the action was brought, although defendant promised to do so. Oppression is defined by the Standard Dictionary as "the act of subjecting to cruel and unjust hardships." The mere omission to repair a damage unintentionally, though negligently, done, cannot be said to be subjection to cruel and unjust hardship. Plaintiff had an immediate legal remedy for his damage in an action therefor. So far as the projecting timbers, etc., constituted a nuisance on his property, he could have abated the same by his own act. They did not interfere with the use of the dwelling house, but only interfered with the use of the rear portion of the lot to a trifling extent.

Substantially this case presents the aspect of a defendant neglecting to make reparation to a plaintiff for damage which he has negligently but unintentionally caused the plaintiff, and for which plaintiff had a legal remedy. If upon such a showing exemplary damages may be awarded, it is difficult to see why such damages may not be awarded in all cases of injuries resulting from negligence when the party in fault refuses to make good the damages on demand. The evidence does not disclose a case of fraud, malice, or oppression. For this reason the damages allowed are excessive, and a new trial should have been granted.

There being no evidence to justify an award of punitive damages, the court also erred in refusing the instruction requested by defendant, "That this is not a case for punitive or exemplary damages, and that the plaintiff can in no event recover more than such damages as were actually suffered by him." Mabb v. Stewart, 133 Cal. 556, 65 Pac. 1085.

Judgment and order are reversed.

SNYDER v. REGAN. (Civ. 303.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 23, 1907.)

1. PLEADING — ALLEGATIONS — ARGUMENTATIVENESS—OWNERSHIP.

In an action by a lessee against a person refusing to deliver possession of the leased premises for damages to his goods and business, an allegation by plaintiff that he was a merchant conducting a store business, and, being desirous of increasing his business, he entered into the lease and was injured because he could not remove his goods thereto, is a sufficient allegation of ownership of the business intended to be carried on in the leased premises as against a general demurrer.

2. SAME.

An allegation of damage that "the goods depreciated in value to plaintiff's business" was sufficient to allege a loss to the business conducted by plaintiff in relation to such goods as he would have been enabled to sell but for the tortious acts of defendant.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by D. D. Snyder against A. J. Regan. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Shipsey, for appellant. S. V. Wright, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action to recover damages for wrongfully withholding possession of certain premises. Verdict and judgment for plaintiff, from which judgment, and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals.

The action was brought by plaintiff, the lessee of a certain storeroom in the city of San Luis Obispo, whose lease thereof commenced September 1, 1903. The defendant as a prior lessee, whose lease expired at the date last named, was in possession, and, notwithstanding the expiration of his lease, refused to surrender the same, but continued in possession until September 23d of that year. Plaintiff, relying upon his lease, made purchases of goods most marketable at that point in the month of September, and which were duly received about September 1st, but by reason of defendant's acts it became necessary to store the same at an expense to plaintiff, and other goods were delayed in consignment because of plaintiff's inability to furnish storeroom therefor, and a loss ensued to plaintiff by not being able to display and sell the said goods during September. In consequence of the expected removal plaintiff disarranged his store then occupied by him so as to seriously interfere with his business during the time that defendant wrongfully held possession of the other store, and suffered other losses specifically set out in the complaint. Afterwards, in November, 1903, plaintiff commenced an action against the lessor to recover damages for breach of contract by reason of his failure to deliver possession of the premises. In that complaint most of the items of damage were identical with those set out in this action. That action against the lessor was dismissed under an agreement by which the lessor paid the costs of court and the attorney's fees for the preparation and filing of the complaint, estimated at $45.25. Defendant in this action pleaded such settlement and dismissal as a bar to this action, claiming that all questions of actual damage accruing to plaintiff had once been satisfied and paid. The trial judge instructed the jury that, if they should find that such actual damage had entered into the settlement of the action against the lessor and plaintiff had received a valuable consideration on account of such settlement and dismissal, plaintiff could not again recover the amount of such actual damages from defendant, and, further, that the adequacy of such payment was not material; that the question was: Did plaintiff receive any sum in settlement of the actual damages suffered by him? The verdict, which was a general one in favor of the plaintiff, by implication, amounts to a finding that such actual damages had not been the subject of such settlement. There was evidence to support such finding, and it will not be disturbed upon appeal. It was competent to show what matters entered into the settlement and dismissal, even though the receipt in general terms released the lessor from all claims of damages against him. Jersey Island Dredging Co. v. Whitney (Cal. Sup.) 86 Pac. 691.

There was a conflict of evidence with reference to the ownership of the business, and as to whether the damages could have been avoided by the use of ordinary diligence, as well as to the amount of damages suffered on account of the various matters specified in the complaint. But as to all of such matters there is some testimony warranting the jury in its finding, and under the well-established rule, the verdict of the jury is determinative of all such questions. Appellant, however, insists that the complaint itself does not aver ownership in the goods or business alleged to have been injured. We find an allegation that plaintiff was a merchant in the city of San Luis Obispo, and conducted a store business at that place and was desirous of increasing his business, in view of which he entered into a lease for the premises by which plaintiff rented said storeroom, and was injured in his business because he could not remove his goods thereto. As against a general demurrer, this is a sufficient averment of ownership of the business intended to be carried on in said leased premises. A statement of facts which indicates with reasonable certainty actual ownership is the equivalent of an allegation of the ultimate fact.

It is next contended as to one of the allegations of damage, namely, as to the depreciation in value of certain goods, that the allegations of the complaint are insufficient to entitle plaintiff to the recovery of such item. The allegation is that "the goods depreciated in value to plaintiff's business." It is argued that this is not a sufficient allegation of depreciation to authorize a recovery; that a recovery can be had only for the actual market depreciation, which, it is claimed, is not shown in the record. We accept this allegation of injury on account of the depreciation in value to the business as sufficient to allege a loss to the business conducted by plaintiff in relation to such goods as he would have been enabled to sell but for the tortious acts of defendant. It was for the jury to say whether such goods actually depreciated in value to the injury of plaintiff and his business, which it has determined adversely to the appellant. When there is some testimony in the record sufficient to sustain a verdict, it is not incumbent upon us to enter upon a calculation as to the elements of damage and what may or may not have been considered, or the weight or effect which was given to any particular testimony in connection with such items of damage. Nor will we enter into an examination of the items entering into the verdict to determine whether the jury considered some small item where the testimony was very slight, when the general proof is such as to warrant a jury in determining generally the damage to the extent found by them in their verdict.

There is nothing in the record indicating passion or prejudice, nor was there anything in the conduct of respondent's counsel which could have had the effect of prejudicing an intelligent jury. Taking the whole record, we are satisfied that the verdict was a fair one, that the charges of the court were proper, and that there is no prejudicial error in such record.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

PEOPLE v. MITCHELL. (Cr. 73.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 20, 1907.)

WITNESSES — CROSS-EXAMINATION OF PROSECUTRIX—SCOPE.

Where, in a prosecution for rape, prosecutrix, a child under 16 years of age, testified that she was taken to defendant's office and there submitted to sexual intercourse in consideration of the sum of $2.50 paid to her, it was error to refuse to permit defendant to ask her, on cross-examination, whether there was any inducement or threat held out or made to her to sign the complaint against defendant for the purpose of showing that she had been threatened with incarceration on a charge of vagrancy, unless she swore to the complaint against defendant; such evidence being admissible to show prosecutrix's motive, as provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 1847.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; T. W. Harris, Judge.

David Mitchell was convicted of rape, and he appeals. Reversed.

H. S. Aldrich, J. E. McElrath, and W. J. Donovan, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., for the People.

KERRIGAN, J. The defendant was convicted of rape, for having sexual intercourse with a female child under the age of 16 years not his wife, and has appealed from the final judgment of conviction, from the order denying a new trial, and from the order denying the motion in arrest of judgment.

For the purpose of showing the character of the testimony, and that because of its character a liberal cross-examination of the prosecutrix should have been permitted, a short recital of the evidence for the people is necessary. The prosecutrix testified that she, with her girl friend, Bernice B. (the name of this witness being immaterial to the discussion), went to the offices of the defendant on the 17th day of November, 1905, at about 5 o'clock in the afternoon. There the prosecutrix had sexual intercourse with defendant, and pursuant to her expectations received the sum of $2.50, with which (according to her testimony) she intended to buy a costume to wear at a skating rink carnival. The arrangement for the intercourse had been made by her friend, Bernice, who accompanied her to defendant's office and waited in the reception room while defendant and prosecutrix retired to a bedroom adjoining. The latter testified: "From the bedroom the defendant and I, after putting on our clothes, went into the office, where he gave me $2.50. He also gave Bernice $1 in the reception room. When he gave me the $2.50, I think he told me not to speak of being in his office, because it might get him into trouble." She further testified that at another and subsequent time she had had sexual intercourse with the defendant. The only other evidence in chief for the people was the testimony of Bernice, who really acted as procuress. She had recently introduced the parties, and had told the defendant, among other things, that she thought E. (the prosecutrix) "would do business." She, too, testified that she accompanied E. to the offices of defendant, and that defendant paid her $1.

There are several instances in which it is claimed that the trial court erred in its rulings on the cross-examination by the defendant of the prosecutrix and the witness Bernice. While it is true that the extent of a cross-examination is largely within the discretion of the trial court, yet we think the trial court in this case unduly and needlessly restricted the cross-examination in the following instance: "Question by defendant (to prosecutrix): Was there any inducement or threat held out or made to you to get you to sign the complaint against Mitchell? (To which question the district attorney objected, on the ground that it was irrelevant, immaterial, incompetent, and not proper cross-examination.) The Court: I don't see the materiality of it. Will you point out in what way it is material? Mr. Aldrich: Only as going to the credibility of the witness in this. This, of course, is simply a preliminary question. While I want to be perfectly fair, I do not think I ought to state my reasons before the jury, unless your honor is going to say, that this being a preliminary question, that we have a right to ask the question. The Court: I do not conceive that you have a right to pursue this kind of examination at this time. Mr. Aldrich: Then our object in asking that question, our reason for it, is this: We expect to show by this witness that, at the time of the making of this complaint, this witness was under arrest by the police of this city on a charge of vagrancy. That at this time a man by the name of B., whose daughter is the girl Bernice, was present at the courthouse, in the office of the police, and at that time threatened that in case this girl did not make complaint as against Mitchell that he would cause her to be sent to an institution, say Whittier, upon a charge of vagrancy. That acting upon that and in fear, believing that he would do as he said he would do, this young woman was induced to swear to this complaint as against Mitchell. The Court: If every fact that you have stated be so, you should well know that it is not competent evidence in this case." The same question substantially was again repeated during the trial, to which the same objection was made, followed by the same ruling. The question was admissible, under section 1847, Code Civ. Proc., to show motive. "Section 1847. A witness is presumed to speak the truth. This presumption, however, may be repelled by the manner in which he testifies * * * by evidence affecting his motives. * * *"

In the case of People v. Howard, 143 Cal. 316, 76 Pac. 1116, Chief Justice Beatty, in a concurring opinion in a rape case, said: "There was evidence to the effect that the prosecutrix was induced by threats of imprisonment to make the accusation, and if the jury believe this evidence they should have taken it into consideration in determining her credibility." In the case of People v. Christy, 65 Hun (N. Y.) 352, 20 N. Y. Supp. 278, a witness was asked: "Did you understand by making the statement which you did make you would relieve yourself from prosecution?" This was objected to and excluded, and the defendant excepted. It was held that this should have been admitted; the court saying: "It related to the position of the witness with reference to the complainant and the prosecuting officer, and was competent and material as affecting his credibility"—citing Whart. Crim. Ev. § 477. In the case of People v. Benson, 6 Cal. 223, 65 Am. Dec. 506, while the court was not discussing the point under consideration here, yet what it there said has an important bearing on this case generally, and especially in view of the fact that the prosecutrix herein was, as is generally the case, the sole witness to the act itself. We quote from that case: "There is no class of prosecutions attended with so much danger, or which affords so ample an opportunity for the free play of malice and private vengeance. In such cases the accused is almost defenseless, and courts, in view of the facility with which charges of this character may be invented and maintained, have been strict in laying down the rule which should govern the jury in their finding." In a late and similar case in this state, it is said: "It will be sufficient to say, in a general way, that in a case of this character the very widest latitude, compatible with our somewhat technical and restricted rules of evidence, should be allowed the defendant in his cross-examination of the witnesses of the people. More especially is this true with reference to the prosecuting witness. In this class of prosecutions the defendant, owing to natural instincts and laudable sentiments on the part of the jury, and the usual circumstances of isolation of the parties involved at the commission of the offense, is, as a rule, so disproportionately at the mercy of the prosecutrix's evidence that he should be given the full measure of every legal right in an endeavor to maintain his innocence." People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 249, 49 Pac. 186.

The defendant would clearly have had the right, on cross-examination of the prosecutrix, to show, if it were true, that for charging the defendant with rape and proceeding against him on that charge she had received a consideration in money. The motive which might prompt her to make a colored or false statement in that case would be money, while in the case under discussion it would be to escape punishment and enjoy her liberty. In each case the evidence would be admissible as affecting her credibility. Rape is a detestable crime, for the commission of which one could hardly be punished too severely; but from some of the decisions above referred to, and others that might be cited, the view of the courts seems to be that, as it is a crime easily charged and hard to defend against, even though the defendant be innocent, and as it is one which, out of consideration for the protection of the family and the infant, and for other most commendable reasons, is likely to unduly excite the sympathies of the jury for the prosecution, courts should be very liberal in the extent to which witnesses for the people—and especially the prosecutrix—may be cross-examined. If the prosecutrix was under arrest for vagrancy, and, while in custody, charged the defendant with rape to escape being sent to a reform school, it was eminently a proper matter for the consideration of the jury in determining her credibility, and in sustaining the objection to that question the court contravened the defendant's right and committed prejudicial error, for which the judgment must be reversed.

The prosecutrix was permitted, over the objection and exception of the defendant, to testify as to her age. Authority for the ruling of the court is found in People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915. Defendant claims this was error, and he cites the later case of People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 249, 49 Pac. 186, which he claims in effect overrules the former case. The contention of the defendant is that the testimony of the prosecutrix as to her age is hearsay, and inadmissible under sections 1845, 1852 and 1870, subdivision 4, Code Civ. Proc., unless the proper foundation shall be laid by proof that the members of the family and blood relatives, from whom she received the information, are dead or out of the jurisdiction of the court. As the case will have to be retried for the reason already assigned, it is unnecessary to pass on this point. Doubtless the district attorney, having had his attention called to the matter, in order to avoid possible error on a new trial, will pursue what would seem to be the safer course—the one laid down in the later case.

Since the appeal is, in part, from the final judgment, there is no merit in what seems to be contention of the respondent, that the appellant, having taken no exception to the order denying the motion for a new trial, is deemed to have waived his right of appeal. People v. Thompson, 115 Cal. 161, 46 Pac. 912.

For the reasons stated, the judgment is reversed, and a new trial ordered.

GIFFEN v. SELMA FRUIT CO. (Civ. 288.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 21, 1907.)

1. SALES — DELIVERY AND ACCEPTANCE — INSPECTION AND APPROVAL.

Plaintiff agreed to sell a certain quantity of raisins in accordance with a sample which had been submitted to the purchaser, and a car load of raisins was shipped to the purchaser to fill the order, the raisins being billed to the purchaser's order, subject to inspection. When the shipment was made, plaintiff drew on the purchaser for the price, the draft being attached to the bill of lading and forwarded to a bank for collection, and the bill bore on its face, "Allow inspection." An invoice was sent to the purchaser and the draft paid by him on presentation, though at that time the raisins had not arrived, and upon arrival they were rejected on inspection and plaintiff notified thereof, and he stored the raisins. Held, that the facts did not constitute a sale of the raisins.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, §§ 529-541.]

2. SAME—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

The testimony of plaintiff's bookkeeper that plaintiff had made various shipments of raisins to the purchaser, and sometimes would bill a car load for the actual amount and draw for it, and at other times would draw and hold the goods in plaintiff's own warehouse, and that the purchaser always paid the drafts so drawn, was properly admitted, as tending to show the intention of the parties as to the transfer of the title.

3. TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—MOTION TO STRIKE—NECESSITY FOR PREVIOUS OBJECTION.

On an issue as to the course of business between a seller and purchaser, a witness testified thereto, and subsequently a motion was made to strike the testimony, on the ground that it had been reduced to writing by correspondence, and could not be shown by parol. Held, that there was no abuse of discretion in denying the motion; the objection not having been made when the evidence was offered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 242-244.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; H. Z. Austin, Judge.

Action by L. F. Giffen against the Selma Fruit Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff and from an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Strother & Strother and Harris & Perkins, for appellant. M. B. Harris, E. M. Harris, and Frank Kanke, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought to recover damages for breach of contract, and was tried before a jury. A verdict was returned for plaintiff, upon which judgment was duly entered. This appeal is from the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial.

The facts are in substance as follows: In September, 1904, the defendant entered into a contract in writing with L. F. Giffen & Co. (plaintiff's assignor) by the terms of which it agreed to seed and pack in a first-class manner the raisins of Giffen & Co. for the season of 1904-05 at the rate of $1.35 per 100 pounds. In December, 1904, the defendant, under the contract, seeded and packed the car load of raisins, out of which this controversy arose for Giffen & Co., and received compensation therefor according to the terms of the contract. It is alleged that, instead of seeding and packing the raisins in accordance with the contract, the defendant negligently seeded and packed them so that they spoiled and became absolutely worthless. The verdict of the jury finds by implication that the allegation as to defendant's negligence is true. The statement on motion for a new trial shows that the plaintiff introduced evidence tending to show that the raisins were not in good condition, and that their condition "was due to the fault and negligence of the defendant in seeding, processing and packing said raisins." Appellant's counsel, in their opening brief, very frankly and properly admit that "the evidence as to such wrongful acts of defendant was conflicting, and the jury found for the plaintiff." It seems, therefore, evident that the defendant violated its contract, and thus became liable for the damages it caused thereby.

It is contended, however, by the defendant that Giffen & Co., prior to the commencement of this action, had sold the raisins to McCord-Brady Co., of Omaha, and hence they argue that the right of action was in McCord-Brady Co., and not in the plaintiff. The decision of the case upon its merits is thus dependent upon the question as to whether or not Giffen & Co. had parted with the title to the raisins. The evidence shows that prior to the commencement of the action Giffen & Co. had agreed to sell to McCord-Brady Co. at Omaha a given quantity of raisins in accordance with a sample which had been sent. The car load of raisins involved in this suit was shipped to fill this order. The raisins were billed to the order of Giffen & Co. at Omaha subject to inspection. When the shipment was made, Giffen & Co. drew on McCord-Brady Co. for the agreed price of the raisins; the draft being attached to the bill of lading, and forwarded to the National Bank of Omaha for collection. The bill of lading bore across the face of it the direction to "Allow inspection." An invoice and bill of the raisins were sent to the McCord-Brady Co., and the draft was paid by them upon presentation, but at the time it was paid the company had not inspected nor received the raisins, because they had not arrived at their destination. Upon the arrival of the raisins, they were rejected upon inspection, and Giffen & Co. were notified of such rejection, and, upon being so notified, they stored the raisins in a warehouse in Omaha, and were unable to dispose of them. In the course of dealing between Giffen & Co. and the McCord-Brady Co., the drafts drawn on the company at Omaha were paid, charged to the account of Giffen & Co., and the goods, when received, credited to Giffen & Co. The draft in this case was charged to the account of Giffen & Co., and has since been paid in full by them.

We are of opinion that the above facts do not constitute a sale of the raisins to the McCord-Brady Co. A sale is a contract by which one transfers to another an interest in property. In order to constitute a sale, the contract must give and pass rights of property. The property must be identified. The evidence shows that the raisins were bought by sample, and that they were rejected because not up to sample. Upon proof that the sale was made by sample the law implies a warranty that the quality of the property sold is up to the sample exhibited (Civ. Code, § 1766), and the title will not pass until there has been an acceptance. Meachem on Sales, §§ 522, 746, 1212; Pope v. Allis, 115 U. S. 372, 6 Sup. Ct. 69, 29 L. Ed. 393; Taylor v. Saxe, 134 N. Y. 67, 31 N. E. 258; Gardiner v. McDonogh, 147 Cal. 313, 81 Pac. 964.

It is claimed that the delivery of the bill of lading with the draft to McCord-Brady Co. had the effect to transfer the title of the car load of raisins to McCord-Brady Co. A bill of lading does not in all cases transfer the title of the property described thereon to the party to whom it is delivered. It depends upon the circumstances of the particular case and the intention of the parties. In this case the intention was that the bill of lading should be delivered to McCord-Brady Co. with the draft, and when the draft was paid and the raisins inspected, and accepted as being up to the sample, the title should vest in McCord-Brady Co. The bill of lading was delivered, the draft paid, but the goods were not what McCord-Brady Co. had purchased, and they never accepted them, nor did they take possession of them. It was not intended that the title should pass by the delivery of the bill of lading. A bill of lading does not have the effect of passing the title, where the evidence clearly shows a contrary intention. Emery's Sons v. Irving Nat. Bank, 25 Ohio St. 364, 18 Am. Rep. 299; Hilmer v. Hills, 138 Cal. 135, 70 Pac. 1080; Dodge v. Meyer, 61 Cal. 405.

One Broadwell, the bookkeeper of Giffen & Co., was called as a witness for plaintiff, and, after giving evidence of various matters to which no objection was made, testified that Giffen & Co. had made various shipments of raisins to McCord-Brady Co., covering a period of more than a year. He was then asked the question: "Q. Now, then, state the course of business that has been followed all the time, if any, as to the drawing on them in these matters and the payment of the draft." To this question the defendant objected upon the ground that it was incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial, "and the only thing that would be competent, material, or relevant would be what was actually done in this case." The objection to the question was overruled. The witness then testified that sometimes Giffen & Co. would bill a car for the actual amount, and draw for it as in the case at bar, and at other times they would draw on McCord-Brady Co., and hold the goods in their own warehouse. That McCord-Brady Co. always paid the drafts so drawn as they did in this case. The evidence was properly admitted. It tended to show the intention of the parties as to the transfer of the title to the raisins. It tended to show that by the course of dealing the drafts of Giffen & Co. were paid without reference to the transfer of the goods shipped by a bill of lading. It was shown by the cross-examination of the witness that various letters had passed between Giffen & Co. and McCord-Brady Co., and that the negotiations were by letters. The witness also testified that the understanding arrived at was from the letters and "the understanding between us and Cartan & Jeffrey and through them with McCord-Brady." Defendant's counsel then moved the court to strike out the testimony of the witness as to the course of business, on the ground that it was not the best evidence. The court denied the motion, and we deem it sufficient to say that in so doing it did not abuse its discretion. The objection on the ground that the course of business could not be shown by oral testimony because reduced to writing was not made when the evidence was offered. Nor does it clearly appear by cross-examination that all the course of business was contained in the letters. Defendant made no attempt to get the letters or to have the plaintiff produce them in court.

It was not error to give plaintiff's instruction No. 6, as it is in accordance with what we have said as to the passing of title by the bill of lading.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

Ex parte NARVAEZ. (Cr. 40.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 26, 1907.)

HABEAS CORPUS — PRESUMPTIONS — JUDICIAL PROCEEDINGS.

Accused, having been sentenced to imprisonment by a justice of the peace for the maximum period permitted by Pen. Code, § 490, was committed to the sheriff, and confined by virtue of two judgments or commitments which described the same offense and were identical, except that one of them contained the additional paragraph: "To take effect upon the expiration of the judgment previously rendered upon the above-mentioned date in an action entitled as above." Held, in habeas corpus proceedings, that, accused having served the full period of imprisonment which might be imposed for a single conviction of petit larceny, he was entitled to be released, since it could not be presumed that there were two complaints identical in their averments, but embracing two distinct crimes, in order to have support for a second judgment or commitment.

In the matter of the application of Charles Narvaez for a writ of habeas corpus. Prisoner discharged.

Paul C. Harlan, for petitioner. Jas. M. Raines, Dist. Atty., for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. It appears from the uncontroverted facts set forth in the petition that petitioner was, on September 19, 1906, arraigned in the justice's court of Montezuma township, Solano county, on the charge of petit larceny, for the theft of two sacks of barley. He pleaded guilty thereto, and was sentenced to imprisonment in the county jail for the period of 180 days. That he was delivered to the sheriff of said county on said day and has been ever since said day continuously, and is now, confined in said county jail, by virtue of two judgments or commitments, and not otherwise, copies of which are attached to the petition and made part thereof. That the board of supervisors of said county duly and regularly allowed petitioner 30 days' credit upon his aforesaid term of imprisonment. It appears that the two judgments or commitments are identical and describe the same offense; the only difference being that the closing paragraph of one reads as follows: "To take effect upon the expiration of the judgment previously rendered upon the above-mentioned date in an action entitled as above." The petition was filed on February 20, 1907, and the hearing was on February 23, 1907.

It will thus appear that petitioner has already served the full period of imprisonment for which the justice of the peace had jurisdiction to commit the prisoner for a single charge of petit larceny, which is six months. Penal Code, §§ 490, 1205. The two commitments show that they related to but one charge, namely, the stealing of two sacks of barley. No other construction can fairly be put upon them. If there was another charge or another complaint to which the second commitment could, or was intended to, apply, it has not been made to so appear. It is not material which one of the commitments is taken as justification for the imprisonment. Whichever one it may be, the petitioner has served the full period for which he can be held upon the conviction of a single charge of petit larceny. During the maximum time for which he was legally committed, he would not be entitled to his discharge; but he cannot be held to suffer a punishment for a period in excess of that within the power of the justice to impose. Ex parte Bulger, 60 Cal. 438. There must not only be jurisdiction of the person and the subject-matter, but there must be jurisdiction to impose the sentence which is adjudged. Without such jurisdiction the sentence is not merely voidable, but is void. It cannot be presumed that there were two complaints identical in their averments, but embracing two separate and distinct crimes, in order to discover support for a second commitment. No presumptions will be indulged as to the regularity of the proceedings in a justice's court. Ex parte Kearny, 55 Cal. 212. Apparently the petitioner is being imprisoned without lawful authority.

The prisoner is discharged from custody.

1. FALSE PRETENSES — INFORMATION — SUFFICIENCY.

Pen. Code, § 956, provides that when an offense involves the commission of, or attempt to commit, a private injury, and is described with sufficient certainty to identify the act, an erroneous allegation as to the person injured, or intended to be injured, is not material. Held, that an information charging that accused intended to cheat and defraud R. and C., and that he obtained money by false pretenses of C., was good under Pen. Code, § 956, though it did not appear that he accomplished his purpose as to R., who did not own the property acquired.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, False Pretenses, § 33.]

2. SAME.

An information for obtaining money by false pretenses is good, though it does not allege the purpose for which the party defrauded paid the money to accused.

3. SAME—VERDICT.

Pen. Code, § 960, provides that no information is insufficient, and that no trial or other proceeding thereon shall be affected by any defect in form which does not prejudice a substantial right of the defendant. Held, that error, if any, in a verdict, in a prosecution for obtaining money by false pretenses, that the jury found defendant guilty as charged, and that the property obtained was of the amount of $200, was without prejudice to accused; the latter portion being surplusage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, False Pretenses, § 65.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; B. N. Smith, Judge.

Joseph Hines was convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Hugh J. Crawford, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and E. E. Selph, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant was tried and convicted on an information which charged him with the crime of obtaining money by false pretenses. Defendant interposed a demurrer to the information, which was overruled and exception duly taken to such ruling.

The objection that the name of Fred Rickert was included in the information as one of the persons whom defendant intended to cheat and defraud is fully answered by section 956 of the Penal Code. He is not charged with defrauding Rickert, but merely that originally he intended to cheat and defraud him; and, while it does not appear that he accomplished his purpose as to Rickert, his failure so to do does not affect the charge so far as Carter was concerned.

The information does not allege the purpose for which Carter paid the money to defendant, but this was unnecessary. It does sufficiently appear that he obtained the $200 then and there belonging to Carter, and whether it was by a loan upon credit established by the false pretenses, or by a purported sale, is immaterial. As to how the false pretense was calculated to defraud Carter was a matter to be shown in evidence. Brown v. State (Tex. Cr. App.) 22 S. W. 22; Thomas v. People, 34 N. Y. 351.

The information shows that Carter was the owner of the money alleged to have been obtained by defendant, and since defendant did not own the restaurant and personal property represented to be owned by him, it is therefore immaterial who owned it.

Counsel for defendant calls our attention to the cases of People v. Mahoney, 145 Cal.

104, 78 Pac. 354, and People v. McKenna, 81 Cal. 158, 22 Pac. 488, in support of his objection to the sufficiency of the information; but, measured by the rules therein laid down, it is amply sufficient. It contains every essential allegation necessary to charge defendant with the commission of the offense, and is calculated to fully acquaint him with the nature of the charge. People v. Millan, 106 Cal. 320, 39 Pac. 605; People v. Cadot, 138 Cal. 527, 71 Pac. 649.

Defendant offered certain instructions, all except one of which, after modification, were given. The changes made therein were proper. Indeed, counsel points out no error therein, merely contenting himself with the bare statement that the refusal to give them as requested constituted error.

It was sought to prove the value of the property in the restaurant at the time the defendant took charge of it, some eight or ten months prior to the commission of this offense, and upon objection the evidence directed to that point was by the court ruled out, and it is claimed that this ruling constituted error. The value of the property in the restaurant was not in issue, and it was immaterial what its value was at that time. The only important question as to value was the value of that which defendant obtained by means of the acts alleged in the information.

It is urged that the evidence shows that defendant was the owner of the property, and, if not, that it shows that he was authorized by the owner thereof to sell it. The testimony upon these questions is conflicting, and, under the well-settled rule, this court will not disturb the verdict of the jury or the ruling of the court in denying the motion for a new trial. People v. Gonzales, 143 Cal. 605, 77 Pac. 448; People v. Maroney, 109 Cal. 279, 41 Pac. 1097.

The verdict rendered by the jury was in the following form: "We, the jury in the above-entitled action, find the defendant guilty as charged, and that the property obtained was of the amount of $200." A general verdict finding him guilty as charged would have been sufficient. People v. Millan, 106 Cal. 320, 39 Pac. 605; People v. Tilley, 135 Cal. 65, 67 Pac. 42. The words, "and the property obtained was of the amount of $200," might be eliminated as surplusage. He was found guilty as charged, and he was charged in the information with obtaining $200 lawful money of the United States. We think, too, that, where the word "amount" is used with reference to money, it is synonymous with the word "value." Indeed, the value of any property is its equivalent amount in lawful money; it is the measure of all value. Bartley v. State, 73 N. W. 744, 53 Neb. 310. At all events, it does not constitute any substantial error prejudicial to the rights of the defendant. Section 960, Pen. Code.

The record discloses no prejudicial error, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

UNION COLLECTION CO. v. SNELL et al.

(Civ. 337.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 28, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 28, 1907.)

EXECUTION—SUPPLEMENTARY PROCEEDINGS—ORDER FOR PAYMENT OR DELIVERY OF PROPERTY.

The issue of the ownership of money paid by a judgment debtor to a third person cannot be litigated in proceedings supplementary to execution, where such third person in good faith claims the money as her own, but the court can only authorize the judgment creditor to institute an action against her to recover the money, and forbid its transfer until the action can be prosecuted to a judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 21, Execution, § 1157.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John M. Eshleman, Referee.

Action by the Union Collection Company against Richard B. Snell and others. Judgment for plaintiff. The execution issued thereon having been returned unsatisfied, proceedings supplementary to execution were instituted by plaintiff, in which a referee was appointed. From a judgment, pursuant to the report of the referee, that plaintiff take nothing against Edna Snell Poulson, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. S. Reid, for appellant. W. G. Witter, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered on the report of a referee in proceedings supplementary to execution. Many elements are absent from the record. A mere statement of the case will have to be made largely from inferences.

The appellant some time prior to these proceedings obtained a judgment against Mary E. Snell, Sarah N. Snell, and Richard B. Snell, execution was issued thereon, and the same was duly returned by the sheriff unsatisfied. Thereafter proceedings supplementary to execution were instituted by the judgment creditor, in which a referee was appointed. The referee examined witnesses, considered the questions presented, and reported that the order prayed for by the judgment creditor should be denied, upon which report a judgment was entered, pursuant to the report of the referee, that the judgment creditor take nothing against Mrs. Edna Snell Poulson. The report of the referee shows that during the year 1900 Mrs. Poulson paid certain debts owing by her brother and sisters, Richard B. Snell, Sarah N. Snell, and Mary E. Snell, amounting to $3,500. These payments were made without authority and without the knowledge or request of the brother and sisters of Mrs. Poulson, nor was there any subsequent promise on their part to repay Mrs. Poulson. On March 12, 1904, Mary E. Snell received from a certain estate $1,900 as a legacy, $1,600 of which, March 21, 1904, she gave to Mrs. Poulson to apply on account of payments made by Mrs. Poulson as hereinabove stated. It is contended by appellant that Mrs. Poulson was a mere volunteer (Curtis v. Park, 55 Cal. 106; Moulton v. Loux, 52 Cal. 81; Gray v. Brunold, 140 Cal. 620, 74 Pac. 303); that as such there was, as between her and her brother and sisters, no valid subsisting indebtedness capable of being enforced; and that the attempted payment to her by Mary E. Snell of $1,600 was void as to creditors.

The only order or judgment that the judgment creditor requested was that Mrs. Poulson pay the $1,600 to the sheriff, to be applied by him toward the satisfaction of the judgment against the Snells. From the record it is plain that Mrs. Poulson in good faith claims the $1,600 as her own. She claiming the money, her title to it cannot be litigated in this proceeding. She must have her day in court. The only power of the court in this proceeding was to authorize the judgment creditor to institute an action against her for the recovery of the money, and forbidding a transfer of it until such action could be commenced and prosecuted to judgment. McDowell v. Bell, 41 Pac. 413, 86 Cal. 615, 25 Pac. 128. In the case of Lewis v. Chamberlain, 108 Cal. 527, 41 Pac. 413, a judgment creditor claimed that certain transfers of property were made by the judgment debtors to avoid payment of his judgment. Each of the two transferees, among other things, claimed the property transferred to her as her own. In that case it is said: "This proceeding was brought under the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure, entitled 'Proceedings supplementary to execution.' I think it is entirely clear from the face of the statute that no order could be legally made requiring Mrs. Morse or Mrs. Conklin to surrender the property mentioned in the affidavit of the plaintiff, and its application in satisfaction of his judgment, otherwse than upon their admission that it was the property of the judgment debtor. To make such order in relation to property which they claimed to own in their own right, if it could have any effect or operation, would be to deprive them of their property upon a summary process and without due process of law. If the plaintiff believes or claims their title under the conveyances mentioned in his affidavit to be invalid, an issue as to such ownership and title should be properly made and tried in an appropriate action, in which the verdict of a jury or the findings of a court may be regularly had determining those questions, and upon which a judgment could be regularly entered by which the parties would be conclusively bound."

We do not mean to intimate that the only way in which the judgment creditor could have questioned the title of Mrs. Poulson to the $1,600 was by proceedings supplementary to execution. Such proceedings have not superseded or abolished the right of one to bring a suit in the nature of a creditors' bill. In the case of Rapp v. Whittier, 113 Cal. 431, 45 Pac. 703, it is said: "The complaint being in the nature of a creditors' bill to subject property of Robbers, claimed by Whittier, to the satisfaction of plaintiff's judgment against the former, appellant contends that the action does not lie; that with us the provisions of the statute for proceedings supplementary to execution (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 717, 720) totally supplant any action of this kind. Since appellant asserted title under the transfer from Robbers, and adversely to him, it would have profited plaintiffs nothing to pursue the course provided by the statute. In the face of that claim they could not, by supplemental proceedings, reach the fund held by appellant. In such a case those proceedings do not supersede the remedy by action, for the reason that they are not adequate to accomplish the purpose of the action."

The judgment of the trial court is affirmed.

We concur: COOPER, P. J.; HALL, J.

NEVES v. COSTA. (Civ. 295.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 27, 1907.)

1. False Imprisonment — Sufficiency of Complaint.

A complaint, in an action for false imprisonment, set up a copy of the affidavit made by defendant on which an order for arrest of plaintiff was obtained in an action on an implied contract. The affidavit on its face was insufficient to confer jurisdiction on the court granting the order. The complaint also alleged the arrest and imprisonment for seven days of plaintiff on the order; that defendant acted unlawfully, without right or authority, and against the will of plaintiff, in so doing; that, by means of said false imprisonment, plaintiff was injured in his credit, prevented from attending to business, suffered mental anguish, and was compelled to expend a certain sum for expenses in securing his discharge on habeas corpus—all to his damage in a certain sum. Held, that the complaint was good as against a general demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, False Imprisonment, §§ 86–88.]

2. Arrest — Civil Action — Sufficiency of Affidavit.

Where an affidavit under Code Civ. Proc. § 479, subd. 1, and section 481, does not contain positive allegations of fraudulent intent, nor positive evidence of facts from which fraud can be inferred, it is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction on a court to issue an order of arrest in a civil action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Arrest, § 60.]

3. Pleading—Demurrer—Motion to Strike.

In a complaint in an action for false imprisonment, ambiguity or uncertainty in setting up fragmentary statements material to, but not sufficiently stating, a cause for malicious prosecution, cannot be considered on a general demurrer, but should be taken advantage of by special demurrer or motion to strike out or make certain.

4. False Imprisonment — Action — Sufficiency of Evidence.

An allegation of false imprisonment, under an arrest in a civil action, is sustained by proof of confinement on surrender by surety, on the bail bond previously given to prevent confinement under the arrest, since the imprisonment was the final result of that arrest.

5. Same—Admissibility of Evidence.

In an action for false imprisonment under an allegation that plaintiff had incurred expense to secure his release on habeas corpus, the fact that he was so released is admissible.

6. Appeal—Matters Not Apparent of Record.

Where the record on appeal does not show that there was anything on the face of a record in a habeas corpus proceeding justifying its admission in an action for false imprisonment, its exclusion on the ground of irrelevancy will be presumed to be proper.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3735–3747.]

7. Same—Review—Formal Error.

In an action for false imprisonment, there was error in sustaining objections to cross-examination on the matter of plaintiff's expense in a habeas corpus proceeding, but the judgment was otherwise properly rendered. The entire record showed that the expense was incurred, and defendant did not attempt to disprove it. Held, that the error would not justify a reversal of the judgment.

8. False Imprisonment—Sufficiency of Evidence—Damages.

In an action for false imprisonment, where plaintiff proved unlawful restraint and the special damages alleged, general damages would follow from the proof of unlawful imprisonment, and a motion for nonsuit was properly denied.

9. Same — Special Damages — Elements of Compensation.

Expenses of litigation to secure release on habeas corpus is a proper item of special damages in an action for false imprisonment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, False Imprisonment, §§ 109–111.]

10. Same—General and Compensatory Damages.

In an action for false imprisonment, physical inconvenience, mental suffering, and humiliation of mind are all elements of general and compensatory damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, False Imprisonment, §§ 109–111.]

11. Pleading—Time for Objection—Failure to Demur.

An objection to the giving of instructions relating to special, general, and compensatory damages, on the ground of ambiguity of the statement thereof in a complaint for false imprisonment, comes too late where the right to object by demurrer to the complaint has been waived.

12. False Imprisonment—Complaint—Sufficiency of Allegation.

An allegation, in a complaint in an action for false imprisonment, that "by means of said false and unlawful imprisonment" plaintiff was compelled to pay a certain sum for costs and counsel fees in obtaining his discharge, is sufficient to justify the court in submitting the evidence in relation thereto to the jury, and instructing them as to the law concerning such special damages.

13. Same—Materiality of Allegations.

The truthfulness or falsity of an affidavit on which an order for arrest in a civil action was secured, and the affiant's knowledge of the truth or falsity of such statements, are not material in an action for false imprisonment, when it appears that the court granting the order was without jurisdiction on account of the insufficiency of the affidavit.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action for false imprisonment by M. V. Neves against M. P. Costa. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. G. Lamberson and J. L. C. Irwin, for appellant. H. B. McClure, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an action to recover damages for false imprisonment. Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial.

On April 5, 1905, defendant commenced an action against plaintiff in the superior court of Kings county upon an implied contract, and at the same time procured an order for the arrest of plaintiff based upon subdivision 1 of section 479 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Plaintiff was arrested the next day, on this order, and about two hours after his arrest gave bail. In the meantime he had been permitted by the officer arresting him to go on his own recognizance. About 19 days thereafter plaintiff was surrendered to the sheriff of Kings county by one of the sureties on his bail bond, J. V. Garcia, a relative of his wife. The same day the plaintiff signed the necessary papers for an application to be made to this court for a writ of habeas corpus. The application was granted, the writ was made returnable before Hon. W. B. Wallace, judge of the superior court for Tulare county, and on May 31, 1905, by order of the latter, plaintiff was discharged on the ground (as stated in the order) that the affidavit on which the order of arrest was based was insufficient. Plaintiff was imprisoned in the county jail of Kings county from the time of his surrender by his bail, as aforesaid, until the day of hearing and his discharge on said writ of habeas corpus, a period of six days. The complaint herein, filed June 8, 1905, alleges the commencement of the above-mentioned action in the superior court of Kings county, and the making by defendant of the affidavit upon which said order of arrest was based (setting out the affidavit in full). That said affidavit was made "falsely, unlawfully, and without probable cause." That the order of arrest aforesaid was obtained upon said affidavit by defendant, and plaintiff was arrested thereon, and imprisoned thereunder in the county jail of Kings county at Hanford for seven days. And that plaintiff was thereby restrained of his liberty against his will. "That in so doing the said defendant herein acted falsely, unlawfully, and without probable cause, and without any right or authority so to do, and against the will of this plaintiff." "That said affidavit * * * was and is wholly false and untrue, which the defendant then and at all times since well knew." "That by means of said false and unlawful imprisonment, and being confined and restrained of his liberty as aforesaid, * * * plaintiff was injured in his credit, and was prevented from attending to his business during that time, and suffered mental anguish thereby, and was compelled to pay $250 for costs and counsel fees in obtaining his discharge on writ of habeas corpus, to his damage in the sum of $1,000."

The complaint is sufficient against the attacks made upon it by defendant under a general demurrer. The affidavit upon which the order of arrest was based is insufficient on its face to give the superior court of Kings county jurisdiction to issue the order. An order of arrest is only authorized by section 481 of the Code of Civil Procedure, where "it appears to the judge, by the affidavit of the plaintiff, or some other person, that a sufficient cause of action exists, and that the case is one of those mentioned in section 479. The affidavit must be either positive or upon information and belief, and when upon information and belief, it must state the facts upon which the information and belief are founded." In order that it may appear to the judge it is necessary that the facts shall be stated by competent evidence, such as would justify the court in making a finding upon a trial. The ex parte form in which it is presented by affidavit is made competent by section 481. In order that a party who has not sufficient knowledge of his own to make the required showing may avail himself of this provisional remedy in a proper case, the Code permits him to supplement his own affidavit with that of some one else who knows some fact or facts; or he may rely entirely upon the affidavit of "some other person," if the latter is prepared to state facts sufficient to comply with the statute. "Where, in a civil action, the plaintiff desires, so to speak, to enforce his claim at the outset by arrest and imprisonment of the defendant—in other words, to have execution before obtaining judgment—it is not too much to ask him to present such evidence as alone would be receivable upon the trial of the action to justify an ordinary judgment for money." Markey v. Diamond, 20 N. Y. Supp. 847, 1 Misc. Rep. 97; Ex parte Fkumoto, 120 Cal. 316, 319, 52 Pac. 726. "While the affidavit may state generally the grounds of the application upon belief only, we understand the rule to be well settled that, to show the grounds of his belief, he must set forth such facts and circumstances within his own knowledge as will authorize the officer who is to issue the warrant to find such a state of facts as required by the statute to authorize the proceeding, and, if the plaintiff is not himself personally cognizant of the facts and circumstances relied upon, he must procure the affidavit of some one who is thus personally cognizant of them. The warrant cannot be issued upon hearsay, nor upon any statement, however positive, founded upon hearsay." Proctor v. Prout, 17 Mich. 475.

That portion of the affidavit which should be considered in this connection is as follows: "That said defendant, as plaintiff is informed and believes, is about to depart from this state with intent to defraud his creditors. That affiant further avers and shows the following facts and circumstances in support of the above allegation: That the defendant has converted all of his property into cash (and at this time, as plaintiff is informed and believes, has the same in his immediate possession). That the defendant told one M. Macedo that he intended to depart from this state. That the defendant on the 5th day of April, 1905, procured his trunk and all his wearing apparel to be brought to the city of Hanford, Kings county, and that the same is at this time, to wit, at the hour of 9 o'clock p. m., April 5, 1905, situated in the Azores Stables, a livery stable situated at the corner of Sixth and Redington streets, in the city of Hanford, and that the same was brought to said place at or about the hour of 7 o'clock p. m. of said 5th day of April, 1905. That affiant asked the defendant to settle with him as to the amount due to the affiant, the plaintiff herein, on said 5th day of April, 1905, and defendant refused, ever since has refused, and does now refuse, to pay to affiant the amount due him; that said defendant is now in the city of Hanford; and that plaintiff is informed and believes that said defendant intends to leave the city of Hanford on the early morning train on the morning of the 6th of April, 1905, and that said defendant intends to depart from the state as soon as possible."

The affidavit contains no positive allegation of fraudulent intent, and the only statement of the debtor's intention to leave the state is that he told M. Macedo so. The latter statement is positive in form only. It is hearsay pure and simple. Standing by itself, it may relate to an intention of 10 years ago long since carried out. If the affiant had heard the plaintiff tell Macedo, it would have been competent evidence. Not having so stated in his affidavit, it is to be presumed that he did not. If heard in any other way it was hearsay when presented in the affidavit of defendant. That the debtor had "converted all his property into cash" may be an act freighted with import, or destitute of meaning, according to circumstances. Affiant's belief that he still had the money in his possession is not a fact. That plaintiff had removed his trunk and wearing apparel to a livery stable in a particular city at a particular time, disassociated from any other fact except the one that he had refused to pay affiant a debt which the latter claimed he owed, might signify that he had obtained employment at the livery stable and had taken the most convenient time to move his personal belongings to that place. The affidavit seems wanting in the elements necessary to confer jurisdiction. There is neither positive averment of fraud nor positive evidence of facts from which fraud can be inferred. Fkumoto v. Marsh, 130 Cal. 68, 62 Pac. 303, 509, 80 Am. St. Rep. 73.

Defendant's second objection to the complaint is equally ill founded, and it is one which cannot be considered on a general demurrer. However, as the same matter becomes material in the consideration of other questions of law involved in this appeal, we will consider it here. The two actions of false imprisonment and malicious prosecution are quite distinct and different. "False imprisonment is the unlawful violation of the personal liberty of another" (Pen. Code, § 236), the interference with the personal liberty of the plaintiff in a way which is absolutely unlawful and without authority. "Malicious prosecution" is procuring the arrest or prosecution of another under lawful process, but from malicious motives and without probable cause. The provocation, motive, and good faith of the defendant in an action for false imprisonment constitute no material element in the case, and can be considered only where punitive or exemplary damages are asked, and then only as affecting the measure of such damages. On the other hand, malice and want of probable cause are the gist of the action for malicious prosecution. Without allegation and proof of both, the action will fail. 12 Am. & Eng. Enc. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 730. No one can recover damages for a legal arrest and conviction. Therefore, in cases of malicious prosecution, it becomes necessary to await the final determination of the action. But the same principle does not apply to an action for false imprisonment, as the form of action is based upon an illegal arrest, and no matter ex post facto can legalize an act which was illegal at the time it was done. From this it will be seen that one of the essential elements of a complaint for malicious prosecution is that the proceeding upon which it is based has finally terminated in favor of the plaintiff, while it is equally apparent that this is not a necessary or proper allegation in an action for false imprisonment. Hopner v. McGowan, 116 N. Y. 405, 22 N. E. 558; Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300, at page 306. While the complaint at bar alleges that the defendant acted without probable cause, it nowhere alleges malice; and the words "unlawfully" and "without probable cause," if unnecessary, may be treated as "surplusage and meaningless." St. Clair v. S. F., etc., Ry. Co., 142 Cal. 650, 76 Pac. 485. As above stated, ambiguity or uncertainty in a pleading cannot be considered on a general demurrer. It must be corrected by special demurrer, or motion to strike out or make certain. The latter method is peculiarly applicable to fragmentary statements material to, but not stating sufficiently, one cause of action, found in a pleading stating another cause of action.

The other objection to the complaint, that, the imprisonment alleged in the complaint being different from that proven at the trial, the latter is presumed to have been found by the verdict, and therefore there are no allegations in the complaint to sustain the verdict, appears to be more properly considered as a question of variance of proof than as one of pleading. That plaintiff's imprisonment was not immediately following his arrest on April 6th makes it none the less the result of the arrest by defendant's procurement. The purpose of the proceeding inaugurated by defendant was to secure execution against the plaintiff upon a judgment which defendant expected to obtain against him in the superior court of Kings county in the action begun at the time the order of arrest was issued. He was arrested for the purpose of being detained until that judgment was procured. That he was able to give bail a portion of the time only operated to lessen the amount of damages he might have recovered from the defendant. The evidence does not show that plaintiff procured his bail to surrender him for the purpose of laying the foundation of an action to recover damages for false imprisonment. The Code provides for the surrender of an arrested debtor by his bail, and the written notice of Garcia, one of the sureties on the bail bond, to the sheriff of Kings county, that he desired to surrender the plaintiff into custody, together with the bail bond showing that he was such surety, were properly admitted to show that plaintiff was surrendered to the sheriff by authority of law and as one of the steps in the proceeding begun by the defendant.

As above stated, it is not necessary, in an action for abusing the process of law by an illegal act either to allege or prove the termination of the action. Greenleaf on Evidence, vol. 2, § 452. The fact, however, that a person unlawfully imprisoned has been released and is no longer restrained of his liberty is material in ascertaining the time he has lost from his business by his detention. The manner of his release is not a fact necessary to be shown, and the reason of the court for his release in most cases would be immaterial, and in some cases perhaps prejudicial. The decisions upholding the practice of admitting in evidence the proceedings on habeas corpus releasing the plaintiff from imprisonment for the purpose of showing this fact are in actions for malicious prosecutions or those in which the action is joined (or confused) with an action for false imprisonment. American Express Co. v. Patterson, 73 Ind. 430. See Com. v. Cheney, 6 N. E. 724, 141 Mass. 102, 55 Am. Rep. 448; 12 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 723.

In the case at bar plaintiff was not prejudiced by the introduction of the order, as the only matter stated therein which could have been prejudicial in any event was that which was embodied in numerous rulings of the court in admitting testimony and expressly declared by the court in its instructions to the jury, to wit, "that the affidavit on which the order of arrest was based was insufficient." The fact that plaintiff was discharged on habeas corpus was material to his allegation that he had been compelled to pay $250 costs and attorney's fees to secure such release, and it has been held that the proceedings on habeas corpus are admissible for this purpose. Forbes v. Hicks, 27 Neb. 111, 42 N. W. 898. The record in the habeas corpus proceeding against J. V. Neves was not relevant, and it was properly excluded. If there was anything on the face of the document which defendant asked to introduce that justified its admission in evidence, it should have been identified and brought up in the record. This not being done, we must presume it was properly rejected.

The other exceptions taken to the rulings of the trial court on the admission of evidence relate to the objections of plaintiff to defendant's questions on cross-examination of plaintiff, sustained by the court. While some of the questions relating to plaintiff's being compelled to pay the $250 attorney's fee and costs in the habeas corpus proceeding should have been allowed as proper cross-examination, their disallowance was not such error as to justify this court in overturning a judgment otherwise properly rendered. The question, "What kind of money was this that you paid to Mr. McClure?" was proper cross-examination in response to plaintiff's direct testimony that he was compelled to pay $250 attorney's fees and costs to secure his release on habeas corpus. From the entire record, it appears that plaintiff did make payment of this sum, and there was no effort to disprove it, so that this error could not have been prejudicial. The objections to the questions directed to what Garcia told the plaintiff were properly sustained, while the question, "Was it a paper that your lawyer wanted to take to Los Angeles?" is answered, in effect, later in the cross-examination of the plaintiff, if it were material.

The motion for a nonsuit was properly denied. Plaintiff established by his evidence that he was restrained of his liberty by the act of defendant, without lawful authority. He proved the special damages alleged, and the general damages would follow from the proof of the unlawful imprisonment.

Appellant's exceptions to instructions numbered 1 and 10, given by the court, are based upon objections already considered and determined adversely to his contention, to wit, the insufficiency of the affidavit here in question, and the effect of the surrender of plaintiff by his bail. These instructions correctly declare the law on these subjects.

The seventh and eighth instructions relate to the damages that may be recovered in the action; the seventh to the general, and the eighth to expenses incurred by plaintiff in habeas corpus proceedings to secure his release from imprisonment. Damages for physical inconvenience, mental suffering, and humiliation of mind incident to a false arrest are all held to be elements of general and compensatory damages. 12 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) ——. Expenses of litigation in habeas corpus proceedings may be recovered as damages; in some jurisdictions as a natural and direct result of the wrongful act, and in others as special damages. 12 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law (2d Ed.) p. 784. The objection of defendant to the ambiguity of statement of these damages in the complaint comes too late as an objection to an instruction of the court, where the right to object by demurrer to the complaint has been waived. The allegation in the complaint that plaintiff was compelled, "by means of said false and unlawful imprisonment," to pay $250 for costs and counsel fees in obtaining his discharge, is sufficient to justify the court in submitting the evidence in relation thereto to the jury, and in instructing the jury as to the law concerning such special damages.

The fourth and ninth instructions correctly define "imprisonment" and the presumptions as to its lawfulness, and were proper instructions to the jury in this case. People v. McGrew, 77 Cal. 570, 20 Pac. 92; Ah Fong v. Sternes, 79 Cal. 30, 21 Pac. 381.

Instructions designated 1 and 6 by defendant, and which the court refused to give at his request, are based upon the assumption that there is some evidence to show that the surrender of plaintiff by his bail was with plaintiff's connivance, and not against his will. No evidence to this effect appears in the record. The case of In re Gow, 139 Cal. 242, 73 Pac. 145, has no application. That was an effort to secure an opinion of the Supreme Court upon a legal proposition by "making a case." The court very properly declined to be so used when it had business requiring its attention.

The instruction designated in appellant's brief as "Instruction 2," requested by the defendant, does not appear in the transcript in the case. Its refusal, if tendered, was not error. "Instruction marked 3" is misleading in form, and is also without the evidence in the case. There is no evidence in the record upon which either of these instructions could be predicated.

The specifications of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict have all been considered, in effect, heretofore, except two. These relate to one matter. An issue was raised by the pleadings as to the falsity of the affidavit upon which the order of arrest was made and defendant's knowledge of its falseness when he made the affidavit. It appearing that the superior court was without jurisdiction to make the order on account of the insufficiency of the affidavit, when it was assumed to be true, want of authority was shown, and the issue of the truthfulness of the affidavit became immaterial, if, indeed, it ever was a material issue in the case.

The evidence sustains the verdict.

There being no prejudicial error shown, the judgment and order denying defendant's motion for a new trial are affirmed.

NEVES v. COSTA. (Civ. 296.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 27, 1907.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Action for false imprisonment by J. V. Neves against M. P. Costa. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a motion for a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Chas. G. Lamberson and J. L. C. Irwin, for appellant. H. B. McClure, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. This is an action for false imprisonment almost identical in all its facts with the case of M. V. Neves v. M. P. Costa (Civil No. 295) 89 Pac. 860, the decision in which is this day filed. An examination of the record in this case discloses no questions of law not contained in, and not considered by, the opinion in that case.

Therefore, for the reasons assigned in the opinion in case No. 295, the judgment and order of the superior court denying defendant's motion for a new trial in the case are affirmed.

HUBBARD v. JUSTICES' COURT OF SAN JOSE TP. OF SANTA CLARA COUNTY. (Civ. 335.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 26, 1907.)

1. PROHIBITION — WHEN WRIT WILL LIE — JUSTICE COURTS.

Prohibition will not lie to restrain an action in justice court where the aggrieved party has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Prohibition, §§ 4, 5, 7.]

2. APPEAL—REVIEW—MATTERS NOT ARISING UPON THE RECORD—STIPULATION.

On appeal counsel may not by stipulation submit questions of law for determination not arising upon the record.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2356.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; A. L. Rhodes, Judge.

Application by Henry Hubbard for a writ of prohibition against the justices' court of San Jose township of Santa Clara county. From a judgment denying the writ, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. D. Wright and Robert M. Wright, for appellant. Will M. Beggs, for respondent.

HALL, J. Appeal from a judgment denying application for writ of prohibition.

Appellant brought this action in the superior court of Santa Clara county to obtain a writ prohibiting defendant from proceeding to try an action against appellant pending in the said justice court, and wherein, as appears by the record, summons was neither served on defendant in that action (plaintiff herein) nor returned within three years from the commencement of the action.

Appellant contends that as the summons in the action in the justice court was not served until after the expiration of three years from the commencement of the action, and was not returned at all, and as defendant in said action (plaintiff herein) never appeared in said action, save to move for the dismissal thereof, the said justice court is without jurisdiction to proceed further in said action, save to dismiss the same under subdivision 7 of section 581, Code of Civil Procedure. Respondent contends that section 581, Code of Civil Procedure, has no application to actions in justice courts, and also that, whether the justice court has or has not jurisdiction to try the action, the defendant in that action (plaintiff herein) has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal from any judgment that may be rendered against him, and therefore prohibition will not lie. Prohibition is the proper remedy only in cases where the party aggrieved has no plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law. Section 1103, Code Civ. Proc.

The general rule is that the remedy by appeal is a defense to an application for a writ of prohibition, although the inferior court may have committed error in determining that it had jurisdiction. High on Extraordinary Legal Remedies lays down the rule in these words: "Thus, where the defendant in an action instituted in an inferior court pleads to the jurisdiction of such court, and his plea is overruled, no sufficient cause is presented for granting a prohibition, since ample remedy may be had by an appeal in the final judgment in the cause." Section 771. The same doctrine is upheld in the following cases: Murphy v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 592, 24 Pac. 310; Strouse v. Police Court, etc., 85 Cal. 49, 24 Pac. 747; Agassiz v. Superior Court, 90 Cal. 101, 27 Pac. 49; Mines d'Or, etc., v. Superior Court, 91 Cal. 101, 27 Pac. 532; Jacobs v. Superior Court, 133 Cal. 364, 65 Pac. 826, 85 Am. St. Rep. 204; Lindley v. Superior Court, 141 Cal. 220, 74 Pac. 765; Cross v. Superior Court (Cal. App.) 83 Pac. 815. In Strouse v. Police Court, supra, the petitioner was being prosecuted on a criminal charge in the police court. In denying his petition for a writ, in which the point was urged that the police court had no jurisdiction, the court said: "If the petitioner should be convicted in the police court, he will have a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy at law by an appeal to the superior court." In Agassiz v. Superior Court, supra, the court said: "Petitioners had the right to appeal from the order refusing to dissolve the attachment, and would have an appeal from any final judgment in the case, and such appeal being a 'plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law,' within the meaning of section 1103, Code of Civil Procedure, prohibition does not lie. A remedy does not fail to be speedy and adequate, because, by pursuing it through the 'ordinary course of law,' more time would be probably consumed than in the proceeding here sought to be used. And it makes no difference that in this instance a question of jurisdiction incidentally depends upon the validity of an attachment." This case also quotes with approval the language above given from Strouse v. Superior Court. In Lindley v. Superior Court, supra, the petition was for a writ prohibiting the superior court from proceeding to the trial of an action in which the petitioner was defendant. The court said: "If, as contended, the superior court is without jurisdiction, there is, of course, a remedy by appeal for any adverse judgment affecting petitioner, and it is not sufficient ground for interfering by prohibition that the trial will be expensive and troublesome." The writ was denied solely by reason of the remedy by appeal.

If the remedy by appeal from a final judgment of the superior court is plain, speedy and adequate, the appeal from a similar judgment in a justice court is equally so. The method of appealing from the judgment of a justice court is simple and expeditious, and, if desired, may be taken upon both questions of law and fact.

For the foregoing reasons, and upon the authorities above cited, we are constrained to hold that the appellant has a plain, speedy, and adequate remedy by appeal from any judgment that may be finally taken against him, and for that reason prohibition will not lie.

In so holding we have not overlooked White v. Superior Court, 126 Cal. 245, 58 Pac. 450, nor Keystone Driller Co. v. Superior Court, 138 Cal. 738, 72 Pac. 398, in each of which the writ was granted to prohibit the trying of a case where summons had not been served and returned within the term of three years from the commencement of the action. In the Modoc Land Case no question was raised or discussed as to the remedy, and in the White Case the action in the superior court was to foreclose a mortgage, and the court seems to have laid stress upon the right of the petitioner to a present dismissal of the action and the removal of the lien by which his land was incumbered. But, however that may be, both cases were cited to the court in the later case of Lindley v. Superior Court, supra, where the rule is laid down as we have above indicated.

Neither have we overlooked the stipulation printed in the transcript, to the effect that the only question to be submitted to this court is: "Does section 581 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California apply to justice courts?" Counsel may not by stipulation submit questions of law for determination by this court which do not arise upon the record in the case. If, notwithstanding the justice court may not have jurisdiction to try the action against plaintiff, appellant has no right to the writ of prohibition because of his remedy by appeal, the question of jurisdiction becomes a moot question, and should not in this proceeding be determined by this court.

The judgment is affirmed.

HOBSON v. PACIFIC STATES MERCANTILE CO. (Civ. 265.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Feb. 26, 1907.)

1. Corporations — Insolvency — Appointment of Receivers—Grounds.

A court of equity cannot appoint a receiver for a corporation on an action brought by a private person merely because it is insolvent, where the only other prayer for relief is for a money judgment for a certain sum alleged to have been received upon contracts, to the benefit of plaintiff, with no sufficient allegations to sustain an action therefor for money had and received, notwithstanding Code Civ. Proc. § 564, subd. 5, providing that "a receiver may be appointed * * * in the cases when a corporation * * * is insolvent," since such appointment is only made ancillary to another action, so that the relief awarded by the judgment may be effective.

2. Receivers—Appointment—Notice to Defendant.

An order appointing a receiver without a trial should not be made without previous notice to the defendant, where it does not appear that irreparable injury would be done during the few days necessary for a hearing on notice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 42, Receivers, §§ 54–60.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; F. H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by H. F. Hobson against the Pacific States Mercantile Company. From an order appointing a receiver, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Riordan & Lande, for appellant. L. G. Carpenter, F. W. Sawyer, and H. F. Hobson, for respondent.

CHIPMAN, P. J. The prayer of the complaint is that plaintiff have judgment for $4,525, and that a receiver be appointed upon the filing of the complaint to take possession of all the assets and property, books, papers, and records of defendant, and that defendant be restrained from transferring any of its property, assets, books, and records and from doing any further business. Before the court made any order and, as required by the court, plaintiff on said day filed a bond in the sum of $1,000, signed by plaintiff and one surety, though reciting the names of two sureties. It does not appear that this bond was approved. Thereupon and on the same day, and without notice to defendant, the court made the following order: "From the verified complaint herein, good reasons appearing, and it appearing necessary and proper therefor it is hereby ordered that: Thomas J. Quinn be and he is hereby appointed Receiver herein to take into possession and safely keep until the further order of this court, all of the assets, property, money of whatever kind or nature, books, records, files and papers of the defendant herein, and until the further order of this court the defendant, its officers, managers and agents are restrained from disposing, transferring or removing any of its assets, property, books, files, records and accounts, and they and each of them and all other parties having property in their possession or under their control belonging to the defendant are hereby directed to deliver the same to said receiver. For the purpose of fully carrying out this order and the authority of the said receiver, the said receiver is hereby authorized to commence and institute any necessary action in any court for that purpose. The receiver is hereby required to furnish on qualifying an undertaking in the sum of $3000.00 and to take the oath required by law. Dated July 23rd, 1904. Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge." Indorsed: "Filed Jul. 23, 1904." On the same day the receiver so appointed filed the required bond, which was on that day approved by the said judge. The complaint was verified and was filed on July 23, 1904. It alleged that defendant is a corporation organized under the laws of this state; that its object was the sale and issuance of contracts known as "Merchandise Contracts," a sample of which is appended to the complaint as Exhibit A and made part thereof; that plaintiff is the owner and holder of 374 of said contracts, all of which are in good standing. This contract purports to be an agreement on the part of the corporation to deliver to the holder or his assigns, upon his complying with the conditions stated therein, "merchandise of whatever description desired to the retail value of one hundred dollars." The company guaranties upon redemption of the contract to find a purchaser for the merchandise, should the holder wish to sell the merchandise, "for the amount of $85.00 cash then and there." The holder is required and agrees to pay to the company the sum of $50, as follows: $5 on delivery of the contract, $1.50 weekly for 30 successive weeks, failing in which the contract becomes void and all payments made are to be forfeited to the company. If the weekly payments are fully paid the contract is deemed fully paid and nonforfeitable, "and when thereafter there shall be the full sum of one hundred dollars to the credit of this contract, in the redemption fund of the company, the company will immediately, on the surrender to it of this contract, deliver to the holder thereof, the merchandise hereinbefore mentioned." The contract provides further that the company shall retain "for its own use and all expenses" the initial payment of $5; also 25 per cent. of the 30 weekly installments: also "place ten per cent. in the reserve fund, and set aside the remainder of the installments paid on this and other similar contracts to the credit of the redemption fund. The money in said redemption fund shall be used in the purchase of merchandise for delivery, as required in the fulfillment of this and similar contracts of the company." It is also provided that the contract "is written pursuant to a written application thereof signed by the holder which is hereby referred to and made part hereof," but this application is not set out nor are its provisions stated in the complaint.

The complaint next alleges that "said business of said defendant is against public policy and as plaintiff is informed and believes, and therefore alleges a fraud against the plaintiff and all contract holders"; upon information and belief it is alleged that the postoffice department has instituted proceedings against defendant to deprive it of the use of the mails, and that defendant has been "sued and attached on matured contracts and has been unable to meet its demands"; that defendant has caused two other corporations to be organized for the purpose of taking over its property "and placing itself insolvent," and, unless restrained, will transfer its property to prevent the holders of said contracts from realizing anything thereon; that many of said contracts are outstanding and the holders thereof "are becoming alarmed and are making great demands on defendant which are being refused." Plaintiff also alleges on information and belief that complaint has been made to the Attorney General of the state requesting proceedings to be taken to revoke the license of defendant to do further business, and that before such action is taken defendant will dispose of all its assets and property in a manner to be of great loss to plaintiff and other contract holders. On information and belief, also, it is alleged that defendant is insolvent and cannot meet its obligations, and that "plaintiff believes" that defendant intends to sell as many contracts as it can and cause its insolvency to be circulated and thus discredit its ability to meet the demands upon it and cause holders to forfeit their contracts, and, unless restrained and a receiver appointed to take charge of the business there will be a great many contracts declared void for nonpayment and the money paid thereon forfeited; that plaintiff has no information of the full indebtedness and liability of defendant, and that such information is contained in defendant's books and records which, unless preserved by order of the court, will be destroyed or disposed of so as not to be available as evidence; that there has been paid on plaintiff's said contracts the sum of $4,525, which defendant "has had and received for the use and benefit of plaintiff and said contracts"; that, "unless a receiver is appointed to take possession of the assets and property of defendant and its books, papers, vouchers, records as herein alleged, they will be lost to the plaintiff and all contract holders." The bond for $1,000 was objected to as being defectively executed (by whom and when objected to does not appear), and on July 28, 1904, by order of the court, a bond similar in all respects to the first one, duly executed by plaintiff and two sureties, was filed and approved by the judge in lieu of said first bond. It appears that on the day of his appointment, namely, July 23d, the receiver "entered into possession of the premises and offices occupied by the corporation defendant, and seized and took possession and control of all the assets and property of every kind and nature, books, papers, records, vouchers and all other property of every character pertaining to the business of said corporation and the officers duly authorized to take charge of the affairs thereof, the property, and business of said corporation, and changed the locks on the offices and premises occupied by said company in the building known as 137 Montgomery street, in the city and county of San Francisco, and permanently locked and closed said offices occupied and used by said corporation defendant and which constituted the principal and only place of business of said corporation defendant in said city and county." On July 25, 1904, defendant duly served notice of motion to set aside the order appointing the receiver on the ground that the complaint does not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action, or entitle plaintiff to the relief prayed for or for the appointment of a receiver, and upon the further ground that there is no authority of law for the appointment of a receiver of defendant corporation upon the grounds stated in the complaint herein, and the court was without jurisdiction to appoint said receiver. The court shortened the time within which to serve notice of said motion to two hours, and defendant duly served the same upon plaintiff on July 25th, and simultaneously therewith also served on plaintiff a copy of the answer to the complaint.

In its answer defendant denies specifically each and every of the allegations of the complaint, and avers that plaintiff has caused assignments of said contracts to be made to him for the purpose of this action, but none of said assignments has or have been registered with defendant as required by said contracts and all like contracts; that not less than 97 per cent. of the contract holders who have assigned their contracts to plaintiff as by him alleged have not paid the full amount required by them to be paid under the terms of said contract, and "said contracts are not fully paid and have not matured, with the exception of probably six"; that said contracts are payable only "when there shall be the full amount of one hundred dollars to the credit of said contract in the redemption fund of the company, and not before, as said contracts in express terms stipulate and provide"; that prior to the delivery or execution of said contracts, or any of them, each holder signed a written application of the form set out in the answer. This application purports to be an application in which the proposed purchaser agrees to make the payments as set forth in the contract under penalty of forfeiture and declares that the application is made with full knowledge of all the provisions of said contract and published literature of the company, all of which terms and conditions the purchaser agrees to. The motion came on to be heard on the 25th, and at the hearing thereof "there was used, heard, and considered the said complaint herein, the said notice of motion to set aside said order, and the said answer of defendant." The matter was taken under advisement, and "on July 27th the plaintiff served and filed in said cause the following papers and pleadings, to wit, notice, affidavits, order, motion to amend, and amended complaint." These papers were filed by leave of court and over the defendant's objection, and thereupon the court "upon the consideration of all the papers on file herein, including said amended complaint, denied said motion to vacate said order appointing said receiver herein, and by the order of said court duly entered in the minutes thereof, continued said receiver in the use, occupation, possession, and control of the property and premises of said corporation defendant, by the order of said court to such effect." The papers filed by plaintiff on the 27th of July, and which were heard upon defendant's motion, do not appear in the transcript. On July 28th defendant duly served notice of appeal from said order appointing said receiver, and upon the same day and upon application, the amount being fixed by the court, defendant filed its stay bond on appeal in the sum of $5,000, which was duly approved by the court, whereupon the court ordered "that all proceedings under said order appointing said receiver are hereby stayed," and further that said receiver surrender possession to defendant of all the property held by him under said order and to "desist from doing any further act as such receiver."

The order from which defendant appeals was made without notice to defendant upon the verified complaint alone. The first notice defendant had of the order was when the receiver took possession of its books and other property and its place of business, locked up the premises, and carried away the key. The bond given by plaintiff at the time was subsequently declared by the court to be so defective as to require another bond to be given in lieu thereof, which was not done until five days later. When the receiver took possession of defendant's place of business and its books, records, and other property, his only authority was the ex parte order of the court concededly issued upon the original complaint, supported by a defective bond which had it been in all respects good and sufficient may have been wholly inadequate to damnify defendant for the damage in executing the order. But, aside from any imperfection in the bond, we know of no authority, statutory or otherwise, that warrants the court in making the order complained of. We regard the proceedings taken subsequent to the making of the order, when the motion to vacate it was noticed and heard, as wholly immaterial, and in no wise affecting the question now before us. The validity of the order must be determined by the proceedings upon which it was based. We have set out these subsequent proceedings because they are part of the record and are claimed by respondent to have some bearing upon the question presented, but we fail to see in what respect they can be used to validate an order previously made by the court upon grounds then only in existence.

The facts stated in the complaint do not constitute a cause of action, and are not claimed to have been stated for any purpose except for the appointment of a receiver. Respondent says in his brief that the action is not to enforce an illegal contract, but "is to distribute among creditors a joint fund." The action does not purport to have been brought on behalf of all the contract holders. There is no demand for an accounting for the common benefit of all contract holders or for the benefit of plaintiff. There are no appropriate averments for any relief, so far as we can discover by the complaint, except for the appointment of a receiver. True, the prayer asks for judgment for a certain sum, but the only averment looking towards a money judgment is the averment that defendant has received this amount upon the contracts mentioned, to the benefit of plaintiff, which, in itself, is not sufficient in an action for money had and received. There is no allegation of nonpayment of the money paid to the corporation. Hurley v. Ryan, 119 Cal. 71, 51 Pac. 20; Dodge v. Kimple, 121 Cal. 580, 54 Pac. 94. It is not possible to make anything out of the complaint except a recital of facts, all of them substantially upon information and belief or on belief alone, as ground for the appointment of a receiver.

It may be regarded as the settled law in this state that a court of equity has no inherent power to appoint a receiver of an insolvent corporation merely because of its insolvency, or to wind up its affairs, in the absence of a statutory provision. Murray v. Superior Court, 129 Cal. 628, 62 Pac. 191. Section 564, subd. 5, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that "a receiver may be appointed * * * in the cases when a corporation * * * is insolvent." In the French Bank Case, 53 Cal. 495, 553, the court said: "There is, of course, no such thing as an action brought distinctively for the mere appointment of a receiver. Such an appointment, when made, is ancillary to or in aid of the action brought. Its purpose is to preserve the property pending the litigation so that the relief awarded by the judgment, if any, may be effective. The authority conferred upon the court to make the appointment necessarily presupposes that an action is pending before it, instituted by some one authorized by law to commence it. But there is no statute of this state, none to which we have been pointed, which undertakes to confer upon a private person, either as stockholder or creditor, the right to maintain an action to dissolve a corporation upon the ground that it is insolvent, or to obtain relief by seizing its property out of the hands of its constituted management, and placing it in the hands of a receiver." This construction of the subdivision was followed and approved in Fischer v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 129, 42 Pac. 561. It was there said: "The general rule, no doubt, is that so harsh a measure as the appointment of a receiver to take property out of one's possession without a trial will not be indulged in by a court without previous notice to the defendant. It would be unjustifiable, except where it clearly appeared that irreparable injury would be done during the few days necessary for a hearing on notice; and even in such an extreme case a temporary injunction would usually be sufficient." Mr. Beach, in his work on Receivers (section 141), says: "A motion to appoint a receiver will not be entertained unless notice has been given to the defendant, if practicable, and the appointment will not be made without notice, save in the case of irreparable injury." See Havemeyer v. Superior Court, 84 Cal. 327, 24 Pac. 121, 10 L. R. A. 627, 18 Am. St. Rep. 192.

Respondent claims that Fischer v. Superior Court turned on the point that a bond was not required before making the order. In this respondent is in error. The decision deals particularly with the fact that the order appointing the receiver was without notice to the adverse party, while also showing that the court was without authority to make the order to take possession of the property of the corporation, as held in the French Bank Case, supra.

We do not find it necessary to pass definitely upon the nature of these contracts. Both parties seem to regard them as illegal, and for this reason appellant contends that the law leaves plaintiff where it finds him. (Wyman v. Moore, 103 Cal. 213, 37 Pac. 230), and that a contract against public policy may not be made the foundation of any action, either at law or in equity (Chateau v. Singla, 114 Cal. 91, 45 Pac. 1015, 33 L. R. A. 750, 55 Am. St. Rep. 63). A very slight examination of the contract shows that there can never accumulate in the redemption fund the amount required before the company can be called upon, under the terms of the contract, to furnish the merchandise referred to. Apparently each contract stands on its own feet, and the holder has no claim upon the redemption fund except to such money as he himself pays in. There appears to be no provision that forfeitures shall enure to the benefit of the redemption fund, but apparently they go to the benefit of the company. The holder has a fully paid up contract when he has paid $50, but of this amount only $29.75 goes to this redemption fund. The contract expressly provides that the merchandise will not be delivered until there is paid into that fund the full sum of $100, so that the holder must pay into that fund $70.25 additional, or in all $120.25, for the privilege of receiving $100 worth of merchandise at retail prices. A more perfect scheme of "heads I win and tails you lose" cannot well be conceived. Any person of ordinary understanding can see this by a moment's examination of the contract itself. It may be doubted whether equity will ever come to the relief of a sane person who deliberately, as in this case, without fraudulent inductment or concealment or through mistake or misrepresentation, becomes a party to such a contract. However this may be, we are convinced that the appointment of the receiver was without authority of law for the reasons hereinbefore stated. The order also contains a restraining clause but no appeal is taken from that part of the order, if indeed, it was intended to operate as an injunction or has been so treated.

So much of the order as appointed a receiver is reversed.

We concur: HART, J; BURNETT, J.

HALL v. JUSTICES' COURT OF CITY AND COUNTY OF SAN FRANCISCO et al. (Civ. 269.)

(Court of Appeal. First District, California. March 1, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court April 29, 1907.)

1. Justices of the Peace—Procedure—Writ of Review.

Code Civ. Proc. § 911, requires every justice of the peace to keep a docket, in which he must enter the date of the summons and the time of its return and the time when either party appears, and their nonappearance if default be made. Section 912 requires that the several particulars in section 911 shall be entered at the time they occur. Section 845 provides that a defendant shall have five days in which to appear and answer if the summons is served in the city and county in which the action is brought. Section 871 provides that, if defendant fails to appear and answer or demur within the time specified in the summons, then, upon proof of service of the summons, if the action is based upon a contract, and is for the recovery of money or damages, the court must render judgment for plaintiff for the sum specified in the summons. Section 1068 provides that a writ of review may be granted when an inferior tribunal exercising judicial functions has exceeded its jurisdiction, and there is no appeal, nor, in the judgment of the court, any plain, speedy, and adequate remedy. The summons in an action in the court of a justice of the peace having been served, and return thereof made, no further proceedings were had until more than eight years thereafter, when judgment was entered for plaintiff and against defendant by default. Held, that sections 911 and 912 were directory only, and, the justice having acted within his jurisdiction in entering the judgment, a writ of review, as authorized by section 1068, would not lie.

2. Same—Existence of Remedy by Appeal.

Where an appeal might have been taken from a judgment rendered in a court of a justice of the peace, certiorari, as authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 1068, will not lie to review the same, though the right of appeal may have been lost by laches.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Certiorari by C. P. Hall against the justices' court of the city and county of San Francisco and another. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed, with directions to dismiss the petition.

A. P. Dessoulavy, for appellants. H. V. Morehouse and J. E. Alexander, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal in a certiorari proceeding, in which the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco annulled a judgment of the justices' court of said city and county against the petitioner.

On December 2, 1896, Benjamin Lust commenced an action against C. P. Hall in the justices' court in the city and county of San Francisco to recover $253.75 for goods sold and delivered. Summons was issued on that date, and was served January 7, 1897. Summons was returned served January 28, 1897. Nothing further was done in the action until more than eight years after the return of summons, when on May 19, 1905, judgment was entered in favor of Lust, plaintiff, and against Hall, defendant, for $253.75, interest and costs. No appeal was ever taken from this judgment. It is the contention of Hall, the petitioner, that it was the duty of the justice, at the time of the return of the service of summons, January 28, 1897 (it disclosing that the time within which to appear and answer had expired), to note on the docket the nonappearance of the defendant therein, and to thereupon enter a judgment of default in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant. That, if he did not do so then, he might do so later, but as of the date of the default. This contention rests upon sections 911, 912, 845, and 871, Code Civ. Proc. Section 911, Code Civ. Proc., requires, "every justice to keep a docket in which he must enter" (subdivision 3) "the date of the summons and the time of its return"; (subdivision 4) "the time when the parties or either of them appear, or their non-appearance, if default be made." Under section 912, Code Civ. Proc., these entries "must be made at the time they occur." Under section 845, Code Civ. Proc., defendant, having been served in the city and county court of San Francisco, had five days thereafter within which to appear and answer. Section 871, Code Civ. Proc., in part is as follows: "If the defendant fail to appear, and to answer or demur within the time specified in the summons, then, upon proof of service of summons, the following proceedings must be had: (1) If the action is based upon a contract, and is for the recovery of money, or damages only, the court must render judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the sum specified in the summons." Section 871, Code Civ. Proc., does not direct the justice to enter a judgment by default within any prescribed time. The entry of the nonappearance of the defendant, which sections 911 (subdivision 4) and 912 exact, is a ministerial duty. It is made by the clerk of the justices' court in the city of San Francisco. Section 93, Code Civ. Proc.

The failure to execute a ministerial duty does not divest a court of jurisdiction. Provisions of the Code much stronger and more definite in terms than the sections cited have been repeatedly held directory. In the case of Heinlen v. Phillips, 88 Cal. 557, 26 Pac. 366, a justice had made an order setting aside a judgment rendered by him after trial on the ground that it was void under section 892, Code Civ. Proc., having been rendered six weeks after the case had been submitted. Section 892, Code Civ. Proc., is as follows: "When the trial is by the court, a judgment must be rendered at the close of the trial." The court, at page 559 of 88 Cal., at page 367 of 26 Pac., said: "It is to be observed that no penalty is prescribed or consequence attached to a violation of this section, and we think that, if the Legislature had intended that the delay of a day by the justice (for that would be a violation of the provision) should subject the parties to the expense of a retrial, it would have said so in express terms. A similar but much stronger provision was enacted in relation to the district courts, and it was held to be merely directory. McQuillan v. Donahue, 49 Cal. 157. It is true that the superior court is a court of general jurisdiction, while the justices' court is one of limited jurisdiction; but the decision did not proceed upon the power of the court, but upon the intention of the Legislature." That case was followed and approved in American Typefounders' Co. v. Justices' Court of Sausalito Township, 133 Cal. 319, 65 Pac. 742, 978. In the case of Edwards v. Hellings, 103 Cal. 205, 37 Pac. 218, the default of the defendant was ordered by the superior court entered March 14, 1884, but judgment was not entered against him until January, 1892, nearly eight years later. In that case it is said, at page 207 of 103 Cal., at page 220 of 37 Pac.: "The provision [referring to section 585, Code Civ. Proc.] that the clerk must enter the judgment 'immediately' after entering his default is merely directory. His failure to do so may render him liable to an action by the judgment creditor, but does not render void the judgment subsequently entered upon such default; nor can the defendant against whom the judgment is entered invoke such failure for the purpose of annulling a judgment to which he has no other defense. The statute of limitations upon the judgment runs from the time of its entry, and not from its rendition. Trenouth v. Farrington, 54 Cal. 273. See, also, Franklin v. Merida, 50 Cal. 289. If the appellant had desired to set the statute of limitations running, he could himself have caused the judgment to be entered at any time after its rendition." In the case of Lynch v. Kelly, 41 Cal. 232, it was held that notwithstanding that section 594 of the practice act provided that upon the receipt of any verdict the justice should "immediately render judgment accordingly," "the formal entry of the judgment" was a mere clerical duty imposed upon him by statute. That case was approved in Montgomery v. Superior Court, 68 Cal. 407, 9 Pac. 720. In this connection reference may be made to Waters v. Dumas, 75 Cal. 563, 17 Pac. 685, where section 664, Code Civ. Proc. (providing that, after a trial by a jury, judgment must be entered by the clerk within 24 hours after the rendition of the verdict) is held to be directory; and to Rosenthal v. McMann, 93 Cal. 505, 29 Pac. 121, in which section 581, Code Civ. Proc., subd. 6 (providing that an action may be dismissed by the court when, after verdict or final submission, the party entitled to judgment neglects to demand and to have the same entered for more than six months), is held not to be mandatory. See, also, Disque v. Herrington, 139 Cal. 1, 72 Pac. 336; Larue v. Gaskins, 5 Cal. 507.

"A writ of review may be granted * * * when an inferior tribunal * * * exercising judicial functions has exceeded the jurisdiction of such tribunal * * * and there is no appeal, nor in the judgment of the court any plain, speedy and adequate remedy." Code Civ. Proc. § 1068. Tested by this section, and the decisions in this state, the writ should not have been granted. The justices' court acted within its jurisdiction, as has just been shown. Again, from the judgment in the justices' court defendant therein had an appeal, which he lost through his own laches; and, again, according to the petition itself for the writ of certiorari, the petitioner (Hall) knew of the rendition of the judgment against him within 30 days thereafter, and therefore within time to have moved in the justices' court, under section 859, Code Civ. Proc., as amended in 1905, to set aside the judgment if taken against him by his mistaken inadvertence, surprise, or excusable neglect.

The justices' court having acted within its jurisdiction, certiorari will not lie. In Borchard v. Supervisors, 144 Cal. 14, 77 Pac. 708, it is said: "It is too well settled to require the citation of authorities that the writ of review runs to inferior tribunals, boards, or officers exercising judicial functions solely to correct errors in excess of jurisdiction, or, in other words, to confine such tribunals and officers, exercising judicial functions, to their proper jurisdiction"—citing Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Bd. of Equalization, 97 Cal. 318, 32 Pac. 312; White v. Superior Court, 110 Cal. 60, 42 Pac. 480; Quinchard v. Trustees of Alameda, 113 Cal. 664, 45 Pac. 856. An appeal might have been taken, and it is no excuse that defendant did not know of the rendering of the judgment in time to avail himself of that remedy. In the case of Tucker v. Justices' Court, 120 Cal. 512, 52 Pac. 808, the court said: "And it is well settled that, when an appeal may be taken, resort cannot be had to a writ of review. The cases so holding are numerous, and need not be cited." See, also, Weldon v. Superior Court, 138 Cal. 429, 71 Pac. 502. It is also well settled that, where the remedy by appeal has once existed, certiorari will not be granted because the time for appeal has passed. McCue v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 545, 12 Pac. 615; Stuttmeister v. Superior Court, 71 Cal. 322, 12 Pac. 270; Miliken v. Huber, 21 Cal. 166; Faut v. Mason, 47 Cal. 7; Reynolds v. Superior Court, 64 Cal. 372, 28 Pac. 121. And it is equally well settled that certiorari cannot be used as a substitute for an appeal after the opportunity to appeal has been lost by the neglect or laches of the applicant. In Bennett v. Wallace, 43 Cal. 25, it is said: "The statute was intended to supply a remedy where none existed in the first instance, and not to supplement one lost through the laches of the party himself." To the same point, see, also, Faut v. Mason, 47 Cal. 7; Valentine v. Police Court, 141 Cal. 615, 75 Pac. 336.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court directed to dismiss the petition.

R. H. HERRON CO. v. MAWBY. (Civ. 166.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 19, 1907.)

1. PAYMENT—CHECK OF DEBTOR—DUTY OF CREDITOR.

Though, in the absence of an express agreement, the acceptance of a debtor's check is in fact merely conditional payment—that is, satisfaction of the debt if and when paid—its acceptance implies an undertaking of due diligence in presenting it for payment, and, if the party from whom it is received sustains loss by want of such diligence, it will be held to operate as an actual payment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Payment, §§ 86–88.]

2. BILLS AND NOTES—CHECKS—PRESENTMENT FOR PAYMENT—DILIGENCE.

October 4th, a creditor received its debtor's check on a bank in a distant town, placed it in a local bank for collection, and it was mailed to the drawee bank, which received it October 5th, but did not acknowledge receipt. The drawee bank closed October 15th, and the check was returned the 18th, when the debtor was first notified of its nonpayment. Held, that the bank having sent the check directly to the drawee without instruction to do so, and there being no evidence of custom or usage to support its act, and there having been another and independent public agent for the collection of checks in a distant town, the creditor and its agent were negligent in the presentment of the check.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 7, Bills and Notes, §§ 1067, 1069.]

3. SAME—COMMON-LAW DOCTRINE NOT ABROGATED.

Civ. Code, §§ 3213, 3255, providing, when a check is not duly presented for payment within 10 days after the time it could with reasonable diligence be transmitted to the proper place for presentment, the drawer and indorsers are exonerated, unless such presentment is excused, does not abrogate the common-law doctrine of presentation of checks with reasonable diligence after the time taken in reaching the place of payment, but merely fixes a limit after which delay in presentment will exonerate the drawer and indorsers of such check, unless the delay be for one of the reasons expressly provided by statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by the R. H. Herron Company against C. E. Mawby. From a judgment dismissing the action on its merits, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Gill & Densmore and Oscar A. Trippet, for appellant. Lawler, Allen & Van Dyke, and Collier & Carnahan, for respondent.

TAGGART, J. From a judgment dismissing its action on the merits and awarding defendant costs, the plaintiff appeals.

Plaintiff is a corporation doing business at the city of Los Angeles, and defendant resides near the town of Coachella, in Riverside county. On the 1st day of October, 1904, defendant being indebted to the plaintiff in the sum of $620.28, drew his check for that amount on the Coachella Valley Bank, presumably located in Coachella, dated October 1, 1904, and payable to the order of plaintiff, deposited it in the United States mail, addressed to plaintiff at Los Angeles, and the check was regularly received by plaintiff before 3 o'clock p. m. on the 4th day of October. On the same day plaintiff placed said check in the National Bank of California at Los Angeles for collection, and the said bank thereupon, on the same day, mailed the check directly to the Coachella Valley Bank for payment. The Coachella Valley Bank did not acknowledge receipt of the check to either plaintiff or the National Bank of California, and neither of the latter parties made any inquiry of the Coachella Bank why it had not acknowledged receipt of said check or whether or not said check had been paid; and the National Bank of California did not notify either plaintiff or defendant of the failure of the Coachella Valley Bank to acknowledge receipt of said check. At the close of business hours on Saturday, October 15, 1904, the Coachella Valley Bank closed its doors and ceased to transact business, and ever since said time has been without funds with which to meet the claims of its depositors. The check in question was not paid, but was received by said National Bank of California at Los Angeles by United States mail on the 18th day of October, 1904, having been mailed to it at San Bernardino, October 17, 1904, by one Paul Bodenhamer. Defendant was not notified of the nonpayment of said check until the afternoon of October 18, 1904.

The trial court finds that at all times between the 1st day of October, 1904, and the close of banking hours on the 15th day of October, 1904, defendant had on deposit in said Coachella Valley Bank a sum of money more than sufficient in amount to pay said check, and that said bank was open for the transaction of business, and receiving deposits and cashing checks, and that the persons owning and conducting the same had sufficient property and funds subject to execution and legal process to pay said check at all times between said dates. It also finds that there were two daily United States mails each way between the town of Coachella and the city of Los Angeles, and that at all times between the 1st and 18th days of October, 1904, Wells, Fargo & Co., a corporation doing a general express business, was engaged in the collection of checks, etc., at Coachella, and in direct correspondence with the office of said company at Los Angeles.

The conclusions of law of the trial court are that the plaintiff and its agent, the National Bank of California, were negligent in sending the said check directly to said Coachella Valley Bank for payment, were negligent in not sooner knowing that said check had not been paid, and negligent in not notifying defendant of the failure to receive any response from the said check. Whilst a check drawn bona fide on a banker having funds of the drawer is prima facie payment, if accepted as cash, still, in the absence of any express agreement, the acceptance of a check of either the debtor or a third party is in fact merely conditional payment—that is, satisfaction of the debt if and when paid; but the acceptance of such check implies an undertaking of due diligence in presenting it for payment, and, if the party from whom it is received sustains loss by want of such diligence, it will be held to operate as actual payment. Comptoir D'Escompte v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, at pages 20–22, 20 Pac. 28.

At common law the payee of the check has until the following day after its receipt to present it for payment as between himself and the drawer, when drawn on a bank in the same town or city where the check is given and received. Ritchie v. Bradshaw, 5 Cal. 228; Himmelmann v. Hotaling, 40 Cal. 115, 6 Am. Rep. 600. When drawn on a bank in a different place, the payee has the same time, and, in addition thereto, such time as will be required to transmit it to the place of payment by due course of mail. Manitoba, etc., v. Weiss, 101 N. W. 37, 18 S. D. 459. That the sending of a check by United States mail directly to the drawee bank does not constitute a proper presentment for payment in the absence of proof of usage or custom among banks to do so, is established by the weight of authority. This is recognized by most of the American cases, and in those in which the facts do not fall within the general rule the weight of authority is admitted and the case distinguished. This is true of most of the cases cited by appellant. For instance: The instrument was payable at the bank by its maker and not by the bank, (Indig v. City Bank, 80 N. Y. 106), a usage was directly proven and relied upon, much stress being laid thereon in the opinion (Kershaw v. Ladd, 44 L. R. A. 236, 34 Or. 375, 56 Pac. 402), positive instructions were given by the party for whom the collection was made, to make presentment in this way (First National Bank v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 48 L. R. A. 583, 123 Mich. 336, 82 N. W. 66), or the facts showed that if sent through a third person it could not have reached the drawee bank before it failed (First Nat. Bank v. City Bank [Tex. Civ. App.] 34 S. W. 458), etc. The law and its reasons are declared in the following language from Daniel on Negotiable Instruments (volume 1, § 328–a): "For the purposes of collection the collecting bank must employ a suitable subagent. It must not transmit its checks or bills directly to the bank or party by whom payment is to be made, with the request that remittance be made therefor. It is considered that no firm, bank, corporation, or individual can be deemed a suitable agent in contemplation of law, to enforce in behalf of another a claim against itself." Drovers' Nat. Bk. v. Anglo-American, etc., 7 N. E. 601, 117 Ill. 100, 57 Am. Rep. 855; Anderson v. Rodgers, 36 Pac. 1067, 53 Kan. 542, 27 L. R. A. 248; Minneapolis, etc., v. Metropolitan Bank, 78 N. W. 980, 76 Minn. 136, 44 L. R. A. 504, 77 Am. St. Rep. 609. The fact that a check is sent to the drawee bank through the mails does not amount to a demand for payment, and the bank may hold it any length of time without incurring the liability of an acceptance. Morse on Banks & Banking, 289.

We do not agree with appellant that, because section 3213 of the Civil Code by the provisions of section 3255 becomes applicable to checks required to be transmitted to another place for presentment, therefore the common-law doctrine of presentation of such checks with reasonable diligence after the time taken in reaching the place of payment is no longer to be considered in this state. On the contrary, this section merely fixes a limit after which delay in presentment will exonerate the drawer and indorsers of such a check, unless the delay in presentment be for one of the reasons expressly provided by statute. Under the provisions of section 3213 of the Civil Code, reasonable diligence in making presentment must still be exercised by the holder of such a check, and this must be within the statutory limit of 10 days, or he loses his right to hold the drawer or indorsers of the check. The presentation must be by some one capable of acting in the interest of the drawer of whom the collecting bank is the agent for the purpose of collection. The person making presentment should be prepared to treat with the drawee bank at arm's length. "Had presentment been made by another agent of the plaintiff and payment refused, steps might have been taken immediately to protect the drawer's rights; but the check (having been sent to it by mail) being in the hands of the drawee, of course, no effort would be made by it to prosecute itself," says the Kansas Supreme Court in Anderson v. Rodgers, supra. In that case a check was received by the drawee bank, by mail, on December 12th after business hours. The bank was open for the transaction of business all day December 13th, but failed to open December 14th. The court held the collecting bank negligent in making presentment of the check. That under the statute there was still time to make a proper presentment, after the abortive one, will not avail the collecting bank or excuse it from responsibility for its negligent act, if the fund be lost to the drawer. First Nat. Bank v. City Nat. Bank (Tex. Civ. App.) 34 S. W. 458.

The findings in the case at bar show that the National Bank of California, without instructions to that effect, or without evidence of custom or usage to support its act, and notwithstanding there was another and independent public agent for the collection of drafts, checks, etc., in the town of Coachella, sent the defendant's check to the Coachella Valley Bank to collect from itself. It failed to make good. There was no capable or proper agent selected to act in the interest of the drawer between October 5th and the close of banking hours of October 15th, and the fund in the Coachella Valley Bank was lost.

If it were conceded that, under section 3213, the National Bank, notwithstanding its negligent manner of making presentment, would be permitted to sit idly by, at defendant's risk, for 10 days after the check reached Coachella, still it was the negligence of the plaintiff and the agent it selected that caused the loss of the fund to the drawer. The check was in the hands of the subagent selected by the National Bank (the Coachella Valley Bank) on the morning of October 5th, and it was not presented "within ten days" after it reached the place of payment, as it had not been presented up to the close of banking hours, on October 15th. The conclusion that plaintiff and its agent were negligent is clearly supported by the findings, whichever view of the law is taken.

Judgment affirmed.

PEOPLE v. WARD. (Cr. 46.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 18, 1907.)

1. False Pretenses—Issues and Proof.

On a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, it is competent for the jury, in determining the truth or falsity of the representations, to take into consideration the acts and conduct of the parties.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 23, False Pretenses, § 60.]

2. Same—Sufficiency of Evidence.

Where several false pretenses enter into a transaction, proof of any one thereof constituting an operative cause is sufficient to support the verdict.

3. Same.

On a prosecution for obtaining money under false pretenses, held, that the evidence was sufficient to sustain a conviction.

4. Same—Evidence—Admissibility.

Evidence of a certain person, to the effect that on the day of the procurement of the money from prosecutor, though not in prosecutor's presence, but about the same time, defendant represented to witness that he was expecting a shipment of tools for use in development work, and solicited storage room therefor, and represented that he was expecting a draft for the same sum that he had mentioned to prosecutor, was admissible as tending to corroborate prosecutor's evidence that defendant had told him that he expected a draft, and as inconsistent with defendant's plea of not guilty, which denied, among other things, that he made representations as to the expectancy of the draft and the employment of men.

Appeal from Superior Court, Ventura County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

M. Ward was convicted of obtaining money under false pretenses, and he appeals from the judgment and from an order denying a new trial. Affirmed.

Shepherd & Barnes, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and E. E. Selph, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

ALLEN, P. J. The defendant was charged in the superior court of Ventura county with obtaining money under false pretenses, and convicted. He appeals from the judgment and an order denying a new trial.

The information alleged that defendant falsely, etc., represented to Collins & Sons, a firm doing business at Ventura, that there had been mailed to said firm a draft for $5,000 to the credit of defendant, which would be received by said firm within a day or two; and, further, that defendant had in his employ in said county several men, and he desired an advance of $100 with which to pay said men; that thereby Collins & Sons were induced to deliver to said defendant $100; that all of said representations were false, and were made knowingly and designedly for the purpose of defrauding said firm. The information is sufficient; nor is the same challenged by appellant.

The chief contention of defendant is that there is no evidence that he had not ordered such draft sent, and the other representations so made are not sufficient to support the charge. That the representations were made is not controverted. It was competent for the jury, in determining the truth or falsity of such representations, to take into consideration the acts and conduct of the parties. That is permissible in determining the falsity of any pretense. People v. Wasservogle, 77 Cal. 174, 19 Pac. 270. The fact that defendant never called upon Collins & Sons after the transaction, nor made inquiry about the draft involving, as it did, a large sum of money, but left the county and was found three months thereafter several hundred miles from the scene of the transaction, in the absence of any explanatory circumstances, is convincing evidence that no draft had been ordered, nor was one expected. In addition to this, there was evidence warranting the jury in determining that the statement that defendant had several men in his employ in the county, for the payment of whose wages the money was demanded, was false, and that such representation was an inducement for the advance. Where several false pretenses enter into the transaction, proof of any one thereof constituting an operative cause is sufficient to support the verdict. It is obvious that such representation in relation to the employment of men in the vicinity was a representation as to an existing fact, and, if believed, tended to establish a credit and standing for the employer, and the effect of which would be to influence one desirous of aiding local enterprises in making such advance. The testimony in the record sufficiently proved the corpus delicti.

It is further insisted by defendant that the evidence of one Barnes, admitted under objection, was incompetent and an attempt to show that defendant had been guilty of another offense than the one with which he stood charged. This evidence was to the effect that on the day of the procurement of the money from Collins & Sons, though not in their presence, but about the same time and at the same town, defendant represented to Barnes that he was expecting a shipment of tools for use in development work in the Matilija, and solicited from Barnes storage room therefor, and, in addition, represented that he was expecting a draft that afternoon for $5,000; that these tools never arrived to the witness' knowledge. It will be observed that nothing in Barnes' testimony tended to show another or distinct offense, and we are not confronted with the question as to the admissibility of evidence in relation to another offense; but, even in such case, "whenever the case is such that proof of one crime tends to prove any fact material in the trial of another, such proof is admissible, and the fact that it may tend to prejudice the defendant in the minds of the jurors is no ground for its exclusion." People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 141, 32 Pac. 864. In the case under consideration, it was material for the jury to determine whether the representations made to Collins, as testified to by him, were actually made. Representations of similar import made to Barnes about the same time and place tended to corroborate Collins. In addition to this, the defendant by his plea of not guilty denied every material allegation in the information, among which was that he made the representations as to the expectancy of the draft and the employment of men in the Matilija. These representations and statements to Barnes were inconsistent with such denial. "Anything said by a party may be used against him as an admission, provided it exhibits the quality of inconsistency with the facts now asserted by him in pleadings or in testimony. * * * It is their inconsistency with the party's present claim that gives them logical force." Wigmore on Ev., vol. 2, §§ 1048–1053. Nor is preliminary proof required to authorize the admission of independent statements of fact not amounting to a confession. People v. Le Roy, 65 Cal. 614, 4 Pac. 649. Were it even material as to the exact time of the representations made to Barnes in relation to those made to Collins, it will be noted that the transaction with Collins took place about noon, and defendant's statement to Barnes was that afternoon he was expecting a draft, from which it may be inferred that the statement to Barnes was made before the procurement of the money from Collins, and might well be accepted as proof of a scheme to commit the subsequent crime, and such evidence was cogent and material. Blake v. Assurance Soc., 4 C. P. Div. 94, cited in Carnell v. State, 36 Atl. 118, 85 Md. 1. The objections thereto go to its weight, rather than to its admissibility. People v. Martin, 102 Cal. 569, 36 Pac. 952.

We perceive no error in the record, either in the admission of this testimony or otherwise, and the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; TAGGART, J.

MAIER PACKING CO. v. FREY. (Civ. 313.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. Feb. 25, 1907.)

ADMINISTRATORS—CLAIMS AGAINST ESTATE—AFFIDAVITS—PERSONS WHO MAY MAKE—SUFFICIENCY OF AVERMENTS.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1494, provides that every claim when presented to an administrator must be supported by the affidavit of the claimant, or some one in his behalf, showing certain facts, and, when made by a person other than the claimant, he must set forth the reason why it is not made by claimant. A claim was supported by an affidavit made in the following form: "Maier Packing Company, by Simon Maier, Pres., * * * being duly sworn, says," etc., and signed "Maier Packing Company, Simon Maier, Pres." It did not disclose that claimant was a corporation. Held, that the affidavit was defective in not assigning some reason which would relieve claimant from making it.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by the Maier Packing Company against Margaret T. Frey, administratrix. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jones & Weller, for appellant. John H. Foley, for respondent.

SHAW, . Appeal from judgment. Maier Packing Company instituted suit upon a claim against the estate of one C. David Frey, deceased, of which respondent was the administratrix. The claim and affidavit in support of it was attached to and made a part of the complaint. A demurrer interposed by defendant was sustained upon the ground that the complaint failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Plaintiff declined to amend, and judgment was thereupon entered in favor of defendant, from which this appeal is prosecuted.

The claim was allowed by the administratrix, but rejected and disallowed by the judge of the superior court to whom it was presented for approval. The only question involved is whether or not the affidavit to the claim complies with the requirements of section 1494, Code Civ. Proc., which provides that "every claim which is due, when presented to the executor or administrator, must be supported by the affidavit of the claimant, or some one in his behalf, that the amount is justly due, that no payments have been made thereon which are not credited, and that there are no offsets to the same, to the knowledge of the affiant. * * * When the affidavit is made by a person other than the claimant, he must set forth in the affidavit the reason why it is not made by the claimant." The affidavit in question is as follows: "State of California, County of Los Angeles —ss.: Maier Packing Co., by Simon Maier, Pres., whose foregoing claim is herewith presented to the administrator of the estate of said deceased, being duly sworn, says, that the amount thereof, to wit, the sum of $962.09, is justly due to said claimant, that no payments have been made thereon which are not credited, and that there are no offsets to the same to the knowledge of the claimant or affiant. Maier Packing Co., Simon Maier, Pres. Subscribed and sworn to before me, this 15th day of June, 1904. Sam'l Prager, Notary Public in and for Los Angeles County, Cal."

It appears both from the affidavit and the account constituting the claim that Maier Packing Company is the claimant. The affidavit is made by Simon Maier on behalf of the claimant, and under the section above quoted we must look to the affidavit for the assignment of some reason which will excuse claimant from making the same. The absence of such an averment has been held to be absolutely fatal. Perkins v. Onyett, 86 Cal. 348, 24 Pac. 1024. There seems to have been no attempt to state in positive terms any reason why Maier Packing Company did not make the affidavit. Counsel for appellant, however, assumes claimant to be a corporation, and then contends that a corporation cannot swear; that it must necessarily act through some one as its agent. This is true, and it follows that, where an incorporated company presents a claim against the estate of a deceased person, an averment of the fact that claimant is a corporation constitutes a sufficient reason why the affidavit is not made by the claimant. The affidavit before us does not disclose the capacity or character in which claimant appears; there is no statement in it from which we can conclude that Maier Packing Company is an incorporated company, and, in the absence of some averment setting forth such fact, we cannot assume that it is a corporation. The affidavit is defective in not assigning some reason which would relieve claimant from making it. Where the claimant is a corporation, it should appear from the affidavit that the person acting on its behalf is an officer thereof, presumed from his official position to have sufficient knowledge of its affairs; or, if made by other than such official, it should contain averments tending to show, when he swears that there are no offsets to his knowledge, that the nature of his relation to the company is of a character calculated to place him in possession of the requisite information upon the subject. Where the affidavit is made by an individual, who bases his claim upon transactions had with deceased, the law imputes to him knowledge of the truth of the averments contained in his affidavit. When made by another on his behalf, such person should, in addition to averring that he has no knowledge of any offsets, aver facts showing that he was in a position to know of them if any existed. These claims, when allowed, approved, and filed, partake of the nature of a judgment, and as such are to be paid in due course of administration, and the affidavit should set forth facts sufficient to at least make out a prima facie showing that the claim is justly due from the estate over and above all offsets.

We have examined the authorities cited by appellant; but, in view of the decision in the case of Perkins v. Onyett, supra, as well as the evident purpose of the section, we must hold that they are inapplicable to this case.

We find it impossible to reconcile the provisions of this affidavit with the requirements of the statute, and the judgment appealed from is therefore affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

MARSHUTZ v. SELTZOR et al. (Civ. 310.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 4, 1907. Rehearing Denied March 30, 1907; Denied by Supreme Court May 10, 1907.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—TRIAL BY COURT—FINDINGS.

A general finding of the court that the promissory note mentioned in the cross-complaint was barred by the statutes of the state, together with a finding of fact that the "claim of the defendant, * * * under the mortgage security so assigned to him is over 40 years past due, and has not been prosecuted in any way until the time of the filing of said cross-complaint," is sufficient to show that the note and the mortgage securing it was barred by Code Civ. Proc. § 337, providing that "an action on any contract * * * founded upon an instrument in writing" shall be brought within four years.

2. QUIETING TITLE—AFFIRMATIVE RELIEF TO DEFENDANT—EFFECT OF BAR BY LIMITATIONS.

A mortgagee, after the mortgage debt has been barred by the statute of limitations, cannot, on a cross-complaint in an action to quiet title to the land covered by the mortgage, obtain affirmative relief by setting up such outlawed mortgage.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Quieting Title, § 101.]

3. SAME — HEARING — FINDINGS — SUFFICIENCY.

In an action to quiet title to land, the court found that plaintiff obtained title in 1883 deraigned by mesne conveyances from the land commissioners of the state, that he entered into possession under such title, and for 18 years prior to the action had been in actual possession, holding the premises adverse to all the world, and had paid all taxes thereon since June, 1883, and that at the time of the commencement of the action he was the owner and seized in fee of the premises. Held to sustain a judgment quieting plaintiff's title against an outlawed mortgage, which was not proved to have ever been a lien upon plaintiff's title.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by L. C. Marshutz against Edward Seltzor and J. G. Klumpke. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Klumpke appeals. Affirmed.

R. H. Countryman, for appellant. R. Masson Smith, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought this action December 6, 1901, against defendants to quiet his title to beach and water lot No. 763, situate in the city and county of San Francisco. The complaint is in the usual form, and alleges that plaintiff is the owner and seized in fee of the described premises, and that defendants claim some estate or interest therein. Defendant Klumpke answered, and besides denying the title of plaintiff set up by way of answer and as a defense that on the 1st day of April, 1854, James C. Cary was the owner of an undivided one-half interest in the said lot, and on said day executed to one Edward F. Seltzor a mortgage of his interest in said lot to secure the payment of his promissory note to said Seltzor for $2,000, payable eight months after date thereof (April 1, 1854), with interest at 3 per cent. per month. Mortgage was duly recorded April 3, 1854, and no part of the principal and interest has ever been paid. The note and mortgage are alleged to have been assigned to defendant Klumpke by Seltzor for value February 4, 1859, and the assignment duly recorded on same day. Defendant Klumpke, in a cross-complaint, set up the same matters, and prayed, in the usual form, that his said mortgage be foreclosed. Plaintiff answered Klumpke's cross-complaint, and, among other things, pleaded that said cause of action was barred by the statute of the state of California, "and particularly by section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and also by sections 319 and 343 of said Code of Civil Procedure." The court at the conclusion of the trial made findings, and entered a judgment quieting plaintiff's title as against Klumpke, and denied Klumpke any relief upon his cross-complaint, having found that the note and mortgage were barred by the statute of limitations. Defendant moved for a new trial, which being denied, he appealed from the order as well as from the judgment.

Appellant insists that the court should have directed a foreclosure of his mortgage, and in any event should not have quieted plaintiff's title as against appellant. First, as to the foreclosure of the mortgage, appellant urges that the plea of the statute is defective, and that the findings thereon are insufficient. In this he is mistaken. The answer to the cross-complaint distinctly alleges that the cause of action is barred by the provisions of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is the appropriate section to plead. The court found that the promissory note mentioned in the cross-complaint is and was "barred by the statutes of the state of California," but did not specify by what section of the Code, and counsel now insist that this is not sufficient. But, in addition to the general finding, the court also found "that said claim of the defendant Klumpke, under the mortgage security so assigned to him, is over 40 years past due, and has not been prosecuted in any way until the time of the filing of said cross-complaint." This is such a finding of fact as necessarily shows that the action on the note and mortgage was barred by the section pleaded.

Further, it may be observed that the cross-complaint on its face shows the action therein set forth to be barred, and plaintiff might have raised the point by demurrer. By pleading the bar in his answer to the cross-complaint, plaintiff gave notice of his intention to stand upon the bar, that was shown to exist upon the face of appellant's pleading, and it is at least doubtful whether or not the court was required in such a case to make a finding of the fact. There was no issue as to the existence of the fact.

Appellant's main contention, however, is that the court should have ordered the mortgage foreclosed, notwithstanding that it was long since barred by the statute. In this connection appellant concedes that he could not have enforced his claim if he had brought the action to foreclose, as plaintiff, but insists that, where a plaintiff brings an action to quiet his title against a mortgage, the mortgagee may obtain a decree of foreclosure on an outlawed mortgage. It is true that a mortgagor, or the successor in interest of such mortgagor with notice of the mortgage, cannot obtain a decree quieting his title against the mortgagee, without paying the unpaid but outlawed mortgage debt (Grant v. Burr, 54 Cal. 298; De Cazara v. Orena, 80 Cal. 132, 22 Pac. 74; Brandt v. Thompson, 91 Cal. 458, 27 Pac. 763; Boyce v. Fisk, 110 Cal. 107, 42 Pac. 473; Hall v. Arnott, 80 Cal. 348, 22 Pac. 200; Spect v. Spect, 88 Cal. 437, 26 Pac. 203, 13 L. R. A. 137, 22 Am. St. Rep. 314; Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225); but it does not follow from this that the defendant mortgagee can, upon a cross-complaint setting up such outlawed mortgage, obtain affirmative relief. This question was presented in Booth v. Hoskins, supra. Booth sued Hoskins to quiet his title, and Hoskins answered, and by way of cross-complaint set up a deed from Booth to Hoskins, and claimed title thereunder. Plaintiff answered the cross-complaint, and set up that the deed was intended as a mortgage to secure the payment of $408 loaned to plaintiff, and that the debt thus created was before the commencement of the action barred by the statute of limitations. The trial court entered a decree foreclosing the mortgage, which was on appeal reversed. After deciding that the deed was intended as a mortgage, the court said: "The next question is, Was the defendant's cause of action to recover back his money barred by the statute of limitations? We think it was. * * * The defendant's right to recover the money due him being barred, he was not entitled to have his mortgage foreclosed." The judgment of foreclosure was reversed. In Spect v. Spect, supra, it is said: "The mortgagee, after the mortgage debt has been barred by the statute of limitations, cannot by any affirmative proceedings on his part invoke the aid of the court for the collection of his debt. * * *" A proceeding under a cross-complaint to foreclose a mortgage is an affirmative proceeding to collect the debt secured by the mortgage. This disposes of the contention that the court should have entered a decree upon the findings for a foreclosure of the mortgage. No such decree should have been entered. Booth v. Hoskins, supra.

It is next urged that on the findings the court should not have rendered a decree quieting plaintiff's title against appellant, but should either have denied plaintiff any relief, or provided in the decree that his title be quieted only on his paying, within some designated time, the amount unpaid on the mortgage. It might be suggested in this connection that, inasmuch as by setting up the mortgage by way of cross-complaint and asking for a foreclosure, appellant compelled a finding that his mortgage was barred, which resulted in a denial to him of any relief thereon, he has practically caused the removal of any cloud that might exist on plaintiff's title by reason of the existence of such mortgage. The finding that the mortgage is barred, and the denial of any affirmative relief thereon, would seem to be an effectual bar to any future action to enforce the mortgage. However, we do not think that it is true that the findings in this case do not support the judgment as rendered. The law undoubtedly is that a mortgagor, or his successor in interest with notice of the mortgage, cannot quiet his title against the owner of the outstanding mortgage, even though the mortgage be barred, without paying the mortgage debt. All the cases cited to us are of that nature. But the findings in this case do not bring it within this rule. It is not alleged in the answer that plaintiff, or any grantor of plaintiff, made the mortgage set up by Klumpke. The mortgage was made by one Cary, and no attempt is made in the answer to connect the plaintiff with Cary. While it is alleged and found that Cary owned an interest in the lot in 1854, when he executed the mortgage, it is not alleged that plaintiff's title was acquired from Cary or was derived from him in any way. The findings, on the contrary, show that plaintiff obtained title in 1883, deraigned by mesne conveyances from the land commissioners of the state of California, and that he entered into possession under such title, and for 18 years past has been in the actual possession of the premises, holding the same adverse to all the world, and has paid all taxes levied and assessed thereon since June, 1883. It is expressly found that at the time of the commencement of the action plaintiff was the owner and seized in fee of the premises. These findings justified a decree quieting the title of plaintiff against an outlawed mortgage, which is not found to have ever been a lien upon the title of plaintiff. If the lien of appellant's mortgage was ever a lien upon plaintiff's title, the burden was upon the defendant to show it. He has not done it.

We have not overlooked the argument of appellant that because it is found that Cary owned an interest in the premises in 1854, which is prior to the date of the deed from the state land commissioners to the grantor of plaintiff, we must infer that plaintiff's title was derived from Cary, or is in some way subordinate to the title of Cary. While this condition suggests some uncertainty as to the facts, any uncertainty in findings must be construed so as to uphold the judgment, rather than to defeat it. Breeze v. Brooks, 97 Cal. 72, 31 Pac. 742, 22 L. R. A. 257. Certain it is that justice does not demand that we construe uncertainties in findings so as to give any sort of vitality to a claim 45 years past due, and on its face bearing interest at 3 per cent. per month, and for which (as appears by the findings) the present holder paid nothing.

Appellant has not called our attention to any error occurring at the trial, but has confined himself to an attack upon the judgment as not supported by the findings.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

CRABTREE v. POTTER et ux. (L. A. 1,726.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1907.)

1. TRUSTS — CONSTRUCTIVE — FRAUD IN ACQUISITION OF PROPERTY.

In an action by a daughter against her parents to recover possession of land, where a cross-complaint was filed averring that the mother owned the land in question subject to a mortgage; that defendants were old and infirm, had no property save this land; that it was difficult for them to make a living; that plaintiff, their daughter, promised that if defendants would convey the land to her she would pay the mortgage, and defendants should retain the premises as their home as long as they lived, and they, through having confidence in her and relying on her statements and promises, executed a deed conveying the property to her; that the statements of plaintiff were false, and made with the intent to deceive; and that plaintiff had violated her trust —the court found the facts as alleged in the cross-complaint. Held, that these findings warranted a decree that plaintiff held the land in trust for the mother during the life of the mother, and should execute a deed conveying the land to her for life.

2. SAME—PAROL EVIDENCE.

Constructive trusts are created by operation of law, and are expressly excepted from the provisions of Civ. Code, § 852, requiring trusts in land to be created by written instruments, and may be established by parol.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by Mrs. H. Crabtree against Z. M. Potter and wife. From a judgment for defendants and an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

M. C. Hester, for appellant. Bower & Hutchinson, for respondents.

LORIGAN, J. This is a controversy between daughter and parents over a couple of lots of land in Hazard's East Side addition in Los Angeles. The plaintiff filed an ordinary complaint in ejectment to recover possession of the land. Defendants, by answer, denied her ownership or right to its possession, and also filed a cross-complaint, the essential averments of which were: That defendants were husband and wife and purchased the property in question in 1900 for $400, taking title for the benefit of the marital community in the name of the wife; that on July 19, 1901, there was a mortgage debt upon the lots for $150, being the balance of the purchase price; that defendants were at that date old and infirm and financially poor, having no property save these lots, and it was difficult for them to make enough money to support their family, and it was a matter of struggle and self-denial for them to make payments on the mortgage; that plaintiff, their daughter, proposed to them that, if they would convey said property to her, she would pay the balance of said mortgage, and defendants should have and retain said premises as their home as long as they lived; that feeling they would thus be relieved from the burden of making payments on said mortgage, and also be secured in a home for life, they consented to her propositon; that they had confidence in her, and trusted and relied on her statements and promises, and so confiding and trusting, and induced to do so solely by her promises, they, on July 19, 1901, executed a deed conveying the property to her; that said property was then worth $800; that said statements of plaintiff were false and fraudulent, and made by plaintiff to defendants with intent to deceive and defraud them out of their property; that plaintiff did not intend to perform the same, but intended when they were made to deceive and defraud the defendants; that plaintiff has violated her trust, and seeks to eject defendants from the said premises. The cross-complaint closes with a prayer that the deed to plaintiff be set aside and annulled, that it be decreed that plaintiff holds the property in trust for defendants, and for general relief. Plaintiff, by answer to the cross-complaint, practically denied all the allegations therein, except as to the execution of the deed, and alleged that all the money that was paid by defendants for said property was money she had loaned her mother for that purpose. She further alleged that about July 19, 1901, her mother applied to her for a further loan to make payment on said property, which she refused to let her have; that her mother then offered to deed her the property if she would pay off the balance of the mortgage and release her from the loans theretofore made to her by plaintiff; that, plaintiff consenting to do so, defendants deeded her the property, and she released them from said loan and assumed and paid off the mortgage. Upon all the issues made by the cross-complaint and answer thereto, the court made findings in favor of defendants, and a judgment and decree were entered to the effect that the title to the lots involved was vested in the plaintiff in trust for the defendant Anna L. Potter, during her lifetime; that said Anna L. Potter owned an estate for life therein, and directed that plaintiff within 30 days, or on her default a commissioner designated in the decree for that purpose, should execute a deed conveying to said Anna L. Potter an estate for life in said premises. Plaintiff moved for a new trial, which was denied, and this appeal is taken from the order denying said motion and from the judgment.

In examining the points urged by appellant in his brief, we do not understand that he makes any claim of error under his appeal from the judgment. His attack seems to be devoted exclusively against the findings, upon the ground that some of them are not supported by the evidence. It is true that he claims the court erred "in adjudging that plaintiff have no relief by her action," and "in decreeing that the title to said property is vested in plaintiff in trust for defendant Anna L. Potter during her life, and that she owns a life estate in said property"; but after he states these points, and proceeds to elaborate them, his discussion is devoted entirely to an effort to show that the evidence in the case did not justify the findings made by the court, not that the findings did not support the judgment. If, however, appellant did intend, notwithstanding that his discussion would indicate differently, to attack the judgment upon the ground that it was not supported by the findings, we think it is without merit. The court specifically found all of the facts alleged in the cross-complaint as the defendants alleged them, and against the facts set up in the answer of plaintiff to it, except as to the payment by her of the mortgage. Among these were findings that defendants on the date of the conveyance to plaintiff were the owners of the lots in question; that they reposed full confidence in the plaintiff, their daughter; that the conveyance to her was made by them solely upon the conditions and in consideration of her promises and agreements with them to pay the balance of the mortgage on the property, and defendants should have and retain said premises as their home as long as said Anna L. Potter lived; and that the latter promise was made by plaintiff without any intention of performing it, and was fraudulent. These findings conclusively show that the conveyance of the property from defendants to plaintiff was obtained by fraud upon her part inducing it, and under such circumstances the law raises a constructive trust in favor of the defendants. Such a trust was decreed upon these findings, and there can be no question but that the decree is fully supported by them. This proposition is so firmly established that any discussion of it is unnecessary. It will be found fully considered in Brison v. Brison, 75 Cal. 525, 17 Pac. 689, 7 Am. St. Rep. 189; Nordholt v. Nordholt, 87 Cal. 552, 26 Pac. 599, 22 Am. St. Rep. 268; Hays v. Gloster, 88 Cal. 560, 26 Pac. 367; Hayne v. Herman, 97 Cal. 259, 32 Pac. 171; Jones v. Jones, 140 Cal. 590, 74 Pac. 143; Becker v. Schwerdtle, 141 Cal. 389, 74 Pac. 1029. Upon the authority of these cases, the findings fully warranted the decree made by the trial court in the case at bar.

On the point of insufficiency of evidence to sustain the findings, it is enough to say that, if there was not a decided preponderance of evidence in favor of every fact alleged by defendants and found by the court to be true, there was, at least, such a conflict in the evidence as precludes any disturbance of the findings by this court.

There was no error in admitting parol evidence to establish the trust as alleged in the complaint. What was sought to be established was a constructive trust, and the statutory provision (Civ. Code, § 852), declaring that a trust in lands can only be created by an instrument in writing, has no application to constructive trusts. Such trusts are created by operation of law, and are expressly excepted from the Code provision referred to requiring trusts in land to be created by written instrument, and may always be established by parol. This proposition is likewise clearly settled by the authorities above cited.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

1. PLEADING—AMENDMENT—LEAVE OF COURT—TERMS OF GRANTING LEAVE—PROPER CHARGES.

Under Code Civ. Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Inyo County; Walter A. Lamar, Judge.

Action by Thomas Williams against Fritz Myer. From an order denying a motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

P. W. Forbes and Wm. D. Dehy (P. H. Mack, of counsel), for appellant. S. E. Vermilyea and Ben H. Yandell, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order denying the motion of plaintiff for a new trial.

The action was brought by plaintiff to quiet his title to 100 inches of water of Pine creek, in Inyo county, measured under a four-inch pressure, and conducted through dams, ditches, natural channels, and water courses to and upon the lands of plaintiff; said 100 inches being alleged to be one-half of 200 inches under said pressure, diverted by plaintiff and the grantor of defendant, and equally divided by them and used on their respective lands. In addition, plaintiff prayed for an injunction restraining defendant from diverting more than one-half of said waters, and for damages to his crops by reason of the alleged diversion by defendant of all of said waters. Defendant, by answer, denied the right of plaintiff to any of the waters of Pine creek, or to damages for the alleged diversion by him, and by cross-complaint alleged an exclusive prescriptive right acquired by his grantors' predecessors and himself to about 250 inches, measured under a four-inch pressure, of the waters of said Pine creek, and asked for a decree quieting his title thereto. On November 20, 1899 (the original complaint having been filed February 1, 1899), the cause was at issue, and thereafter was set down for trial on March 13, 1900; the trial to be had before a jury as advisory to the court on questions of fact. On the day set for the trial, a jury was impaneled and sworn, and thereafter the plaintiff moved the court for leave to file an amended complaint. The difference between the proposed amended complaint and the original was that in the original complaint the appropriated waters in litigation were stated to be "the waters of Pine creek," while in the amended complaint it is alleged that plaintiff had diverted from the natural channel of Pine creek more than 100 inches of the waters thereof, measured under a four-inch pressure, and by means of dams, ditches, natural channels, and water courses had conducted the said waters of Pine creek from their natural channel to the natural channel of Horton creek, and mingled the said waters with certain surplus waters flowing and being in the latter creek, and from thence conducted the said mingled and combined waters through the natural channel of said Horton creek to a dam constructed by plaintiff across the channel of said Horton creek, a short distance west of plaintiff's lands, where they were there equally divided between plaintiff and defendant, and from thence by ditches constructed by plaintiff he conducted 100 inches of the said mingled and combined waters to his land. In effect, the amended complaint differed from the original only in substituting "the mingled and combined waters of Pine creek and Horton creek" for "the waters of Pine creek." The defendant objected to the plaintiff being permitted to file the proposed amended complaint on various grounds: Laches in presenting it for filing, want of notice of the motion to be permitted to do so, and that the amended complaint raised a new and distinct issue for the trial of which defendant had had no opportunity to prepare. The court held that the plaintiff should be allowed to file said amended complaint, but only on terms, and the court stated the terms as follows: "Plaintiff to pay to the clerk of this court for the county the per diem and mileage paid by it and due from the county, to jurors summoned for this trial, amounting to the sum of $240.90; plaintiff to pay to defendant the sum paid by defendant to the clerk of this court for the fees of jurors, amounting to the sum of $24; plaintiff to pay to the defendant the sum of $56.50, expenses incurred by the defendant in obtaining the attendance of witnesses; plaintiff to pay to defendant $100 as compensation to defendant for expenses he has incurred in employment of attorneys herein, his own expense in attending this trial, and the expense he has been to on account of this trial, and that cannot be easily determined by the court or shown by the defendant"—in all $421.40. The plaintiff did not accept the terms, and hence did not file the amended complaint. He excepted, however, to each and every of the terms and conditions imposed by the court, and likewise to the ruling of the court imposing them, and the correctness of the action of the trial court on these matters is the question for present consideration.

Undoubtedly, the court had the right in allowing the plaintiff to file his amended complaint to impose terms upon him. It is provided that in the discretion of the trial court such amendments may be permitted upon such terms as may be just. Code Civ. Proc. § 473. The discretion to allow the amendment was exercised by the trial court. It determined that a proper case for permitting the amendment to be filed was presented, and that no valid objection to the character of the proposed amendment existed. Whether that discretion was properly exercised is not a matter of concern here. The only point is whether in exercising such discretion the court imposed such terms as were just. It is insisted by appellant that the court was not warranted in imposing any terms at all. We cannot agree with him. It is true, as contended by plaintiff, that there was no express showing by affidavit that the filing of the amended complaint would occasion any delay in proceeding with the cause, or necessitate a continuance of the trial, or require the presence of witnesses other than those in attendance, or entail any additional expense to meet the new issue presented. But under the circumstances we think no such showing was necessary. The motion of plaintiff was made in open court after the jury had been sworn and the trial about to be proceeded with. Without any notice of such application, plaintiff sought permission to file his amended complaint, on the ground that the original complaint of plaintiff did not fully state his cause of action. As presented, the amended complaint raised a new issue, upon which certainly different evidence would have to be presented than under the original pleading. The questions of the right of plaintiff to have his motion granted and the effect upon the progress of the trial by permitting it were immediately taken up and considered by the court, and in the presentation of the objections of defendant (which plaintiff did not question nor assert anything to the contrary), it was insisted that, if the amendment were allowed, the defendant would not be able to go on with the trial, and that a continuance would have to be had. This was a sufficient showing to invoke the discretion of the court, and warranted it in imposing such terms upon the plaintiff as the justice of the case required.

Now, as to whether the terms imposed on plaintiff were just, because, while under the statute the court is vested with discretion in imposing them, it is limited in the imposition to such only as are just. By this is meant that the terms imposed shall be such as will be just, considering the circumstances under which the amendment is asked, and particularly as between the parties to the action; such as will compensate the party for the loss or inconvenience which he will suffer by granting the application to amend. In imposing such terms, it is not to be understood that the court is constrained to allowing a party only such costs as might be properly taxed in the case. A reasonable discretion may be exercised in compensating him for expenses to which he has been put, although they may not be recoverable as costs. Pomeroy v. Bell, 118 Cal. 635, 638, 50 Pac. 683. But, whatever the terms, they should be such as have relation to expenses or charges incurred by the parties to the trial, or directly with reference to it, and be imposed with a view mainly of compensating the party prejudiced by granting the amendment. Within this view, it was proper for the court to require the payment by plaintiff of the fees paid by defendant for the per diem of jurors impaneled and sworn to try the case, and equally proper to require payment of the expenses incurred by the defendant in obtaining the attendance of witnesses. These items were such as would be ultimately taxable as costs should defendant prevail in the action. Nor was it improper to require the payment of $100 to defendant as compensation for expenses incurred in the employment of attorneys and his own expenses in attending the trial. While these were not taxable charges, they come within the rule of Pomeroy v. Bell, supra. Payment of all these charges mentioned we think was such as, in a reasonable exercise of its discretion, the court was warranted in imposing upon defendant, and appeared to be just.

But we can find no warrant in law for imposing on the defendant, in addition to these terms, the payment to the clerk of the court of the per diem and mileage paid by and due from the county to jurors summoned for the trial, amounting to $240.90. These were the expenses of the general panel of jurors, and under no circumstances could be considered as costs in the action or taxable as such. It was part of the governmental duty of the county of Inyo, in the administration of justice therein, to furnish to litigants in its courts, entitled to have their cases tried before a jury, a panel consisting of sufficient competent persons from which the litigants might select a trial jury. The expense of securing the attendance on court of that panel is paid by the county as one of the general expenses of government. When a trial jury has been selected from the panel, the liability of the litigants to pay that jury then attaches; but it only attaches then as far as the members of the trial jury are concerned. As to the rest of the panel, the litigants never were liable for any expenses relative to them. In the case at bar, the court made an order directing the plaintiff to pay the per diem of the jurors selected to try the case, and as a matter of justice this should have been all, as to the jurors, which he should have been required to pay. The expense of providing the general panel was not an expense of defendant, and, of course, payment was not directed to be made to defendant, but to the county of Inyo, which was not a party to the action. It was as much the governmental duty of the county of Inyo to furnish the panel of jurors, and pay the expenses of such as the litigants did not select to try their case, as it was to furnish a courthouse and court for the administration of justice, and the court could have as consistently charged the plaintiff with a proportionate share of the salary of the judge as with the expenses incurred by the county in providing the general panel out of which the trial jurors were selected. The matter here under consideration does not present a situation where a jury trial was demanded, a panel provided, and then an amendment allowed under circumstances which necessitated a continuance of the trial without the selection of a trial jury at all, and where the amendment is granted on condition that the moving party pay the expenses of the attendance of the panel. See Baumberger v. Arff, 96 Cal. 261, 31 Pac. 53. Here a trial jury had been selected from the panel, and all members of the panel other than those selected must have been discharged from attendance, or excused till some future date. In any event, as far as the case at bar was concerned, the panel had been discharged for all purposes. No amendment or continuance of the case could possibly affect the panel or the relation of the court, the litigants, or selected jury to it. It was at an end for all purposes as to them. Under such circumstances, we can perceive no reason, and none has been suggested, why plaintiff should have been charged with reimbursing the county of Inyo for governmental expense. Ample provision seems to have been made to reimburse defendant for expenses incurred by him and taxable as costs and for expenses not so taxable, which was all proper and just. But to tax plaintiff for expenses incurred by the county of Inyo for a panel of jurors which it was its duty to furnish, and which had served its purpose and been discharged before the motion to amend was made, and after a jury had been selected from it, a panel for the expenses of returning which neither party was liable, and the existence of which could not enter into or affect the motion to amend, and could have no relevancy to any future progress of the trial, was, we think, improper. It was in no sense the imposition of a term which under the circumstances, or as between the parties, was just, but was more in the nature of a fine or penalty imposed on plaintiff which the law does not sanction or sustain.

The court having imposed this improper charge upon plaintiff, in addition to proper charges imposed, it was not incumbent on plaintiff to offer to pay the amounts which he deemed were properly assessed, in order to avail himself of the error of the trial court on this appeal. It is the duty of the lower court to impose as a condition only just terms. The terms here imposed were in the aggregate, and a portion improper, and the plaintiff was not required to attempt a segregation of the proper from the improper, in the face of the ruling of the court that all were properly imposed and must be paid as a condition to granting leave to amend. Nor is it of any moment that the court might have denied the motion unconditionally. Assuming it would have been warranted in doing so, it did not. It exercised its discretion in favor of the amendment, and, having done so, it could only impose just terms therefor.

The only ground upon which this court would be precluded from reversing for such error would be if it appeared from the record that, notwithstanding the error, the appellant was not injured or prejudiced thereby. It is undoubtedly true that, though an error be committed, it may still be harmless; as, for instance, it may appear from an examination of the record that if the amendment had been allowed it could have been of no benefit to the plaintiff because, upon the trial of the case, it would appear that he never could have availed himself of it, or where it appeared upon the trial that, notwithstanding the amendment was refused, the case was still tried upon the theory that it had been allowed. But on examination of the record before us we cannot satisfy ourselves that the error of the trial court was harmless. In itself the issue as to the appropriation of the litigated waters presented by the amended complaint was a more enlarged issue, involving a more substantial right than presented by the original complaint—a difference between the appropriation and use of the waters of Pine creek, and the appropriation and use of the mingled and combined waters of Pine creek and Horton creek. It must be assumed as to this amendment that it was sought in good faith, and that the verified allegations in respect to the appropriation of said combined waters were true. This being so, it is quite evident that there could be no trial of the cause on its merits, nor determination of plaintiff's rights therein, by limiting the inquiry to the appropriation of the waters of Pine creek, because plaintiff did not claim a right by appropriation to the waters of Pine creek alone, but to the mingled and combined waters of Pine creek and Horton creek.

In addition to this, during the actual trial of the case, while plaintiff, in introducing his evidence, was necessarily precluded, under the ruling of the court refusing permission to file his amended complaint, from submitting evidence as to any appropriation by him of the combined waters of Pine and Horton creeks, defendant, on cross-examination of some of the witnesses of plaintiff, showed that the lands of plaintiff were in fact watered by the mingled and combined waters of these creeks appropriated by plaintiff. There was also evidence tending to show the same fact brought out by defendant in producing evidence to sustain the allegations of his cross-complaint. Having this evidence in view, the plaintiff at the close of his case, and also at the close of the case when all the evidence was in, moved the court again to be permitted to file the amended complaint in order that the pleadings and proof might conform. Both applications were refused, and plaintiff excepted. Waiving consideration of the alleged error predicated on these refusals, it is quite apparent, from the evidence to which we have referred, that the court in originally denying leave to plaintiff to file his amended complaint, and confining the parties to litigate an appropriation of the waters of Pine creek alone, precluding him to his prejudice from having determined the real and substantial claim upon which he relied, namely, a right to the mingled and combined waters of Pine and Horton creeks.

It is further insisted by appellant, aside from the claim of error we have been considering, that the court erred in overruling objections to questions asked the plaintiff on cross-examination. There was no error in permitting the inquiry made. The plaintiff had testified in chief as to a division and use of water between himself and one J. W. Dickenson; the latter using his share of the water on what was known as the "Hank Horn" land. The objection was mainly that there was no evidence connecting defendant with this land. We think, however, plaintiff's direct examination sufficiently showed it for the purpose of the cross-examination. In any event, it was subsequently shown, so that the error, if any, was immaterial and harmless.

Appellant also attacks many of the findings of the court on the ground that they are not sustained by the evidence. These findings all relate to waters of Pine creek alone, their appropriation by defendant, the extent of his rights therein, and against the right of plaintiff to any claim or interest thereto. As we will have to reverse the order denying a new trial on account of the error of the court in accompanying its leave to plaintiff to amend by the imposition of illegal terms, we see no useful purpose to be subserved by discussing the findings. In view of a new trial, when other findings may be prepared, it would be improper to discuss the evidence with reference to those here presented, which must fall with the reversal of the order. To discuss them would only result in commenting on, contrasting, and expressing our views on the testimony, matters which, in view of another trial, should particularly be avoided. And, in as far as we have referred to the testimony, we are not to be understood as holding that it was sufficient to sustain the claim of plaintiff as to his alleged appropriation of the combined waters of the two creeks. We refer to it solely as tending to support his claim that only by allowing the proposed amendment could his rights to the waters in dispute, combined and flowing in those two creeks, be determined.

The order denying the motion for a new trial is reversed, and the cause remanded. As the reversal of the order vacates the judgment, the trial court is directed to allow either party to amend his pleadings.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.

HENDERSON v. LOS ANGELES TRACTION CO. (L. A. 1,555.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 21, 1907.)

1. STREET RAILROADS — INJURIES TO TRAVELERS—INSTRUCTIONS—CARE REQUIRED.

An instruction, in an action for injuries in a collision with a street car, that it was the duty of the operator of the railway to exercise "ordinary care" and caution in the management and operation of the car to avoid inflicting injury on a person traveling on or using a street on which the car was operated, was not objectionable for failure to require the use of "great care."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Street Railroads, § 261.]

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY TO REQUEST.

Plaintiff cannot object that an instruction correctly announcing the law was too general, where he presented no requests for an instruction making it more definite and specific.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 628.]

3. STREET RAILROADS—INJURY TO TRAVELERS — COLLISION — ORDINARY CARE — INSTRUCTION.

In an action for injuries to a traveler in a collision with a street car, the court charged that a person operating a street car was bound to anticipate the presence of vehicles and pedestrians on the highway; that he should be watchful to see that the way was clear and to regulate his speed accordingly; that a speed of eight miles an hour would be negligence, unless it was a safe rate under all the circumstances; and that the motorman was bound to run his car consistent with proper care for the safety of persons using the street, and for the safety of plaintiff. Held, that such instruction sufficiently charged what was required of defendant in order to exercise ordinary care.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Street Railroads, §§ 172, 174, 175.]

4. TRIAL — INSTRUCTIONS — REFUSAL OF REQUEST.

Where, in an action for injuries to plaintiff in a collision with a street car, an instruction given properly submitted to the jury the question of plaintiff's negligence in not leaving the wagon in which he was seated, before the collision, it was not error for the court to refuse an instruction on such issue in the language of the request.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 651-659.]

5. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—DUTY TO REQUEST.

Where plaintiff's requested charge did not require that plaintiff's negligence should be found to have been the proximate cause of his injury in order to preclude his recovery, plaintiff could not object on appeal that the court's modification of such instruction did not contain such requirement.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 628.]

6. SAME.

Where, in an action for injuries in a street car collision, none of the instructions requested or given remotely suggested a submission of the last clear chance doctrine, plaintiff could not object on appeal that a modification of a requested charge, submitting plaintiff's contributory negligence, was erroneous, as in effect withdrawing such doctrine from the jury.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 628.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Charles Henderson against the Los Angeles Traction Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

D. M. Hammack and Hunsaker & Britt, for appellant. E. E. Millikin (E. W. Camp, of counsel), for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff through a collision between an electric car of defendant and a wagon in which plaintiff was seated. The jury returned a verdict for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from an order denying his motion for a new trial.

Plaintiff, a plumber's help, 23 years of age, who was accustomed to and understood the driving and handling of horses, on the morning of July 2, 1901, accompanied his employer in an ordinary one-horse uncovered plumber's wagon to a residence on the west side of Georgia street, in the city of Los Angeles, which his employer entered to examine its plumbing, leaving plaintiff in charge of the horse and wagon. Georgia street is a street 40 feet wide between the curbs, running in a northerly and southerly direction, and defendant on the day of the collision operated a double-track electric railway over it; the distance between the curb and the west side of defendant's track being 13 feet. The residence at which they called was on Georgia street, between Fifteenth and Sixteenth streets, and, soon after his employer had gotten out of the wagon and entered the house, plaintiff, on account of a fear entertained by him that the horse would become frightened by the cars of defendant moving along Georgia street, drove off of that street on to Fifteenth street, remained there some time, and then drove back and again took up his position in front of the residence where his employer was engaged. When plaintiff returned he drove up close to the west curb of the street; the rear end of the wagon being nearer to the track of defendant than its front. The horse faced north, and plaintiff sat in the wagon holding the lines. This was the situation when a car of defendant approached traveling from the north along Orchard street towards the point where plaintiff was stationed and where the collision occurred. As to such collision: According to the testimony of plaintiff, he first discovered the approach of the car which occasioned it when distant a little more than 300 feet from him; that it was then moving towards him on the west track at a high rate of speed; that when it approached to within something over 200 feet from where he was the horse he was holding became restless and commenced backing; that despite plaintiff's efforts to prevent it the horse backed the rear right wheel of the wagon on to the west track of defendant's road, where it was struck by the car, causing plaintiff to be thrown out of the wagon to the ground and injured; that the horse and wagon were plainly visible to the motorman of defendant from the time the car turned into Georgia street from Thirteenth street (several blocks away); and that the motorman made no effort to check the high rate of speed of the car until it was almost on top of the wagon. The evidence on the part of the defendant tended to show that the motorman did not discover the horse and wagon until the car was something over 100 feet from it, and that the horse did not begin to back until the car had approached within 20 feet of him. There was some other evidence that the horse showed signs of being frightened when the car was within 40 or 50 feet of him, but did not commence backing until it got nearer. There was also evidence that the car during its entire movement along Georgia street was going at a speed of seven or eight miles an hour, and that as soon as the motorman saw the horse begin to back he applied the brakes and reversed the current, and used all available means to stop the car. This is a sufficient statement of the evidence in the case for the purpose of considering the grounds urged by appellant for a reversal, which are confined solely to alleged errors on the part of the trial court as to instructions.

1. It is insisted that the court erred in instructing the jury: "That it is the duty of the operator of a street railway to exercise ordinary care and caution in the management and operation of its car to avoid inflicting injury upon a person traveling upon or using the street upon which the car is being operated. * * *"—and in refusing to give the instruction requested by plaintiff: "That the conductor and motorman in charge of the car of the defendant which collided with the wagon on which the plaintiff was seated were required to use great care to see that no injury was caused to persons or teams having business in the streets." We perceive no error committed by the court in its action as to these instructions. It is not the law that in the operation of a street railroad the operator is required to use great care to avoid injury to persons traveling on or using the streets over which the cars are operated. The operator of a street railroad over a street, and the traveler on or person using said street, are reciprocally bound to exercise that degree of care which a person of ordinary prudence would use under the same or similar circumstances, which is ordinary care only. This is the general rule laid down by text-writers on the subject, and we confine ourselves in the citation of authorities to the rule as applied in the operation of street railways alone. Nellis Street Railway, etc., Law, § 25, p. 303; Joyce on Electric Law, § 575. It is likewise the rule in jurisdictions other than our own as to the same subject. Pendleton Street R. R. Co. v. Shires, 18 Ohio St. 255; Gorman's Adm. v. Louisville Ry. Co. (Ky.) 72 S. W. 761; Stafford v. Chippewa E. R. Co., 110 Wis. 331, 85 N. W. 1036; Kube v. St. Louis Transit Co., 103 Mo. App. 382, 78 S. W. 55; Perras v. United Traction Company (Sup.) 84 N. Y. Supp. 992; West Chicago Railroad Company v. Wizeman, 83 Ill. App. 403. It is also the rule expressly laid down in this state. Section 1714, Civ. Code; Cunningham v. Los Angeles Railway Company, 115 Cal. 561, 47 Pac. 452; Harrington v. Los Angeles Railway Company, 140 Cal. 514, 74 Pac. 15.

It is insisted by appellant that the instruction, tendered by him and refused is supported by Mock v. Los Angeles Traction Company, 139 Cal. 616, 73 Pac. 455. It is true that in that case an instruction was approved which stated that ordinary care to be exercised by an electric street car line required "great care in keeping its appliances for stopping cars in good condition." The court said: As these cars cannot be operated upon the public street with safety unless this is done, "ordinary prudence requires that 'great care' should be exercised in that direction." It was, however, stated by the commissioner who wrote the opinion in that case that it was not essential to a disposition of the appeal before it that this instruction should be considered, and it was not, because the order granting a new trial was affirmed on other grounds, exclusive of any consideration of the correctness of the instruction at all. Under these circumstances, the language used by the court cannot be held to be an authoritative declaration of a rule of law as to the care to be exercised in the general operation of electric car lines, either as to the selection of appliances, or the active operation of the cars over the tracks. The rule as declared by the general authorities on the subject, and by the decisions of this court in cases involving the question as to the degree of care required, and to which we have referred, is that only ordinary care must be exercised—that degree of care which an ordinarily prudent person exercises in the operation of electric street car lines—and, if the language used in Mock v. Los Angeles Traction Company is to be considered as laying down a different rule, the decision is to that extent erroneous and is overruled. And as we read the other authorities cited by appellant in support of the instruction asked by it and refused, we do not understand them as laying down any different rule than that ordinary care must be exercised. They discuss and elaborate the proposition that the degree of vigilance and prudence to be exercised by one operating cars upon a street railroad depends upon the nature and character of the agencies, or instrumentalities employed in their propulsion, taking into consideration the time, place, and circumstances attending their operation. They lay down the rule, the justness and soundness of which none will question, that a higher degree of vigilance and caution in order to prevent accidents to travelers is exacted from those operating cars propelled by electricity than from those operating cars propelled by a less powerful agency and one more subservient to the will of the person in charge of the cars. This is in harmony with the familiar rule that the greater the danger to be apprehended the greater the vigilance to be exercised in guarding against it; but, because the degree of vigilance to be exercised in the operation of the cars must be greater in the one case than in the other, does not affect the standard under which the liability of the person operating the car is to be measured in the event of an accident. The standard remains the same. While a less degree of watchfulness and vigilance may be required of one operating cars moved by horse power than is required of one in control of cable cars, and a still greater degree of caution and vigilance required from those in control of electric cars, still, when the question of negligence in the operation of cars by any of these different modes or agencies arises, the same standard of accountability is applied, namely, was ordinary care being exercised by the person in control of the car at the time when his conduct relative to its operation is under consideration. No matter by what agency the car he is operating is propelled, whether by the now practically obsolete system of horse power, or by cable, or by electricity, he is not required, in its operation, to use the highest degree of care, nor is the duty cast on him to use great care, but he is only required to use ordinary care, and responsible only for his failure to do so.

The standard by which ordinary care is to be measured is not absolute, and in the case of the operation of street cars it must vary with circumstances attending their operation—the character of cars, the agency of propulsion, the locality in which they are operated, whether in the county or in a city, whether over much traveled or unfrequented streets, and the possibility or probability of danger attending their operation.

Taking these circumstances into consideration, it is quite apparent that the same degree of precaution, and the same pains to avoid accidents, are not required in the movement of a horse car as in that of an electric car. We take these systems simply as extremes for the purpose of illustration. The movement of a horse car being comparatively slow, and the car being readily in the control of the driver, the same degree of vigilance and caution in its operation would not be required, as in the case of an electric car, an instrument of greater weight and momentum, propelled with greater speed and more difficult to control. Danger is more probable in the operation of the one than in the other, and greater precautions are required to prevent injury. But these differences in the circumstances attending the operation of the cars on the different systems do not change the standard of accountability attending the operation of either. The standard to be applied when the question arises as to how either was being operated at a given time is: Was it being operated with ordinary care? The precautions which were required to be taken to comply with the standard may be greater in the one instance than in the other, but in either instance the standard is the same. In the case of the driver of the street car the question is: Considering the power by which his car was being moved and the circumstances attending his operation of it, did he exercise that care which an ordinarily prudent man would, with the same instrumentalities and under the same or similar circumstances, have exercised? In the case of the motorman, the same standard is applied, namely, considering the instrumentality under his control, its momentum, and speed capacity, did he exercise that degree of care with it which a person of ordinary prudence would have exercised with the same instrumentality under the same or similar circumstances? In either case the question is, was ordinary care used? This is the standard which, while the circumstances under which it is to be determined may be different, is the proper standard to be applied. Hence, when in the case at bar the court instructed the jury that in the operation of the electric car the motorman was only required to use ordinary care and caution, it stated the proper legal rule under which the liability of the defendant was to be measured.

It is insisted, however, that the definition of ordinary care as given by the court was too general, and did not tend to assist the jury in applying the particular circumstances in the case in determining whether such care had been exercised or not. We cannot assume, however, that when the court correctly instructed as to a rule of law that the jury was unable to apply it to the facts and circumstances surrounding the operation of the electric car and which were shown for the sole purpose of having them determine therefrom whether ordinary care was used or not. It is to be assumed that the jury understood the instruction and applied it to the evidence. If appellant thought the instruction was too general, he should have presented other instructions, which in his opinion would have made it more definite and specific. Besides this, when we take into consideration all the instructions given by the court, it appears therefrom that the court did instruct the jury as to what should be considered in determining what was "ordinary care" required to be exercised by defendant. It instructed them that a person operating a street car is bound to anticipate the presence of vehicles and pedestrians on the highway; that he should be watchful to see that the way is clear in which he is going, and regulate his speed accordingly; that a speed at the rate of eight miles an hour would be negligence, unless it was a safe rate under all the circumstances; that the motorman was bound to run his car consistent with proper care for the safety of persons using the street and for the safety of plaintiff. And, taking the instructions as a whole, it satisfactorily appears therefrom that the jury was instructed that whether the defendant exercised ordinary care or not was to be determined by all the facts and circumstances disclosed by the evidence in the case.

2. As to the next instruction complained of: The court instructed the jury that: "In determining whether or not the plaintiff was negligent, you should consider whether or not, under all the circumstances of the case, it was his duty, using ordinary care for his own safety, to have jumped from the wagon." This was, doubtless, given in place of an instruction tendered by plaintiff. Appellant complains because the instruction which was tendered by him on the subject was refused. While, without critically examining it, it would appear that the court might have properly given the instruction as asked, still we do not see that any injury was sustained by plaintiff in modifying it, or in substituting for it the instruction given. The instruction as given left it to the jury to determine from all the circumstances in the case whether it was the duty of plaintiff to have left the wagon to avoid injury. The instruction tendered referred more particularly to circumstances to be considered by the plaintiff in determining whether he should have left the wagon or not; but as in any event, under either instruction, the question of negligence in this particular was left to the jury to be considered under all the facts and circumstances in the case, which under the record do not seem to be particularly complicated, and, as in the nature of things this resolved itself into a simple question of the exercise of ordinary judgment in a situation of apparent danger, we hardly think that prejudicial error can be predicated upon the refusal to give the instruction literally as asked, or in giving the substituted instruction. The instruction as given was proper, and the circumstances particularly referred to in the instruction tendered, which it is claimed the jury should take into consideration in determining whether it was negligence or not for the plaintiff to have remained in the wagon, were such as jurors would naturally take into consideration, whether their attention was called to them or not.

3. Appellant tendered an instruction as follows: "You are instructed that a person in charge of a street car upon a public highway is bound to anticipate the presence of other vehicles and pedestrians on such highway. The law requires that a person who is managing a street car should be watchful to see that the way is clear in the direction in which he is going, and accordingly regulate the speed at which he is running the car; and if you find from the evidence in this case that the street car of the defendant was being run at a rate of speed at which it could not readily and quickly be stopped should occasion require, and that such rate of speed was careless and dangerous, considering the character and location of the street and all of the surrounding circumstances, and you further find the plaintiff was injured by reason of such negligence, and not by reason of his own negligence, then your verdict should be for the plaintiff." This instruction the court modified. The modification consisted of substituting for the words italicized in the instruction tendered the following: "Unless you find that the plaintiff was negligent, and that such negligence contributed to such injury"—and as so modified was given to the jury. Appellant complains of the modification; his ground of complaint being that in giving the instruction as modified the court ignored the principal point in the instruction as tendered, which was that, in order to relieve defendant from responsibility from its negligence, the contributory negligence of plaintiff must have been the proximate cause of his injury; that the word "proximately" should have been inserted before the word "contributed" in the substituted clause, in order to clearly define the negligence of plaintiff which would relieve the defendant. Or, to state the contention of appellant more clearly, it is insisted that by the substitution the court eliminated from consideration by the jury the doctrine of the "last clear chance" which, formulated, is that, even assuming the negligence of plaintiff contributed to the injury of which he complains, still if, after the occurrence of such contributory negligence, the employés of defendant saw the dangerous condition in which plaintiff was placed, and by the exercise of ordinary care could have stopped the car, and so have avoided injuring him, and failed to do so, the defendant is responsible. It will be perceived, as far as the insertion of the words "proximate" or "proximately" is concerned, that neither of these words is used in the instruction as tendered by appellant, and he can hardly be heard to complain that the court was not more accurate in framing the modification than plaintiff was in framing the tendered instruction. In other parts of the charge the jury was clearly instructed that, in order to avail itself of the defense of contributory negligence on the part of plaintiff, it was necessary for defendant to show that such negligence contributed proximately to his injury. In determining whether a jury has been properly instructed as to the law, the instructions taken as a whole must be considered. Where numerous instructions are given (as in this case), it may well be that some particular instruction fails to contain a complete or accurate statement of the law. If however, when the entire charge is examined, the omissions or inaccuracies in a particular instruction appear to have been supplied, and the jury fairly and consistently instructed, generally, as to the law, this is sufficient to defeat any claim of error predicated on defects in particular instructions. Stevenson v. S. P. Co., 102 Cal. 143, 34 Pac. 618, 36 Pac. 407; Dolan v. Sierra Ry. Co., 135 Cal. 435, 67 Pac. 686; Anderson v. Seropian, 147 Cal. 201, 81 Pac. 521. Aside from this, however, it is quite apparent from a mere reading of the instruction tendered that it was not formulated upon the theory that there was thereby being submitted to the jury the doctrine of the "last clear chance." That doctrine is capable of very simple and clear expression in an instruction. There is, however, not one word in the tendered instruction which even remotely or suggestively pretends to declare it; nothing declaring (as the instruction would if it was so contemplated) that notwithstanding the jury might find the plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence, yet, if they found that the motorman perceived the dangerous situation in which plaintiff was placed in sufficient time by the exercise of ordinary care to have stopped the car, and so have avoided injury to the plaintiff, and failed to do so, the defendant was liable. The instruction, it is clear to us, as it must have been to the trial court, was intended to inform the jury as to the care to be exercised by the defendant in the ordinary operation of its car, and its liability to plaintiff for injury resulting to him in such operation, through want of ordinary care on the part of defendant, without fault of plaintiff. That this was the purpose of the instruction is further confirmed by the fact that an instruction was tendered by plaintiff, and given by the court, clearly and specifically stating to the jury the rule as to the duty of the employés of the defendant to avail themselves of the last clear opportunity to avoid injuring plaintiff after discovering his peril, even though such peril was occasioned by his own contributory negligence.

There are no other points made by appellant as to the instructions which we think merit any discussion.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

NORTHWESTERN PACKING CO. v. WHITNEY et al. (Civ. 173.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. Feb. 27, 1907.)

1. CORPORATIONS — OFFICERS AND AGENTS—AUTHORITY OF PRESIDENT.

The president of a corporation wrote to defendants, "I will give you the handling of all the salted salmon packed by the Northwestern company and other companies in which I may be interested this year," etc., signed with the name of the corporation, by the president. Held, that the letter did not constitute a valid executory contract binding upon the corporation, since the president had no authority by virtue of his office to sell the corporation's property without the sanction of the board of directors.

2. SAME—ACTIONS—BY-LAWS AS EVIDENCE.

Where a corporation is sought to be charged for a breach of an agreement which has not been performed, and there is no question as to estoppel or ratification, the by-laws of the corporation providing that the president shall sign, as president, instruments in writing which have first been approved by the board of directors, are admissible in evidence to show that the contract was not executed as the by-laws provide.

3. EVIDENCE—CONCLUSIONS OF WITNESS.

A question to a broker as to whether he "had purchasers ready, willing, and able to buy," is incompetent as calling for an opinion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, §§ 2149, 2150.]

4. BROKERS—COMMISSIONS—PERFORMANCE OF SERVICE.

A broker is not entitled to a commission until he negotiates a sale by bringing the buyer and seller to an agreement; the fact that he found a buyer ready, willing, and able to buy, being insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 8, Brokers, §§ 69, 73, 75.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Action by the Northwestern Packing Company against Arthur L. Whitney and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Myrick & Deering, for appellants. H. W. Hutton, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. The complaint alleges that in October, 1902, plaintiff sold and delivered to defendants 250 barrels of red Alaska salt salmon at $7.50 per barrel, less a discount of 5 per cent., making the total amount due $1,781.25; that the same has not been paid, except the sum of $850 on account, leaving $931.25 due and unpaid. The answer denies specifically the allegations of the complaint, and by way of counterclaim alleges that the plaintiff is indebted to the defendants in the sum of $1,593.75 for work and labor performed by defendants for plaintiff at its special instance and request, no part of which has been paid except the sum of $931.25, and concludes with a prayer for judgment against plaintiff in the sum of $662.50. The court found that the allegations of the complaint are true, and as to the answer it found: "It is not true that within the two years prior to the filing of defendants' answer herein, or at any other time, the defendants performed work and labor or either thereof for plaintiff at the plaintiff's special instance and request or otherwise, or for which the said plaintiff promised and agreed to pay the said defendants the sum of $1,593.75, or any other sum of money." Upon the findings judgment was entered for plaintiff as prayed for in its complaint. Defendants prosecute this appeal from the judgment, and urge certain rulings as prejudicial.

There is no question as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the findings, and there seems to be no serious question as to the sale of 250 barrels of the salmon to defendants, the price agreed to be paid, and the balance due upon that transaction. The rulings complained of relate to the defendants' counterclaim. Their counterclaim is based upon what is claimed to be a contract binding upon plaintiff for the sale of all the salmon packed by the plaintiff for the season of 1902. This alleged contract is contained in a letter of which the following is a copy:

"Arthur L. Whitney. Albion H. Whitney.

"C. E. Whitney & Co., Commission Merchants,
904 Hayward Building.

"San Francisco, Cal., April 15th, 1902.

"C. E. Whitney & Co., 904 Hayward Building, City—Gentlemen: Confirming verbal understanding with you, I will give you the handling of all the salted salmon packed by the Northwestern company and other companies in which I may be interested this year, relying on your discretion and judgment to realize the best prices possible. You to receive a commission of 5 per cent. net on the sales. Yours truly,

"Northwestern Packing Co.,

It is admitted that defendants did not sell the plaintiff's salmon pack for the year referred to, but that plaintiff sold its entire pack of 4,300 barrels, save and except the 250 barrels, the subject of the complaint in this action. Defendants' contention is that the letter signed by Pedersen is a contract binding upon plaintiff corporation, and that they should have been permitted to prove that they had or procured purchasers ready, able, and willing to purchase the entire pack of salmon, and thus earned the commission of 5 per cent. as provided in said letter. The main contention is as to whether or not the letter constitutes a binding executory contract upon plaintiff corporation. Aside from the question as to the letter being unilateral and no valid consideration on the part of the defendants, we are of the opinion that the letter does not of itself constitute a valid contract binding upon the plaintiff corporation. It is written by the president of the corporation, and in it he says: "I will give you the handling of all the salted salmon packed by the Northwestern company and other companies in which I may be interested this year." It is not attested by the seal of the corporation. There does not appear to have been any resolution of the board of directors authorizing the contract. The salmon pack of 1902 was the property of the plaintiff, an artificial being, created under the provisions of the statute. The title was in the corporation and not in Pedersen. The corporation could only act, could only speak, through the medium prescribed by law—the board of directors. The statute under which the corporation was created contains the express mandate: "The corporate powers, business, and property of all corporations formed under this title must be exercised, conducted, and controlled by a board of not less than three directors." Civ. Code, § 305. The rule has been adhered to by the courts. Gashwiler v. Willis, 33 Cal. 11, 91 Am. Dec. 607; Alta Silver Mining Co. v. Mining Co., 78 Cal. 629, 21 Pac. 373; Fontana v. Pacific Cann. Co., 129 Cal. 51, 61 Pac. 580. The president of a corporation has no authority by virtue of his office to buy or sell the property of the corporation, or to make an executory contract binding upon the corporation. Bliss v. Kaweah C. & I. Co., 65 Cal. 502, 4 Pac. 507. The doctrine of estoppel does not apply, because the corporation has not availed itself of any benefit in any way or manner by reason of the alleged contract. Id. Nor was the contract authorized by the course of business between the plaintiff and defendants, for the reason that it does not appear that they had ever had any business dealings with each other prior to the time the letter was written by Pedersen; nor was there ever a ratification of the alleged contract by the board of directors. If the defendants had in fact sold the salmon referred to in the letter, and the plaintiff had availed itself of the services of the defendants in making such sale, and had delivered the salmon to the purchaser or purchasers procured by defendants, then an entirely different question would be presented. In such case the plaintiff would not be allowed to reap the benefits of the contract and at the same time escape the burdens. In the case at bar it is sought to charge the plaintiff under a contract which it never made and from which it has never received any benefit, and to compel it to pay defendants a commission for a sale they did not make and which they never agreed to make.

The court, under defendants' objection, allowed the plaintiff to read in evidence article 7 of plaintiff's by-laws, which provides that the president shall sign, as president, "all certificates of stock and all contracts and other instruments in writing, which have been first approved by the board of directors." The defendants now urge that the ruling was erroneous, because they were strangers to and had no notice of the by-laws introduced in evidence. The record does not disclose that any such ground was stated in the objection. The objection was "to their introducing in evidence their own by-laws as a part of their own case as against us." However, the ruling was not erroneous under the circumstances of this case. As has before been stated, there is nothing to show that the plaintiff has been guilty of such conduct as to estop it from denying the validity of the contract signed by Pedersen. Where a corporation is sought to be charged for a breach of an agreement which has not been performed, and there is no question as to estoppel or ratification, the by-laws of the corporation are admissible in evidence for the purpose of showing that the contract was not executed as the by-laws provide.

It is claimed that the court erred in sustaining plaintiff's objections to certain questions asked of the defendant Arthur L. Whitney for the purpose of showing that he had procured purchasers for the salmon, who were ready, able, and willing to purchase. If we are correct in our conclusion that the contract made by Pedersen was not the contract of plaintiff, then the evidence was properly excluded. The questions were each objected to as calling for the opinion of the witness, and the objections might well have been sustained on that ground. Each of the questions contained the interrogation as to whether the witness "had purchasers ready, willing, and able to buy the salmon." Whether a purchaser was ready to purchase, able to purchase, and willing to purchase, would depend upon facts. If the party making an offer was able to purchase, and the price was agreed upon, the plaintiff must have been informed of the facts. Plaintiff could not have disproved the statement of the witness by independent evidence if he only said that he had a purchaser ready, willing, and able to purchase. And furthermore the defendants would not have earned their commission by simply finding a purchaser who was ready, able, and willing to purchase. A person might be ready, able, and willing to purchase, and yet make no agreement to purchase. The broker is not entitled to a commission until he negotiates a sale by bringing the buyer and seller together. The broker does not earn his commission until he procures a valid contract to purchase, or brings the buyer and seller to an agreement. Gunn v. Bank of California, 99 Cal. 349, 33 Pac. 1105. It appears from the testimony of Arthur L. Whitney that defendant did not negotiate a sale. He testified: "I had a conversation with Mr. Webster during this time. He said that they needed the money, he was quite anxious to sell, that they had been offered $6.75 for the salmon, and I told him that was too low, and he said that they needed the money, and I said I would advance them five dollars a barrel on it. I said, 'That is too low, and I want to get something like what the goods are worth,' and I said I would guaranty to get him at least $7 net for the salmon. I remember that I said to Mr. Webster, if they insisted upon selling at those prices that I would sell and could sell to better advantage to the party who eventually bought the salmon than they could, and let me do it, and he said he would. The first that I knew that the pack had been sold by the plaintiff company was shortly after that I heard it rumored that it had been, and I called up Webster, and he said, yes, that it had been sold. It was not done with my knowledge or consent." He further testified as to a conversation with Webster, plaintiff's bookkeeper, as to the sale of the 250 barrels, the subject of this case. His language is: "Mr. Webster told me one day that they were offered $6.75, and seemed to think we ought to sell, and I told him that that was too cheap, that we could get more money, and finally he said, 'Well, I cannot afford to take any chances,' and I said, 'Well, I will guaranty you $7 net for your salmon, but you hold on and do as you agreed with me, and I will get you more.' Well, he said they would, and shortly after that I heard, directly or indirectly, I don't know which, that they had sold their fish to a party who had been trying to buy it from me, and I called him up on the phone and asked him if that was true, and he said, 'yes,' and I said, 'I have got some orders left with me that I must fill, and I want you to deliver them,' and they delivered this 250 barrels in that way, and they were sold in that way at $7.50, less 5 per cent. commission." It thus appears that the 250 barrels were sold to defendants to fill the orders they had, and they were given credit for the 5 per cent. commission.

The judgment is affirmed.

5 Cal. App. 153

Ex parte VICE. (Cr. 81.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 6, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—LIMITATION OF PROSECUTION—NECESSITY FOR DEMAND.

A railway ticket agent converted money of the company April 13, 1903, and May 1st he left the company's employ; its officers knowing of the conversion. Held, that the embezzlement occurred when he converted the money or when he left the company's employ, no demand upon him being necessary, and hence prosecution was barred October 25, 1906; he having remained within the state.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 270-274.]

2. SAME—PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION—COMMITMENT—REASONABLE CAUSE—LIMITATION.

Where, in a prosecution for embezzlement, it appeared at the preliminary examination that more than three years had elapsed since the crime was committed, and that the case did not come within any exception to the running of the statute of limitations, he should have been discharged, since to warrant a commitment there must not only be a probability that a crime has been committed, but that it has not been barred.

3. SAME—LIMITATION OF PROSECUTION—ASSUMED NAME.

That after embezzling money one lives in another county in the state, under an assumed name, does not suspend the running of the statute of limitations against his offense.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, § 277.]

Application by William R. Vice for a writ of habeas corpus against Thomas F. O'Neil, sheriff. Petitioner discharged.

Lewis H. Smith and R. E. Rhodes, for petitioner. Geo. A. Knight, Aylette R. Cotton, and Robert Harrison, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. It is alleged in the petition that the prisoner is unlawfully imprisoned and restrained of his liberty by Thomas F. O'Neil, sheriff of the city and county of San Francisco. The imprisonment is claimed to be unlawful for the alleged reason that the prisoner has been committed and held to answer by a judge of the police court of the said city on a criminal charge of embezzlement without reasonable or probable cause. This is made a ground for discharging a party in habeas corpus proceedings. Pen. Code, § 1487, subd. 7. And a discharge in such case is the rule in the Supreme Court. Ex parte Sternes, 82 Cal. 245, 23 Pac. 38; In re Kennedy, 144 Cal. 635, 78 Pac. 34.

The commitment in this case, so far as material here, is as follows: "The People of the State of California to the Sheriff of the City and County of San Francisco: An order having this day been made by me, that William Robert Vice, complained of as W. R. Vice, be held to answer upon a charge of felony, to wit, embezzlement, committed as follows: Said William Robert Vice, complained of as W. R. Vice, did in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, on or about the 24th day of October, 1906, who on or about the 13th day of April, A. D. 1903, was the clerk, agent and servant of Union Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation duly organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Utah, and doing business in the city and county of San Francisco, and then and there by virtue of his said employment and trust as such clerk, agent and servant, on or about the 13th day of April, 1903, there came into the possession, care, custody and control of him the said William Robert Vice, complained of as W. R. Vice, five hundred and eighty-four dollars in lawful money of the United States of America, of the value of five hundred and eighty-four dollars, in lawful money of the United States of America, and the personal property of the said Union Pacific Railroad Company, a corporation as aforesaid, and he, the said William Robert Vice, complained of as W. R. Vice, after the said personal property had come into his possession, care, custody and control, as aforesaid, did, to wit, at said city and county of San Francisco, on or about said 24th day of October, A. D. 1906, willfully, unlawfully, fraudulently and feloniously convert, embezzle and appropriate the same to his own use, contrary to his trust as such clerk, agent and servant; and not in the due and lawful execution of his said trust and employment. You are commanded to receive him, the said William Robert Vice, complained of as W. R. Vice, in your custody, and detain him until he be legally discharged.

It is provided in the Penal Code (section 800): "An indictment for any other felony than murder, the embezzlement of public money, or the falsification of public records, must be found, or an information filed, within three years after its commission." Section 802 provides that if, when the offense is committed, "the defendant is out of the state the indictment may be found, or an information filed, within the term herein limited after his coming within the state, and no time during which the defendant is not an inhabitant of, or usually resident within, this state is part of the limitation."

There is no claim that defendant embezzled public money, nor that he was out of the state when the offense was committed. We are clearly of the opinion that, unless it was made to appear that the offense was committed within three years prior to the commitment, there was no reasonable or probable cause for holding the defendant. The evidence taken down before the magistrate is before us, and the facts are not disputed. It appears that on April 13, 1903, the prisoner was in the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad Company as their passenger agent in the city and county of San Francisco. His duties were the usual duties of a passenger agent, to solicit passenger business, collect money from passengers for tickets, and deliver tickets to them, and to act as the representative of the company generally in handling such business, and has been in such employ since 1890. On the said 13th day of April, 1903, he sold as such agent to one Newman certain passenger tickets to be thereafter delivered over the lines of the Union Pacific Railroad, and collected from Newman for said Union Pacific Railroad the sum of $584, which he failed to account for or pay over, but appropriated to his own use. Prior to May 1, 1903, some question arose, and the question was discussed as to Vice giving proper accounts of the moneys received for tickets, and on that day he was discharged, or at least left the employ of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. The officers of said railroad company knew the fact that Vice had collected the money and failed to pay it over about the time he was discharged. After he left the employ of the railroad company, he immediately went to Madera, in Madera county, in this state, and has ever since continued to reside in that county under the assumed name of Thomas R. Ryan. He openly resided and attended to business in said county of Madera during all this time, but under said assumed name. On October 24, 1906, demand was made upon Vice by said Union Pacific Railroad Company for said $584, but he has never turned it over or paid it to said company. The complaint was filed in said police court on October 25, 1906, charging the prisoner with the crime of embezzlement.

We are of the opinion that the crime had become barred by the statute before the prisoner was arrested. He embezzled the money when he appropriated it to his own use. It was his duty, as the agent of the railroad company, to pay over and account for the money he received as such agent at the time he received it, or certainly by the 1st of May, 1903, when he left the employ of the company. He could have been arrested as soon as he failed to turn over the money to his employer and appropriated it to his own use. A demand was not necessary. It is not necessary under any section of the Penal Code to which our attention has been called, and we have found no such section. There are cases in this state where the party charged has held the funds as trustee, or in some official capacity, and the evidence has failed to show any party to whom the defendant could legally turn over the funds, and in such cases it has been held that the crime was not proven. Thus, in People v. Royce, 106 Cal. 173, 37 Pac. 630, 39 Pac. 524, the defendant was treasurer of the Veterans' Home Association, and deposited the money in a bank to his personal account. It did not appear that he was ever called upon to apply the money to any need of the association, or to make any particular use of it, or to put it in any special place, or that any demand was ever made upon him for the money. It was held that such facts were not sufficient evidence upon which to convict defendant of embezzlement; but the court said: "No doubt embezzlement may be established, under certain circumstances, without proof of a demand, as where other evidence clearly shows an appropriation by an employé of his employer's funds with intent to do so fraudulently and feloniously." In People v. Page, 116 Cal. 394, 48 Pac. 326, the defendant was guardian of an insane person, and as such guardian had the right to the money in his custody subject to the orders of the court. He had drawn the money he held in trust from the Savings & Loan Society, but it did not appear what he did with it. The court, in holding the evidence to be insufficient to justify the verdict, said: "So far as appears the defendant at the time of the trial may have still had the money ready to be paid over on demand to any one authorized to receive it." The Supreme Court of Arizona, in a late case (Territory v. Munroe, 85 Pac. 651), expressly hold that a demand is not necessary. The language of the court is: "In our view the offense, which is purely statutory, is complete when the property is fraudulently converted. Refusal to return the property upon demand has always been held to be evidence, and in some cases indispensable evidence of intentional conversion." In 10 American & English Encyclopedia of Law (2d Ed.) p. 995, it is said: "Unless the statute thus requires it, a demand is not necessary." See the cases cited in support of the text in note 5, Id.

It then being clear that the crime for which the prisoner was committed is barred by the statute of limitations, was there reasonable or probable cause for holding him to answer? The mandate of the statute is plain that the information must be filed within three years after the crime has been committed. Is there reasonable or probable cause for holding a defendant in the face of the statute, and under a state of facts which would not justify a conviction? Reasonable or probable cause means such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution and prudence to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion that the person accused is guilty. There must be a probability that a crime has been committed by the person named in the commitment, and not only that a crime has been committed, but that it is one that has not become barred by the statute of limitations. There certainly would be no justification for a magistrate holding a defendant to answer in a criminal case, and causing the county to incur the expense of a trial in a case where it is plain that there is no probability that defendant can be convicted. This is not a case in which it is uncertain as to whether or not the offense has became barred by the statute. There is no conflict as to when the crime was committed. The evidence shows that the accused does not come within the exceptions named in sections 799 or 802 of the Penal Code. It is urged on behalf of the prosecution that, because the defendant went under an assumed name after he went to Madera county, for this reason he was not "an inhabitant of, or usually resident within, this state" during such time. We cannot take this view of the matter. He was an inhabitant of the state, and usually resident within it, no matter what name he assumed. The Legislature has prescribed the period of limitation for the prosecution of criminal cases. It has named the exceptions in which the case is taken out of the statute. It is not for the courts to legislate or add to the statute. It is the duty of the courts to interpret the law according to its true meaning and intent, even if the consequences are not what could be desired. It is of much greater importance that the rules and interpretations should be certain, consistent, and applied alike to all, than that some particular case should meet with its just punishment.

Let the prisoner be discharged.

In re KILBORN.

KILBORN et al. v. TITLE INS. & TRUST CO. (Civ. 351.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 9, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 8, 1907.)

1. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT—POWER OF ATTORNEY—DEATH.

A power of attorney ceased to be operative on the death of the grantor.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, §§ 67, 68.]

2. WILLS—REVOCATION—POWER OF ATTORNEY.

The execution of a power of attorney subsequent to the making of a duly executed will by the grantor did not revoke the will.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 49, Wills, § 447.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES—CORPORATIONS AS EXECUTORS.

St. 1891, p. 490, c. 264, authorizes certain corporations to act as executors, and provides that, when such a corporation having a paid-up capital of $250,000 is authorized by its articles to act as executor, it must be appointed without bond other than that afforded by the deposit of securities of the value of $200,000 with the State Treasurer, and that, before accepting such corporation as executor, it must procure a certificate from the bank commissioners stating that it has complied with the law. Held, that since such certificate was not conclusive of the corporation's solvency, but the court to which application was made for its appointment as executor was authorized under the general law to require additional security, such act was not unconstitutional, as granting a privilege or immunity to a corporation not afforded to a natural person.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 10, Constitutional Law, § 595.]

4. EXECUTORS—APPOINTMENT—CORPORATIONS—FINANCIAL RESPONSIBILITY.

Where the financial responsibility of a trust company appointed as executor of a will is challenged, the court has power to inquire into its financial condition and refuse its appointment in case its assets are deemed insufficient, under Code Civ. Proc. § 1349, providing that the court may on objection decline to appoint an executor, though named in the will.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 22, Executors and Administrators, § 95.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Application for the probate of the will of William Henry Kilborn, deceased. From a judgment and order admitting the will to probate, and from an order appointing the Title Insurance & Trust Company as coexecutor with Julia Ann Kilborn, without requiring a preliminary undertaking, Mrs. Kilborn and others appeal. Affirmed.

Will D. Gould and E. C. Oggel, for appellants. Morton, Houser & Jones, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Appeal from a judgment and order admitting a will to probate, and an order appointing respondent coexecutor thereunder without preliminary undertaking.

The facts are these: One W. H. Kilborn died seised of certain property in this state, leaving a will by which all of such property subject to testamentary disposition was devised to his wife, the appellant, and the Title Insurance & Trust Company, a corporation as co-trustees, with directions to convert all of his real estate into money, invest and reinvest the proceeds, and pay the income thereof quarterly to a daughter during her life, if she should need the same for her comfortable support, and, in the event such income should prove insufficient for such support, then such amount of the principal as the probate court might order. After the death of the daughter the estate remaining after payment of certain specified legacies, was devised to the heirs of the testator in the proportion and amount to which they would be entitled under the succession laws of California. This will was filed for probate by the respondent corporation, accompanied by the usual petition, to the probate of which the widow, who had acquired by assignment all interest of the other beneficiaries specifically named, objected because she averred that the testator had executed a general power of attorney to her after the date of said will, and said testator believed that the will had been revoked. Then followed 20 other objections to said probate, none of which related to the validity of the execution of the will, but all as to the sufficiency and validity of certain provisions and directions therein contained, with the exception of objection "r," which is the statement of a conclusion that the instrument is not the will of the testator, but no facts are set out warranting such conclusion. The court sustained a demurrer to these objections, and, the contestant not desiring to amend the same, proof was taken as required by section 1317, Code Civ. Proc., and the will was ordered admitted to probate, and a certificate thereof, duly signed, was filed. Thereupon the widow filed her objections to the granting of letters testamentary to petitioner as coexecutor and trustee, assigning as objections the fact that she was the sole party interested in the estate, that the appointment of petitioner would entail unnecessary expense upon the estate, and that the petitioner had no capacity or authority to act as coexecutor or co-trustee. These objections were overruled by the court and the widow and respondent were appointed coexecutors of such will. The widow accepted the appointment as executor, executed her undertaking, and qualified. The court by its order directed letters testamentary to issue to respondent without an independent undertaking.

We perceive no error in the action of the court sustaining the demurrer to the objections filed to the probate of the will. The execution of the subsequent power of attorney to the widow was a matter of no consequence. It ceased to be operative upon the death of the decedent, and in its execution could in no sense be given effect as a revocation of the prior duly executed will. The court upon a petition for the probate of a will is called upon merely to determine the validity of its execution. "The sufficiency or invalidity of its provisions will be determined when effect is sought to be given to them." Estate of Pforr, 144 Cal. 125, 77 Pac. 825. The evidence warranted the finding that the will was duly executed, and that the testator was of sound and disposing mind and memory at the time of its execution, and not acting under duress, menace, fraud, or undue influence. Under the act of April 6, 1891 (Statutes 1891, p. 490, c. 264), respondent corporation was authorized by its articles of incorporation to act as executor and was competent and eligible to appointment; and, being named in the will as one of the executors, it was the duty of the court to so appoint, unless the objections thereto were of a character warranting the court in withholding such appointment. None of the objections filed had such an effect. It will be noted that there was no objection to the solvency or insolvency of the respondent, or its financial responsibility.

Appellant presents with much earnestness a question which relates to the authority of the court to order the issuance of letters testamentary to the respondent without bond. This order is justified by the provisions of the act of 1891, above referred to, which in terms provide that, when a corporation having a paid-up capital stock of $250,000 is authorized by its articles of incorporation to act as executor, it must be appointed without bond or security other than that afforded by the deposit of securities of the value of $200,000 with the treasurer of state, and that before accepting such trust the corporation must procure a certificate from the board of bank commissioners stating that it has complied with the requirements of this law; and further provides that the revocation of such certificate shall be cause for the removal of said corporation from such trust.

It is insisted that the general law requires a preliminary undertaking from all persons, and that this statute excepts from its operation a class, and therefore the uniformity of the general law is destroyed. The manner of affording ample security to those interested in the estate before appointment is the subject-matter of the general law. What that security shall be, its kind, character, and extent, is a matter for the Legislature; and, as said by the Supreme Court of Minnesota in the case of Minnesota Loan & Trust Co. v. Beebe et al., 41 N. W. 232, 40 Minn. 7, 2 L. R. A. 418, "if they deem the securities deposited with the State Auditor, and the other safeguards placed by the statute around the organization and management of such corporations, to insure the faithful execution of all trusts imposed upon them as an equivalent for the bond and oath required of natural persons, they have the undoubted power so to provide." It is a matter of no concern to the coexecutor or devisees under the will how such security is afforded, provided it is ample for their protection. This protection deemed by the Legislature to be ample is provided under the general law and under the act above mentioned. The court is shorn of no power in connection with its probate jurisdiction. The certificate of the bank commissioners is made evidence proper for the court to receive in determining the solvency of the corporation and the propriety of its appointment, but such certificate is not conclusive evidence of any of such facts. Section 1349, Code Civ. Proc., provides that the court may, upon objections, decline to appoint an executor, although named in the will. Appellant made no objection to the appointment of the respondent based upon any facts tending to show that its financial condition and its securities on deposit were not such as to afford ample protection to the estate. Had such objections been made, notwithstanding the certificate of the bank commissioners, it would have been within the power of the court to inquire into the financial condition of the petitioner, and, if it should appear that the assets were insufficient as security for the faithful performance of the trust, to have refused the appointment. Those sections of the general law which give to the court authority to require additional security from an executor when it is made to appear that the original undertaking is insufficient for any reason apply to the equivalent of the bond given by a corporation; and, even though a court may in the first instance appoint a corporation as executor without bond, yet at any time during the administration of the trust, under these sections, it may require further and additional security if satisfied that the interests of the estate demand it. This act, therefore, in our opinion, grants no privilege or immunity to a corporation. By the terms of the act the corporation is required to amply secure those interested in the estate from loss. Natural persons are required to do neither more nor less; and, while the manner of furnishing the security is different, one is the equivalent of the other and the burden is alike upon each.

There is no error apparent in the record, and the judgment and order are affirmed.

In re KIDD. (Cr. 54.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 9, 1907.)

INTOXICATING LIQUORS—CONSTITUTIONALITY OF ORDINANCE—DISCRIMINATION.

An ordinance prohibiting the sale of liquor, except that the council may permit keepers of hotels to serve liquors as part of a regular meal, is not invalid as an unjust discrimination under the constitutional requirement with reference to uniformity in operation of all laws of a general nature.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 29, Intoxicating Liquors, §§ 21–23; vol. 44, Statutes, § 72.]

Application by J. L. Kidd for habeas corpus to obtain his release from custody under a sentence for a violation of an ordinance of the city of Riverside. Writ denied.

Thomas E. Porteous, for petitioner. W. A. Purington, City Atty., for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Application by petitioner for writ of habeas corpus based upon the claim that his imprisonment for the violation of an ordinance of the city of Riverside is illegal because the ordinance so violated is unconstitutional and void.

This ordinance, regularly adopted, in plain terms prohibits the sale of all intoxicating liquors in said city by any person, except that the council may issue a permit to keepers of hotels having 40 bedrooms or more to sell vinous and malt liquors served in the dining-room thereof as part of a regular meal. The ordinance is claimed to destroy petitioner's right to engage in business upon the same terms as other citizens, and that it creates a monopoly in favor of a certain class. Let the correctness of his conclusions be assumed, and we have a case where the lawmaking power is regulating a business, the tendency of which is injurious to the public morals, safety, and welfare. "The statistics of every state show a greater amount of crime and misery attributable to the use of ardent spirits obtained at these retail liquor saloons than any other source. * * * There is no inherent right in a citizen thus to sell intoxicating liquors." Foster v. Police Commissioners, 102 Cal. 491, 37 Pac. 763, 41 Am. Rep. 194. It is only a calling not in any way injurious to the community which every one has a right to pursue. In re Parrott (C. C.) 1 Fed. 481, 6 Sawy. 349. That the legislative power may prohibit a traffic by retail of intoxicating liquors is conceded. If the governing power can prohibit a thing altogether, it may impose such conditions upon its existence as it pleases, even arbitrary ones. Ex parte Christensen, 85 Cal. 213, 24 Pac. 747.

The constitutional requirement with reference to the uniformity in operation of all laws of a general nature has no application to ordinances enacted in pursuance of a legitimate exercise of the police power, and only when it is manifest that there is an unjust discrimination do courts interfere. In re Zhizhuzza, 147 Cal. 334, 81 Pac. 955. There being no inherent right to engage in the busines involved in this ordinance, the operation of the exception applying alike to all of the class so excepted, petitioner, not being of that class, and in no wise affected by its operation upon the class, has no cause of complaint. Petitioner presents no instance of unjust discrimination. The right to classify exists. The difference in the relation which the ordinary retail liquor dealer occupies from that of a regular hotel keeper, whose business is that of entertaining guests and serving vinous and malt liquors with meals, "suggests a reason which might rationally be held to justify the diversity in the legislation." Bloss v. Lewis, 109 Cal. 499, 41 Pac. 1081.

The ordinance, in our opinion, is valid, and a proper one to be enacted in the exercise of police power.

Writ denied.

MURPHY et al. v. UNION TRUST CO. OF SAN FRANCISCO (SPRECKELS, Intervener). (Civ. 242.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 5, 1907.)

Trusts—Sale of Land by Trustee—Necessity for Confirmation by Court.

Where money is bequeathed to a trustee to invest in land, with liberty to change the investment at his discretion, the superior court is without jurisdiction to entertain a suit by the cestui que trust to order the trustee to sell the land subject to confirmation by the court, nor an application by an intervener in such a suit to confirm an alleged contract of sale to him by the trustee, and to direct the execution of conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trusts, §§ 241–247.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. M. Seawell, Judge.

Suit by Mary Pope Murphy and another against Union Trust Company of San Francisco; Rudolph Spreckels intervening. From a judgment dismissing the complaint in intervention and an order denying a new trial, intervener appeals. Affirmed.

Heller & Powers, for appellant. Jas. L. Robinson, for respondent Murphy. Bishop, Wheeler & Hœfler, for respondent trust company.

HART, J. The respondent, Union Trust Company, a corporation, as trustee upon certain trusts declared in the last will and testament, and a codicil thereto, of Andrew J. Pope, who died in the city of San Francisco about the 18th day of December, 1878, acquired and became seised in fee of certain real property situated in said city and county of San Francisco. In the month of September or October, 1902 (it is not clear which), Rudolph Spreckels, intervener and appellant, and I. W. Hellman, Jr., the secretary and cashier of the defendant corporation, had a conversation relative to said real property, and in which Mr. Spreckels made an offer to Mr. Hellman to buy said property for the sum of $226,000. After some discussion by the parties of the proposition, Mr. Hellman, according to his own testimony, said to Mr. Spreckels: "I will tell you how we can arrange this. We will go into court, make the statement that we are offered $226,000, and ask the court to confirm it, and then, if there are any other parties that wish to raise the bid, they can come forward and do so." There is little, if any, variance between Mr. Spreckels and Mr. Hellman as to the purport of the conversation to which we refer. On the 21st day of October, 1902, Mary Pope Murphy and Florence Pope Frank, cestuis que trustent under the trust declared and created by the said will of Andrew J. Pope, deceased, instituted suit in the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco against the defendant and respondent, Union Trust Company, for the purpose of presenting to the court the proposition of Mr. Spreckels to purchase said property, and, according to the prayer of the complaint, to secure an order or decree of the court directing "the defendant to sell and convey the said premises for the said sum of $226,000, or such other sum as may be obtained therefor, subject to the confirmation by this court." The defendant filed an answer to the complaint, denying the averments thereof, and alleging that "the defendant has the absolute authority and discretion, under the decrees of distribution, and the will and codicil mentioned in plaintiffs' complaint, to sell and convey any or all of the property belonging to said trust estate, and to reinvest the proceeds thereof in other investments, securities, or other properties, at its absolute discretion; but the defendant is unwilling to sell and convey the real property particularly described in plaintiffs' complaint for the sum of $226,000, and is willing to sell said real property at a greater price than $226,000, if this honorable court will confirm the sale thereof." On the 31st day of October, 1902, Rudolph Spreckels, having previously been granted leave so to do by the court, filed a complaint in intervention. After confirming by appropriate averments the allegations of plaintiffs' complaint as to the offer of the sum of $226,000 for said property, and alleging the fairness of the price thus offered, the intervener's complaint proceeds to allege that: "Intervener further avers that the defendant, Union Trust Company of San Francisco, then and there accepted the said offer subject only to the condition that this honorable court would confirm the said sale, and then and there agreed with intervener that the intervener should buy from it, the said Union Trust Company of San Francisco, and the said Union Trust Company of San Francisco should sell to him, the said intervener, the real property in said complaint described for the said sum of $226,000, provided that this honorable court would confirm the said sale." The complaint in intervention also alleges that "intervener is ready and willing to complete the said purchase." The prayer of intervener's complaint is "that the said sale be confirmed, and that the defendant be directed to make, execute, and deliver to said intervener a good and sufficient deed of conveyance conveying the said property with a merchantable title to this intervener," etc. Mary Pope Murphy and Florence Pope Frank, beneficiaries, as before explained, of the trust herein mentioned, and plaintiffs in the original complaint, and the defendant, Union Trust Company, each interposed an answer to the complaint in intervention, specifically denying the averments thereof. The complaint, as well as the complaint in intervention, is verified. The answer of the defendant to the complaint in intervention, among other averments, contains the following: "Further answering this complaint of intervener, this defendant alleges that it, as trustee of the trusts set forth in the complaint of plaintiffs, had a verbal understanding, and no other, on or about October 1st, 1902, with said intervener, that it would sell the real property described in the complaint of plaintiffs, to said intervener, for $226,000, provided that no higher sum than $226,000 was offered by third persons therefor through bids made in this honorable court, and provided, further, that the sale to said intervener of said property for the sum of $226,000, or the sale to a third person bidding more than $226,000, as hereinabove mentioned, should receive the confirmation of this honorable court." Upon the issues thus made up, a trial was had, and judgment went for the defendant, dismissing both the complaint and the complaint in intervention. A motion for a new trial was made by intervener and refused by the court. The intervener appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial.

The court, from the evidence adduced, found that within 10 days prior to the commencement of this action, as alleged in the complaint, the defendant, as trustee, was offered the sum of $226,000 for the real property involved in this controversy, and that the plaintiffs, as beneficiaries under the trust, requested the defendant, as trustee, before the inauguration of the suit, to make a sale and conveyance of the "said real property, and the defendant refused to do so"; that the said offer of $226,000 was made for said real property to defendant by the intervener, Rudolph Spreckels; that the "defendant did not at any time agree with the intervener that the intervener should buy from it, or that the defendant should sell to the said intervener, the real property in said complaint described, for the said sum of $226,000, or for any other sum; that the defendant did not at any time agree with the intervener that the intervener should buy from it, or that the defendant should sell to the said intervener, the real property in said complaint described, for the said sum of $226,000, or for any other sum, provided that this court would confirm said sale." The court concluded as a matter of law, from the facts found, that "the defendant, as trustee as aforesaid, is vested with full power and authority to manage the said trust property, and to exercise its own discretion as to when, and how, and to whom, and upon what terms, and for what consideration it shall or may sell and convey the same, without any order or direction of this court in the premises," etc. At the trial there was received in evidence, over the objection of intervener, a written offer signed by one Henry Kahn, and addressed to defendant, to purchase the property in dispute for the sum of $230,000, or $4,000 in excess of the sum offered by Mr. Spreckels. Accompanying this offer was a check for $5,000, payable to the order of defendant, and tendered as a deposit or payment on account of said proposed purchase price.

Counsel for respondents contend that, so far as the intervener is concerned, the proceeding here is in the nature of and nothing less than a suit for the specific performance of a contract to sell real property. This contention is opposed by appellant. It is claimed by him that the proceeding, "although cast in the form of a civil action," to adopt the language of his counsel, "amounts to no more than a report by a trustee to the court, of the fact that a contract of sale had been made by him and a request of the judgment of the court confirming his action in making the contract." In its practical purpose and effect, it would at least appear that the relief sought by the suit is that suggested by counsel for respondents. But we do not feel at liberty to consider the case from that point of view. We deem it our duty rather to confine ourselves in the consideration of and reaching a conclusion on this appeal to the theory upon which the cause was tried in the lower court and as presented here by appellant. And we do not, therefore, feel called upon to declare whether or not, as within the scope of intervener's complaint and the issues, a decree specifically enforcing the performance of the alleged contract, assuming the evidence warranted it, could appropriately have been demanded. We shall, as we have declared, direct our investigations toward the solution of the question of whether or not the proceeding, under the theory of appellant as the case was presented in the court below and urged upon this appeal, was one by which the controversy upon the merits could be definitively or at all determined and settled by the court. What we are asked to do is (to quote from appellant's brief) "to reverse the judgment for failure of the evidence to support the finding that no contract was made, and direct the lower court to enter a judgment confirming the sale, in accordance with the evidence introduced." Although several questions are presented and discussed by counsel, there is, after all, in the consideration of the case upon appellant's theory, but one point necessary to be noticed and determined, which may be stated in the form of a question, thus: Was it within the duty of the court under the law, viewed through the circumstances developed at the trial, to order a confirmation of the sale, assuming that a perfect agreement by defendant to sell to intervener had been made, and assuming that "no further and higher bids" had been offered for the property? This question involves, of course, the jurisdiction of the court to act in the premises, and its decision must depend upon the proposition, first, of whether there is any rule of law requiring confirmation in such a case; and, second, if there be no law upon the subject, then upon the nature and extent of the authority with reference to the trust property vested in the trustee by the terms and provisions of the will declaring the trusts. If the trustee is clothed, by the instrument creating and declaring the trusts, with plenary and discretionary authority to conclude a contract for the sale and disposition and investment of the trust property and funds, subject, of course, to the purposes of the trust, without the intervention or supervisory control of the court, either by the commands of the trust clauses of the will or of law, then this proceeding under the issues as framed and presented must be held to have been entirely gratuitous or coram non judice.

As to the first proposition, there cannot be found in our law any express requirement that sales of property by a trustee, testamentary or otherwise, shall be confirmed by a court. And it is admitted by appellant "that there is no decision in this state fixing the rules upon which a court may or may not refuse to confirm the sale of a trustee," although he undertakes to maintain that upon the court is imposed the legal duty of confirming the sale of the trustee here, by analogy to the court's power and duty to confirm the sale of an executor. But as to whether this last-mentioned position would or would not be maintainable under certain special circumstances, it is not necessary for us to decide. We are, in the absence of express law requiring the confirmation of a sale by a testamentary or other trustee of an express trust, to look to the instrument creating such officer and defining his duties, for the purpose of ascertaining with what authority over the trust property he is clothed by said instrument, and whether such authority is without qualification or not subject under any circumstances to be controlled or interfered with by a court. The last will and testament of the deceased was admitted in evidence, and we find that the powers granted thereby to the trustee over the trust property are defined in the following language: "* * * And I give and bequeath to said three trustees [the predecessors of defendant] the sum of one hundred thousand dollars upon trust to invest the same in their names in any funds or securities of the United States or of the city and county of San Francisco, then considered responsible and permanent, or in improved real estate in the city of San Francisco, or to place the same out at mortgage on real securities in this state, or in any other state in the United States, with the liberty to change the investment or investments at their discretion for any other, of the kind above described, and to accumulate the yearly income and profits by similar investments," etc. It will at once be observed, from the language thus quoted from the trust clause of the will of the deceased, that there can be nothing clearer than that the testator intended to and did thereby confer upon the trustees, and their successor, defendant, full, complete, and unquestionable discretionary power and authority to deal with the property made the subject of the trust. Indeed the language of the trust clause is so plain and free from ambiguity that there is even no dispute here as to what the testator meant and intended by it, for, in their opening brief, counsel for appellant say that "the Union Trust Company, defendant herein, holds title to a certain piece of real property situated in San Francisco, on the corner of Summer and Montgomery streets, as trustee under the will of Andrew J. Pope, having full powers of sale in relation thereto."

We think the court was without jurisdiction of the matter. The trustee, under the terms of the instrument of its creation, has, as seen, absolute discretion vested in it to dispose of the trust property without referring a proposed sale to the court for its judgment as to whether the sale or contract of sale should be consummated or not. There is, admittedly, no law, either legislative or deducible from judicial construction, in this state, which, under the circumstances of the case at bar, authorizes any such proceeding, and, in the absence of any authority for any such proceeding in the trust clause of the will of the deceased, the same could amount to no more than if the parties had agreed to refer the proposition of sale to some third party, who could, of course, act or not act upon the matter, according to his own pleasure. The court below, after hearing the evidence and thus learning the nature of the proceeding, concluded, as a matter of law, that no duty devolved upon it to act in the matter, and properly, we think, dismissed the complaints. The authorities cited by counsel relate to the duty of the court in the case of the sale of property by an executor. They are not in point here. A court having jurisdiction of proceedings involving the estates of deceased persons always retains jurisdiction over such estates until their final settlement and the discharge of the executor or administrator. The law charges courts with the exercise of special care and control over such proceedings, and the statute expressly provides for and requires the concurrence of the court in sales by executors and administrators of property belonging to the estates of deceased persons. In the case of trust property, as we have shown and as has been conceded, there is no such duty expressly imposed upon the court by the law, and the court cannot acquire jurisdiction to exercise or perform such duty in such a case by the mere agreement of the parties. We hold that the proceeding as presented submitted for the decision of the court a moot question only, and that the court's action in dismissing the complaints was absolutely proper. From this view of the case, it is apparent that whether the evidence supports the findings of the court as to the alleged contract, or whether the evidence might or might not sustain a decree for the specific performance of the alleged contract of sale, if such relief may be said to be within the fair import of the complaint in intervention, are questions which, as we have before indicated, possess no significance or importance.

Judgment and order are affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; BURNETT, J.

McPHERSON et al. v. GARBUTT et al.

(Civ. 309.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 13, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1907.)

EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY TO SUPPORT FINDING.

In an action to determine the rights of the parties in certain land in which plaintiff prayed that she be declared the equitable owner of a one-sixth interest therein on certain payments being made by her, evidence examined, and held sufficient to support the finding of the court, except in regard to credit given plaintiff for a certain sum.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by S. W. McPherson, as administratrix, and others, against Frank A. Garbutt and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Houx & Barrett, for appellants. J. L. Murphy, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action by which the plaintiff in part prayed: That the nature of the interest of the defendants in certain land be declared; that she be decreed the equitable owner of an undivided one-sixth interest therein upon certain payments being made by her at a time to be fixed by the court; that the property be sold, and one-sixth of the proceeds, less the amount due from her to Garbutt, be paid to her. The case was tried by the court sitting without a jury, and in accordance with the prayer of the answer it was adjudged that the plaintiff had no interest whatever in the land described in the complaint; that title to it was in the Moody Gulch Oil Company (hereinafter called the M. G. Co.). The defendant Garbutt, in addition to other matters set forth in the answer, counterclaimed against the plaintiff for the amount due him on her three certain promissory notes, with interest, costs, and the sum of $12.81, an expense incurred by him for her; upon which claim judgment was rendered in his favor for $1,068.57. The appeal is from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial upon the grounds that the decision is against law, insufficiency of the evidence, and errors of law. The principal ground relied upon is the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

The facts of the case are somewhat involved. Briefly, they are as follows: Prior to April 16, 1900, the appellant's intestate, Mrs. Walker, and the defendant Sorey, owned a majority of the stock in the Golden Gate Oil & Development Company (hereinafter called the G. G. Co.), which company had a lease for 10 years on 200 acres of land in Santa Clara county owned by D. B. Moody. After some negotiations by Mrs. Walker, Sorey, and Garbutt, on April 16, 1900, they made an agreement which, in substance, was as follows: (1) It provided for the organization of a corporation known as the "Moody Gulch Oil Company," in which each was to subscribe for one-third of the capital stock. In payment for the stock, Mrs. Walker and Sorey were to transfer 16,625 shares of stock in the G. G. Co. fully paid, and Garbutt was to pay into the treasury of the new company $4,000 in cash. (2) Mrs. Walker and Sorey represented that the outstanding indebtedness of the G. G. Co. did not exceed $1,000. (3) Mrs. Walker was to obtain an option from Moody to purchase the Moody land at a price not to exceed $7,300; the option and purchase to be in the name of Garbutt. (4) At the completion of the organization of the M. G. Co., and on payment for the subscribed stock therein, as above mentioned, Garbutt was to purchase from Mrs. Walker one-half of her stock (one-sixth of the subscribed stock) in the M. G. Co., and to pay therefor $2,000. (5) Mrs. Walker was to buy a one-sixth interest from Garbutt in the Moody land for the sum of $1,216.66, plus one-sixth of the expense of making the purchase. $500 was to be paid June 16, 1900, the balance in two equal payments at 90 and 120 days, with interest on deferred payments at 6 per cent. per annum. (6) Upon payment of these amounts by Mrs. Walker, she and Garbutt were to transfer their interests in the land to the M. G. Co., taking pay therefor either in money or stock in said company at its option; but, if Mrs. Walker defaulted in any of her payments, then Garbutt was to be released of all liability to convey any interest in the land to her or the company.

Another agreement was made April 18, 1900, by Mrs. Walker and Garbutt, which, after stating that Garbutt had agreed to purchase the Moody land for $8,000, provided substantially: (1) That by reason of certain desires Mrs. Walker was to make such payments, and rebates in her commission for making the sale, as would make the price paid by Garbutt for the land not to exceed $7,300. (2) That she was to purchase a one-sixth interest therein from Garbutt, paying therefor the sum specified in the agreement of April 16th (to which reference has been made above) at the times therein set forth. These amounts were to be evidenced by three promissory notes, and as security for the payment of these notes she was to give Garbutt her stock in the M. G. Co. (3) In case of default in the payment of any of her notes, Garbutt, at his option, might return her notes, together with the stock securing them, and terminate the interest of Mrs. Walker in the land. (4) If she carried out her contract, then, at the option of Garbutt, she was to join with him and others in transferring the land to the M. G. Co., taking payment for the same at cost price, either in cash or stock at the par value thereof at the company's option.

On April 16, 1900, Garbutt and Sorey made an agreement by which, upon payment of $1,216.66 (one-sixth of the cost of the land), they and others would transfer the land to the M. G. Co., on payment to them by the company of the cost of said land either in money or stock, etc. It is unnecessary to summarize the contents of this contract. April 23, 1900, Mrs. Walker executed her notes to Garbutt, and thereafter delivered 70 shares of the M. G. Co. stock as security for the payment thereof. In May, 1900, the sale of the land from Moody to Garbutt was consummated. Moody received from Garbutt $7,300 in cash, a note from Mrs. Walker for $300 and a waiver by her of $400, which Moody had agreed to pay her as commission for making the sale. November 30th an option to purchase for $28,000 the Moody land and other interests was given to C. C. Blair. The only payment made by Mrs. Walker was $250 on account of her note for $500, which became due June 16, 1900. After a number of requests for payment of the balance due from her, on December 3, 1900, Garbutt, through his agent, Neumaber, handed Mrs. Walker a letter dated November 30, 1900, signed by Garbutt, which purported to terminate any and all interest that she might have in the Moody land under their contract of April 18th. Together with this letter were her notes, her 70 shares of stock of the M. G. Co., and an unsigned document for her signature, which in effect was a receipt for the notes and stock, and a release of Garbutt from his obligations to her under the contract of April 18th. December 4, 1900, Mrs. Walker returned the notes, security, and the document unsigned to Neumaber, together with a letter offering to pay the amount remaining unpaid on her notes, and one-sixth of the expenses of making the purchase of the Moody land. On December 7th Garbutt replied to her letter of the 4th, saying: "I am willing however to forego my strict legal rights in the matter, provided you make the payments offered by you in your letter of December 4th and otherwise perform your portion of said agreement of April 18th, 1900, on or before 3 o'clock p. m. of Wednesday, December 12th. The amount of the expenses of purchase is $76.90, of which your one-sixth would be $12.81. You have the notes in your possession and can readily compute their present value. I am writing Mr. Neumaber today of 232 California street, your city, to accept these payments under the above conditions on my behalf, provided that, at the same time, you join with me in executing a deed of the said Moody property to the Moody Gulch Oil Company, in accordance with paragraph fourth of our agreement of April 18, 1900. On the execution of which deed the Moody Gulch Oil Company will make payment for said property as provided in the above contract." December 11th, in reply to this letter, she informed Garbutt that she had commenced this suit on December 8th, and, among other things, said: "When you present me a deed duly executed by you and your wife and all parties having an interest in said land * * * necessary to convey me a good * * * title to one-sixth of said land, or present a deed executed by you, your wife and other parties, sufficient to vest * * * title in the M. G. Co., when I execute said deed I will concurrently pay the balance remaining unpaid on my said notes and one-sixth of expense of purchase, and concurrently join with you * * * in transferring said land to the M. G. Co., taking payment for the same * * * as provided in the contract of April 18, 1900."

Subsequently, a deed, conveying to the M. G. Co. the Moody land, signed by Garbutt and his wife, was handed to Mrs. Walker, with a request that she also sign the deed, and at the same time she was tendered 12.3 shares of stock in the M. G. Co. She refused to sign the deed, claiming that others held interests in the land, and until their signatures were obtained to the deed she would not execute it; and she also insisted that the land had cost her one-sixth of the $7,300 paid by Garbutt, to wit, $1,216.66, $12.81 expense of purchase, $40 interest, $300 paid to Moody, and $400 commission, making a total of $1,970, and that she was therefore entitled to 19.7 shares of stock in the company. On January 1, 1901, Garbutt, for himself and for Mrs. Walker, acting under the power given him in the contract of April 18th, executed a deed of the land in question to the M. G. Co. The court, after trial, upon evidence sufficient, found in part: That plaintiff had failed to perform the conditions of the agreement of April 18, 1900, on her part to be performed; that prior to the commencement of this action she was indebted to Garbutt in the sum of $1,068.57; that the purpose of the agreements of April 16 and 18, 1900, was not that plaintiff should have an undivided one-sixth interest in said land for her separate use and benefit, but it was the purpose of those agreements that the land when purchased should be conveyed to the M. G. Co.; that defendants Garbutt and Sorey, January 1, 1901, conveyed to the M. G. Co. the Moody land; that Garbutt executed the deed in his own name, and for and in the name of plaintiff as her attorney in fact; that he was empowered to so act for her by the contract of April 18th. The court further found that prior to that conveyance to the M. G. Co., and on or about December 4, 1900, the M. G. Co. demanded of plaintiff and Garbutt that they convey the land to it, and offered to pay to plaintiff one-sixth of the cost price of said land and one-sixth of the expenses incurred in obtaining it, in all amounting to $1,229.47, in fully paid up stock of said company; that plaintiff refused to accept said stock; that plaintiff's offer on December 4th to perform her part of the contract was made in bad faith.

It would serve no useful purpose to take up and pass upon each of the points discussed in the briefs. Findings were made on all the material issues presented by the pleadings. Those just referred to meet nearly all of the contentions of appellant. Other points made are covered by other findings, and all the findings are based on ample evidence, except that the evidence does not disclose that plaintiff was given credit for $133.41 paid Garbutt by the G. G. Co. at her request. There is no other point made by appellant that requires notice.

The judgment in favor of Garbutt against appellant is directed modified by deducting therefrom $133.41. In all other respects the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

LAGUNA DRAINAGE DIST. v. CHARLES MARTIN CO. (Civ. 278.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 11, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1907.)

1. Judgment—Conclusiveness—Condemnation Proceedings—Scope and Extent of Estoppel.

The rule that a judgment upon the merits rendered in a former suit between the same parties or their privies, in the same right upon the same cause of action by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive in all actions between the same parties, or their privies, applies to condemnation proceedings, unless the facts and circumstances in the second suit show a greater or different necessity from that set forth in the first.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1306; vol. 18, Eminent Domain, §§ 627–629.]

2. Same—Identity of Subject-Matter.

Plaintiff was not estopped to bring an action to condemn land for drainage purposes by the fact that in a former action against defendant's predecessor in interest he sought to condemn the same land for the same purpose, where by stipulation the first action was in effect withdrawn, and an agreement made whereby, for a certain consideration, he obtained an easement to lay a pipe in the land different from that described in the complaint, and judgment was entered upon the stipulation for the purpose of making the agreement therein set forth a matter of record.

3. Same—Evidence—Burden of Proof.

In an action to condemn land for drainage purposes where the evidence shows that it is now necessary to take it, the defendant setting up prior adjudication must show not only the prior judgment between the same parties as to the same subject-matter, involving the same issue, determining that it was not then necessary to take the land for drainage purposes, but that there are no facts or circumstances to now justify the taking.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 1822.]

4. Eminent Domain—Proceedings—Necessity for Taking—Sufficiency of Evidence.

In an action to condemn land for drainage purposes, evidence examined, and held sufficient to show the present necessity for taking the land for the use designated.

5. Same.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, subd. 4, declared a ditch for draining land a public use, and, where the board of trustees of a district created and existing as a corporation under a valid act of the Legislature and authorized to drain and reclaim lands determined that it was necessary to drain the district in accordance with the plans of engineers employed by them, their determination as to the necessity for draining is final, and not subject to review by the courts, and hence, in an action to condemn defendant's land for the purpose of a drainage ditch, it was not necessary to prove the drainage of the district necessary, but only that the taking of the lands of defendant was necessary for such drainage.

6. Same—Damages—Evidence—Admissibility.

In an action to condemn land for drainage purposes, where defendant showed that the laguna to be drained was dry by the 1st of May, it was not error to exclude evidence on the question of damages that draining the laguna would deprive defendant of the seepage therefrom during the summer months.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; Thos. J. Lennon, Judge.

Action by the Laguna drainage district against the Charles Martin Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, and an order allowing plaintiff's possession of the property in controversy pending the appeal, defendant appealed. Judgment and orders affirmed.

E. S. Lippitt and F. K. Lippitt, for appellant. T. J. Geary, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. Action for condemnation. Plaintiff recovered judgment. Defendant has appealed from the judgment, the order denying its motion for a new trial, and an order allowing plaintiff possession of the property pending the appeal.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is a public corporation created for the purpose of draining a part of the lands of the state included within the boundaries of the drainage district as set forth in the complaint; that it is necessary for the purposes of draining the said district to cut down and excavate the bed of a natural stream leading from the lower end of the said laguna following the meanderings of the stream, according to the courses and distances set forth in the complaint, the width of the said easement sought being 30 feet, and that the defendant is the owner of the piece or parcel of land sought to be condemned; that the only mode of draining the said district is by deepening the bed of the said stream and placing proper contrivances in the channel where necessary in order to carry the water uninterrupted. It concludes with a prayer that the strip of land may be taken, held, and used by plaintiff for the uses and purposes set forth therein, and that the compensation to be paid defendant may be ascertained and fixed. The defendant demurred to the complaint upon the ground that it does not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action, and upon the further ground that the plaintiff has not the legal capacity to sue, for the reason that the act under which the plaintiff was formed is unconstitutional. The court below sustained the demurrer. Judgment was accordingly entered for defendant. From that judgment the plaintiff appealed, and the judgment was reversed. Laguna, etc., Dist. v. Chas. Martin Co., 144 Cal. 209, 77 Pac. 933. The Supreme Court held against defendant on both propositions raised by the demurrer, and fully discussed the question as to the constitutionality of the act under which plaintiff was organized. It thus became the law of the case that the complaint states facts sufficient to entitle the plaintiff to the relief demanded, and that the plaintiff is a valid corporation and authorized to condemn land for its uses and purposes. We will therefore not discuss further the argument of defendant's counsel that the act under which the plaintiff was organized is unconstitutional.

Upon the going down of the remittitur from the Supreme Court the defendant filed its answer. It denied that it was necessary to take the land described in the complaint for the uses and purposes of the plaintiff. It also pleaded a former judgment between the same parties by way of estoppel. The case was tried with the assistance of a jury, to whom three interrogatories were propounded and answered as follows: "Is it necessary that the strip of land described in the complaint be taken by the plaintiff for the uses for which it is sought to be condemned? Answer. Yes. What is the value of the strip of land sought to be condemned by the plaintiff? Answer. One hundred dollars. What is the damage to the balance of the land not sought to be condemned by reason of its severance from the land sought to be condemned and the construction of the improvement proposed by the plaintiff? Answer. Five hundred dollars." Upon this verdict judgment was entered for plaintiff; and in the judgment it is recited: "That the use to which the land sought to be taken and applied is a use authorized by law. The issues in this action were not determined in the judgment pleaded by the defendant in his answer herein. That the judgment described in the answer of defendant and duly offered in evidence by the defendant is not a bar to the prosecution of the present action by the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff is not estopped from prosecuting the present action by reason of the said judgment." The court also awarded the defendant its costs, taxed at $123.20. No error is claimed as to any instruction given the jury, and all the evidence and the reasonable inferences which the jury might have drawn therefrom must be called to the support of the verdict. The defendant relies upon certain rulings as prejudicial, and insists that the judgment and orders should be reversed because of such alleged rulings.

The first point urged, and upon which the defendant places the most stress, is the claim that plaintiff is estopped by reason of a former judgment. In the year 1889 the plaintiff commenced a prior action against Charles Martin, the predecessor in interest of the defendant, for the condemnation of substantially the same land sought to be condemned in the present suit, and for the same purpose, to wit, for the purpose of a ditch to convey away the waters, and drain the lands of the district. During the trial of the former suit and before its conclusion, the parties entered into a stipulation to the effect that in consideration of $250 the plaintiff should have the right to lay an iron pipe 12 inches in diameter from a point designated at the lower end of the laguna in a straight line across the lands of Charles Martin, for a distance of about 600 feet to a curve in the stream, the said pipe to be laid under ground and the earth filled upon it, and to be a perpetual easement upon the lands of the said Charles Martin, and an appurtenance to the lands of the plaintiff. The stipulation provided that judgment should be entered accordingly, which was done. The judgment described the location of the pipe, the manner in which it should be laid and maintained, and recited the terms and conditions of the stipulation. The line so described, and over which the pipe was laid, was not over or through the land sought to be condemned for a ditch, either as described in the former action or in the one at bar. The plaintiff paid Martin the $250 and the costs incurred, and proceeded to and did lay the 12-inch pipe in the manner agreed upon and provided in said judgment. The rule is that a judgment upon the merits rendered in a former suit between the same parties, or their privies, in the same right, upon the same cause of action by a court of competent jurisdiction, is conclusive and an estoppel in all other actions between the same parties, or their privies. This doctrine applies also to condemnation proceedings, unless the facts and circumstances in the second suit show a greater or different necessity from that set forth in the first suit. After a careful consideration of the record in the former suit we conclude that it does not estop the plaintiff in maintaining this one. It was sought in the former action to condemn the same land for the same purpose, and, if that issue had been determined, in the absence of any change of circumstances, it would be conclusive here; but the issue was not tried, nor was it determined. By stipulation it was in effect withdrawn, and an agreement made for an easement to lay a pipe in the ground of defendant not within the descriptive calls of the land described in the complaint. No land was taken. The easement to lay the pipe was through and over different land from that described in the complaint. The plaintiff agreed to pay, and did pay, $250 and the costs that had been incurred for the right to lay the pipe. Judgment was entered upon the stipulation evidently for the purpose of making the agreement set forth in the stipulation a matter of record. The judgment can have no greater effect than if the complaint had asked for an easement to lay a 12-inch iron pipe over the precise location described in the judgment and after trial the court had determined that the plaintiff was entitled to the easement as prayed for. In such case the judgment would be an estoppel as to the question of the right to lay the iron pipe in the ground of defendant as located and described in the judgment. It would not estop the plaintiff from again bringing an action to condemn different land for the purposes of a drainage ditch. The plaintiff withdrew its claim for the condemnation of the land in the first suit by reason of the stipulation. The issue was therefore not determined, nor could it have been determined if we regard the stipulation as a pleading authorizing a judgment for a different easement over different land. Suppose the stipulation had been to allow the plaintiff to lay an iron pipe in the ground of defendant on a different tract of land, wholly disconnected with the drainage of plaintiff's land, and judgment had been entered accordingly, could it be said that the judgment would estop the plaintiff from maintaining the present action? The issue in the present suit is as to the necessity of taking the land described in the complaint for the purposes therein set forth. After the stipulation was made in the prior suit no such issue was in the case. It is not the policy of the law to estop a party from maintaining an action by reason of a prior judgment upon an entirely different issue. We have not lost sight of the fact that a judgment upon stipulation by consent of the parties is binding and valid; but it is binding only as to the matter consented to by the stipulation. The authority for the judgment in such case is the stipulation and the judgment decides nothing except as authorized by the stipulation. The plaintiff paid for the easement it took by stipulation in the prior case. The law compels it to pay for the land condemned in the present case.

In Last Chance Min. Co. v. Tyler Min. Co., 157 U. S. 683, 15 Sup. Ct. 733, 39 L. Ed. 859, it appeared that in a prior action between the same parties, in which the Last Chance Mining Company was defendant, it had answered, and issue was joined as to the possession of a certain triangular part of a mining claim and the ores therefrom. The action resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff in said prior suit, and against the Last Chance Mining Company by reason of the withdrawal of its answer. The Tyler Mining Company afterwards amended its application, so that it excluded the triangular piece of land included in the prior suit. The other portions of the claim of the Last Chance Mining Company, except the triangle, were not involved in the prior suit. The court held that the judgment was not an estoppel except as to the triangle, and in the opinion said: "The particular matter in controversy in the adverse suit was the triangular piece of ground, which is not the matter in dispute in this action. The judgment in that case is therefore not conclusive as to matters which might have been decided, but only as to matters which were in fact decided."

In Haldeman v. United States, 91 U. S. 584, 23 L. Ed. 433, it was held that a judgment by consent dismissing a prior suit was not a bar. The court said: "But there must be at least one trial of a right between the parties before there can be said to be an end of the dispute, and before a former judgment can avail as a bar to another suit. * * * There was neither trial, nor decision, nor averment even, that the parties had, by their agreement, adjusted the matter in controversy. * * * But the general entry of the dismissal of a suit by agreement is no evidence of an intention to abandon the claim on which it is founded, but rather of a purpose to preserve the right to institute a new suit if it becomes necessary. It is a withdrawal of a suit upon terms. These terms may be more or less important. They may refer to costs, or they may embrace a full settlement of the contested points. If they are sufficient to estop the plaintiff the plea must show it." Applying the reasoning of the above case to the case at bar, the stipulation does not show that plaintiff agreed to abandon its right forever to condemn the land in controversy.

In McCormick v. Gross, 135 Cal. 304, 67 Pac. 766, it was held that in an action of replevin the plea in abatement of a prior action pending between the same plaintiff against the same defendant to recover money alleged to be due under a contract for the price of the same property was not good. In the opinion it is said: "It is provided in section 1908 of the Code of Civil Procedure that a judgment or order in certain cases is conclusive between the parties as 'to the matter directly adjudged', and, in section 1911, 'that only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto.'" In an opinion of Mr. Justice Harrison in Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Company, 118 Cal. 220, 50 Pac. 300, the doctrine of estoppel by reason of a former judgment is fully discussed, and the authorities cited. It is there said: "The form of the judgment is immaterial, but unless it appear from the record that it was given upon a consideration of the merits of the controversy, or if it affirmatively appears that the merits were not considered, it is not available as an estoppel."

In Hughes v. United States, 4 Wall. 232, 18 L. Ed. 303, the court said: "In order that a judgment may constitute a bar to another suit, it must be rendered in a proceeding between the same parties, or their privies, and the point of controversy must be the same in both cases and must be determined on its merits. If the first suit was dismissed for defect of pleadings or parties, or a misconception of the form of proceeding, or the want of jurisdiction or was disposed of on any ground which did not go to the merits of the action, the judgment rendered will prove no bar to another suit."

In Foster v. Richard Busteed, 100 Mass. 409, 1 Am. Rep. 125, the rule is thus stated: "To be a bar to future proceedings it must appear that the former judgment necessarily involved the determination of the same fact to prove or disprove which it is pleaded or introduced in evidence. It is not enough that the question was one of the issues in the former suit. It must also appear to have been precisely determined." See Freman v. Marshall, 137 Cal. 159, 69 Pac. 986; Ephraim v. Pacific Bank, 136 Cal. 646, 69 Pac. 436; Freeman on Judgments, §§ 251, 253, 256, 257, 260, 271; Krutsinger v. Brown, 72 Ind. 468.

It may further be said that the complaint having alleged, and the jury having found, that the taking of the land is now necessary for the uses and purposes of plaintiff, the presumption, in the absence of evidence, is that new facts and circumstances were shown. It is claimed by the defendant that the former judgment in effect determined that it was not then necessary to take the land for the purposes of a ditch. The evidence showing that it is now necessary to take it, the burden is placed upon defendant to show, not only the prior judgment between the same parties as to the same subject-matter, involving the same issue, but that there has been no new facts or circumstances to now justify the taking. Our attention has not been called to any evidence showing such fact, and we have been unable to find any in the record. On the other hand, plaintiff's witness Frost, a civil engineer, testified that in April, 1903, he found the water standing five feet deep on the land in the lagoon at a point 5,000 feet above the bridge; that the natural outlet of the laguna is the creek, the bed of which should be widened, deepened, and cleaned out; that the proposed plan is the only practicable plan of draining the lagoon, and the quantity of land proposed to be taken is a little over half an acre. Dodge, a civil engineer, also testified that to carry the flow of water it is necessary to excavate the ditch a distance of 840 feet below the bridge. When asked if the pipe line would carry off the water of the lagoon as well as the natural flow of the creek, he answered: "It won't run off at all; no natural flow of the creek. The natural flow of the creek is four feet higher than the lagoon. The bed of the creek below the bridge has been raised several feet since I surveyed it in 1888." There is other testimony, but the above is sufficient to show the present necessity for taking the land for the public use designated in the complaint.

Defendant contends that there is no necessity for the public improvement proposed—the drainage of the lands included in the district. As before stated, it has been held that the district is a corporation created and existing under a valid act of the Legislature. The board of trustees of the district employed civil engineers to survey, plan, locate, and estimate the cost of the works, necessary to drain the district, and determined that it was necessary to drain the district in accordance with the plans of the engineers. The determination of the board of trustees as to the necessity for draining the district is final in this case. It is not a matter that is subject to review by the courts. The plaintiff is a corporation authorized to drain and reclaim lands. A ditch or aqueduct for draining or reclaiming land has been declared by the Legislature to be a public use. Code Civ. Proc. § 1238, subd. 4. It was therefore not necessary to prove that the drainage of the district was necessary, but only that the taking of the lands of defendant was necessary for such drainage. City of Pasadena v. Stimson, 91 Cal. 238, 27 Pac. 604; Santa Ana v. Harlin, 99 Cal. 539, 34 Pac. 224. As to the necessity for taking the land, the verdict of the jury was for plaintiff, and it is sufficient to say that the evidence supports it.

It is claimed that the court erred in certain rulings as to the amount of damage to which the defendant was entitled by the severance of the land not sought to be condemned from the portion sought to be condemned. We have examined the rulings, and find nothing of sufficient importance to justify a reversal of the case. The principal claim is that defendant should have been permitted to show that the portion of its land north of the road and adjacent to the laguna receives moisture by the seepage from the laguna, and that the drainage of the laguna will damage its land by depriving it of such moisture. The evidence offered for the purpose of proving this was that of the Martins. By examining the testimony of Charles Martin, we find that he testified that "the pipe as it is now constructed, in connection with the creek, drains the lagoon, and carries the water from the lagoon in time to permit of the cultivation of the lagoon." He further testified that the water has been off the lagoon sufficient to permit its cultivation by the 1st of May during the average for the past 15 years. Charles E. Martin testified that the water is off the lagoon in May. "The pipe carries the water away until it is entirely dried up. There has not been a year to my knowledge when that pipe has not carried away the water, and entirely dried the lagoon." It is thus seen that when defendant claims that the condemnation is not necessary it produces evidence to show that the old pipe drained the laguna dry by the 1st of May, and then, on the question of damages, it offered evidence to prove that draining the laguna by the proposed system would deprive it of the seepage from the laguna during the summer months. We are of opinion that the question of damages to the parcel of land not sought to be condemned was fairly submitted to the jury on the evidence, and its finding of $500 damage to such land is a fair deduction from the evidence.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

PEOPLE v. STOKES. (Cr. 47.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 18, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 9, 1907.)

1. CRIMINAL LAW—TRIAL—RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE—DISCRETION OF COURT.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1848, provides that the rights of a party cannot be prejudiced by the declaration, act, or omission of another, except by virtue of a particular relation between them. Section 1870, subd. 6, provides that after proof of a conspiracy evidence of the acts or declarations of a conspirator may be offered against his co-conspirators. Held, that there was no error in the admission against a co-conspirator of evidence of acts and declarations of a conspirator before proof of a conspiracy, where the district attorney stated that he proposed to show a connection between the conspirators, and the jury was instructed that, if not satisfied that there was an understanding between the parties, then that they should disregard the evidence of such acts or declarations.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law,' §§ 1012–1017.]

2. SAME — CONSPIRACY—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

Facts and circumstances which go to establish a conspiracy are none the less admissible because at the same time they supply evidence tending to prove the guilt of the conspirator on trial.

3. SAME — CONSPIRATORS — IMPUTED KNOWLEDGE.

Where there was a conspiracy to commit a robbery, knowledge of one of the conspirators that the person robbed had the money upon his person would be imputed to the other conspirators.

4. SAME—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIONS.

Proof of admissions by a prisoner which, though they themselves did not involve his guilt, tended, in connection with other facts, to prove it, is competent without preliminary proof that they were voluntarily made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 14, Criminal Law, §§ 1212–1218.]

5. SAME—APPEAL—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In a prosecution for robbery, a witness, after stating that there was a jingle of some coin in the pocket of prosecuting witness, and that he could tell the difference between gold and silver by the jingle, was permitted to testify that the jingle sounded like heavy gold. Held, that defendant was not prejudiced by the admission of this evidence.

6. SAME.

Pen. Code, § 1258, provides that on appeal the court must give judgment without regard to technical errors or defects not affecting substantial rights. In a prosecution for robbery, evidence was admitted of the acts of a co-conspirator with defendant, to the effect that after the commission of the offense he procured a towel and washed the blood from the face of the person robbed, and showing where such co-conspirator came from and his movements immediately preceding that act. Held, admissible as tending to corroborate claim of prosecuting witness that he had been robbed but immaterial in connecting accused with the robbery, and harmless as to him.

7. SAME—JUDGMENT—TIME TO PRONOUNCE JUDGMENT.

A delay of 35 days in pronouncing judgment of sentence did not deprive the court of jurisdiction to pronounce the same; pronouncing judgment being no part of the trial within Const. art. 1, § 13, providing that in a criminal prosecution the defendant shall have the right to a speedy trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 15, Criminal Law, § 2492.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Tulare County; W. B. Wallace, Judge.

Thomas Stokes was convicted of robbery, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Alfred Daggett and H. T. Miller, for appellant. U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and E. E. Selph, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant was convicted of the crime of robbery, and prosecutes this appeal from the judgment, as well as from an order of the court denying his motion for a new trial.

The case was tried upon the theory that defendant, Stokes, a man by the name of Kincaid, and one Mart Bennett, formed a conspiracy to commit the robbery. The latter was called as a witness and testified on behalf of the prosecution. It appears from his testimony that he was a self-confessed, active participant with defendant in the commission of the crime. The facts, briefly stated, are: That on the night of October 18, 1905, one Owen Connolly was robbed in the back yard of the Visalia House in the city of Visalia.

He had on the day before come to Visalia from Millwood, where he had been working, and had brought with him the proceeds of his labor, consisting of several hundred dollars. There was adjoining the office of the Visalia House a saloon and bar, and at the time William Kincaid was the bartender in charge thereof. During the evening of October 18th Connolly spent most of his time in this bar, and it seems became quite well acquainted with Kincaid, and the latter had learned of the fact that Connolly had upon his person a considerable sum of money. During the daytime, and until about 11:25 p. m. of October 18th, when he arrived at Visalia, going immediately to the Visalia House saloon, the defendant was in Tulare City. Prior to his arrival Connolly had applied to the clerk of the Visalia House for a room. The clerk demanded payment in advance, and Kincaid paid to the clerk the amount demanded for the room, at the same time telling the clerk that he (Connolly), had lots of money, and, if he (Connolly), paid him for the bed, the clerk should return to him (Kincaid), the sum paid by the latter.

The first alleged error in the record to which our attention is directed was the ruling of the court in permitting the hotel clerk to state what was said by Kincaid upon the occasion of his paying for this room for Connolly's use. It was and is now claimed by defendant that the evidence sought to be adduced by the question calling for this conversation was irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial to any of the issues in the case, that the conversation did not take place in the presence of the defendant, and that there was no evidence introduced that tended to show any relation between Kincaid and defendant and Connolly, who was robbed. Whereupon the district attorney stated to the court that he proposed to make that connection. Defendant's objection was thereupon overruled.

The same objection was interposed to like questions throughout the trial, and the rulings of the court were adverse to defendant.

Defendant contends that there was no evidence tending to establish any conspiracy or other unlawful relation between Kincaid and defendant, and that hence, under section 1848, Code Civ. Proc., defendant could not be prejudiced by any act or word of Kincaid not occurring in his presence. And, further, that subdivision 6 of section 1870 provides that it is only after proof of a conspiracy that evidence of the act or declarations of a conspirator can be offered against his co-conspirator. Defendant places great weight on the word "after." We cannot, however, agree with counsel in his contention upon this point. It is not often that direct proof of a common design to commit a crime can be had. Its existence is usually established by independent facts, which, although they may be remote from the main subject of inquiry, and standing alone seem of little importance, but nevertheless when all are taken together are amply sufficient to establish a prima facie case of the existence of an agreement to commit a crime. Conspiracy, like any other fact in issue, may be proved by circumstantial evidence, and, notwithstanding subdivision 6 of section 1870, Code Civ. Proc., the order in which the evidence may be introduced must rest largely with the trial judge. The provisions of the Code cited are not mandatory. People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 408, 56 Pac. 44; People v. Donnolly, 143 Cal. 394, 77 Pac. 177. The prosecution here, in substance, stated in reply to the objection that it would show the relation existing between Kincaid and defendant; that the act or circumstance was merely a link in the chain of circumstances going to establish the relation of conspirators, and showing defendant's connection with the crime. Under the circumstances of this case, we find no fault with the course adopted by the trial court. People v. Daniels, 105 Cal. 262, 38 Pac. 720. If all the evidence bearing upon the question of the alleged conspiracy, taken together, tends to establish its existence, it then becomes like any other fact pertaining to the subject of inquiry, a question for the determination of the jury. Where the existence of a conspiracy is one of the issues, independent facts and circumstances which establish it may at the same time supply evidence tending to prove the guilt of a conspirator on trial, but the fact that it performs the dual function is no reason for excluding it. There were three alleged conspirators here, but it was Kincaid's conduct, acts, and movements which were the subject of inquiry when the alleged errors were committed, and his conduct, conversation, and acts during the period covered by the inquiry was not only competent and material as tending to show the existence of a common design between him and the defendant to commit the robbery, but, at the same time, in case the jury found the conspiracy to be actually established, constituted evidence tending to establish defendant's guilt. Taken together, the circumstances and facts disclosed tended to show that the conspiracy existed, and the jury were instructed that, "if not satisfied from the evidence beyond all reasonable doubt that there was an agreement and understanding made and had between the said William Kincaid, Martin Bennett, and the defendant to perpetrate the offense alleged in the information, then it is the duty of the jury to disregard all the testimony adduced in this case tending to prove any declaration, act, or conversation of said William Kincaid and Martin Bennett and each of them made or done in the absence of the defendant Thomas Stokes." Under this instruction the jury found that there was such an agreement and understanding made, and its conclusion is final. People v. Fehrenbach, 102 Cal. 394, 36 Pac. 678; People v. Donnolly, supra.

Appellant lays much stress upon the fact that all the evidence relative to Connolly's having money shows a knowledge on the part of Kincaid only, and that this was acquired by Kincaid before the defendant arrived in Visalia. The existence of the conspiracy being shown, it must be presumed that the knowledge of all the conspirators was brought into play in the execution of the joint undertaking. The individual knowledge of each is imputed to all, and it is not material when or how this knowledge was acquired, provided it was before the consummation of the crime. The purpose of the robbery was to wrongfully obtain money, and evidence tending to show that the defendant knew that Connolly had money would show a motive for the crime. The jury being satisfied of the existence of the conspiracy had a right to presume that the defendant had the same knowledge and information relative to Connolly having money upon his person that Kincaid was shown to have had. Upon cross-examination both Connolly and witness Wessendorf were interrogated as to their testimony given on a former trial, and objections were sustained. No foundation was laid for such impeachment. Section 2052, Code Civ. Proc.; People v. Fitzgerald, 138 Cal. 41, 70 Pac. 1014. Later, the former testimony of Wessendorf was read to him and he answered the question. The court ruled that witness Wessendorf might make an explanation of his testimony, to which ruling defendant excepts; but, as it does not appear that the witness offered to make any explanation, such ruling could not affect the rights of defendant.

No exception was taken to the ruling of the court in sustaining objection to the question asked witness Bacon as to whether he was in the bar when they were talking about closing up the house; and the later question as to whether he took supper with the defendant that night was clearly objectionable for the reason that it was not cross-examination. The sheriff, who placed the defendant under arrest, was permitted over objection of defendant to testify as to conversation had with him after he was placed in jail. It is urged that it does not appear that the statements made by defendant to the sheriff were voluntary, and defendant invokes the well-recognized rule applicable to confessions: "A confession, in criminal law, is the voluntary declaration made by a person who has committed a crime or misdemeanor to another, of the agency or participation he had in the same." People v. Strong, 30 Cal. 151. The defendant does not admit that he had any agency in the commission of the crime, but, on the contrary, his statement as to his movements and whereabouts is calculated to negative any participation in it. Even if he made statements which in themselves did not involve his guilt yet when connected with the other facts tend to prove him guilty, such admissions would nevertheless be competent without preliminary proof. People v. Le Roy, 65 Cal. 613, 4 Pac. 649; People v. Ammerman, 118 Cal. 23, 50 Pac. 15; People v. Jan John, 144 Cal. 284, 77 Pac. 950.

Witness Bentley, after stating that there was a jingle of some coin in the pocket of Connolly, the prosecuting witness, was asked with reference to what kind of coin it was. Objection was made to his testifying upon this subject. After testifying that he could tell the difference between gold and silver by the jingle or sound and that he had often noticed the difference, he was permitted to testify over defendant's objection that the jingle that he heard in the pocket of Connolly sounded to him like heavy gold. He does not state that it was gold, but merely that the jingle sounded like gold. In view of the test made as disclosed by the record, the evidence carried little weight, and it cannot be said that defendant was prejudiced by its admission.

We have fully considered every alleged error occurring at the trial. Only one other merits notice. Connolly had been knocked down in the back yard of the Visalia House as he was leaving a water-closet. After regaining consciousness, he made his way to the door of the hotel and was let in by the clerk. Just what space of time elapsed after he was knocked down and his money taken before he again entered the hotel is not disclosed. Just before Connolly came in Kincaid and defendant came from the bar through the office of the hotel and entered a hall from which a stairway led upstairs, where defendant had a room. After the clerk had let Connolly into the hotel he (the clerk) went to the door, calling for the marshal, and during this time Kincaid came out from the hallway. The witness Deible was asked the following questions: "What did he [Kincaid] do when he came into the room, where did he first go?" "He walked up to the barroom door, then he turned and he went back, I think, towards the main entrance that was on the east side, this hallway [showing on the map]. He might possibly went out. I wouldn't be positive in regard to that. Question: What did you see Kincaid do after that? Now, I am not asking for anything he said, but what did you see him do? Answer: Well, Mr. Kincaid came back and he made the remark to— He walked over to the wash bowl and he got a towel and he sponged Mr. Connolly off." The witness Wessendorf, after stating that he saw Kincaid after the consummation of the robbery—after he came back into the hotel—was asked the question: "Where did he come from? Answer: He must have come out from the stairs. He couldn't come from nowheres else, because the doors were all locked. Question: Where were you when you saw him? Answer: I was standing on the sidewalk hollering for the marshal when I saw Kincaid. I saw him come out of the office onto the street, and I saw him back in that office again wiping the blood off of Connolly. He had gone out onto the street before he wiped the blood off Connolly." The sheriff, after stating that he arrested Kincaid, was asked: "What was done with him when he was brought down? Answer: I asked him to remove his shoes, which he did, searched him and locked him up. He removed his shoes at my request and in my presence." Defendant objected to all of these questions upon the ground that they were irrelevant, incompetent, and immaterial, and related to what took place subsequent to the consummation of the alleged offense and not in the presence of defendant. We are not unmindful of the general rule that evidence of the declarations and appearance of a coconspirator directed to matters occurring after the commission of the offense, and not in the presence of the defendant on trial, is inadmissible. People v. Opie, 123 Cal. 294, 55 Pac. 989; People v. Dilwood, 94 Cal. 89, 29 Pac. 420. The fact that Kincaid procured a towel and washed the blood from Connolly's face was, however, competent evidence as tending to corroborate Connolly's testimony that he had been knocked down. It tended to show his condition immediately after the robbery; that his face was covered with blood to such an extent that another, whether as an act of kindness or otherwise, deemed it necessary to remove the blood. It was an independent act, and where Kincaid came from and his movements around the saloon immediately preceding the act of washing Connolly's face were but recitals of the circumstances connected with the principal act of washing the face. They amounted to but a detailed history of the transaction which tended to corroborate the statement of the prosecuting witness that, by force and violence, he had been robbed. Conceding the questions to be irrelevant and the testimony elicited incompetent, and for that reason erroneously admitted, still the evidence, so far as fixing the robbery upon Stokes, was of such a character as to be wholly immaterial and without any weight. The answers threw no light whatever upon the issue as to whether or not Stokes was a participant in the robbery. We are unable to see how it affected the substantial rights of the defendant, without which being made to appear affirmatively, the error, if any, must be disregarded. Section 1258, Pen. Code. "If the evidence objected to had been excluded, we do not see how the jury could have entertained a doubt of the fact of the robbery, or of the identity of the defendant as one of the robbers." People v. Clark, 106 Cal. 41, 39 Pac. 55.

The jury rendered its verdict on March 19, 1906, and April 2d following was by the court fixed as the date for pronouncing judgment, which, however, upon motion of counsel for defendant, was postponed to April 16th, and on that date, upon like motion, again postponed until April 30, 1906. Nothing further was done until June 4, 1906, when defendant was brought before the court for judgment, whereupon he objected to judgment being pronounced upon the ground that, by reason of the delay, had without defendant's consent, the court had lost jurisdiction to pronounce any judgment upon said verdict, and it is now claimed that the judgment entered is without authority and therefore null and void. At defendant's request, April 30th was the time fixed by the court for pronouncing judgment. There was, at most, a delay of 35 days, including intervening Sundays and holidays. We cannot assent to the proposition that, by reason of this delay, the court lost jurisdiction to pronounce sentence. The delay was undoubtedly due to the holidays proclaimed by the Governor of the state and which continued throughout the month of May, 1906. It is not necessary to pass upon the question as to whether this holiday period of one month would excuse and justify an otherwise unwarranted delay, for the reason that we are of the opinion that, even though it be held that the act of pronouncing judgment is a part of the trial, the court did not by reason of the postponement from April 30th to June 4th lose jurisdiction in the matter.

A trial is "the examination before a competent tribunal, according to the law of the land, of the facts or law put in issue in a cause, for the purpose of determining such issue." Anderson v. Pennie, 32 Cal. 267; Tregambo v. Mining Co., 57 Cal. 501. Pronouncing judgment, which is the formal declaration of sentence, is not the trial, nor any part thereof within the meaning of section 13, art. 1, of the Constitution. Reed v. State, 147 Ind. 41, 46 N. E. 135. In a Missouri case (State v. Watson, 95 Mo. 415, 8 S. W. 383) judgment was pronounced two years after verdict, and the court passing upon a statute requiring that defendant be brought to trial within a specified time after indictment, otherwise to be discharged, held that such limitation did not apply to the pronouncing of sentence. The Supreme Court in People v. Felix, 45 Cal. 163, upholds a sentence pronounced at the third term after conviction. The trial ended with the announcement of the verdict of the jury, whereby it declared the result of its deliberations upon the issues of fact which had been submitted to it for its decision.

A careful examination of the voluminous record in this case impresses us with the fact that, notwithstanding the very able, ingenious and persistent effort of counsel to specify an error therein, such effort has failed, and the order and judgment should be and are affirmed.

We concur: ALLEN, P. J.; TAGGART, J.

WOLFSKILL v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 331.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 11, 1907.)

1. MINES AND MINERALS—PLACER AND OIL CLAIMS.

The laws governing the location of placer claims on the public domain apply with equal force to the location of oil claims.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES— ARTESIAN WELLS—OWNERSHIP.

An oil company bored three wells in the bed of a canyon on the public domain in a vain search for oil, and after producing two artesian wells, abandoned the land without making any attempt to comply with the laws applicable to the location of an oil claim. Held, that the company's rights, if any, to the land, wells, or water, terminated when it ceased work and abandoned its efforts to discover oil, so that its deed to the wells and water passed no title.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 21.]

3. SAME.

Where an oil company abandoned its attempts to find oil after it had produced two artesian wells on the public domain, such wells reverted with the land to its original status as unoccupied government land.

4. SAME—APPROPRIATION.

Water flowing from artesian wells on the public domain is subject to appropriation for irrigation purposes, under Civ. Code, § 1410, providing that the right to the use of running water flowing in a river or stream or down a canyon or ravine may be acquired by appropriation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 2.]

5. SAME—ACTS OF APPROPRIATOR—PRIORITY OF RIGHT.

Civ. Code, § 1416, provides that within 60 days after posting notices the claimant of a water appropriation must commence the construction of the works by which he intends to divert the water, and must prosecute the work diligently and uninterruptedly. Section 1418 declares that by compliance with the rules contained in section 1416 the claimant's right to the use of the water relates to the time of posting the notice. Rev. St. § 2339, as amended [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1437], provides that appropriators of water rights on the public domain shall have vested rights therein, and that all homesteads allowed shall be subject to vested and accrued water rights and rights to ditches used in connection therewith. Held, that where plaintiff posted notices of appropriation of water flowing from certain artesian wells on the public domain, and thereafter proceeded within 60 days to construct her ditches, etc., which work she prosecuted continuously until enjoined, her rights to the water flowing from the wells were prior to those acquired by a locator of the land as a homestead after the posting of the notices.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 14.]

6. SAME—ESTOPPEL.

Where, after plaintiff had appropriated water flowing from certain artesian wells on the public domain and had begun the construction of her irrigation works to use the water, S. located land including the wells as a homestead, capped the wells, and enjoined plaintiff from entering on the land to complete her irrigation ditch, S. was estopped to deny that plaintiff had prosecuted her work with sufficient diligence to become an actual appropriator.

7. SAME—NOTICE—POSTING.

Where three artesian wells were driven in a canyon within 500 feet of each other, notices of appropriation posted at the wells, describing them and their location, sufficiently designated the point of diversion.

8. SAME—COPY—RECORD.

Where notices of appropriation of water flowing from artesian wells located within 500 feet of each other were identical, it was not necessary to record more than one copy thereof.

9. SAME—PIPE LINE—RIGHT OF WAY.

Where M., prior to plaintiff's posting of notice of appropriation of water flowing from artesian wells on the public domain, had taken steps to obtain a right of way for a pipe line over the land, and the boundaries of the right of way included the wells, such acts did not confer on M. any right to the stream of water flowing from the wells.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Waters and Water Courses, § 14.]

10. SAME—APPROPRIATION NOTICE—SIGNING.

Under Civ. Code, § 1415, requiring a copy of a water appropriation notice to be recorded, the copy intended for record need not be signed by the party claiming the water, but may be made and filed by a stranger.

11. SAME—ACKNOWLEDGMENT—RECORD.

A copy of a water appropriation notice, required to be recorded by Civ. Code, § 1415, was not an instrument within section 1161, providing that before an instrument can be recorded, unless it belongs to certain excepted classes, not including such a notice, it must be acknowledged, and hence no acknowledgment is necessary in order to entitle a copy of such a notice to record.

12. SAME—RIGHTS OF APPROPRIATOR.

An appropriator of water flowing from artesian wells on government land prior to the location of the land as a homestead was only entitled to enter the land to avail herself of the water flowing from such of the wells as supplied a stream of running water, and not for the purpose of developing water by boring additional wells.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; J. S. Noyes, Judge.

Action by Elena P. de Wolkskill against George A. Smith and another. From a judgment in favor of defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Barstow & Variel and Thos. F. Porteous, for appellant. John G. North and O. P. Sanders, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Appeal from judgment in favor of defendants. This action involves the right to water flowing from artesian wells located upon government land. It is based upon the following facts:

Some time during the year 1900 an oil company commenced boring for oil in a canyon in the S. E. ¼ N. W. ¼ section 4, township 3 S., range 2 W., S. B. M. It continued the prosecution of its work until January, 1901, when, after having bored three wells and found no oil or other mineral substance, it abandoned the work. At the time of the commencement of said work, and up to October 20, 1902, the said land was unsurveyed land of the government, and, except as to the time that said oil company was prosecuting said work, was unoccupied. The three wells bored are in line with the bed of the canyon, distant about 500 feet apart. The lower well has since its completion by said oil company flowed five inches of water, measured under a four-inch pressure; the second or middle well, three inches under like measurement; and from the upper well no water at all flows. On the 9th day of October, 1902, and after the oil company had abandoned all work upon the premises upon which said wells were located, it executed to the plaintiff a deed, whereby, for a valuable consideration, it purported to convey to said plaintiff all its right, title, and interest in and to said 40 acres of land and said wells and the water therein and flowing therefrom. Thereafter, on October 13, 1902, plaintiff posted in a conspicuous place at each of said wells a notice of appropriation, as follows: "Notice of Appropriation of Water. Take notice that the undersigned claims 1,500 inches of water measured under a four-inch pressure flowing from and at the wells bored by the San Jacinto Oil Company on the land which would be the northwest quarter of section four, township three south, range two west, San Bernardino meridian, if said lands were surveyed by the United States, and I intend to divert said water at the three several points where this notice is posted, to wit, at each of said wells bored by the San Jacinto Oil Company. I intend to use said water for domestic and irrigation purposes on the land which was known as the Rancho San Jacinto Nuevo and the Moreno, Lakeview and Alessandro Colonies, and adjoining lands in the county of Riverside, state of California. I intend to divert said water by means of ditches of sufficient capacity to carry same, leading from each of said points. Dated the thirteenth day of October, 1902. Elena P. de Wolfskill. Witness: David G. Wolfskill." On October 16th following, one copy of the above notice was filed for record in the office of the county recorder of Riverside county, but that neither of said notices or copy filed was ever acknowledged. On October 20, 1902, one of the defendants, George A. Smith, entered upon and took possession of the entire northwest quarter of said section as a homestead under the laws of the United States, and since said date Smith has been in possession of said premises and of the wells located thereon and the water flowing therefrom, and has fully complied with the provisions of the law relating to the acquisition of government land by settlers thereon for homesteads. On August 21, 1902, Datus E. Myers did, under and in accordance with a certain act of Congress, file in the proper United States land office certain documents, data, and maps required by said act of congress, whereby he located a right of way for a pipe line 100 feet in width and extending across and through said 40 acres upon which said wells were located, and embracing within its boundary lines the land upon which all of said wells are located. Thereafter, on November 17, 1902, said Myers, under the act of Congress entitled "An act for the relief of Thomas B. Valentine," selected said southeast quarter of said northwest quarter, and being the 40 acres upon which said wells were located, and duly filed certificate of location "E No. 20" for 40 acres of land issued in accordance with said act, and said selection was allowed. Plaintiff duly commenced the construction of the ditch required to convey the water sought to be appropriated to her land, and prosecuted the work continuously until, at the instance of defendant Smith, she was enjoined from entering or working upon the northwest quarter of said section on which he had, on October 20, 1902, located his homestead. Said defendant Smith capped the wells, fenced the land in, and prevented plaintiff from doing any work on said premises, or taking or diverting any water therefrom, and claims the right so to do by virtue of this claim and occupancy of said premises as a homestead.

No issue as between defendants is involved; the sole question being the right of plaintiff as against both defendants. From a judgment in favor of defendants, the plaintiff appeals. Appellant bases her claim to the water, first, upon the deed of conveyance from the oil company; second, upon the notice of appropriation, duly followed (so far as not prevented by the acts of defendant Smith) by the statutory steps required for the actual appropriation of water subject to appropriation under the laws of this state. As against plaintiff, the defendant Myers claims the water by virtue, first, that the wells are located within the boundary lines of the right of way for the pipe line which he located on August 21, 1902, which location was prior in date to either the alleged posting of notice of appropriation or purchase made by plaintiff; second, that his selection of the 40 acres of land under the Valentine script entitles him to the flow of the wells as against plaintiff. Smith's claim is by virtue of his being an actual occupant of the land under the homestead laws of the United States.

Plaintiff's claim to the wells or the water flowing therefrom, so far as such claim is based upon purchase and conveyance from the oil company which had bored the wells, cannot be sustained. The fact that these flowing wells resulted from a fruitless effort to discover oil gave the company no right, title, or interest in the land or stream of water flowing thereon. The laws governing the location of placer claims apply with equal force to the location of oil claims. Miller v. Chrisman, 140 Cal. 441, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444. The oil company had acquired no right, title, or interest in the land or water which it could legally convey. No attempt had been made to comply with the laws applicable to the location of an oil claim. Its rights, if it had any, to the land, wells, or water flowing therefrom, terminated when it ceased work thereon and abandoned its efforts to discover oil. Admitting that actual occupation of the land accompanied by active work thereon, in the prosecution of its efforts to discover oil, entitled the company to possession, such right terminated upon a failure to discover oil, and when, prior to October 9th, it abandoned the enterprise. Weed v. Snook, 144 Cal. 439, 77 Pac. 1023; Miller v. Chrisman, supra. Where a miner abandons his claim, it reverts to its original status as part of the unoccupied public domain. A subsequent locator takes it with all shafts, tunnels, and drifts, however extensive or costly. Vol. 20, Ency. of Law, p. 733. The same principle applies to an oil claim, and it follows that, inasmuch as the San Jacinto Oil Company had, prior to October 9, 1902, abandoned the premises upon which the wells, one flowing five inches and one flowing three inches, were located, the land reverted to its original status as a part of the public domain. It was, on October 13, 1902, the date of posting the notice of appropriation of the water, a part of the unoccupied government land. Was this water subject to appropriation? In our opinion it was. The law is well settled that water flowing from springs upon the public lands of the United States is subject to appropriation, under section 1410 of the Civil Code, which provides that "The right to the use of running water flowing in a river or stream, or down a canyon or ravine, may be acquired by appropriation." Ely v. Ferguson, 91 Cal. 187, 27 Pac. 587; De Necochea v. Curtis, 80 Cal. 397, 20 Pac. 563, 22 Pac. 198; Strait v. Brown, 16 Nev. 317, 40 Am. Rep. 497.

The fact that the flow of the stream from the spring is caused by water percolating through the soil does not deprive it of the character which makes it subject to appropriation. "Where percolating waters collect or are gathered in a stream running in a defined channel, no distinction exists between waters so running under the surface or upon the surface of land." Cross v. Kitts, 69 Cal. 217, 10 Pac. 409, 58 Am. St. Rep. 558. Water passing through the soil, not in a stream, but by way of filtration, is not distinctive from the soil itself; the water forms one of its component parts. In this condition it is not the subject of appropriation. When, however, it gathers in sufficient volume, whether by percolation or otherwise, to form a running stream, it no longer partakes of the nature of the soil, but has become separate and distinct therefrom, and constitutes a stream of flowing water subject to appropriation. The water in question here is the stream issuing from the wells, and it is immaterial for the purposes of this discussion whether this stream is supplied by water percolating and filtering through the earth or not; at all events, it has gathered into a stream. No distinction can be made between the water flowing from these artesian wells and that flowing from springs. "Water rising to the surface of the earth from below, and either flowing away in the form of a small stream or standing as a pool or small lake," is the definition of a spring given by the Century Dictionary. This definition is equally applicable to an artesian well. The stream in either case may result from the gathering of water at some point, whether near or distant, which produces the stream, the flow of which is by natural causes forced to the surface. In the one case the aperture or opening through which it finds its way to the surface is the result of nature's forces; in the other, it is produced by artificial means. The fact that it is produced by boring a hole in the ground in no wise changes its character. In either case the water flows to the surface naturally. When a stream of unappropriated water flows from an artesian well, having its location upon unoccupied government land, it is the subject of appropriation to the same extent as the waters of a natural spring likewise located.

Posting the notice of claim to the water does not constitute an appropriation. Civ. Code, § 1416, provides that within 60 days the claimant must commence the construction of the works in which he intends to divert the water, and must prosecute the work diligently and uninterruptedly. And section 1418, Civ. Code, provides that by a compliance with the rules contained in section 1416 the claimant's right to the use of the water relates back to the time the notice was posted. His right to the water depends upon his complying with the provisions of the law, and making an actual appropriation of its use. The court finds that the claimant did commence the work within 60 days after posting the notice, and prosecuted it continuously until enjoined therefrom at the instance of defendant Smith on December 10, 1902, after Smith had settled upon the land, and that Smith fenced the land and prevented her from constructing the ditch. Having capped the wells, and enjoined appellant from entering upon the land to complete the ditch, by means of which she sought to divert the water to the place of intended use, respondents are in no position to assert that appellant has failed to prosecute the work with diligence and become an actual appropriator.

By act of Congress passed July 26, 1866, c. 262, 14 Stat. 253, it is provided: "That whenever by priority of possession rights to the use of water for mining, agricultural, manufacturing, or other useful purposes, have vested and accrued, and the same are recognized and acknowledged by the local customs, laws and the decisions of the courts, the possessors and owners of such vested rights shall be maintained and protected in the same, and the right of way for the construction of ditches and canals for the purposes aforesaid is hereby acknowledged and confirmed." Section 2339, Rev. St. U. S. [U. S. Comp. St. 1901, p. 1437]. Later this act was amended by a provision to the effect that all homesteads allowed should be subject to vested and accrued water rights and rights to ditches used in connection therewith. By posting the notice appellant from that time became vested with the right to the use of the stream of water then flowing from these wells, together with the right to construct over and across the land the necessary ditches to divert and conduct the same to the place of intended use. Both Myers and Smith took the property subject to the rights of appellant to the stream of water then flowing thereon, together with the right, without interference, to construct the necessary ditches for its diversion, which rights accrued and became vested in her under the said act of Congress and the laws and decisions of this state. The language used in Taylor v. Abbott, 103 Cal. 421, 37 Pac. 408, where it is said that the above-quoted section "does not confer the right to enter upon lands in the possession of another for the purpose of securing the water thereon, or of completing an attempted diversion of water," is not applicable to this case, for the reason that in that case no sufficient notice had been posted, and therefore no right to the water had accrued or become vested under the local laws and decisions of the courts.

The notice was posted in a conspicuous place at each well, and the claim is for fifteen hundred inches of water "flowing from and at the wells." It appears that these wells are in line with the bed of the canyon, and the lower one about 500 feet distant from the one next above, or middle one, and that no water flows from the upper one. Under these facts we regard the notice as a sufficient designation of the point of diversion, as well as sufficient in substance to meet the requirements of section 1415, Civ. Code. Nor was it necessary, the notices being identically the same, to record more than one copy. The purpose of recording is to furnish notice of claimant's rights to subsequent settlers upon the land or appropriators of the water, and this object was fully attained by recording one copy. The fact that defendant Myers had, prior to the posting of the notice of appropriation, taken steps to obtain a right of way for a pipe line over the land, the boundaries of which proposed right of way included the land on which the wells were located, gave him, as against appellant, no right to the stream of water flowing therefrom.

It is finally urged in support of the judgment that the copy of the notice recorded was not acknowledged, and therefore not entitled to be recorded, and if recorded did not constitute constructive notice of appellant's claim to the water, or impart any notice to defendants. Section 1161 of the Civil Code provides that, "before an instrument can be recorded, unless it belongs to the class provided for in either sections 1159, 1160, 1202, or 1203, its execution must be acknowledged." Copies of notices of appropriation of water are not designated in the excepted classes mentioned in said sections. The copy of such notice required to be recorded by section 1415, Civ. Code, is not, in our judgment, such an instrument, the execution of which is required to be acknowledged as a condition of being recorded, within the meaning of section 1161 above quoted. "The word 'instrument,' as used in the Codes, invariably means some written paper or instrument signed and delivered by one person to another, transferring the title to or giving a lien on property, or giving a right to a debt or duty." Hoag v. Howard, 55 Cal. 564. This language was used in holding that a writ of attachment was not an "instrument," within the meaning of the statute; but it is cited with approval in Warnock v. Harlow, 96 Cal. 298, 31 Pac. 166, 31 Am. St. Rep. 209, where it is held that a notice of lis pendens is not an instrument, yet provision is made for recording such notice of an action affecting the title to real estate (section 409, Code Civ. Proc.). And also in Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 555, 17 Pac. 680. Rapalje defines an acknowledgment to be "the act of one by whom a deed has been executed, in declaring before a competent court or officer that it is his act and deed." Section 1415, Civ. Code, does not require the notice which is posted, and which presumably is signed by the claimant, to be recorded, but a copy thereof, not necessarily signed by the party claiming the water. It may be made and filed by a stranger. Inasmuch as the copy of the notice is required to be recorded, and as this copy is not required to be made or filed by the claimant, it seems clear that the Legislature did not contemplate that it should be acknowledged in order to be recorded.

The northerly or upper well supplies no stream of running water, and hence affords no water subject to appropriation. Nor do the facts entitle appellant to enter the land for the purpose of developing water by boring additional wells, but she has an accrued and vested right to prosecute her work under and in accordance with the provisions of section 1416 of the Civil Code in the construction of the necessary ditches to convey the stream of water flowing from the two southerly wells to the place of intended use, and do all things necessary to complete the actual appropriation of the stream of water, in accordance with the notice posted on October 13, 1902.

The judgment is reversed, and the trial court will render a judgment for appellant in accordance with the views herein expressed.

GIACOMINI v. PACIFIC LUMBER CO.

(Civ. 252.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 18, 1907.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—EXISTENCE OF RELATION—EVIDENCE.

In an action for injuries to an employé in a sawmill, defended on the ground that a third person operated the mill as an independent contractor, evidence examined, and held to justify a verdict that the employé was the employé of defendant, and that the third person was a fellow employé.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Master and Servant, § 953.]

2. TRIAL—INSTRUCTIONS—SPECIAL EMPHASIS ON SPECIAL EVIDENCE.

Where, in an action for injuries to an employé in a sawmill, the issue was whether a third person operated the mill as an independent contractor or was an employé of defendant, the action of the court in calling attention in its instructions specifically to the evidence which must be the basis of the finding on the issue was not erroneous.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 577, 578.]

3. SAME—INSTRUCTIONS.

It is not error to refuse instructions covered by those given.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 651–659.]

4. MASTER AND SERVANT—INJURY TO SERVANT—NEGLIGENCE.

Where a machine originally furnished in a sawmill was unsafe, and an appliance was put on to render it less dangerous, the employer was required to see that the appliance was safely secured.

5. SAME—ASSUMPTION OF RISK.

An employé in a sawmill went to adjust an appliance on a machine at the request of an inexperienced workman. The employé was ignorant of the manner in which the appliance was fastened to the machine, and was injured while at work. Held, that the employé did not assume the risk, precluding a recovery.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; G. W. Hunter, Judge.

Action by Albert E. Giacomini against the Pacific Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Gillett & Cutler and Denver Sevier, for appellant. Mahan & Mahan and Coonan & Kehoe, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. A jury awarded respondent the sum of $3,500 as damages for injuries received in a shingle mill belonging to appellant. The appeal is from the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial.

The complaint alleges: That "on the 12th day of December, 1900, and for some time prior thereto, said plaintiff was employed by defendant in the capacity of shingle sawyer at one of said machines (a hand shingle machine) so known and designated as machine 'No. 3,' with instructions to attend to the setting of the screws of said other hand shingle machines when the same were being operated by inexperienced men. That on said 12th day of December, 1900, and for some time prior thereto, said machine, known and designated as machine 'No. 2,' was in a defective and dangerous condition, in this: That on the frame of the carriage of said machine, and on the side nearest the saw, was fastened at the time of the accident hereinafter described, an appliance used to prevent spalts from coming in contact with the saw." Then follows a description of said appliance and the manner in which it was fastened to said machine, and an allegation that it was so insecurely fastened as to render the machine "defective, dangerous, and unsafe to persons engaged in operating or working about said machine," and that it had been in such condition for several months to the knowledge of defendant, or that defendant could have known thereof by the exercise of ordinary care and diligence, but "negligently permitted and suffered the same to be and remain during all of said time in said defective, dangerous, and unsafe condition; that on said 12th day of December, 1900, while said machine was in said defective, dangerous, and unsafe condition as aforesaid, it was being operated by an inexperienced man, one Charles Bilderbach, who requested said plaintiff herein to set the screws on said machine, which said screws are used for the purpose of adjusting the table of said machine so that the shingles may be cut of the proper thickness, and, while said plaintiff was so engaged in setting the screws on said machine at said time, it became necessary for said plaintiff to push the carriage of said machine back and forth over said rapidly revolving saw, and while doing so the said appliance * * * dropped down at one end and came in contact with said saw and was torn from its place and struck plaintiff," inflicting serious injuries. As usual in cases of this character, there is little controversy as to the law in the abstract, but counsel differ widely as to the effect of the evidence and what particular principles of the law of negligence should be invoked.

1. The appellant earnestly insists, and his main point is, that the evidence shows without conflict that defendant was absolved from all blame for the accident for the all-sufficient reason that plaintiff was not in its employ, but was working for Ansel R. Thompson and Thomas Maddux, who it is alleged in the answer "were engaged in manufacturing shingles in said mill for said defendant under an agreement with defendant that defendant was to furnish the power and machinery and keep the machinery in repair, and said Thompson & Maddux were to receive a specified amount per 1,000 shingles for manufacturing the same for defendant with said machinery and from material furnished by defendant." In other words, it is contended that Thompson & Maddux were "independent contractors," and that the doctrine of respondeat superior does not apply to appellant. Respondent claims that the evidence leaves debatable the question whether there was such a contract, and that it therefore became a proper subject of consideration at the hands of the jury, and that this court cannot say that the finding adverse to appellant rests upon unsubstantial support. Does the evidence demand the conclusion that the relation of "master and servant," or employer and employé, existed between Thompson & Maddux on the one hand and respondent on the other? If so, the judgment cannot be unheld. Section 2009, Civ. Code, provides that: "A servant is one who is employed to render personal service to his employer otherwise than in the pursuit of an independent calling, and who in such service remains entirely under the control and direction of the latter who is called the master." If any addition to the Code definition or any elucidation of it were needed, it could be supplied by quotation from many authorities, as the question has been often the subject of judicial cognizance. By this Code provision, as well as by the decisions, it is made clear that in determining whether Thompson & Maddux were independent contractors or fellow servants with respondents the vital inquiry is: Who had "entire control and direction" of respondent in the service he was performing? If there had been a written agreement between appellant and said Thompson & Maddux, or if there were no uncertainty as to the scope and terms of said agreement, a question of law would be presented, but it is insisted by respondent that, in view of the evidence, it was a question of fact under proper instructions to be submitted to the jury to determine whether respondent was the employé of one or the other. "Where an alleged contract rests entirely in parol, it is the province and duty of the jury to determine whether there is a contract, and to ascertain and fix its terms, unless these terms are precise and explicit and admit of one construction only." 11 Ency. of Plead. & Prac. 88. And, in aid of the effort to reach a satisfactory conclusion as to whether a party is an independent contractor or a fellow servant, it is, in the nature of things, impossible to formulate inflexible rules which will cover all conceivable circumstances that may be received in evidence, but there are certain well-recognized guides of general application that point the way to a conclusion. For instance, it has been announced that an "independent contractor represents his employer only as to the results of the work, and not as to the means whereby it is to be accomplished." Casement v. Brown, 148 U. S. 615, 13 Sup. Ct. 672, 37 L. Ed. 582. Again: "A contractor for certain work may at the same time be the servant of the same employer in regard to other work to be done by him, so as to render the latter liable for his acts in connection with such other work." 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 187. Again: "If the employer has the right of control, it is immaterial whether he actually exercises it." Linnehan v. Rollins, 50 Am. Rep. 287, 137 Mass. 123. And: "A reservation by the employer of the right by himself or his agent to supervise the work merely to determine whether it is being done in conformity to the contract does not affect the independence of the relation." Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017. The fact that payment is made "by the job," or "according to the amount of the work done, does not make an employé an independent contractor, though it may be evidence that he is such." 16 Ency. of Law, p. 189.

But the ultimate standard by which all the evidence must be measured is that prescribed by the Code: Who has the undisputed and complete control of the servant? Appellant in the case at bar answers: Thompson & Maddux. That is its interpretation of the evidence, and in so many words it is so declared by some of the witnesses, but the jury had a right to consider all the facts and circumstances bearing upon the relation of the parties, and must it be affirmed as a matter of law that there is no warrant for the finding that Thompson & Maddux were fellow servants of respondent within the meaning of the Code? The declarations of certain witnesses for defendant undoubtedly did not carry conviction to the minds of the jury, and there were facts and circumstances considered more satisfactory and these led to a different conclusion. In his opinion denying the motion for a new trial, the learned judge of the lower court recites a large number of these circumstances which the jury had the right to consider in determining whether there was any such contract as claimed by appellant, among which are the following: The compensation of Thompson & Maddux was subject to change at any time and was frequently changed by the company. Whatever the agreement, it was for no definite term and could be terminated at any time by either party to it. The company owned the sawmill and the shingle machines, one of the machines being placed in the main part of the building and two in the addition which was built later. The same power ran the main mill and the shingle machines. The company furnished all the machinery, the power, the lights, made all important repairs, and furnished all the oil for the machinery. The material to be manufactured into shingles was the refuse from the main mill, carried down to the shingle machines by elevators, the material being taken from the same by the men in the employ of the company. The shingle machines were dependent entirely upon the main mill for material to be manufactured into shingles. Thompson was the principal man in the shingle department, looked after the work, but at times was called into the main mill and worked there when the shingle machines were idle, and when they were running he occasionally filed saws in the big mill, and he filed for the shake machine and he was paid therefor $1 a day, which he says he divided with Maddux. Maddux also did some filing in the main mill and they often worked at various jobs therein when the shingle mill was idle and the other men in the shingle mill did the same. One of the shingle sawyers worked for three days in the big shingle mill up the track for defendant, and at the end of the month he received his wages from the company in the same manner as when he was working all the time in the shingle department of the main mill. If they were short of stock, Thompson & Maddux complained to Howatt, the general foreman of defendant, and, if stock was accumulating, Howatt would not permit them to shut down. Howatt passed through the shingle department sometimes two or three times a day and frequently criticised the work of the men and occasionally gave them orders. On one occasion when Howatt was disabled, Thompson took his place as foreman of the main mill, and continued therein for a week or more. On the 15th of each month, when the company paid all its employés, the men in the shingle department lined up at the office precisely the same as the men in its employ did and were paid at the office window in turn by checks given by the company, or, if the amount was small, sometimes in cash. However, the evidence for defendant shows that this was charged upon the books of the company to Thompson & Maddux. The latter lined up as the other men at the same time and received their pay in the same manner. The names of all the men were on the pay roll kept by the company and opposite their names was a statement showing the amount due each for wages during the month and the amount due the company for bills incurred by them at the store or saloon or livery stable owned by the company. The men in the shingle mill signed the pay roll just as the other men did. Mrs. Ferguson, at whose place respondent and others boarded, applied at the office of the company and signed the roll as the others did and received her pay for food in the same way. On some occasions the company deducted from the pay of the men working in the shingle department the amount due for state and county poll taxes. The assessor had notified the company to keep out for him the money due from the men in its employ for poll taxes, but had never made such a request particularly as to the men working in the shingle department or for Thompson & Maddux.

To show how uncertain the contract was, even in Mr. Thompson's mind, we have in his cross-examination the statement: "I did enter into the contract with Mr. Sinclair alone, and, when Mr. Douglas took charge, he simply let the contract run along and we acted on it. That is the only contract that we have with the Pacific Lumber Company at the present time, and it was the only contract that we had at the time Giacomini was employed. Mr. Maddux, Mr. Sinclair, and myself were the only three present when the last contract was made. We didn't put it in writing. It never had been in writing. We simply manufactured our shingles for so much a 1,000. When times got harder, and we got our men cheaper, they cut us down. Then when it got hard to get men, we had to come to them to pay more. That is the way the contract ran. We never had it any other way. This contract was subject to change with the varying price of lumber and the varying demand for men. It was understood that the contract could be abrogated on either side at any time. If our work didn't prove satisfactory, they could, immediately come in and take their machinery and let us go." He went on further to state that he did not know just when the contract was made nor what price they were to receive for shingles. And altogether his testimony was so uncertain that it might justly carry very little if any weight with the jury. There was at least sufficient uncertainty to justify the submission to the jury of the question whether there existed between defendant and Thompson & Maddux such a contract as constituted the latter "independent contractors." It cannot be held, we think, that the probative force of the foregoing circumstances indicating the conduct of the parties, considered with the manner and appearance of the witnesses which cannot be disclosed by the record, is insufficient to justify the verdict.

Among the many cases in the books involving similar questions to those considered herein the following are instructive: Indiana Iron Co. v. Gray, 48 N. E. 803, 19 Ind. App. 565; Rummel v. Dilworth, 2 Atl. 355, 111 Pa. 343; King v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 66 N. Y. 187, 23 Am. Rep. 37; Klages v. Gillette Herzoz Man. Co., 90 N. W. 1116, 86 Minn. 458; Gahagan v. Aerometer Co., 69 N. W. 914, 67 Minn. 252; Rait v. New Eng. Furniture & Carpet Co., 68 N. W. 729, 66 Minn. 76; New Albany Forge & Rolling Mill v. Cooper, 30 N. E. 295, 131 Ind. 363; Neimeyer v. Weyerhaueser, 64 N. W. 416, 95 Iowa, 497; Nyback v. Champagne Lumber Co., 109 Fed. 732, 48 C. C. A. 632; Carlson v. Stocking et al., 65 N. W. 59, 91 Wis. 432; Toomey v. Donovan, 33 N. E. 396, 158 Mass. 232; Smith v. Belshaw, 89 Cal. 427, 26 Pac. 834; Callan v. Bull, supra; Corletti v. S. P. Co., 136 Cal. 642, 69 Pac. 422; Shea v. Pacific Power Co., 145 Cal. 682, 79 Pac. 373.

In the Carlson Case, supra, it is held that "when, in an action for damages caused by the negligent opening of a dam for the purpose of driving logs, there is evidence that the person in charge of the drive was acting as defendant's agent and also evidence that he had full control of the drive and dam and that he employed the men and obtained the supplies, defendants merely paying him for driving their logs, it is for the jury to determine whether such person was an independent contractor or not." In the Toomey Case, as stated in the syllabus: "In an action by a workman in defendant's factory for personal injuries caused by a defective machine, it appeared that under a contract with defendants one T. had charge of the fitting room in the factory—in whose room plaintiff worked—and hired and paid the men who worked therein and was himself paid by the case for fitting stocks and that defendants furnished all the machinery and 'looked out' for the room. There was testimony that they were about the room often; that they kept the machinery so that it would be all right to do the work in any way, shape, and manner; that they had to pay for repairs, but T. had the right if there was any necessity for repairs to go to a certain person and have them made; that they relied on T. to examine the machinery and they had repairs made after notice from him; that they had the right and the opportunity to inspect the machinery and they never hired any one to clean the machines, but supposed T. would attend to that, though they had no agreement to that effect." It was held by the Supreme Court of Massachusetts that the court should have permitted plaintiff to go to the jury as to the common-law liability of defendants. It is, of course, not our province to pass upon the weight of the evidence or the credibility of the witnesses, nor are we concerned about the question whether the verdict is just or in accordance with the preponderance of the evidence. We hold simply that there is substantial support for the verdict, and it is therefore binding upon appeal.

2. Another point emphasized by appellant is that the court erred in giving of its own motion an instruction marked "A." The instruction, which is quite lengthy, defines a servant and an independent contractor, and directs the jury that "the question is to be determined by all the evidence bearing upon the point, as to the nature and terms of the contract between the parties as to the location and situation of the entire mill and machinery," etc., calling attention to the various features of the evidence, "with all the other evidence, facts, and circumstances in the case which will aid you in determining the true relation between Thompson & Maddux and the defendant; that is, whether Thompson & Maddux were independent contractors within the law as I have defined it to you, or whether they were the agents or servants of the defendant within the meaning of the law as I have defined that relation to you." It probably was unnecessary for the court to detail the evidence which was to be considered, as the general direction in reference to all the evidence was ample; but the instruction is correct in its definition of the relations involved. It does not purport to pass upon the weight or effect of the evidence, and it is not apparent how it could have prejudiced the defendant. As it was proper for the jury to determine whether Thompson & Maddux were independent contractors or were servants of the defendant, the action of the court in calling attention specifically to the evidence which must be the basis of the finding cannot be successfully assailed.

3. Some minor points are made by appellant which hardly demand extended notice and which may be considered together. The rulings of the court during the progress of the trial, if erroneous at all, were without prejudice. The instructions refused, as far as correct and appropriate, were covered by those given. The point is urged here that the appliance of which complaint is made was not shown to be unsafe and insecure or dangerous and that the servant assumed the risk. The law applicable to this contention was properly presented by the instructions, but the jury on sufficient evidence found the facts to be in accordance with respondent's position. There is no doubt, as stated in Donnelly v. S. F. Bridge Co., 117 Cal. 417, 49 Pac. 559, that "the master must supply his employés with suitable appliances and a reasonably safe place in which to perform their tasks, and cannot relieve himself from responsibility by delegating to any servant a duty which rests upon him as master; but, where the overseer or foreman is negligent in any duty which does not devolve upon the master, then the master is not responsible for an injury resulting therefrom to another servant in the same general employment." The evidence here, however, shows that the machine originally furnished was unsafe and the appliance was put on to render it less dangerous. It was the duty of the master to see that this appliance was safely secured. There was evidence of negligence in that respect. The law also requires the master "to inspect the machinery and appliances furnished to his servant and this duty must be continuously fulfilled and positively performed." Dyas v. Southern Pacific Co., 140 Cal. 296, 73 Pac. 972. It cannot be said that respondent assumed the risk, as he was not at work upon this particular machine, but went there to adjust it at the request of an inexperienced workman and the respondent was ignorant of the manner in which the appliance was fastened to the machine. "Under such circumstances it is the duty of the master to warn the employé." Tedford v. Los Angeles Electric Co., 134 Cal. 76, 66 Pac. 76, 54 L. R. A. 85. "To relieve the master, the employé must not only know of the defect, but also must know the dangers and risks attending the operation of the machines by reason of the defects." Nofsinger v. Goldman, 122 Cal. 609, 55 Pac. 425. There was sufficient evidence, if believed by the jury, to uphold the contention of respondent in harmony with the foregoing principles of law. It may be conceded that the case is a close one, but an appellate court should not substitute its own judgment of the facts for that of the trial court or of a jury, nor should a verdict be lightly disturbed.

We are not prepared to say that there is an entire absence of evidence to support the verdict or that there was any prejudicial error committed. The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

GERMAN SAVINGS & LOAN SOCIETY v. ALDRIDGE, City Treasurer, et al.

(Civ. 328.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 18, 1907.)

1. MOTIONS—RES JUDICATA—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—APPLICATION FOR DISSOLUTION.

An order granting, after hearing, a preliminary injunction, is not res judicata on an application for the dissolution thereof on the grounds that it has been in force 12 months, that the applicant does not consent to its remaining longer in force, and that the cause has not been set for trial on its merits, as expressly authorized by Code Civ. Proc. § 527.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 35, Motions, § 88.]

2. INJUNCTION—PRELIMINARY INJUNCTION—DISSOLUTION—GROUNDS—STATUTES.

Code Civ. Proc. § 527, providing that no preliminary injunction shall continue in force for more than 12 months, except by consent of the parties, or unless the cause be set for trial on its merits, applies to injunctions granted ex parte and those granted after a hearing, and the court may declare an injunction inoperative after 12 months on the party enjoined applying therefor and showing that he does not consent to its further continuance, and that the cause has not been set for trial on the merits.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; Frank F. Oster, Judge.

Action by the German Savings & Loan Society against Marion L. Aldridge, as city treasurer, and others. From an order dissolving a preliminary injunction, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. F. Soto, for appellant. Hunsaker & Britt, for respondents.

TAGGART, J. This is an appeal from an order dissolving a preliminary injunction.

The injunction was granted upon notice and service of an order to show cause regularly made. The order dissolving the injunction was also made upon motions separately filed by each of the defendants after hearing duly noticed. The sole ground of each of the motions was the delay in bringing on the cause for trial on its merits. The notices of motion specify, and the affidavits in support of them aver, that the injunction was granted prior to the trial of said action; that the same has continued in force for a longer period than 12 months from the time it was granted; that the parties to said action have not consented that the same shall continue in force for a longer period than "six months," in one case, and in the other "any period of time, or at all"; and that the said action has not been set for trial on its merits. Both notices and affidavits follow the language of the amendment of section 527 of the Code of Civil Procedure made in 1895.

Appellant contends that, the preliminary injunction having been granted after hearing, the court was without power to dissolve the same; that the matter was res adjudicata; that the only remedy was by appeal from the order granting the injunction; that, assuming the court had the power to dissolve, this could be exercised only upon new matter or evidence arising since the granting of the injunction; and that the amendment of section 527, Code Civ. Proc., must be limited in its application to a preliminary injunction granted ex parte, where no motion either to dissolve or modify such injunction has been made or denied. The determination of these contentions depends solely upon a construction of the amendment of section 527, and, so far as we are aware, it has not been construed by any appellate court. A cardinal rule of interpretation is that a statute free from ambiguity and uncertainty needs no interpretation. This must be so, for all interpretation and construction is for the purpose of ascertaining the legislative will. When this is clear, interpretation is not allowable. Davis v. Hart, 123 Cal. 387, 55 Pac. 1060. Section 527, Code Civ. Proc., as it originally stood, provided at what time a provisional injunction might be granted, and what was required to obtain it. By the amendment of 1895 a limit was fixed, beyond which a provisional injunction would not be operative, if granted before the actual trial of the cause wherein it was granted. This limitation was placed at 12 months from the time the injunction was granted. Two exceptions were made to the operation of the amendment; those cases in which the injunction is continued for a longer period by consent of the parties, and those in which the cause has been set for trial upon its merits before the period of limitation expires. It was not intended by the framers of the amendment to provide any remedy for the party against whom the injunction runs, and therefore the question of his having a remedy by appeal has no application. The matter adjudged by the court in making the order complained of is not res adjudicata. When the court made the order it did not review, reconsider, or pass upon the matters determined in granting the injunction. The expiration of the 12 months, the want of consent on the part of the defendants, and that the cause had not been set for trial on its merits, were all the matters before the court. There is nothing in the language of the amendment to justify any distinction between injunctions granted ex parte and those granted after a hearing of all the parties. The wrong to be remedied by the amendment was the abuse of provisional injunctions obtained before trial of the causes on their merits by using them, through delay of the trial, to serve the purpose of a final judgment. The remedy given, a limitation of the period of their effectiveness, was as much needed in cases of injunctions granted on hearing as in those granted on ex parte application. The period of 12 months having expired, and the case being neither tried nor set for trial on its merits, the injunction became inoperative, and, upon application to the court, the parties beneficially interested were entitled to have the court so declare.

There is no formal signed order dissolving the injunction in the record. The minute entry: "Motion to dissolve and vacate injunction. Present, Hunsaker & Britt and McKeeby & McKeeby. Motion granted"—is all that appears. It is not material whether this order be designated an order dissolving an injunction, or an order declaring the dissolution of an injunction by operation of law. The law having declared the writ to be inoperative after a certain time, upon certain conditions, it appears to us to be a proper exercise of the court's jurisdiction to ascertain and find the facts as to the conditions and declare by its order that the injunction is no longer in force, if the facts warrant such a declaration. The motion that may be made under this amendment is in some respects similar to the proceeding to declare the termination of a life estate, under section 1723, Code Civ. Proc. The only thing before the court is the ascertainment of the existence of the facts upon which the right depends. Matter of Tracey, 136 Cal. 385, 69 Pac. 20.

A mere declaration not in form of an order might not be appealable (Devlin v. Rydberg, 132 Cal. 324, 64 Pac. 396), but all parties here have treated the appeal from the order in question as proper, and it has been considered on its merits. The objection that the notice of appeal was not filed in time appears to have been withdrawn by stipulation.

Order affirmed.

APPEAL—REVIEW—ORDER GRANTING NEW TRIAL—PRESUMPTION.

The presumption is that an order granting a new trial was properly made, and, in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing what was used in the motion unless the record on appeal establishes the contrary, it will be conclusively presumed that the motion was in part based upon some ground upon which affidavits could be used, that affidavits were used, and justified the court in making the order.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Joaquin County; W. B. Nutter, Judge.

Action by Anna Thompson against C. M. Wheeler. From an order granting plaintiff a new trial on judgment for defendant, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

A. H. Carpenter, for appellant. Ashley & Neumiller, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. Defendant had judgment, but the trial court granted plaintiff's motion for a new trial. From this order the appeal was taken.

The record does not show what evidence was used upon the motion for a new trial, nor upon what ground the court based its order. The notice of motion is not disclosed. In reference to the matter all that the transcript reveals is: "Whereupon, within the time by law prescribed therefor, plaintiff filed with the clerk of said court and served upon defendant notice of her intention to move said court to vacate said decision and to grant plaintiff a new trial of said action"; and: "The court this day made an order that plaintiff's motion to vacate and set aside the decision rendered in said action, heretofore argued and submitted, be and the same is hereby granted, to which order the defendant duly excepted." In Skinner v. Horn, 144 Cal. 280, 77 Pac. 905, the Supreme Court, speaking through Mr. Justice Angellotti, said: "The presumption is that the order granting a new trial was properly made, and, in the absence of a bill of exceptions showing what was used on the motion, unless the record on appeal establishes the contrary, it will be conclusively presumed in favor of the order that the motion was in part based upon some ground upon which affidavits could be used, that affidavits were in fact used on the hearing, and also that such affidavits were sufficient to justify the court in the making of the order appealed from. If, therefore, the appellant fails to present a record which shows affirmatively that the lower court erred in granting a new trial, such failure will operate solely to his own disadvantage." In the same case, reported in 146 Cal. 62, 79 Pac. 597, in the opinion by the chief justice referring to the previous order of the Supreme Court denying the motion to amend the record, is found the following declaration: "We held that a party appealing from an order must bring up a record demonstrating conclusively that the lower court erred in its ruling or must fail in his appeal, and that an order granting a new trial must be affirmed when the record contains nothing but a statement on motion for a new trial, and fails to show that the motion was not based also upon one or more of the grounds which require affidavits for their support. * * * Non constat, therefore, that the order granting a new trial was not supported by affidavits disclosing newly discovered evidence, or some other of the first four grounds for the motion. Code Civ. Proc. § 657." The foregoing is decisive of this appeal.

Appellant's answer to this contention is that, "as the bill was prepared by her, the point, if well taken, would seem to be an attempt to take advantage of her own wrong." It is obvious, however, that it is not a question of morals, but of legal procedure. Besides, the present record might be sufficient to answer plaintiff's purpose if her motion had been denied, but it is not sufficient to show error of the court in granting the motion. And it is hardly to be expected that one litigant will be solicitous to perfect the record for the special benefit of his adversary.

The order is affirmed.

In re FAY'S ESTATE. (Civ. 324.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 14, 1907. Rehearing Denied April 11, 1907. Denied by Supreme Court May 13, 1907.)

PERPETUITIES—WILLS—SUSPENSION OF POWER OF ALIENATION—VALIDITY.

Civ. Code, § 715, prohibits the suspension of the absolute power of alienation for a longer period than the lives of persons in being, and section 716 provides that every future interest is void which may suspend the absolute power of alienation for a longer period than prescribed in the chapter on alienation. By a clause in his will, a testator devised his property in trust for 25 years, and directed that the net income should be divided among his children or their children, if they should have any, and, if either of testator's children should die without lawful children, then the survivor was to inherit their share, and, should all of the children die before the expiration of the trust, testator's sister or her children were to inherit the estate. Held, that as the clause suspended the power of alienation for a period of 25 years, even though testator's children should die before the expiration of such period, it was void.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. V. Coffey, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of John Fay, deceased. From the decree of final distribution, Mary J. Scott and others, contestants, appeal; John Fay and another, petitioners, being the respondents. Affirmed.

Louis S. Beedy, for appellants. James G. Maguire, for respondents.

COOPER, P. J. Appeal from decree of final distribution, and from an order denying appellants' motion for a new trial.

The will of deceased was duly admitted to probate, and bears date "May twenty-fifth, eighteen hundred and fifty-nine." It contains the following clause: "I will all my separate property and all my share of the community property of every description, name and nature both real and personal, to my brother, David Fay, and my son, John Fay, in trust for the benefit of my three children, Luke Fay, Mary Montealegre and John Fay. The said David Fay and John Fay, or either of them, to hold and manage said property for the space of twenty-five years from this date; they shall keep the property in repair, pay all expenses, and divide the income from said property monthly or quarterly between my children, Luke, May and John, or their children, if they should have any; if either of my children should die without lawful children of their body, then the survivor shall inherit their share; should all of my children die before the expiration of this trust without lawful children it is my wish that my sister, Mary J. Scott, or her children should inherit or have all of my share of the estate, David Fay or my son, John Fay, will act or manage the property without giving bonds." The court below found that Mary Montealegre (the only daughter of said deceased) died without lineal descendants prior to the death of deceased; that the provisions of the will above quoted are invalid, and the trust thereby attempted to be created is void for the reason that the absolute power of alienation of the property therein mentioned is thereby suspended for a longer period than during the continuance of the lives of persons in being at the creation of such limitation or condition, or at the death of said testator, capable of taking the same under said provisions, and for the reason that there were and are no persons in being by whom an absolute interest in possession can be conveyed; that the period of the said trust expired and ceased prior to the death of the testator; and that said trust clause is void for uncertainty.

The deceased left surviving him his wife and two sons, Luke Fay and John Fay, his only children. After the death of deceased, Bridget M. Fay, his widow, and the mother of Luke Fay and John Fay, conveyed all her title and interest in the estate to John Fay, and such conveyance was made pending the administration and prior to the decree of distribution. The property was distributed to the two sons, Luke Fay and John Fay. The contestants are Mary J. Scott, the sister of deceased, and her children, being the sister and her children named in the said trust clause of the will.

The main question in the case is as to the validity of the trust clause, and, if the clause is void, the decree should be affirmed. We are of opinion that the court correctly held the trust clause void. It provides for an absolute period of 25 years for its continuance, during which time the power of alienation is suspended. The testator had three children who were in being at the time he made the will, and he had the right to suspend the power of alienation during the continuance of their lives, but he did not limit or suspend the power of alienation during their lives only. He suspended it for 25 years. If they should all die before the expiration of the 25 years, he suspended the power of alienation still for 25 years. He directed the income to be paid to "their children if they should have any." Our Code expressly provides that the power of alienation cannot be suspended by any limitation or condition whatever for a longer period than during the continuance of the lives of persons in being at the creation of the limitation or condition. That every future interest is void in its creation which by any possibility may suspend the absolute power of alienation for a longer period than is prescribed in the chapter on alienation. Civ. Code, §§ 715, 716. The court has often discussed and upheld these sections, and it is only necessary to cite two of the leading cases. In re Walkerly, 108 Cal. 627, 41 Pac. 772, 49 Am. St. Rep. 97; Estate of Fair, 132 Cal. 523, 60 Pac. 442, 64 Pac. 1000, 84 Am. St. Rep. 70.

In view of what has been said the findings as to whether or not the property was community property, and the rulings in relation thereto, become immaterial. Whether the property was all community property, or all separate property, it vested in the widow of the deceased and his two sons. The widow having conveyed her portion to John Fay, the decree of distribution properly distributed that to him.

The decree and order are affirmed.

SCHWIND v. FLORISTON PULP & PAPER CO. (Civ. 257.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 16, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 15, 1907.)

1. Master and Servant—Death of Servant—Fellow Servants.

Plaintiff's intestate, a minor, in defendant's employ, was killed between cars as he was crossing one of defendant's tracks in the factory yard, in the course of his employment. The cars on each side of the path used by intestate were a short distance apart, and defendant's yard foreman let down other cars against one of the cars divided by the crossing, and decedent, who was not seen by either the foreman or another employé, was caught between such cars. Held, that the foreman was decedent's fellow servant, for whose negligence, if any, defendant was not liable.

2. SAME—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE.

There being a safe way for decedent around the end of the train of which he could have availed himself by walking the length of a car, in which situation he could have seen the approaching cars, he was himself negligent.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by Joseph Schwind against the Floriston Pulp & Paper Company. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial, it appeals. Reversed.

Van Ness & Redman, for appellant. D. W. Burchard and G. W. Schell, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The action is for damages brought by respondent for the death of his minor son.

The complaint alleges: That "on July 31, 1901, the said Joseph Schwind, minor son of the plaintiff herein, was in the employ of the defendant corporation in the electrical department thereof. That on said day, and at the times hereinafter mentioned, and for a long time prior thereto, the defendant operated and maintained a railroad track that was situated and placed parallel to and a short distance from the factory building owned and operated by it at Floriston. That upon said track, as aforesaid, the defendant at all of said times hereinbefore mentioned, operated cars propelled by steam for the purpose of transmitting and carrying freight to and from said factory. That near the center of said factory and fronting adjacent to said railroad tracks, as aforesaid, a door was placed and maintained by the defendant, through and by which employés and those having occasion to go to said factory gained admission thereto and exit therefrom. That a pathway existed leading from said entrance across the track at right angles to the public highways of said town of Floriston, which said pathway during all of said times was used with the full knowledge, consent, and direction of the defendant, its officers and agents. In the manipulation of the said railroad, it was the habit and custom of the defendant to so adjust its freight cars as to keep said pathway space open in order to enable the said path to be traveled. That on the 31st day of July, 1901, and about the hour of 4:30 o'clock p. m. of said day, and while the said Joseph Schwind, minor child of this plaintiff, was so employed by the defendant corporation, a superintendent directed the said Joseph Schwind to go on an errand which necessitated and required that the said Schwind should leave said building, cross said track, and go to another part of the said town of Floriston. That when the said Joseph Schwind, in pursuance of such direction, stepped out of the door of said factory, there was a freight train standing on said track, broken, so as to leave two box cars about four feet apart at the ends, in such a manner as to leave said pathway open for purposes aforesaid. That it was the custom and habit of said defendant at all said times to have said passage kept open and free in said manner as herein stated. That while the said Joseph Schwind, pursuant to said directions as aforesaid, was walking along the said trail and passageway, and at the moment that he was crossing between said cars so left open, the defendant negligently and without warning caused said cars to collide and thereby to mangle and kill the said Joseph Schwind. That the said Joseph Schwind was not guilty of any act that contributed to said injury. That the servants and employés of defendant in charge of said train caused to be precipitated against one of the box cars a freight car that was not in charge of any brakeman or other person, nor attached to any engine that could control the same, and no signal of any character was given to the said Joseph Schwind of the approach of said car in order to enable him to protect himself or escape from said injury." In the answer there is a specific denial of the foregoing allegations except as to the ownership and use of the railroad and the employment of the said Joseph Schwind, as to the existence of the door as alleged in the complaint, as to the allegation in regard to the freight train standing on the track and as to the train not being attached to any engine, but it was denied that the ends of the cars were more than two feet apart. The answer also alleges "the fact to be that the said minor attempted to pass between the ends of said cars knowing that the same might at any moment be brought together, and that, as was the fact and as he well knew, it was not necessary for him to cross said track between said cars; and knowing also, as was the fact, that at other places said track could be crossed where there were no cars and where said track could be crossed without any danger whatever"; and furthermore that "if the injury to and death of said minor was due to any negligence other than his own, it was the negligence of a person or persons employed by defendant in the same general business with said minor."

Counsel do not entirely agree in their statements of what was shown at the trial, but the evidence must be viewed, undoubtedly, in the most favorable light to sustain the verdict of the jury. The following statement of facts is deemed sufficient for the purposes of this opinion: The operation of the side tracks or switches is entirely under the control of the appellant. The location of the works is in a sort of a flat with precipitous mountains on each side, and the hotel and residence portions of the town are on one side of the tracks, and the works of the company are on the other or Truckee river side. All the operatives and employés live across the tracks from the mill, and in order to go to and from their work it is necessary for them to cross the line of the Central Pacific and the main switch. It was the custom of the company when cars were standing on the switch to leave an open space varying from 3 to 10 feet on the line of a trail that reached from the works across the two tracks, and up the mountain near the homes of the employés. Respondent contends that "a pair of stairs had been placed by the company on the precipitous bank of the track of the Central Pacific to enable the employés to cross said track, and this open space left between the cars was in apposition to such stairway." Appellant, however, declares that this was placed there by Hirschler, the yard foreman, of his own accord, and that the company "provided for the women a board walk with a hand rail upon it near the finishing room, where the women were employed, and for the men a trail leading down the embankment between the Truckee switch and the boiler house, and connecting at its upper end with a wooden bridge, from which a path ran up to the cottages on the hillside." However, this difference seems immaterial, and at any rate the employés generally in going to and coming from work used the trail and steps as claimed by respondent, and their use of the same must have been known and acquiesced in by the company. The course, by any other route, was more lengthy and circuitous. The duties of young Schwind called him to different portions of the lands of the company at irregular hours in the performance of his duty, although there is no evidence how he happened to be crossing the switch at the time of the accident, nor where he was going, nor by whom, if any one, that he was sent. The allegation of the complaint in that regard is unsupported; but this circumstance is of no consequence, as it is apparent that he was not a trespasser. On the day he was killed there is evidence that the cars were in their usual position at the noon hour, and that the employés, including young Schwind, going to and from lunch, passed between two box cars as customary; and that in the afternoon, probably about 3 o'clock, in attempting to pass between them again going towards the town, young Schwind was caught and killed. The freight cars were precipitated upon him without any warning or signal indicating their approach. There is a down grade of about 31 feet in 1,500 feet, the distance from the Floriston end of the switch to the crossing where young Schwind was killed. An employé of appellant, one Hirschler, who had charge and management of the cars, undertook to let down six empty box cars from the Truckee end of the switch immediately before the accident, that no one was assisting him, and the cars came together with such force as to drive the train on both sides of the crossing together, and impelling the cars on the opposite side of the crossing some distance. There was no engine used, as one was not needed; the practice being to let down by gravity the empty cars, and to send the engine down after they were loaded. Respondent claims that there were not enough men to hold the cars in check, and that appellant knew it was the custom and habit of Hirschler to attempt to let said cars down alone, and did not require him to use an adequate number of men to protect the lives of the employés. All the evidence, however, shows that Hirschler had under his direction quite a number whom he could have summoned to his assistance; but the truth is, Hirschler needed no assistance. It was an easy task to let down the cars and he had always accomplished it without any difficulty. In fact, he had managed a much larger number without assistance. There was no negligence exhibited in letting down the cars. It was necessary that they should come with some force in order to couple them with the cars below. If there was the omission of any duty in that behalf, it was in the failure to give notice or warning of the approach of the cars; but, before bringing the cars down, Hirschler sent "Norton to the head end to look out and see that nobody would get on the track." At the time of the accident Norton was standing on a car below the crossing, but he was leaning over the brakes and did not see young Schwind. Hirschler had left the box car on which he was standing, and was running down to see that the coupling was made, and was within five or six feet of Schwind when the latter was struck. It is obvious that, if the company was under legal obligation to give warning at the crossing of the approach of the cars, it furnished the men to do it. There were two men, Norton and a helper, who were in charge of the cars below; either might have stationed himself so as to command a view of the crossing, and thereby have given warning to Schwind of the approach of the cars. Even Hirschler could have run down to the crossing in advance of his cars, if the view was interrupted, to caution the deceased. But these men were all fellow employés of the deceased, and their negligence, or the negligence of any one of them, cannot be imputed to appellant. There could be no question about Norton and his helper. Respondent, however, somewhat mildly questions the proposition as applicable to Hirschler. The learned judge of the court below, though, instructed the jury that "under the law an employer is not responsible for the injuries or death of an employé, caused solely by the negligence or carelessness of a fellow employé. You are instructed that the deceased, Joseph Schwind, and Hirschler, defendant's yard foreman, were fellow employés; and, if you find from the evidence that the death of said Schwind was caused by the negligence or carelessness of Hirschler alone, your verdict must be for defendant." This seems to be in line with the decisions. In Congrave v. S. P. R. R. Co., 88 Cal. 360, 26 Pac. 175, it was held that a brakeman and conductor were co-employés of defendant. In the discussion it is said: "It is also clear that the death was caused by the negligence and breach of duty of the conductor in starting the train before schedule time. There is no averment that the defendant was negligent in the selection of the conductor" (and it may be remarked that no similar claim is made here). "And the general rule (whatever exceptions there may be to it) is well settled in England and the United States, and particularly in this state, that a master is not liable to his servant for damages sustained by the negligent act of a fellow servant, unless the master was negligent in the selection of the servant at fault."

In Trewatha v. Buchanan, etc., Co., 96 Cal. 494, 28 Pac. 571, 31 Pac. 561, it is stated in the syllabus that "an engineer employed to operate an engine and hoisting tackle, used upon and in connection with the main shaft of the mine, to hoist the rock and débris therefrom, and to raise and lower the miners, is a fellow servant with a workman in the mine." In Daves v. S. P. Co., 98 Cal. 19, 32 Pac. 646, it is stated that "the law recognizes no distinction growing out of the grades of employment of the respective employés, nor does it give effect to the circumstance that the fellow servant, through whose negligence the injury was received, was the superior of the plaintiff in the general service in which they were both employed." In Stevens v. Railroad Company, 100 Cal. 555, 35 Pac. 165, it is held that "a fireman and oiler and an engineer of a ferryboat are fellow servants employed 'in the same general business,' and the fact that the engineer employs and discharges the fireman and oilers does not alter the relation." In Livingston v. Kodiak Packing Co., 103 Cal. 258, 37 Pac. 149, a mate of a vessel, and a servant employed in the steward's department, are declared to be fellow servants. In Donovan v. Ferris, 128 Cal. 48, 60 Pac. 519, 79 Am. St. Rep. 25, it is held that "it is not the duty of a master to give personal warning of danger to persons employed in the business of blasting, and the employment of a competent servant to give them needed warning ends the responsibility of the master. Such a competent servant is not a vice principal, but a fellow servant of those to be warned by him." The cases of Brown v. Sennett, 68 Cal. 225, 9 Pac. 74, 58 Am. Rep. 8, Beeson v. Green Mountain Mining Co., 57 Cal. 20, and N. P. R. R. Co. v. Herbert, 116 U. S. 642, 6 Sup. Ct. 590, 29 L. Ed. 755, are cited by respondents to the contrary. The facts in those cases distinguish them from the case at bar, and, besides, the first two have been modified and virtually overruled, and the decision of the United States Supreme Court has been shown to be inapplicable in this state by the Congrave Case, supra. It cannot be doubted that deceased and Hirschler were "employed by the same employer in the same general business," as provided by section 1970, Civ. Code, and the negligence of either towards the other could not be charged against the company. The "general business" of the company was the manufacture and sale of paper, and both contributed to the promotion of that business. It is of no consequence that they were engaged in different departments or that the grades of their employment were not the same. Neither had any control of the other nor could it be said that one represented the company in any different sense from the other. It is difficult to conceive what relation they sustained to each other if not that of fellow employés.

It is equally apparent, it seems to us, that the company was not guilty of any remissness in its conduct towards the deceased. No complaint is made of the "appliances" furnished. The cars and railroad track were properly constructed and equipped. The company furnished sufficient and capable men to manipulate the cars. The negligence causing the death of the deceased must have been that of himself or his fellow workmen. It is no answer to say that appellant did not furnish a safe crossing place for the employés. Any railroad crossing is not free from more or less peril. This was not more perilous than others. Besides, it was not the only one furnished by the company. Again, as already seen, there could scarcely have been any danger, and no accident would have befallen the deceased if he and the other employés who were operating the cars had exercised the care which ordinary prudence and discretion demand. Again, there is no issue raised as to the negligence of appellant in its failure to furnish a proper crossing. The gist of the charge is that the crossing was negligently closed, whereas it was the custom to have it kept open and free. Under the decisions, also, there would seem to be no escape from the conclusion that deceased was guilty of contributory negligence in attempting to cross the track as he did. We must assume that, on account of the box car near him, and the curve in the track, he could not see the approaching cars, and that he could not hear them on account of the noise of the machinery of the company's plant; but that would seem to be an additional reason why he should have exercised care. He certainly took desperate chances in acting as he did. If he had walked the length of a car towards Truckee, he could have passed around the end of the train, and he could without any difficulty have seen the approaching cars. In Memphis, etc., Co. v. Copeland, 61 Ala. 376, it is said: "The attempt thus to pass between the cars of a train, which he must have known was liable to be moved, cannot be classed as less than negligence. It borders on recklessness." To the same effect are Lewis v. Baltimore, etc., Co., 38 Md. 588, 17 Am. Rep. 521; Hudson v. Wabash, etc., Co., 123 Mo. 445, 27 S. W. 717; Lake Shore, etc., Co. v. Pinchin, 112 Ind. 592, 13 N. E. 677. In Studer v. S. P. Co., 121 Cal. 400, 53 Pac. 942, 66 Am. St. Rep. 39, our Supreme Court has said: "An attempt to pass between the cars of a train that is liable to move at any instant, without taking any precaution to avoid danger, is itself an act of negligence when decided by the standard of common prudence, and has been so held by courts whenever the occasion has been presented; and the act is equally negligent whether it is done at a street crossing or elsewhere." If the occurrence had taken place at an hour when most of the employés were accustomed to go to and from work, a different question might be presented. At those times it was the practice of the company not to move the cars in the vicinity of the crossing; but during working hours they were likely to be moved at any time. This the deceased knew, and he was, of course, charged with notice of the danger incident to a railroad crossing, and the duty of "one intending to cross to avail himself of every opportunity to look and listen for approaching trains." The increase of the peril by the narrowness of the opening between the cars made more urgent his duty to protect himself by resort to the palpable means at hand. However lamentable the unfortunate occurrence, in legal contemplation, it was the result of decedent's own negligence.

The judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial are reversed.

CALLOWAY v. ORO MINING CO. (Civ. 314.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 15, 1907.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—COMPUTATION OF LIMITATIONS — PLEADING — AMENDMENT — NEW CAUSE OF ACTION.

Where an action was brought on a claim against a husband and wife as their joint and several obligation, an amendment made more than two years after the maturity of the claim, alleging that the contract was made with the wife alone, did not change the cause of action so as to bar recovery by limitations; the time to which the statute ran being the filing of the original complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 543.]

2. ASSIGNMENT — ACTION — NECESSITY FOR PROOF OF ASSIGNMENT.

Where, in an action on an assigned claim, the assignment is a fact in issue, proof thereof is as essential as that of the indebtedness.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 4, Assignments, § 228.]

3. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Where a company's employés threatened to quit work for nonpayment of wages, but on defendants' promise to pay them did not do so, in an action against defendant by an alleged assignee of the claims, that parties claimed to be plaintiffs' assignors testified to the genuineness of their signatures upon an assignment claimed against the company did not tend to prove an assignment of their claim against defendant.

4. COURTS—JURISDICTION—AMOUNT IN CONTROVERSY.

Where plaintiff sued in the superior court on a claim due him and upon several claims alleged to have been assigned to him, that recovery was defeated on the alleged assigned claims, leaving recovery on his claim less than $300, did not defeat the court's jurisdiction to award judgment; the amount claimed in the complaint being determinative of the question of jurisdiction.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Charles Calloway against the Oro Mining Company and Florance A. Stough. From a judgment for plaintiff, and an order denying a new trial, defendant Stough appeals. Reversed and remanded.

C. H. Rippey and A. A. Haines, for appellant. F. P. Willard, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action for personal services of plaintiff and assignors. Judgment for plaintiff; new trial denied. Appeal by Florance A. Stough, one of the defendants, from the order denying a new trial.

It appears from the record that Mrs. Stough, the appellant, on July 16, 1902, was the owner of mining property in San Diego county which was subject to an executory contract of sale, under which the Oro Mining Company, a corporation, was in possession. Plaintiff and three others were engaged in work on the mine for the corporation, and, becoming dissatisfied by reason of default in the payment of their wages, determined to quit work and to institute proceedings to collect their unpaid wages. Mrs. Stough, being informed of this threatened action upon the part of the employés, authorized one Mullins, a stockholder in the corporation, to agree with the workmen that, if they would continue at work and keep the mine free from water, she would pay them their wages when she obtained possession of the mine. This promise and proposition Mullins communicated to the men, and they continued at work on the mine until November 7, 1902, at which date the appellant obtained possession of the mine. She, however, refused payment and the workmen all made out an account, which upon its face was a statement of wages due from the Oro Mining Company, a corporation, claimed to have been earned between April and December, 1902, being the aggregate of the wages due from the corporation before the agreement of appellant and that earned by them after such agreement. These statements of account all of the workmen, except plaintiff, assigned to plaintiff, who thereupon brought this action against the corporation, Mrs. Stough, her husband, and certain stockholders in the corporation. In the original complaint it was averred that the promise to pay for the labor after July was made by Mr. and Mrs. Stough. More than two years after the maturity of the claim, the complaint was amended by an allegation that the contract was with Mrs. Stough alone. Appellant makes the point that this amendment changed the cause of action, and, that more than two years having intervened between the maturity of the claim and the filing of the amended complaint, the statute of limitations barred recovery. The action, however, was upon the obligation which was sought to be enforced, and which, under the original complaint, was a joint and several obligation. There was no change in the cause of action by the filing of the amended complaint, the effect of which was to dismiss the action as against one of the defendants. The time to which the statute of limitations runs is the filing of the original complaint. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 425, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53.

The evidence is ample to support every finding of the court, except that relating to the assignment to plaintiff by the other workmen of their claims. The allegations of the complaint, which are supported by the evidence, show that the contract between the workmen and Mrs. Stough, made by her agent Mullins, was an independent, original promise upon her part, disconnected from any obligation or prior employment of the corporation. From the time it was made until November 7th the men engaged in work were in the employ of Mrs. Stough. Whatever claim they had was one against her individually, and, under the allegations of the amended complaint, against her alone. The complaint averred an assignment in writing by the other workmen to plaintiff of their claims against Mrs. Stough. The court so finds; but there is no evidence in the record to support such finding. On the contrary, the only assignment offered in evidence was the assignment of a claim against the corporation and for services rendered such corporation during the time the men were in the employ of appellant. The assignment was a fact at issue and the proof thereof as essential as that of the indebtedness. Brown v. Curtis, 128 Cal. 196, 60 Pac. 773. The finding that the claim against Mrs. Stough was assigned in writing to the plaintiff before the commencement of the action has no support in the evidence; nor is there any evidence of an oral assignment. The fact that the parties who were claimed to be plaintiff's assignors were witnesses upon the trial and testified to the genuineness of their signatures upon the assignment claimed against the corporation does not tend to prove any assignment of their claim against appellant.

It is claimed by appellant, further, that, the evidence not warranting a judgment upon the assigned claims, the court was without jurisdiction to render judgment upon the original claim of plaintiff, in that the same was in amount less than $300. This cannot be maintained. The amount of the claim in the complaint is determinative of the question of jurisdiction, and that exceeded the $300. While it is within the power of this court to modify the judgment by affirming the same to the extent of the original claim, we are impressed from an examination of the record with the fact that there is a strong probability that evidence of an assignment may be supplied upon another trial, and that it is in the furtherance of justice that another trial of the action be had.

It is therefore ordered that the order denying a new trial is reversed and the cause remanded for further proceedings.

FORD v. FREEMAN et al. (Civ. 336.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 12, 1907.)

APPEAL—PARTIES ENTITLED TO NOTICE—ADVERSE PARTY.

Plaintiff, suing F., D., and C. on the theory that F. and D. held money in trust for themselves and for plaintiff and C., procured, on his application in which C. joined, the appointment of a receiver of the fund. F. and D. appealed from the order. Held, that C., being interested in the fund, was an adverse party within Code Civ. Proc. § 940, providing that notice of appeal must be served on the adverse party, and on the failure to serve the notice on him, the appeal must be dismissed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 2, Appeal and Error, §§ 2137, 2138.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thos. F. Graham, Judge.

Action by George K. Ford against Frank Freeman and others. From an order appointing a receiver, certain of the defendants appeal. Dismissed.

F. H. Gould, for appellants. Stanley Moore and L. A. Gibbons, for respondents. Geo. K. Ford, in pro. per.

BURNETT, J. The action is based upon an alleged trust agreement. By the complaint it appears that one of the defendants, Samuel C. Pierce, had a cause of action for damages against the Mountain Copper Company. He entered into an agreement with plaintiff, who is an attorney at law, whereby the latter was to furnish all the money necessary for the prosecution of said cause of action, and also to act as the attorney of the former in whatever proceeding was required, and it was agreed that Ford should receive for such services one-half of the amount recovered by suit, compromise or otherwise. Thereafter plaintiff entered into an agreement with Freeman, Cannon, and one Charles L. Donohoe, whereby the last three were to perform said services and pay all the costs, and the four, after deducting the costs, were to share equally the amount received, to wit, one-half of what was recovered. It was further agreed that defendants Freeman and Donohoe should secure from Pierce a new contract in pursuance of said arrangement. Accordingly, Pierce and Freeman entered into a written contract whereby Freeman was to represent him in the litigation, advancing all the costs and receiving for his services one-half of what should be recovered. Freeman agreed with plaintiff and defendants Cannon and Donohoe that he would receive said money in trust and the four would share it equally. Suit was brought on behalf of Pierce, and he recovered the sum of $15,000. The judgment was assigned to Freeman, who received it in trust for the parties named, Ford, Cannon, Freeman, and Donohoe. The money was afterwards paid to Freeman and Donohoe, who hold the greater portion of it in trust for plaintiff and defendants. Defendants Freeman, Donohoe, and Cannon each advanced certain costs and expenses in said action. Plaintiff demanded of them that they account to plaintiff for the moneys they and each of them received and paid out, but they refused to do so. There is also an allegation of the insolvency of Freeman and Donohoe. Plaintiff made application to have a receiver appointed "to take charge of the money or fund in the complaint in said cause described, during the pendency of this action * * * on the ground that the money or fund described in the complaint herein is liable to be lost, removed or materially injured." The application was heard upon the verified complaint and the affidavit of defendant Donohoe denying all the material allegations of the complaint. Defendant Cannon appeared upon the hearing of said motion and also requested the appointment of a receiver. It was contested by the other defendants, who have appealed from an order which was made appointing a receiver.

Cannon has moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that no service was made upon him of the notice of appeal of the transcript, or of the appellants' points and authorities. It is admitted that he was not served, but it is claimed that he is not "an adverse party" within the meaning of section 940, Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that the notice of the appeal must be served "on the adverse party or his attorney." There can be no doubt that Cannon was a party to the proceeding. He was expressly made a defendant in the action and the notice of the motion for the appointment of a receiver was addressed to all the defendants and he appeared and participated in the hearing. It must be manifest that he is a party in the legal sense, which means that he has been made and become such in a mode prescribed by law, so that he is bound by the proceedings. Robinson v. Vanderberg Co., 37 Ind. 335; Basket v. Hassell, 107 U. S. 608, 2 Sup. Ct. 415, 27 L. Ed. 500. Whether he is an "adverse" party must be determined by an examination of the complaint and the proceedings culminating in the appointment of the receiver. "Whether a party to the action is adverse to the appellant must be determined by their relative positions on the record and the averments in their pleadings, rather than from the manner in which they may manifest their wishes at the trial, or from any presumption to be drawn from their relation to each other or to the subject-matter of the action in matters outside of the action." Harper v. Hildreth, 99 Cal. 268, 33 Pac. 1103. As to the meaning of the term "adverse" used in this connection there can be little doubt. In Senter v. De Bernal, 38 Cal. 640, it was declared: "Every party whose interest in the subject-matter of the appeal is adverse to or will be affected by the reversal or modification of the judgment or order from which the appeal has been taken is, we think, an 'adverse party' within the meaning of these provisions of the Code, irrespective of the question whether he appears upon the face of the record in the attitude of plaintiff or defendant or intervenor. * * * Our Code allows any and every party who is aggrieved to appeal without joining any one else, no matter what may be the character of the judgment against him, whether joint or several; and, in this respect, works a change from the former practice, but he is required to notify all other parties who are interested in opposing the relief which he seeks by his appeal, if they have formally appeared in the action in the court below, or his appeal, as to those not served, will prove ineffectual, and also as to those served, if the relief sought is of such a character that it cannot be granted as to the latter without being granted as to the former also." To the same effect are Randall v. Hunter, 69 Cal. 80, 10 Pac. 130; Millikin v. Houghton, 75 Cal. 539, 17 Pac. 641; In re Castle Dome Mining, etc., Co., 79 Cal. 246, 21 Pac. 746; Lancaster v. Maxwell, 103 Cal. 67, 36 Pac. 951; Barnhart v. Edwards, 111 Cal. 428, 44 Pac. 160; Vincent v. Collins, 122 Cal. 387, 55 Pac. 129.

The appointment of a receiver is a matter in which defendant Cannon was interested equally with plaintiff. He was one of the beneficiaries of the trust fund which the receiver was authorized and directed to take into his possession and control. The reversal of the order appointing the receiver would affect his interest in the same manner as it would that of plaintiff. If Cannon is not an adverse party, there is no adverse party shown by the record. It seems to me, in view of the decisions, that the question is scarcely open to serious controversy.

There is no doubt that the matter is jurisdictional, and, while it is not clear that it was a proper case for the appointment of a receiver, we are precluded from considering that question in this proceeding.

The appeal is dismissed.

SHIVELY v. EUREKA TELLURIUM GOLD MINING CO. et al. (Civ. 288.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 19, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 16, 1907.)

1. JUDGMENT — CONCLUSIVENESS — MATTERS CONCLUDED.

Code Civ. Proc. § 1908, subd. 2, provides that a judgment is, as to the matter directly adjudged, conclusive between the parties and their successors in interest by title subsequent to the commencement of the action, litigating for the same thing, under the same title and in the same capacity, provided they have notice of the action. Section 1911 provides that that only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto. An action having been brought against a corporation on notes executed by it for services rendered the corporation by its directors and money advanced it by them, judgment was rendered that the notes, having been issued by the directors to themselves, and not having been assigned in good faith, but for collection only, were void, and directing their cancellation. Held, that the judgment was not conclusive on an action brought upon quantum meruit for the services rendered and money loaned.

2. ACCOUNT STATED—IMPLIED ASSENT OF PARTY TO BE CHARGED.

Where an account against another is presented to him, and he makes no objection to it within a reasonable time, an account stated may be implied.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Account Stated, § 31.]

3. CORPORATIONS—DIRECTORS—DEALING WITH CORPORATION.

Directors of a corporation are entitled, as against the corporation, to money expended, and to the reasonable value of services performed in good faith for the use and benefit of the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 1334.]

4. SAME—ACTIONS AGAINST—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

Evidence held to support a finding that an agreement did not provide that certain parties should at their own expense operate a mine of defendant corporation.

5. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE.

In an action to recover the reasonable value of services rendered, it was not reversible error that the person performing the same was permitted, after testifying as to the services performed, to state their reasonable value, though he should have been more fully questioned as to his knowledge of their value before stating the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4153, 4156.]

6. SAME.

In an action to recover the reasonable value of services rendered a corporation, it was not reversible error that a witness' testimony that he requested the directors to have accounts stated made of the indebtedness, of which a certain account stated was one, was not stricken out on the ground that an account stated was a conclusion of law, where that conclusion necessarily followed from the facts stated.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4161.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Shasta County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action by Charles Shively against the Eureka Tellurium Gold Mining Company, defendant, and S. W. Powell, administrator, substituted for Sarah E. Northrup, deceased, intervener. From an order denying a new trial, defendant and intervener appeal. Affirmed.

Edward Sweeney and Robinson & Robinson, for appellant. Campbell, Metson & Campbell (S. D. Woods, of counsel), for intervener. Charles A. Garter and W. S. Tillotson, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This case has been before the Supreme Court on a former appeal. It is reported in 129 Cal. 293, 61 Pac. 939, to which we refer for a statement of the issues presented by the pleadings. The case was reversed because of the insufficiency of the allegations of the complaint in intervention and of the corresponding finding to show a personal indebtedness of Ludlum and Swezey on account of the alleged assessment of their stock in the defendant corporation; but, in response to plaintiff's prayer that judgment be rendered for him on the findings, the Supreme Court declared: "The findings, however, would not justify a finding for the plaintiff. A fraudulent conspiracy is alleged in the complaint in intervention, and, in the absence of findings disposing of these issues, we would not be justified in rendering judgment for the plaintiff." The decision of the Supreme Court eliminated the question of the indebtedness of Ludlum and Swezey, two of plaintiff's assignors, to the corporation, and also determined the authority of the intervener to appear and defend for the corporation. Subsequently the intervener died, and her administrator, Powell, was substituted. Defendant corporation filed amended pleadings, and at the second trial the defendant and intervener stood on common ground. Plaintiff also withdrew from the consideration of the court the fourth cause of action, involving the sum of $8,973.63 for moneys advanced by Watson D. Swezey for the use and benefit of the corporation.

1. Among the allegations of the complaint in intervention and of the answer of the corporation, upon which great emphasis is placed, is "that prior to the commencement of this action on the —— day of ——, 1896, in an action brought in the superior court of said Shasta county by the plaintiff against the defendant upon the same alleged causes of action designated in plaintiff's amended complaint 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13, a judgment was duly given and made upon the merits, fully settling and adjusting all matters and things embraced in said alleged causes of action in favor of said defendant and against said plaintiff." In reference to this plea in bar, it is respondent's contention that it is not available, "because of a want of identity of parties and of the issues in the two actions, and because the matters actually adjudicated in the former action are not presented for adjudication in the present action." The court found in favor of respondent, holding that the parties and the issues were different; but it is apparent that, if either the parties or the issues were different, the finding must stand. The parties were the same, except that John J. Atherton, the owner of 50 shares of capital stock, was intervener in the former, and Mrs. B. C. Northrup, the owner of another 50 shares, was intervener in the present action. But appellant contends that they both appeared in the respective actions as intervening stockholders and defended for the corporation; and therefore they appeared in the same capacity and for the same purpose, and hence in legal contemplation both actions must be considered as between the same parties.

In Wickersham v. Crittenden, 110 Cal. 332, 42 Pac. 893, it is said: "That an action brought by a stockholder to recover money paid to the president of the corporation on account of salary is brought for the account of the corporation, and not for the individual benefit of the stockholder; and whatever would have estopped the corporation from recovering a judgment against its president is equally a defense against the stockholder." To the same effect are Fox v. Hale & Norcross Mining Co., 108 Cal. 475, 41 Pac. 328; Chetwood v. Cal. National Bank, 113 Cal. 414, 45 Pac. 704. Although the complaint in intervention does not purport to be for the benefit of the corporation, yet the cases cited seem to go to the extent of holding that the corporation is the real party in interest in each case. If so, there would necessarily be identity of parties; but this becomes immaterial, in view of the conclusion that is unavoidable upon the vital question as to whether the same matter was adjudicated and the same facts involved in the former action that arise in the action before us. The effect and scope of a judgment are so clearly set forth in the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure as scarcely to need judicial explanation. The difficulty remains, however, of applying the law to the particular facts as they are developed in each case. Subdivision 2 of section 1908, Code Civ. Proc., is as follows: "In other cases, the judgment or order is, in respect to the matter directly adjudged, conclusive between the parties and their successors in interest by title subsequent to the commencement of the action or special proceeding, litigating for the same thing under the same title and in the same capacity, provided they have notice, actual or constructive, of the pendency of the action or proceeding." As to how we shall view the judgment in section 1911, we have this rule provided: "That only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto."

At the former trial, after the evidence was all introduced, as stated in the findings, "plaintiff moved the court to be allowed to dismiss said action on behalf of plaintiff, without prejudice, which motion was by the court allowed and granted, and neither plaintiff nor defendant introduced any evidence to sustain the allegations of the respective answers to intervener's complaint." Appellant insists that there was no judgment of dismissal; but that question is unimportant, because it was treated by all parties as a dismissal, and none of the allegations of the complaint as such was considered or determined by the court. However, notwithstanding the dismissal of plaintiff's action without objection, the court proceeded—no one contesting its right so to do—to hear and determine certain issues raised by the complaint in intervention and the answers of plaintiff and defendant thereto. The court, however, did not determine all these issues, and, as before seen, the only evidence offered was on behalf of the intervener. The court did determine that John J. Atherton was the owner of 50 shares of stock and was interested in the result of the action; that at all the times in the amended complaint mentioned, and long prior thereto, the directors of said corporation were W. D. Swezey, J. Scott Ludlum, Anna M. Ludlum, George C. Jones, and Peter Scherer; that the question and issue of the consideration of the promissory notes in the amended complaint mentioned was withdrawn from the consideration of the court, and no evidence introduced under the allegations thereof; that paragraphs 4, 5, and 6 of the complaint in intervention were withdrawn from consideration. Paragraph 4 related to the charge of conspiracy; paragraph 5 to fraudulent acts of Swezey and Ludlum in carrying out the conspiracy; and paragraph 6 charged that the latter had agreed to work and operate the mine at their own cost and expense. The foregoing paragraphs were substantially in the same language as the corresponding allegations in the present complaint in intervention. The court further found "that said Ludlum, Jones, and Swezey did by their own votes, as directors of said corporation, cause the notes mentioned in the amended complaint to be issued to themselves, and did take part in the proceedings authorizing said notes to be issued to them by said board of directors, and did each of them vote therefor, and as said directors did deal with themselves as individuals in issuing said notes, and each of them, save and except the notes mentioned in counts 1 and 10 of said amended complaint, which were issued to persons not directors of said corporation." And it was further found that said notes were not assigned in good faith and for a valuable consideration, but for convenience in collection, and as conclusions of law it was declared that said notes—except the two mentioned, and which, it may be remarked, are the basis for two of the counts in the present action, viz., the note to plaintiff for $75 and to one E. A. Reid for the sum of $35—"are illegal, null, and void. That the same be surrendered and canceled." How there can be any controversy as to what was adjudicated in that action seems almost incredible in view of the language used. The only question determined is that the notes, having been issued by the directors to themselves, were without validity, and were assigned for convenience of collection, and they were directed to be canceled, and the record shows that the notes were subsequently canceled; but the notes were simply written evidence of an indebtedness, and the effect of the judgment was to remove from consideration the written testimonial of the obligation of the corporation to the payees. The vital questions involved herein as to the existence of the indebtedness, whether the services were performed and the money advanced for the use and benefit of the corporation as set out in the complaint, and the defense of fraud and want of consideration as exhibited in the present complaint of intervention, were expressly left undetermined, and they were not affected in any way by the judgment aforesaid. The court found in the present action that: "All of the causes of action set forth in plaintiff's complaint in the said former action were founded upon the said promissory notes, while in the present action none of the causes of action are based or founded on any promissory note, except the first and second causes of action stated in the present complaint, which are the subject of subdivisions 1 and 2 of the paragraph. The third cause of action is upon an account stated. The fifth cause of action is upon quantum meruit for services rendered. The sixth cause of action is upon quantum meruit for money loaned and advanced, etc. The seventh, eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth causes of action are for moneys loaned, advanced, and expended for the use and benefit of the corporation defendant." The evidence supports these findings, and it must follow that the former judgment is no bar. Indeed, were it not for the character and ability of counsel who urge it, the contention of appellants to the contrary would scarcely merit the courtesy of serious attention. The decisions from our Supreme Court wherein are discussed the scope and effect of judgments and of the aforesaid provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure are quite numerous and are collated by counsel for the respective parties. Among them, as fairly illustrative of the principle involved, we cite the following: Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 160, 50 Pac. 277, in which Mr. Justice Harrison, with usual perspicuity, states the rule in this manner: "The doctrine of res adjudicata, or estoppel by reason of a former judgment, rests upon the principle that a cause of action which has been once determined upon its merits by a competent tribunal, between parties over whom that tribunal had jurisdiction, cannot afterward be litigated by them in another proceeding, either in the same or a different tribunal, and it is immaterial whether such cause of action is of equitable or of legal cognizance, or whether the judgment was given in a common-law court or was rendered by a court of equity. * * * But, if the judgment in either tribunal is rendered for a reason or upon a ground not involving the merits of the controversy, no such effect can result." Pyle v. Piercy, 122 Cal. 383, 55 Pac. 141; South San Bernardino Co. v. S. B. Nat. Bk., 127 Cal. 245, 59 Pac. 699; Beronio v. Ventura Co. Lumber Co., 129 Cal. 232, 61 Pac. 958, 79 Am. St. Rep. 118; Freeman v. Barnum, 131 Cal. 387, 63 Pac. 691, 82 Am. St. Rep. 355; Moore v. Russell, 133 Cal. 297, 65 Pac. 624, 85 Am. St. Rep. 166. It is manifest from the provisions of the Code and the foregoing decisions that a judgment is conclusive between the parties and privies only as to the facts actually considered and determined or which are necessarily involved in the judgment, and, unless those facts are controlling in a subsequent suit, the plea that the action is barred by the former judgment must be rejected.

Appellants seem to rely largely upon Woolverton v. Baker, 98 Cal. 628, 33 Pac. 731, and Bingham v. Kearney, 136 Cal. 175, 68 Pac. 597. In those cases there is some general language used apparently affording support to appellants' contention; but, of course, the facts of each case must be considered to determine what was really decided. The decision in the Woolverton Case, supra, is put upon the ground that the cause of action was the same in both actions; that the controlling question at issue determined in the former and involved in the subsequent proceeding was the title to the land, and, as stated in the syllabus, it is correctly held that: "In an action to compel a reconveyance of land alleged to have been conveyed to one of the defendants upon the sole consideration and condition that the grantee would apply a sufficient portion of the rents for her support and maintenance during life, on account of the alleged break of such condition, a judgment in a former action between the same parties, which sets up the same conveyance, and alleged that it had been made upon the sole consideration that the grantee should hold the same in trust for her, and that the rents, issues, and profits should be applied in providing for her support and maintenance during life, and that they had not been so applied, and sought a judgment that she was the owner of the premises, as against the defendants, and that the premises be reconveyed to her, in which action the court adjudged that the defendants as against the plaintiff were the owners of the land in fee simple, free and clear of any and all trusts, exceptions, limitations, and conditions set forth and alleged in said complaint, constitutes a complete defense and bar to the new action by way of estoppel." It would deprive a judgment of almost all significance to hold to the contrary.

The difference between the Bingham Case, supra, and the one at bar is apparent from the following statement of the court: "The former action was between the same parties. It involved the same subject-matter—the contract concerning the sale of land. The court in the former action had declared the contract valid, and that the defendant had the right to have it foreclosed and to be restored to the possession of the land. The present action is brought for the purpose of having the same contract rescinded, and to recover the payments made thereunder." It is true that into the second action the specific allegation of fraud for the first time was injected by the plaintiff, who was defendant in the first action; but this could not change the rule that, the validity of the contract having been determined, it could not again be brought to judgment by the same parties. We are satisfied that the claim of appellants in relation to the former judgment cannot be maintained.

2. Appellants attack the finding of the court upholding the allegations in the fourth count of the complaint in reference to the stated account of George C. Jones. There was evidence, however, to show that the account had been stated and agreed to by the parties; but the court found that subsequently to the statement of the account a payment was made which was not credited, "but that the said account stated was for services actually performed and for money actually advanced to the said defendant corporation, by the said George C. Jones, and when said sums were so advanced and said services so performed, and when said account was stated, neither the said George C. Jones or any of the persons alleged and complained of by the defendant and intervener, as confederates of the said George C. Jones, was a director of the said defendant corporation." Without setting out the evidence, it is sufficient to say that an examination of the record discloses support for this finding. No express agreement was required to be shown. It might be implied. Hendy v. March, 75 Cal. 566, 17 Pac. 702; Mayberry v. Cook, 121 Cal. 588, 54 Pac. 95.

3. Appellants also insist that the court erred in finding that Ludlum, Swezey, Anna Ludlum, and Jones were elected directors, for the reason that they were not elected at a regular meeting, and no notice was given of the said meeting. It is admitted that they were de facto officers; and, assuming for the sake of argument that they were irregularly elected, it cannot avail appellants, because the act of incurring a just indebtedness by persons who are de facto directors cannot be impeached by showing an irregularity in their election. Barrell v. Lakeview Land Co., 122 Cal. 129, 54 Pac. 594. In the Barrell Case also it is held that: "A corporation will not be permitted, after allowing a person to act as its secretary and causing him to authenticate its records, to object to the regularity of his appointment, or to repudiate an obligation signed by him as secretary under authority from its board of directors." It is claimed that the rule does not apply to money advanced by the directors. In the language of appellants: "De facto officers can bind the corporation so far as third persons are concerned, but they cannot recover upon any claim on their part." It seems, however, from the decisions, that the directors may bring and maintain actions in the form of quantum meruit against the corporation for money expended and services performed in good faith for the use and benefit of the corporation, although they may not execute or join in the execution of a promissory note to themselves which will bind the corporation. Seeley v. San Jose I. M. & L. Co., 59 Cal. 22; Santa Cruz R. R. Co. v. Spreckels, 65 Cal. 193, 3 Pac. 661, 802; Graves v. Mining Co., 81 Cal. 303, 22 Pac. 665; Pauly v. Pauly, 107 Cal. 8, 40 Pac. 29, 48 Am. St. Rep. 98. The rule is stated clearly in the syllabus of Schnittger v. Old Home Cons. Mg. Co. et al., 144 Cal. 603, 78 Pac. 9, as follows: "A director of a corporation, though bound to the utmost good faith, and forbidden to take part in any transaction concerning his trust in which he has an adverse interest, is not precluded from dealing directly with the corporation, and may become its creditor, and take from it a mortgage or other security, and may enforce it like any other creditor, subject always to severe scrutiny. A violation of his duty as a trustee may render the transaction voidable, but it is not ipso facto void. The mere fact that the creditor was a director of the corporation does not render the transaction fraudulent." If there should be any difference in this respect between de facto and de jure directors, it is sufficient to declare that there was some evidence to show the regularity of the election in question, and hence the trial court's determination that they were directors of the corporation is binding upon us.

4. The finding that "the escrow agreement between Watson D. Swezey and J. Scott Ludlum and the stockholders of the defendant did not provide that the said Ludlum and Swezey should at their own cost and expense operate the mine of defendant" is also vigorously assailed. It was contended at the trial that the agreement provided that they should do this work at their own expense; but while Mr. Ludlum was on the stand he identified as the original agreement a document which contained no such provision. A similar provision was, however, afterwards attached and signed by Swezey; but, according to his testimony, it was not to be binding unless ratified and signed by Ludlum, which Swezey's deposition shows was never done. There is at least evidence to support this, as well as all other, findings of the court.

5. The claim of fraud and conspiracy was passed upon by the court and deliberately found against defendant and intervener. The same learned judge presided at the three trials to which reference has been made, and he had rather exceptional opportunities to weigh the evidence and determine the credibility of the witnesses. It is true, as suggested by appellants, that it is usually difficult to establish fraud clearly, and that positive and express proof is not required; but it must be remembered, also, that charges of this character are easily made, and they often have no foundation in fact. Surmise is not evidence, and something more than suspicion is required as the basis for judicial action. We have considered the circumstances declared by appellants to be badges of fraud, and we are satisfied that they do not present sufficient reason for disturbing the findings of the court against appellants.

6. During the progress of the trial, exceptions were taken by appellants to certain rulings of the court. Most of them present the same questions hereinbefore considered, and they do not require further notice. I think there is merit in some of the objections, however, but the rulings would not justify a reversal of the judgment. For instance, this question was asked Mr. Ludlum: "During the time you acted and performed services for the company, as you have testified, what was the reasonable value of those services? Mr. Woods: We object to that upon the ground that it is not shown that he knows." He ought to have been interrogated more fully as to his knowledge of the value of such services, but it is doubtful whether the objection raises the question of his competency to testify. Besides, it is a matter addressed largely to the discretion of the trial court, and we cannot say there is no justification for the inference that he had shown himself qualified.

Again, the same witness said: "I requested the board of directors on January 1, 1895, that they have stated accounts made of the indebtedness that was against the company at that time, of which this was one. Mr. Robinson: We move to strike this out, your honor, on the ground that an account stated is a conclusion of law. The Court: I will deny the motion." In my opinion, the motion should have been granted; but the ruling did no harm, as the conclusion must necessarily follow from the facts stated.

We find no prejudicial error, and the order denying the motion for a new trial is affirmed.

We concur: CHIPMAN, P. J.; HART, J.

UNION LUMBER CO. et al. v. SIMON et al.
(Civ. 169.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 13, 1906.)

1. MECHANICS' LIENS — NOTICE—DESCRIPTION OF PROPERTY—SUFFICIENCY.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 4, providing that a person claiming a mechanic's lien shall file a notice describing the property, etc., the description of the property need only be such as will suffice for identification, and a false call or an inaccuracy in such description, will not defeat the lien, if the description be not in itself misleading or defective in some essential particular.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 213–224.]

2. SAME—ENFORCEMENT OF LIEN—NECESSITY OF FOLLOWING DESCRIPTION IN NOTICE.

In an action for the enforcement of a mechanic's lien the plaintiff is not required to follow the description given in the notice, but if the statutory requirements have been satisfied, he may disregard any lack of accuracy or precision, and in his complaint may enlarge the description in such manner that the judgment will distinctly specify the land which is to be sold.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 496.]

3. SAME — SUFFICIENCY OF DESCRIPTION — METHOD OF DETERMINING.

Whether the description of the property affected by a mechanic's lien is sufficient for identification thereof, is a question of fact to be determined by the jury or the court upon a consideration of the circumstances of the case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 588.]

4. SAME—EVIDENCE.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 4, requiring the filing of notices of mechanics' liens, evidence is admissible to determine the sufficiency of the notice as to description of the property, and such evidence will include the purpose for which the description is required, as well as the persons who are to be affected by it.

5. SAME.

A notice of mechanic's lien described the property affected as a parcel of land situated in a certain city and county bounded by lines commencing at a point on the northerly line of A. street distant thereon 137 feet 6 inches from the westerly line of B. street; running thence westerly along the line of A. street; thence north, east, and south, to the place of beginning. Held that, as between the property owner and the claimant of the lien, this description was sufficiently definite, and not defective. because not specifying in which direction from the westerly line of B. street the land was located.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 214–224.]

6. ESTOPPEL—POSITION IN JUDICIAL PROCEEDING.

Where, in a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, the building contractor is a party, and admits the right of the lien claimant to the money due from the owner on the contract, the contractor is estopped from afterwards demanding the money from the owner.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, §§ 165–169.]

7. SAME—LAND AFFECTED—EVIDENCE.

In a proceeding to enforce a mechanic's lien, evidence held sufficient to support a finding that all of the lot on which the building was situated was necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the building, and hence should be sold therewith.

8. TRIAL — FINDINGS—ISSUES—CONSOLIDATED ACTIONS.

Where a number of proceedings to enforce mechanics' liens against the same property were consolidated, they became in effect a single action, and all facts in issue were to be embodied in a single set of findings, so that there was no impropriety in making a finding that all of the land on which the building was situated, was necessary for its convenient use and occupation, though some of the complaints contained no allegation upon this issue.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by the Union Lumber Company and others against Jules Simon and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, the defendant named appeals. Affirmed.

Roger Johnson, for appellant. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, Barna McKinne, and J. S. Reid, for respondents.

HARRISON, P. J. Action for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens. Nine separate actions for the foreclosure of mechanics' liens upon certain property described in the complaint herein were brought against the defendant Simon, as the owner of the property, and the defendant Grant, as the contractor for the construction of the building for which the liens are claimed. The actions were afterwards consolidated into a single action under the above title, and, after such consolidation, the defendant Simon filed answers to the complaints of the several plaintiffs, and the defendant Grant filed an answer, admitting all of the allegations in the complaints. The cause was tried by the court, and judgment rendered in favor of the plaintiffs and against the defendants, declaring the amount of the unpaid portion of the contract price, together with the costs and attorney's fees in the action, to be a lien upon the property in favor of the plaintiffs according to the respective amount of their claims, and directing its sale in satisfaction thereof. From this judgment and from an order denying a new trial the defendant Simon has taken the present appeal.

The principal point urged in support of the appeal is that the notice of their claim of lien, which was filed in the recorder's office by several of the above claimants, was defective, in that it did not describe the property described in the complaint, and therefore that no lien was created thereon. The description of the property in the said notices of lien is as follows: "The lot or parcel of land situate in the city and county of San Francisco, state of California, bounded and described as follows, to wit: Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Sutter street distant thereon 137 feet and 6 inches from the westerly line of Scott street; running thence westerly along said line of Sutter street 106 feet and 8 inches; thence at right angles northerly 164 feet and 1 inch; thence at right angles easterly 106 feet and 8 inches; thence at right angles southerly 164 feet and 1 inch, to the point of commencement, and also the buildings on said land and the alterations and additions made thereto." In addition to this description the notice makes the further statement: "That Jules Simon, M. D., is the reputed owner and is, as claimant is informed and believes, the owner of the said land and said buildings, alterations, and additions thereto; that said lien is claimed for material furnished by said claimant to the person named W. E. Grant at various times between on or about the 10th day of June, 1902, and the 17th day of October, 1902, and while said Grant was engaged in constructing said building and making said alterations and additions thereto for said owner." The objection to the sufficiency of the description is that it does not specify in which direction from the westerly line of Scott street the lot of land is located, and that it cannot be determined therefrom whether its starting point is easterly or westerly therefrom. The requirement of the statute that the materialman or subcontractor who claims a mechanic's lien shall file a notice thereof in the recorder's office, has a two-fold purpose, in addition to that of fixing the time within which he must seek to enforce his lien, viz., to give constructive notice of the claim to all persons dealing with the property, and also to inform the owner of the amount of the claim, and thereby enable him to withhold from the contractor a sufficient amount of the contract price with which to satisfy the same. "The object of the law, so far as securing the validity of the lien against the owner is concerned, when a materialman seeks to avail himself of the advantages, is that by the notice the owner may keep back enough of the contract price to indemnify himself against the liability." De Witt v. Smith, 63 Mo. 263. The notice which the claimant is to file is also of a two-fold character. It must contain a statement of the facts which the statute prescribes for the creation of the lien, and it must also contain a description of the property to be charged with the lien. The statute is remedial, and is to be liberally construed with a view to effect its objects and to promote justice (Code Civ. Proc. § 4); and as the persons for whose benefit it is enacted are not presumed to be versed in accuracy of expression the notices to be given by them are to be construed more with reference to their substance than their form (Corbett v. Chambers, 109 Cal. 178, 41 Pac. 873). Whatever the statute has made essential to the creation of the lien must be fully and correctly stated (Wagner v. Hansen, 103 Cal. 104, 37 Pac. 195; Santa Monica Co. v. Hege, 119 Cal. 376, 51 Pac. 555); but the description of the property to be charged with the lien is required to be only such as will be "sufficient for identification." The same fullness and precision of description is not required in the lien statement as in the case of a conveyance or a judgment. Nystrom v. London, etc., Mortgage Co., 47 Minn. 31, 49 N. W. 394. A false call or an inaccuracy in describing the property will not defeat the lien if the description be not in itself misleading, or defective in some essential particular. Willamette Company v. Kremer, 94 Cal. 205, 29 Pac. 633. In an action for the enforcement of the lien the plaintiff is not required to follow the terms of the description which are given in the notice; but, if the statutory requirement has been satisfied, may within those terms disregard any lack of accuracy or precision, and in his complaint may enlarge the description in such manner that the judgment will distinctly specify the land which is to be sold. Duffy v. McManus, 3 E. D. Smith, 657; Willamette Co. v. Kremer, supra; Corbett v. Chambers, supra. Whether the description in any particular case is sufficient for identification is a question of fact to be determined by the jury or the court upon a consideration of the circumstances of that case. Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, § 384. This provision of the statute implies that evidence may be received for the purpose of determining its sufficiency (Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 733, 78 Pac. 293), and such evidence will include the purpose for which the description is required as well as the persons who are to be affected by it. A more precise and specific description is required for the purpose of giving constructive notice to persons who may deal with the property or become purchasers or incumbrancers of the same (Montrose v. Connor, 8 Cal. 344; Rall Bros. v. McCrary, 45 Mo. App. 365; Hardware Co. v. McCarty, 10 Colo. App. 200, 50 Pac. 744) than would be required in a case where only the owner and other lien claimants are interested (Martin v. Simmons, 11 Colo. 411, 18 Pac. 535; Putnam v. Ross, 46 Mo. 337). Mr. Phillips says (section 379): "If there appear enough in the description to enable a party familiar with the locality to identify the premises intended to be described with reasonable certainty, to the exclusion of others, it will be sufficient. There is great reluctance to set aside a mechanic's claim merely for loose description, as the acts generally contemplate that the claimants should prepare their own papers; and it is not necessary that the description should be either full or precise. If the description identifies the property by reference to the facts, that is, if it points clearly to a piece of property and there is no other one that will answer the description, it is sufficient." Among the identifying facts which are held competent to be considered for determining its sufficiency are references to adjoining properties, a description of the building which has been constructed, the fact that the land upon which it is erected is the only property of the owner in that locality. Tibbetts v. Moore, 23 Cal. 208; Knabb's Appeal, 10 Pa. 186, 51 Am. Dec. 472; Kennedy v. House, 41 Pa. 39, 80 Am. Dec. 594; McClintock v. Rush, 63 Pa. 203; Rall Bros. v. McCrary, 45 Mo. App. 365; Russell v. Haydon, 40 Minn. 88, 41 N. W. 456; Lombard v. Johnson, 76 Ill. 599. In view of these principles, it must be held that the finding of the superior court that the description of the property in the plaintiff's notice of its claim of lien was sufficient must be sustained. The controversy herein does not affect the rights of any outside person, only the rights of the lien claimants and the owner are involved; and, unless the description was such as to mislead the owner, any mere lack of accuracy therein is not available as a defense. The notice does not give a specific description of other property than that sought to be charged with the lien as described in the complaint, as was the case in Fernandez v. Burleson, 110 Cal. 164, 42 Pac. 566, 52 Am. St. Rep. 75, and its terms are not such as to make it impossible to locate the property with such aids as are competent for that purpose. Cleverly v. Moseley, 148 Mass. 280, 19 N. E. 394. Its sole defect consists in the uncertainty of the starting point for its boundary; but, under the other facts set forth in the notice, and the evidence given in connection therewith, this uncertainty disappears.

The property described in the notice is a rectangular lot of land situate on the northerly side of Sutter street, with a frontage thereon of 106 feet and 8 inches, and a depth of 164 feet and 1 inch. It is stated in the notice to be the lot upon which the defendant Grant between the months of June and October in the year 1902 was engaged in constructing a building for the defendant Simon, and for the construction of which the plaintiffs furnished to Grant the materials for which the liens are claimed; and that the defendant Simon was the owner of the said lot of land and of the buildings. It was shown at the trial that in May, 1902, the defendant Simon as owner, and the defendant Grant as contractor, entered into a contract, which was filed for record in the recorder's office, for the construction of a three-story frame hospital building, 68 feet wide by 108 feet deep, to be erected upon a lot of land of the aforesaid dimensions, situate on the north side of Sutter street, 137½ feet from the northwest corner of Scott and Sutter streets, and that on January 3, 1903, the defendant Simon filed in the recorder's office his verified notice, stating that the said contract with Grant had been completed and the work accepted by him, and that the property on which said building is situated is a lot of land situate on the north side of Sutter street, 137½ feet west of Scott street, and thence running westerly along said line of Sutter street 106 feet and 8 inches, with a depth northerly of 164 feet and 1 inch. Scott street was shown to be 68 feet in width, and to assume that the starting point of the description is east of Scott street would locate a large portion of the lot within the lines of Scott street. It was also shown that the said building is the only one ever constructed by the defendant Grant for the defendant Simon, and the latter defendant testified that he never owned any other real estate in the city and county of San Francisco. These facts sufficiently identified the property described in the notices of lien with that described in the complaint. The description in the notice is the same as that in the contract between Simon and Grant; and, in his notice of completion and acceptance, Simon states that the building is situate on the land which is above described in the complaint, and he testified that this is the only real estate which he ever owned in San Francisco. It is manifest, therefore, that he had no difficulty in identifying the property sought to be charged by the lien, and that he was in no respect misled by the description. In Rall Bros. v. McCrary, 45 Mo. App. 365, a case which involved only the rights of the lien claimant against the owner, the statute authorized a lien upon the building and the land upon which it is situated to the extent of one acre. In the claim of lien the property was described as "a frame barn and one acre upon which it is situate, being erected upon a tract of 64 acres" (describing the quarter section). To the objection that the description failed to specify the particular acre, the court said (page 371): "The owner of the particular tract of land described in the lien paper on which the barn was standing, for the improvement of which the materialman furnished the lumber, must be presumed to be familiar with, not only the boundaries of his land, but the building thereon situate which he had erected or improved by the use of the material furnished. The description of the land, and the other facts stated in the lien paper, were certainly ample for the purposes of enabling the defendants or their intestate to locate and identify the acre of land which it was sought to charge with the lien." See, also, Oster v. Rebeneau, 46 Mo. 595; Seaton v. Hixon, 35 Kan. 663, 12 Pac. 22.

The appellant suffers no hardship from the judgment herein. By his contract for the construction of the building he was under obligation to pay to the contractor the amount of the contract price therefor, and whether he pays it to the contractor or to the plaintiffs as creditors of the contractor is immaterial to him if he is protected against any further liability therefor. The contractor is, however, a defendant herein, and, having admitted in his answer the rights of the plaintiffs to the money due from the appellant on the contract, is estopped from again demanding the same. The liability of the appellant for the costs of the action and the attorney's fees is the result of his own conduct. At the commencement of the action he could have tendered and paid into court the amount then unpaid of his liability to the contractor, and thereby discharged himself of further liability; but instead thereof, he contested the right, not only of the lien claimants, but also of the contractor to any portion of said unpaid amount, and necessitated the litigation which followed. The court, therefore, did not err in requiring the payment of the costs and attorney's fees in addition to the amount which he had agreed to pay to the contractor. De Camp Lumber Co. v. Tollhurst, 99 Cal. 631, 34 Pac. 438.

The court found that the building covers a large portion of the lot, and that all of the lot is necessary for the convenient use and occupation of the building, and directed a sale of the entire lot for the satisfaction of the liens. It is urged by the appellant that, as there was no evidence showing the particular part of the land which was covered by the building, the above finding is not sustained by the evidence. It appeared from the evidence that the building was constructed for a hospital, and that by the plans and specifications for its construction its dimensions are 68 feet in width and 108 feet in depth; that it contained "over 40 bedrooms for patients, and also operating rooms, sterilizing rooms, washrooms, bathrooms, nurses' dormitories, dining rooms, and nurses' classrooms." Although the bill of exceptions does not show the particular portion of the lot upon which the building stands, it may be assumed that this appeared from the plans and specifications which were before the court; and as the character of the building, as well as its dimensions and the purpose for which it was to be used, were also in evidence, the court could determine without any further evidence that the convenient use of a hospital building would require more than the mere ground which is covered by the building, and, in determining the amount of additional land required for such purpose, could exercise its own judgment as upon a matter of general knowledge. We cannot say from anything that appears in the record that the court committed any error in the extent of land which it deemed essential for the convenient use and occupation of the building. The further objection that the finding was erroneous, for the reason that in some of the complaints there was no averment upon that issue, is without merit. Upon the consolidation of the several actions there was presented only a single action by the respective plaintiffs against the defendants, and the decision thereon was to be made as if the cause of action had been presented in a single complaint, and was to be embodied in a single set of findings in which all facts in issue in the consolidated action were to be incorporated. Willamette

Co. v. College Co., 94 Cal. 229, 29 Pac. 629. This issue affected the rights of each of the plaintiffs, and its presentation in any of the original complaints became in issue in the consolidated action, and the finding and judgment thereon operated in favor of all of the plaintiffs in the same manner as if they had originally joined as plaintiffs in bringing the action with this averment in their complaint.

The objection to the judgment upon the ground that it creates a personal liability against the appellant is not sustained by the record.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

UNION LUMBER CO. et al. v. SIMON et al.

(S. F. 4,126.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—ENFORCEMENT—COSTS—ATTORNEY'S FEES.

The court, in a suit to enforce a mechanic's lien, cannot allow to a successful lien claimant attorney's fees; the statute allowing as a part of the costs attorney's fees to successful lien claimants being unconstitutional.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 34, Mechanics' Liens, § 653.]

Henshaw and McFarland, JJ., dissenting in part.

In Bank. Application for rehearing, pending in District Court of Appeal, transferred by order of April 23, 1906, to the Supreme Court. Opinion (89 Pac. 1077) modified, and judgment below modified.

Roger Johnson, for appellants. Pillsbury, Madison & Sutro, Barna McKinne, and F. S. Wyatt, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This case was decided in the District Court of Appeal for the First District, within the 60 days next preceding April 18, 1906, and found its way to this court by reason of the general order made April 23, 1906, transferring all causes in which applications for rehearing were then pending. Since the decision by the court of appeal, this court has decided, in Builders' Supply Depot et al. v. Dennis O'Connor (Cal.) 88 Pac. 982, that our statutory provision as to the allowance of attorney's fees in this class of actions is unconstitutional and void. It follows that, in so far as the judgment allows attorney's fees, it is erroneous. We do not agree to that part of the opinion of Justice Harrison intimating that a notice of lien, sufficient as to the owner, may be void as to third persons without knowledge of the extrinsic facts. In our opinion the notice of lien, as a whole, contains sufficient matter of description to make it good in that respect as to all persons. In all other respects we find that the opinion of the district court of appeal is a correct exposition of the law applicable, and to that extent the same is adopted as the opinion of this court.

The judgment is modified by striking therefrom all allowances for attorney's fees, and, as so modified, is affirmed.

HENSHAW, J. I dissent. In eight of the claims of lien the description of the property affected was as follows: "Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Sutter street distant thereon 137 feet and 6 inches from the westerly line of Scott street, running thence westerly," etc. Here is admittedly a patent ambiguity in the attempt to fix the point of commencement. Conceding that the place for fixing the point of commencement is the intersection of the northerly line of Sutter street with the westerly line of Scott street, it cannot be declared whether the true point of commencement is distant 137 feet and 6 inches easterly or westerly on the northerly line of Sutter street. There are thus certainly two points of commencement which equally answer the call in the description. This is conceded in the opinion of the appellate court which is by this court adopted, which declares that the difficulty in the description is the "uncertainty" as to the point of commencement. It has always been a fundamental rule of construction that such a patent ambiguity appearing upon the face of the instrument cannot be explained or aided by parol evidence. Thus, in Brandon v. Leddy, 67 Cal. 43, 7 Pac. 33, the description in the deed applied equally to certain lots which the grantor did own, as well as to certain lots which he did not own. This court in bank declared: "The map referred to in the deed from Carney to Rosaria Bernal must be considered as incorporated in it. The deed therefore shows upon its face that there are two lots to which the description equally applies. From the deed itself it cannot be ascertained which lot was intended to be conveyed, and as the ambiguity is patent, resort cannot be had to parol. Our conclusion is that the deed in question is void for uncertainty of description." To like effect is People v. Klumpke, 41 Cal. 264. The general principle is likewise declared in Phillips on Mechanics' Liens, § 385, to the following effect: "A description containing a patent ambiguity will not, however, be referred to a jury, but be declared by the court to be void for uncertainty." Moreover, to aid and perfect this description it is necessary to take evidence as to the direction of an ungiven course; that is to say, it is necessary to show that the point of commencement was westerly along the line of Sutter street from its westerly intersection with Scott street. But this again is evidence which this court has distinctly declared cannot be received. Thus, in Best v. Wohlford, 144 Cal. 733, 78 Pac. 293, it is said: "If a monument is given as the starting point, evidence may be given to show its location. But if the direction of the course from that monument is not given, evidence will not be received to show what direction was intended."

In my judgment, if the description above given can be upheld as sufficient, it can be upon no other theory than that any description which in any way, and by any sort of evidence, can be made to apply to any piece of land, is sufficient for identification, and this, notwithstanding the command of the statute that the description in the claim of lien must in and of itself be sufficient for identification. Logically, therefore, if the description here in question is to be held sufficient, it must be said, and by this court should be said, that a description as being the land of John Smith in the city and county of San Francisco, complies with the statute if it can be shown that John Smith owned any land in San Francisco, that any structure was erected upon that land, and that the lien claimant furnished labor or material for the purposes of that structure. This may be the meaning of section 1187 of the Code of Civil Procedure, though I cannot bring myself to believe that it is. But if it is, considering the importance of the question and the very numerous cases that arise under this statute, this court should so declare.

I concur: McFARLAND, J.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by T. Kataoka against J. W. Hanselman. From a judgment granting insufficient relief to plaintiff, he appeals. Affirmed.

John W. Kemp, for appellant. Davis, Rush & Willis, for respondent.

GRAY, P. J. The justices of the District Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, to which this cause had been appealed, not being able to unanimously agree in a judgment, filed their opinions, and the cause was transferred to this court. In the district court a majority of the justices concurred in the following opinion: "The suit was brought on a contract between the defendant and plaintiff set out in the complaint, by the terms of which the plaintiff agreed, in effect, to cultivate certain lands of the defendant planted to beets and load the beets into wagon as instructed by the latter or his agents, at the agreed price of $1 per ton for the beets taken from land yielding 17 tons or more per acre, and $1.25 per ton for beets taken from land yielding or producing less than 17 tons," etc.

The following clauses bearing upon the questions involved in the case are contained in the agreement:

"The party of the first part agrees that all land planted and handled by them and described as follows:

No. 1	.85 acres
No. 2	1.10 acres
No. 3	.15 acres

containing in all 2.10 acres, more or less. is to be cared for by the party of the second part, T. Kataoka."

"Payments are to be made three times in order of the described and as follows, if required by party of the second part, at the rate of four dollars ($4.00) per acre after thinning is done, and after the field is laid by, that is, when the beets have been hoed not less than two times, and are free from weeds, an additional two dollars ($2.00) per acre will be made, the balance remaining due to be paid after all work is finished in accordance with this agreement."

It may be assumed that the decimal points in the former of the two paragraphs quoted were inadvertently inserted, and that the number of acres intended to be described was 210.

It is further alleged that the plaintiff has duly performed all the conditions of the contract, and that upon its completion there was due to him the sum of $3,431.87, of which amount there has been paid to him the sum of $2,904.25, leaving due the sum of $527.12. The defendant in his answer denies that upon the completion of the contract there was due to the plaintiff any sum greater than $2,934.25, of which amount it is alleged he had paid the sum of $2,904.25, leaving due to the plaintiff the sum of $30 only, which, he alleges, he tendered to the plaintiff. This allegation and denial constitutes the only issue in the case, and on this issue the court finds for the defendant. Judgment was entered accordingly, from which, and an order denying his motion for a new trial, plaintiff appeals.

After both sides had rested, and the case was closed, and judgment ordered for the plaintiff for the sum of $30, a motion was made by the plaintiff on affidavit to reopen the case for the purpose of introducing the additional evidence therein referred to; but this motion was denied by the court, and thereupon its findings of fact and judgment were filed. The grounds urged by the plaintiff for reversal are: That the court erred in denying the plaintiff's motion to reopen the case, and in refusing to grant a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence; and that the finding of the court upon the issue involved is not sustained by the evidence.

As to the last ground stated, it is sufficient to say that the evidence taken at the trial is conflicting, with the large preponderance thereof going to support the decision of the trial court.

The motion to reopen the case for further evidence was made several months after the case had been tried and decided. The showing made consisted of several affidavits filed by plaintiff and several affidavits filed on the part of the defendant in rebuttal. There was no objection made to the filing or consideration of these affidavits in rebuttal. The evidence given on this motion was just as conflicting in its nature, and was exactly of the same general character, and directed to the same proposition, as had been the evidence taken upon the trial. It was affirmed on the one side, and denied under oath on the other, that an agreement had been made between the parties that the acreage grown to beets was 166. It was shown by plaintiff that after the trial he had another engineer measure the beet ground, and that this measurement showed that the previous measurement by defendant's engineer was wrong, and that there was considerably above 166 acres grown to beets. On the other hand, several disinterested witnesses gave their affidavits to the effect that plaintiff's engineer had included in his measurement "many acres" that were not grown to beets. The motion to reopen, as well as the motion for a new trial, being submitted to the court upon this conflicting evidence, of course he would not grant either motion, unless he believed the affidavits of the plaintiff to be true. We must presume, in support of the action of the court, that he did not so believe them, and, as the whole matter was within his discretion, he being the judge of the value and effect of the evidence, we are not authorized to interfere with his decision.

Moreover, the alleged new evidence was merely cumulative, and for that reason also the reopening, rehearing, and retrial were properly refused. Patterson v. San Francisco, etc., Co., 147 Cal. 178, 81 Pac. 531.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

I concur: ALLEN, J.

McFARLAND, J. After a full consideration of the case here, we are satisfied with the foregoing opinion, and with the conclusions therein reached, and for the reasons therein given, the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

PAXTON v. PAXTON et al. (four cases). (S. F. 4,625, 4,626, 4,599, 4,600.)

1. PARENT AND CHILD—DUTY TO SUPPORT—ENFORCEMENT.

Civ. Code, § 206, provides that it is the duty of the father, the mother, and the children of any poor person who is unable to maintain himself by work to maintain such person to the extent of their ability. Held, that such section imposed a legal obligation on parents to support an invalid adult child, which was enforceable by suit in equity.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 37, Parent and Child, § 35.]

2. SAME — JUDGMENT—MODIFICATION—RESERVATION.

In a suit by an invalid adult child against his parents for maintenance, as authorized by Civ. Code, § 206, it is competent for the court to reserve power in the decree to alter the same as the subsequent change in circumstances of the parties may require.

3. SAME—SUIT MONEY—COUNSEL FEES.

In a suit by an adult invalid child against his parents for maintenance, as authorized by Civ. Code, § 206, the court had power to make preliminary orders requiring the parents to pay suit money, counsel fees, and maintenance pendente lite.

4. SAME—EXCESSIVENESS.

In a suit by an adult invalid child against his parents for maintenance, an order directing defendants to pay complainant pendente lite $50 per month for maintenance, $10 for costs, and $150 for counsel fees, did not impose an excessive allowance, where the parents' financial ability was established.

5. SAME—EVIDENCE—ADMISSIBILITY.

In a suit by an adult invalid child against his parents for maintenance, evidence of the latter's ability to contribute to complainant's support was admissible on a preliminary application for maintenance, costs, and counsel fees pendente lite.

6. VENUE — CHANGE—APPLICATION—JOINDER OF DEFENDANTS.

Where a suit by an adult invalid child against his parents for maintenance was brought in the county where the mother resided, and she did not join in the father's application for a change of venue to the county where he resided, his application was properly denied.

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Thomas F. Graham, Judge.

Suits by John A. Paxton against Blitz W. Paxton and another, and by Roma Paxton against the same defendants. From an order allowing support and counsel fees pendente lite, and denying defendant Blitz W. Paxton's motion for a change of venue, he appeals. Affirmed.

James W. Oates (John M. Burnett, of counsel), for appellant. Charles F. Hanlon, for respondent.

McFARLAND, J. These four appeals arise out of two actions commenced in the superior court—one by John A. Paxton against his father, Blitz W. Paxton, and his mother, Bessie E. Paxton, for maintenance, under section 206 of the Civil Code; and the other a similar action brought by Roma Paxton against the same defendants, who were also her parents. In each of the cases the court made an order allowing small amounts of money for support, counsel fees, etc., pendente lite, and from each of these orders the defendant Blitz W. Paxton appeals. In each of said actions said defendant made a motion for a change of venue from the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, in which the action was begun, to the superior court of the county of Sonoma, which is alleged to be the county of said defendant's residence. The motion in each case was denied, and from the denial of the motion in each case said defendant appeals. And these four appeals are presented by one transcript, under stipulation of counsel. As respondents do not object to any one of these appeals as not taken from an appealable order, we have assumed that the appeals are all properly taken.

As the two actions are substantially the same, we will direct our attention particularly to the one brought by John A. Paxton. It was averred in the complaint in this action that the plaintiff, John A. Paxton, is the son of the defendant; that he arrived at the age of majority on August 20, 1904, and "ever since has been and now is an adult person, and a poor person, who is unable to maintain himself by work"; that he is an invalid and totally blind and his sight has been permanently lost and cannot be cured; and that by reason of his being an invalid and totally blind he is unable to work or render any service by which he could support himself. It is further averred that each of the defendants is able financially to contribute to his support, the details of this personal ability being stated; that he demanded of each of them that they support plaintiff, and they refused to do so; that a certain sum of money monthly would be a reasonable amount for his maintenance; and that plaintiff was totally unable to proceed with the litigation unless paid certain sums of money pendente lite for support, counsel fees, etc. The prayer is for a temporary allowance of money pendente lite, and that each of the defendants support plaintiff to the extent of the ability of each as long as he shall live and continue unable to support himself by work, and for such other relief, etc. The complaint fully brings plaintiff within the provision of section 206 of the Civil Code, which is as follows: "Sec. 206. Reciprocal Duties of Parents and Children in Maintaining Each Other. It is the duty of the father, the mother, and the children of any poor person who is unable to maintain himself by work, to maintain such person to the extent of their ability. The promise of an adult child to pay for necessaries previously furnished to such parent is binding." After the commencement of the action, on application of plaintiff, the court made an order that defendants show cause on a named day why an order should not be made that defendants pay plaintiff certain money pendente lite. Defendant Blitz made various objections to the hearing of this application, but they were overruled, and, after a hearing, the court ordered said defendant Blitz to pay plaintiff, pendente lite, $50 per month for maintenance, $10 for costs, and $150 for counsel fees. Defendant demurred to the complaint, and his main objection to said pendente lite order is that the complaint does not state a cause of action, and the court had no jurisdiction to entertain it; and, if that be so, of course, the preliminary order appealed from was unwarranted. The most important question in the case is, therefore, whether such an alleged cause of action as is set forth in the complaint can be maintained in this state.

It will be observed that section 206, Civ. Code, does not provide any procedure or machinery for enforcing its provisions, and no special procedure is prescribed elsewhere. On account of this absence of procedure, appellant contends that there is no method by which section 206 can be judicially enforced. According to this contention, said section is merely an ornamental enunciation of a moral principle which ought to be observed by good people under the circumstances referred to in the section, but is not a law in the sense of a rule of action which such people are legally bound to obey. We do not think that this conclusion is maintainable. It may be admitted that where a statute creates a right, and also prescribes a particular remedy or procedure for its enforcement, such procedure can alone be invoked for such enforcement; but that is as far as the rule goes. In such case the special procedure may be considered as part of the right, limiting and conditioning it; but, where the right is given by statute without any prescribed remedy, it may be enforced by any appropriate method recognized by the general law of procedure. This principle is crystallized in section 1428, Civ. Code, which provides that "an obligation arising from operation of law may be enforced in the manner provided by law, or by civil action, or proceeding." And a suit in equity is peculiarly an appropriate remedy for the enforcement of the duty imposed by said section. This principle was declared in the case of Livingston v. Superior Court, 117 Cal. 633, 49 Pac. 836, 38 L. R. A. 175. An equitable action was there held to be the appropriate remedy for the enforcement of the right of a husband, under section 176, Civ. Code, to be supported by his wife, and so far as the remedy is concerned there is no distinction between that case and the case at bar. If an equitable action lies in the one case, it certainly does in the other, for section 206 and section 176 are alike in this respect, that each enjoins a legal duty, but provides no procedure for its enforcement. In the Livingston Case, the court, having referred to the case of Galland v. Galland, 38 Cal. 265, which we also cite on this question, says: "There is no reason why we should not adhere to the doctrine announced in Galland v. Galland, supra. It is in accord with the general principle that where a right exists, and there is no adequate legal remedy, equity will take jurisdiction." The court further says: "Counsel have not pointed out by what ordinary action the obligation could be enforced, and I know of none. In what action, at law, could the court ascertain and determine what monthly allowance should be made for the future support of the husband, and enter a judgment awarding an execution each month for the amount?" It is true that courts have not generally undertaken to enforce the obligation of parents to maintain their infant children. Indeed, in England, under the common law, the maintenance of minor children was considered merely a moral obligation not enforceable at law. It was generally there held that an action against the parent for necessaries furnished the child could not be maintained. This view has also been taken in some American decisions; although in others, the other, and we think the better rule has been declared that an action for necessaries against a parent is maintainable. See Tiffany's Persons and Domestic Relations, pp. 230, 234. It is probable that these later decisions rest on the proposition that the obligation is only a moral one; but that this moral obligation is a good consideration for the furnishing of necessaries, and a sufficient foundation for an action to recover for necessaries which have been actually furnished, although no sufficient foundation for a decree for future maintenance. But in the case at bar we are not concerned with moral obligations. Statutory law does not deal with mere moral obligations. When it declares a duty or a right, it means a legal duty or right. Section 206 is a part of the substantive law of the land, and establishes and declares a legal duty of the parents to maintain their children who are within its provisions, and establishes the right in such children to have such maintenance. As the duty runs to the children, the latter are the persons to whom the right imposed by the duty accrues, and they are the proper parties to an action to enforce such right and compel the performance of such duty. We do not see that any controlling difficulty arises out of the suggestion of appellant that after the entry of such a judgment as is contemplated in this case, and after the time for appeal shall have expired, a change of circumstances might occur by the plaintiff becoming financially able to care for himself, or the defendant becoming financially unable to comply with the judgment, and yet the judgment must stand as originally rendered. A court of equity has wide power as to the forms of its judgments, and in a case like the one at bar there could be no valid objection to the reservation in the judgment of the power to modify it, in the event that changed conditions in the future should justly demand a modification. And with respect to judgments enforcing duties and rights growing out of the domestic relations, the very nature of the judgment requires that there should be a reserved power to meet future exigencies. Our conclusion is that the duty and right established by section 206 of the Civil Code may be enforced by an action in equity like the one at bar, and that in such action a court of equity has full jurisdiction to pronounce a judgment such as is prayed for in the complaint.

As we have occupied considerable space in discussing the main and most important point in the case, we will very briefly notice the other contentions of appellant. The court having, as we have seen, jurisdiction to enforce the provisions of section 206, it had power to make all orders necessary for that purpose, including the orders for suit money, counsel fees, and maintenance pendente lite; and the amounts allowed for such purposes were not excessive.

There was sufficient evidence to sustain the finding of appellant's financial ability to comply with the preliminary order to pay money pendente lite, and with any reasonable final judgment that may be made; and the evidence introduced by respondent showed such ability was not erroneously admitted.

The motions for a change of venue were properly denied, as the defendant Bessie, whose residence was in the county where the action was commenced, was a proper party, and she did not join in the motion.

The plea in abatement on the ground of the pendency of another action was not maintainable.

There are no other points in the case which are tenable, or which call for special notice. The points above noticed are the same as those arising in the case of Roma Paxton v. Blitz and Bessie Paxton; the only difference in the two cases being in the reasons given by Roma why she is unable to support herself, although she also fully brings herself in that regard within the provisions of said section 206.

All and each of the four orders appealed from are affirmed.

HIPWELL et al. v. PIONEER INV. & TRUST CO. (L. A. 1,684.)

(Supreme Court of California. March 28, 1907.)

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — COMPENSATION OF AGENT.

Under a contract reciting that whereas defendant, in addition to its other business, was desirous of establishing a real estate department for the purpose of carrying on and conducting a general real estate, rental, collection, and insurance business, and plaintiffs were desirous of managing and conducting said department for and in conjunction with defendant, defendant agreed to furnish an office and pay all expenses for the proper conduct of said real estate business in a business like manner, and to pay and allow plaintiffs as their compensation for conducting such real estate brokerage business one-half of all commissions, fees, charges or gross profits of all and every character accruing from sales made or other business pertaining or incident to said real estate department, negotiated by plaintiffs, through or in connection with conducting and handling said real estate agency business, and plaintiffs agreed to devote all their time to such business, and providing that it was further agreed that the business of said real estate department should consist in buying, selling, owning, handling, or otherwise dealing in real estate, as a real estate agent or broker, acting as a general insurance agent, and acting as agent in renting real estate and collecting rentals, and further providing that the profits from which plaintiffs should receive their share should include profits from the transaction of the business whether it be brought in or negotiated by plaintiffs or by any of the officers of defendant, plaintiffs are not entitled to half the profits on the purchase and sale by defendant with its money of land, though plaintiffs personally superintended the subdivision of the tract into lots, and the grading and sidewalking of the streets, and defendant sought and obtained the consent of plaintiffs to the employment of outside brokers to negotiate the sales.

Shaw and Sloss, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by R. J. Hipwell and another against the Pioneer Investment & Trust Company. Judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Hunsaker & Britt, for appellants. John S. Chapman, John D. Pope, and Tom C. Thornton, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. In October, 1892, the parties to this action entered into a contract in writing as follows:

"This agreement made and entered into this 16th day of October, 1902, by and between the Pioneer Investment & Trust Company, a corporation, party of the first part, and R. J. Hipwell and T. R. Grandstaff, parties of the second part, witnesseth:

"That, whereas said party of the first part is desirous of establishing in connection with its stock and bond brokerage, corporate agency and promotion business, a real estate department, for the purpose of carrying on and conducting, in the city of Los Angeles and elsewhere, a general real estate, rental, collection and insurance business; and, whereas, the parties of the second part are desirous of taking charge of and managing and conducting said real estate department for and on behalf of and in conjunction with the party of the first part:

"Now, therefore, the party of the first part agrees to furnish and equip a suitable room, in connection with its general offices in said city of Los Angeles for the use of said parties of the second part in conducting said real estate business, and it is also agreed that said party of the first part pay all reasonable expenses of maintaining the same, such as rent, telephone, stationery and advertising and make all other outlays necessary or incident to the proper conduct of said real estate business in a businesslike manner.

"The party of the first part further agrees that it will pay and allow said parties of the second part, jointly, as their compensation, and in full for their services for conducting and managing such real estate brokerage business, one-half of all commissions, fees, charges or gross profits, of all and every character accruing from sales made or other business pertaining or incident to said real estate department, negotiated by said parties of the second part or either of them, through or in connection with conducting and handling said general real estate agency business.

"The parties of the second part agree that they will faithfully devote their whole time during reasonable business hours, and will exert their best endeavors toward conducting the affairs of said real estate department in a businesslike manner and for the best mutual interests of all parties hereto, and they further agree that they will accept, in full payment for their said services the said one-half of the gross receipts of all said business negotiated, handled and conducted by them as hereinbefore expressed.

"It is further agreed that the business of said real estate department shall consist in buying, selling, owning, handling or otherwise dealing in real estate or real property or interests therein, as a real estate agent or broker; acting as a general insurance agent in negotiating and placing fire insurance on all and every character of property either as broker for insurance companies or representative of other agents for such companies; acting as agent for owners of real property in renting or leasing same and collecting and accounting for the rentals or other profits thereof; and said business of said department shall in no wise be construed to include the stock, bond, brokerage or other business of said party of the first part and the proportion of profit accruing to the parties of the second part shall bear no relation thereto.

"It is further agreed that all the business of said real estate department shall be conducted in, by and under the name of the party of the first part as a corporation, and that the parties of the second part shall act in all things pertaining to conducting said real estate department, by, through and with the general direction of the officers of the party of the first part.

"It is further agreed that all profits accruing from such business, so handled or negotiated by the parties of the second part, and all record of business pertaining thereto shall be reported as soon as practicable to the secretary or other authorized officer of said party of the first part, and the record thereof kept, and all moneys or property incident thereto handled, in pursuance of the by-laws and authorized orders of the board of directors of said party of the first part.

"It is further agreed that the profits from which said parties of the second part shall receive their share or division, as aforesaid, shall include profits arising from the transaction of the business of said department, whether the same be brought in or negotiated by said parties of the second part or by any of the officers of the party of the first part.

"The life of this contract shall be one year from date subject to revocation or amendment by said parties hereto.

"In witness whereof," etc.

Pursuant to said contract, a "real estate department" of defendant's business was established and put in charge of the plaintiffs, but it does not appear that they transacted any business except that out of which this litigation has arisen. Very soon after the date of the contract, they negotiated for the purchase by defendant of a tract of land in the city of Los Angeles, which was surveyed, subdivided into lots, and mapped as the "Hollenbeck Heights tract." The plaintiff Hipwell took actual charge on the ground of the work of surveying, grading of streets, and sidewalking said tract, and had personal supervision and charge of the grading outfit and of the working force during those necessary preliminaries to the marketing of the lots. When the lots were put upon the market, defendant sought and obtained from plaintiffs permission for the employment of outside brokers, and the allowance of commissions to them on such sales as they should make. All but 11 of the lots were sold for about $12,267. They had cost, including purchase price of the tract and expense of subdividing, grading, etc., about $8,639, so that the profits of the speculation amounted to $3,628. Plaintiffs asserted a claim under the contract to one-half of these profits. Defendant denied their claim to a share of the profits of the speculation, contending that under the contract they were entitled to no more than one-half of the commissions on the sales that had been made. As a result of this difference, defendant, on the 1st of February, 1903, terminated the contract, and plaintiffs commenced the present suit for an accounting of the profits of the transaction here detailed, and for a recovery of the one-half which they contend they are entitled to under the terms of the agreement as above set forth. Defendant answered, defending the action upon its construction of the contract, and the superior court, upon findings of fact which are substantially embodied in the foregoing statement, sustained the defense, giving judgment to the plaintiffs for only a small balance found due for commissions, without costs. The appeal is from the judgment alone, and presents the single question of the true construction of the written agreement.

Looking alone to the terms of the writing, its meaning cannot be said to be entirely clear, but the weight of the argument, I think, is very decidely in favor of the construction placed upon it by the superior court The "general real estate, rental, collection and insurance business," to be added as a department to the established business of the defendant, does not, ex vi termini, imply, and certainly does not express, anything more than the usual brokerage business conducted by real estate and insurance agents, and we find in a subsequent clause that the business is expressly designated as "such real estate brokerage business" in immediate connection with the stipulation fixing the compensation of the plaintiffs for their services, which is to be "one-half of all commissions, fees, charges, or" (not and) "gross profits of all and every character arising from the sales," etc. Here, it will be seen, commissions, fees, and charges, according to the grammatical construction of the sentence, are made the equivalent of gross profits, and those words have no application to the selling price of lands, or to the difference between the purchase price and the selling price.

But counsel for appellants strongly insist that in another and subsequent clause of the agreement the parties have given, as they had a right to do, a definition to the purpose and scope of their contract, which, so far as it is unambiguous, the court is bound to accept. The legal proposition is conceded, but it is denied by respondent that the definition in question is unambiguous or at all in conflict with what appears in the previous clause. The language of the clause here referred to is: "It is further agreed that the business of said real estate department shall consist in buying, selling, owning, handling, or otherwise dealing in real estate, or real property, or interests therein, as a real estate agent or broker," etc. I have italicized those parts of this clause to which the respective parties attach peculiar importance. Respondent contends that the words "as real estate agent or broker" qualify everything that go before, while the argument on the other side is that it would be absurd to connect them with the word "owning," for the reason that there can be no such thing as owning property in the capacity of broker. It cannot be denied that grammatically the last words of the clause do qualify all that precedes them, and it is equally undeniable that to allow them that effect as to the word "owning" is to produce a legal absurdity. The result, however, is simply to add an ambiguity to what is otherwise clear, and this requires the rejection of the ambiguity. But even if the word "owning" should be taken by itself, detached from its context, it is clear that all the other words, "buying, selling," etc., are qualified by the words "as a real estate agent and broker," and this renders the word "owning" entirely meaningless, for the mere owning of property is not a business, or any part of a business. Especially it is not a business involving fees, charges, commissions, or profits gross or net. Nothing is to be gained, I think, by further attempts at mere verbal analysis of this clause of the agreement. There is, in my opinion, a more conclusive argument against the construction contended for by appellants in the fact that the agreement is perfectly silent as to the manner in which funds are to be provided for the purchase of property by the department. If, as contended, it was the understanding that, in addition to its brokerage and agency business, the department was to engage in the purchase and sale of real property on its own account, it seems incredible that parties stipulating so carefully, and with such redundancy of words regarding other matters, and so explicitly enumerating the various items of office expenses to be borne by defendant, should have omitted to make any provision for raising or advancing the funds necessary to effect the contemplated purchases. Upon this point I have not failed to consider the argument of counsel that the advance of the necessary funds for this purpose by the defendant is stipulated in the general words of the third clause of the contract: "And make all other outlays necessary or incident to the proper conduct of the said real estate business in a businesslike manner." I think, however, that these words, taken in the connection in which they occur, and with the qualification which they contain, cannot be held to refer to anything except the expenses of conducting the business of the office. They are to be construed according to the maxim, "Noscitur a sociis," and cannot be extended so as to comprehend an obligation on the part of defendant to provide all the purchase money for contemplated purchases of property to be improved and sold on speculation.

Another argument in favor of appellants' contention is based upon the frequent occurrence of the word "profits" in the agreement; the argument being that it is a word fitly used in reference to the excess of the selling price of land or other commodity over cost, but is not properly descriptive of the earnings of a broker in the form of commissions, fees, etc. It seems a sufficient answer to this argument to say that in a contract like this the fees and commissions of the brokers, being the profits of the business, are properly so designated.

It is further contended, and must be conceded, that in construing a contract, the situation of the parties—the surrounding circumstances—must be considered, and it is claimed that the court cannot put itself in the position of these parties without taking judicial notice that by the prevailing custom a general real estate business, especially in Los Angeles for several years prior to October, 1902, has comprehended not only agency or brokerage in the purchase and sale of lands, but purchase and sale on account of the broker or firm of brokers. Without deciding the legal proposition involved in this argument, it may be conceded for the purposes of this decision that the parties to this agreement were well informed of the custom said to have been prevalent among real estate brokers in Los Angeles of combining with their brokerage business ventures on their own account. But, on this supposition, it seems all the more strange that, if they expected to conform to the custom, they should have omitted all provision for the contribution of the purchase money necessary in such ventures. If they knew that they could combine speculation with agency, they knew equally well that they could confine themselves to agency, and from the terms of their agreement it would seem that they did so.

The contention of appellants that it is altogether unreasonable to suppose that they would have entered into this agreement to give their whole time to the business of the department for one-half of the commissions, when they could have gone into business by themselves and retained the whole of the commissions, rests upon the assumption that they could foresee the failure of the projected brokerage business which they had in contemplation. No doubt they expected success where they encountered only failure. Perhaps they were without the necessary means to provide an office and pay the expenses involved in what appears to have been an experiment to last for a year—the business to be continued or abandoned according to the results. If they had made the experiment upon their own resources, their small gains might have been a considerable loss. Conducted as it was, in connection with the defendant, the only business the department ever did (so far as appears) was the negotiation of the purchase and sale of this Hollenbeck Heights tract—property purchased and improved by the defendant with its own funds and at its own risk. It does not seem to be a valid ground of complaint on the part of the plaintiffs that the defendant gave them the only opportunity they had to make any earnings at all during the 14 weeks the business continued. The only remaining argument in support of the appeal which seems of sufficient importance to demand particular consideration is based upon the merely probative facts found by the court that the plaintiff Hipwell personally superintended the subdivision of the tract and the grading and sidewalking of the streets, and that the defendant sought and obtained the consent of the plaintiffs to the employment of outside brokers to negotiate sales. This it is contended shows the practical construction of the contract by the parties, and that they understood that the profits of the speculation were to be shared equally between them. But the court does not so find, and its conclusion as to the proper construction of the agreement cannot be set aside on the strength of these findings, unless they are absolutely and fatally inconsistent with that conclusion. No such inconsistency is apparent. Assuming the contract to have been confined to a brokerage business, there is nothing inconsistent in the fact that the defendant, on the suggestion of plaintiffs, should have bought the Hollenbeck tract and prepared it for sale at its own expense and risk. Nothing in the contract excluded it from engaging in such a venture, and nothing in the contract required it to share the gains of the speculation, any more than it requires the plaintiffs to bear a share of the loss. That Hipwell should have superintended the subdivision of the tract, the grading, etc., is not surprising, if his department was to have commissions on the sale of the lots, especially considering that the department had nothing to do until the subdivision, grading, etc., was complete, and these lots in a condition to be put upon the market. And, if he did superintend the preparation of the lots for sale upon an understanding, tacit or otherwise, that the department was to negotiate the sales, it was natural that defendant should ask the consent of plaintiffs to the employment of outside brokers, and the payment to them of a portion of the commissions. In view of these considerations, it cannot be held that there is any fatal inconsistency between these probative facts and the conclusion of the superior court that the contract of the parties did not cover the profit of the Hollenbeck tract venture.

The judgment of the superior court is affirmed.

WILSON v. SOUTHERN PAC. R. CO. (L. A. 1,704.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1907.)

JUDGMENT—RES JUDICATA.

In an action against a railroad to recover money paid for land, part of a government grant where the plaintiff contended that it had been finally determined that patent should not issue to the railroad, a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States involving other lands identically situated is binding.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 1242–1247.]

Department 2. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by Phillip L. Wilson against the Southern Pacific Railroad Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Singer, Jr., and Guy Shoup, for appellant. Frederick W., Houser and Camp & Lissner, for respondent.

HENSHAW, J. This is an action by plaintiff to recover from defendant moneys paid on account of the purchase of lands. In its nature it is like the cases of the Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Lipman, 83 Pac. 445, 148 Cal. 480, and Wilson v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 135 Cal. 421, 67 Pac. 688, where the facts will be found sufficiently stated.

In this case plaintiff contends that it has been finally determined that patent shall not issue to the defendant, and that, therefore, he is entitled to his recovery. This contention he charges in two counts, the first based upon decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States; the second upon the fact that patent has actually issued to him.

The first of these propositions is the only one that requires consideration. The court found that it had been finally adjudicated and decided that patent was not to issue to the defendant. Its conclusion was based upon the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. U. S., 168 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 18, 42 L. Ed. 355. By appellant it is contended that, while it is true that a part of the land in controversy in that case was within the indemnity limits of the branch line grant to the Southern Pacific, there was no discussion whatever of the question whether lands within the indemnity limits of a railroad grant, which were reserved at the time of the grant but subsequently restored to the public domain, could, after such restoration, be selected by the railroad company in lieu of losses within the primary limits; that such was what was actually done in the case at bar and the right of the railroad company so to do, and the investment of title in the railroad after so doing, are matters which have never been adjudicated against appellant's contention, and certainly not by the decision in the 168 U. S. 1, 18 Sup. Ct. 18, 42 L. Ed. 355.

It is true that the question as to the precise lands here in controversy has never been decided, but, as was said in S. P. R. R. Co. v. Painter, 113 Cal. 247, 45 Pac. 320, such a determination as to the precise lands in controversy is not necessary, if there be a determination touching lands in all respects of like character. In S. P. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 189 U. S. 447, 23 Sup. Ct. 567, 47 L. Ed. 896, some of the lands were within the indemnity limits of the same branch line grant involved in the case at bar. They were within the place limits of the Texas Pacific grant, which grant was expressly given the same precedence that was accorded to the Atlantic & Pacific grant under the act of 1866. It would seem, therefore, that the situation of the lands was identical with that here presented, and it seems so to have been regarded by the Supreme Court of the United States. The right to make a selection of indemnity lands within the forfeited place limits of the primary grant to the Texas Pacific Company was presented and argued. The Supreme Court said: "The Texas Pacific grant was declared forfeited by Act February 28, 1885,

c. 265 (23 Stat. 337), and this forfeiture inured to the benefit of the United States. United States v. Southern P. R. Co., 146 U. S. 570, 36 L. Ed. 1091, 13 Sup. Ct. 152. It is argued, further, however, that, if the Southern Pacific did not get the lands in question under its primary grant, it may take a part of them as indemnity lands. It is said that the company has a right to take them for that purpose if the status of the lands at the time of the selection permits it. Ryan v. Central P. R. Co., 99 U. S. 282, 25 L. Ed. 305. That contention seems to have been disposed by Southern P. R. Co. v. U. S., 168 U. S. 1, 47, 66, 42 L. Ed. 355, 376, 382, 18 Sup. Ct. 18, and the practice of the Land Department for many years has been inconsistent with it. Southern P. R. Co. v. Moore, 11 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 534; Moore v. Kellogg, 17 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 391; Smead v. Southern P. R. Co., 29 Land Dec. Dep. Int. 135. When it is decided that the company got no title to the land within its 20-mile limit, it would be contrary to the intimations of the cases to allow it to take the adjoining strip outside under a claim of indemnity. See Bardon v. Northern P. R. Co., 145 U. S. 535, 545, 36 L. Ed. 806, 811, 12 Sup. Ct. 856; Clark v. Herington, 186 U. S. 206, 46 L. Ed. 1128, 22 Sup. Ct. 872. It is not clear that the language of the statute does not forbid it."

We can construe this language in no other way than as an adjudication by the highest authority upon the interpretation to be given to its decision in the 168th volume of its reports, and, as the question relates to the public domain and the construction of acts of Congress, the decisions of that court are, it is unnecessary to say, binding authority upon this.

For which reason the judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; LORIGAN, J.

BLOOD v. LA SERENA LAND & WATER CO. et al. (L. A. 1,580.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

1. Appeal — Grounds of Review — Motion for New Trial — Sufficiency of Statement.

Code Civ. Proc. § 661, provides that, where a motion for a new trial is made on the minutes, the record on appeal consists of the judgment roll, "and a statement to be subsequently prepared, with a copy of the order," and that "the statement shall only contain the grounds argued before the court for a new trial and so much of the evidence * * * as shall be necessary." Held that, where the order denying motions for a new trial on the minutes of the court recited that the motions were submitted "without argument," the statement could not contain any ground of motion for a new trial, nor any evidence applicable thereto, and there was nothing to review in denial of the motion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 2945.]

2. Set-Off and Counterclaim — Subject-Matter — Corporations — Liability for Corporate Debts.

In an action by one stockholder who is a judgment creditor of a corporation, primarily against other stockholders to recover from them amounts due the corporation on subscriptions to stock, although the corporation was made a party to the action, the individual defendants cannot set off against their indebtedness the unpaid subscription for stock which the plaintiff owed the corporation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Set-Off and Counterclaim, §§ 76, 77, 81.]

3. Corporations—Stockholders' Liability—Several Liability.

A creditor of a corporation, in a suit against stockholders to recover unpaid subscriptions to stock, is not limited in his recovery to the amount represented by the proportion which the defendants' unpaid subscription bears to all unpaid subscriptions, since their liability is several, and not joint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 12, Corporations, § 981.]

On Rehearing.

4. Appeal—Record—Scope and Contents.

A statement on motion for a new trial, although not sufficient for the purpose of reviewing the orders denying a new trial, may be considered on appeals from the judgment under Code Civ. Proc. § 950, providing that any statement settled after decision of a motion for a new trial made upon the minutes of the court is to be used on appeal from a judgment.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

Action by James A. Blood, Sr., against the La Serena Land & Water Company and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, the defendants, except McDuffie and Wells, appeal. Affirmed.

Richards & Carrier and Booth & Bertnett, for appellants. W. S. Day, for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff, a judgment creditor of La Serena Land & Water Company, a corporation, brought this action against the corporation and certain holders of its capital stock to recover from the individual defendants the unpaid subscriptions on their stock, and to apply the same in satisfaction of his judgment. The plaintiff had brought an action against the corporation to foreclose a mortgage, and obtained a decree of foreclosure. See Blood v. La Serena L. & W. Co., 113 Cal. 221, 41 Pac. 1017, 45 Pac. 252; Id., 134 Cal. 361, 66 Pac. 317. The mortgaged property sold for an amount less than was due on the mortgage, resulting in the docketing of a deficiency judgment against the corporation for $22,105.97. The present action was dismissed as to the defendant Wells. The court found that the defendant McDuffie had, prior to the commencement of the suit, assigned his stock to the plaintiff. Judgment went against the corporation and the remaining four defendants, James L. and Martha S. Barker, James W. Orr, and R. W Evans. Said defendants moved for a new trial, which was denied, and now appeal from the order denying their motions and from the judgment.

The only ground urged in support of the appeals from the order denying the new trial is the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain certain findings. The respondent contends that there is no sufficient record on which to review the action of the lower court in refusing a new trial. This contention, we think, must be sustained. The transcript contains merely (in addition to the judgment roll) a statement of the case and the order of the court denying the motions. The statement, which contains no copy of the notices of intention to move for a new trial, was settled March 12, 1904, and filed March 14, 1904. The order denying the motions for a new trial was made and entered February 5, 1904, more than a month before the settlement or the filing of the statement. It is obvious, therefore, that the motions for new trial must have been made on the minutes of the court, since such motions, if made upon affidavits, upon a bill of exceptions, or upon a statement of the case, cannot be heard until "after the affidavits, bill of exceptions, or statement, as the case may be, are filed." Code Civ. Proc. § 660. Where the motion is made on the minutes of the court, the record on appeal consists of the judgment roll, "and a statement to be subsequently prepared, with a copy of the order." Code Civ. Proc. § 661. The same section provides that, in cases of such motions, "the statement shall only contain the grounds argued before the court for a new trial, and so much of the evidence or other matter as shall be necessary to explain them; and it shall be the duty of the judge to exclude all other evidence or matter from the statement." The evident intent of this provision is that, where there is an appeal from an order granting or denying a motion for new trial made on the minutes of the court, the review by the appellate court shall extend only to the matters presented and argued to the lower court in support of the motion. Other grounds are not to be regarded as justifying or requiring the granting of such motion. And there is good reason for this limitation. Where a party moves for a new trial without having first prepared and presented a record, whether by way of affidavits, bill of exceptions, or statement, it is only fair to the court which is asked to grant a new trial upon its recollection of the proceedings that its attention be specifically directed to the matters in which error is claimed to have been committed. But whether the provision of section 661 is founded in good reason or bad, its language is clear and unambiguous. The statement is to contain only the grounds argued before the court for a new trial, and so much of the evidence or other matter as may be necessary to explain those grounds. Leonard v. Shaw, 114 Cal. 69, 45 Pac. 1012. Everything else is to be excluded from the statement. If other matter should happen to be incorporated, it is surplusage, and must be disregarded. It follows that, where a motion for new trial, made on the minutes of the court, is submitted without any ground being argued, and is denied, there is nothing which can properly be incorporated in a statement, and nothing on which the appellate court can base a review of the order made. It is true that, where specifications of error or of insufficiency of evidence are set out in the statement, it will be presumed that they were in fact argued. Schneider v. Market St. Ry. Co., 134 Cal. 482, 66 Pac. 734; Roberts v. Hall, 147 Cal. 434, 82 Pac. 66. But no such presumption can be indulged where the record affirmatively shows that the fact is otherwise. In the present case the order denying the motions for new trial (which is, under Code Civ. Proc. § 661, a part of the record on appeal) recites that the motions were submitted "without argument." In the face of this, we cannot presume that any of the grounds were argued. The statement, therefore, could not properly contain any ground of motion for new trial, nor any evidence applicable to any ground. There is nothing before the court on which to review the ruling of the trial court in denying the motion, and its order must be sustained without an examination of the evidence.

Being limited, therefore, to a consideration of the appeals from the judgment, we are to determine whether the findings made by the court support the judgment. The essential facts found are the following: The corporation was organized in 1887, with a capital stock of 300 shares, of the par value of $500 per share. Of this number 210 shares were subscribed and outstanding. On these it is found that only 50 per cent. of the subscription price had been paid. At the time of the commencement of the action, plaintiff was the owner of 130 shares, on which there is due for unpaid subscriptions $32,500, and the four individual defendants against whom judgment went were the owners of 42 shares, on which there is due for unpaid subscriptions $10,500. The remaining 38 shares were held by parties not before the court. The findings show the judgment against the corporation above referred to, and declare that said corporation ever since the date of the judgment against it has been insolvent, and that it had no assets other than the property sold under foreclosure and the unpaid subscriptions of its stockholders. As conclusion of law, the court found "that the plaintiff, being himself a debtor of said corporation, should contribute ratably with the defendants James L. Barker, Martha S. Barker, James W. Orr, and R. W. Evans toward the discharge of his said demand against said corporation; and the defendants James L. Barker, James W. Orr, Martha S. Barker, and R. W. Evans must each contribute proportionately with the plaintiff toward the discharge of the plaintiff's demand against the corporation." Judgment was entered against the corporation and the said individual defendants in accordance with said conclusion of law.

The jurisdiction of a court of equity, at the instance of a creditor or creditors of an insolvent corporation, to compel its stockholders to pay their subscriptions in order to satisfy the corporate debts, is well established. Harmon v. Page, 62 Cal. 448; Baines v. Babcock, 95 Cal. 581, 27 Pac. 674, 30 Pac. 776, 29 Am. St. Rep. 158; Walter v. Merced Academy Ass'n, 126 Cal. 582, 59 Pac. 136; Welch v. Sargent, 127 Cal. 72, 59 Pac. 319. The only question in this case is how far the plaintiff's right of recovery is affected by the fact that he himself is a stockholder of the corporation, and is indebted to it for unpaid subscriptions. It is contended by the appellants that, inasmuch as plaintiff's liability for unpaid subscriptions exceeded the amount of his claim against the corporation, such liability should be set off against his claim, and no recovery be allowed at all; but this position, we think, cannot be sustained. While the corporation is a party defendant to the suit, it is not an indispensable party (Potter v. Dear, 95 Cal. 578, 30 Pac. 777), and the action is primarily against the defendant stockholders to recover from them amounts due the corporation which are properly applicable to the payment of the debts of the corporation. Such individual defendants do not stand in the position of the corporation itself, and should not be permitted to set off against their indebtedness claims due from the plaintiff to the corporation. It has been held in other jurisdictions that a creditor of a corporation who is himself a stockholder, and therefore liable for unpaid subscriptions, may, without fully paying his own subscription, maintain an action against other delinquent stockholders to enforce payment of a judgment obtained by him against the corporation. Bissit v. Kentucky River Navigation Co. (C. C.) 15 Fed. 353; Wilson v. Kiesel, 35 Pac. 488, 9 Utah, 397. No decision to the contrary has been called to our attention, and we think these cases declare the proper rule. The plaintiff, as a creditor, is entitled to look for the satisfaction of his debt to the fund composed of the unpaid subscriptions of the stockholders. As a stockholder owing a subscription, he is bound to apply this subscription toward the satisfaction of the debts of the corporation; but there is no reason why, merely because he unites in his own person the two characters of creditor and stockholder, he should, as stockholder, be compelled to bear the entire burden of satisfying his own claim, for which other stockholders are equally liable. The just and equitable rule appears to us to be that declared in Bissit v. Kentucky River Navigation Co., and Wilson v. Kiesel, supra, i. e., that in such case the plaintiff stockholder must contribute ratably with the defendant stockholders toward the liquidation of his demand against the corporation. This was the principle applied by the trial court as enunciated in the conclusion of law above quoted. Under it the court ascertained the total amount of the plaintiff's claim, and apportioned the payment of that claim among the plaintiff and the defendants in proportion to the amounts respectively due from them for unpaid subscriptions.

It is contended by the appellants that, if such rule of contribution be proper, it should only be applied as among all of the stockholders, not merely among those who are parties to the action; that the plaintiff is entitled to recover from the defendants, not the proportion which their unpaid subscriptions bear to the sum of his and theirs, but only the proportion which their unpaid subscriptions bear to the total unpaid subscriptions owed by all stockholders of the corporation. We think, however, that this view is inconsistent with the rule declared in Baines v. Babcock, supra, and the cases following it. In Baines v. Babcock it was held, following the decision in Hatch v. Dana, 101 U. S. 205, 25 L. Ed. 885, that in a suit to enforce the payment of such subscriptions it is not necessary to join all of the stockholders. The following language from the opinion in Hatch v. Dana was quoted: "The liability of a stockholder for the capital stock of a company is several and not joint. By his subscription each becomes a several debtor to the company, as much so as if he had given his promissory note for the amount of his subscription. At law, certainly, his subscription may be enforced against him without joinder of other subscribers, and in equity his liability does not cease to be several." The same rule was applied in Walter v. Merced Academy Ass'n, supra. See, also, Welch v. Sargent, 127 Cal. 72, 80, 59 Pac. 319. Under these cases a creditor is not limited in his recovery to the amount represented by the proportion which the defendants' unpaid subscription bears to all unpaid subscriptions. He may sue any one stockholder and recover from him his total debt, provided it does not exceed the amount of the defendants' liability for subscription. We cannot see why a different rule should be applied when the plaintiff himself is a stockholder. The fact that he himself is indebted for unpaid subscriptions merely furnishes a reason for equitably adjusting the liabilities of the parties before the court. The purpose of the action is not to wind up the affairs of the corporation and adjust the rights of all the stockholders. Hatch v. Dana, supra. It is merely to subject to the payment of the plaintiff's demand the amount owed to the corporation by the defendants before the court. As between them and the plaintiff it appears that there are equities which require the plaintiff to meet the payment of a portion of his demand. The argument that it is unjust to compel the defendants to pay an amount which might have been recovered from other stockholders, if they had been made parties, applies with equal force to the case where the plaintiff is a stranger to the corporation, as where he is himself a stockholder. The liability of the defendants being several, the court properly adjusted the equities as between the parties before it.

It may be observed, further, that the defendants made no motion to have the remaining stockholders brought in. On the face of plaintiff's complaint it did not appear that he was a stockholder. He brought his action against certain stockholders as, under the doctrine of Baines v. Babcock, and similar cases, he had a right to do. The defendants set up, by way of defense, the fact that he as a stockholder was also indebted to the corporation. If the presence of the other stockholders was necessary to a complete adjudication of the rights of the parties, and a determination of the amount ultimately due from each, the defendants should have taken steps to have had such other stockholders brought in. Hatch v. Dana, supra.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, J.; SHAW, J.; McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.; LORIGAN, J.

PER CURIAM. In their petition for rehearing, the appellants urge that the statement on motion for new trial may be considered by this court on the appeals from the judgment, even though such statement cannot be resorted to for the purpose of reviewing the orders denying a new trial. Code Civ. Proc. § 950; Wall v. Mines, 128 Cal. 136, 60 Pac. 682; Kelly v. Ning Yung Ass'n, 138 Cal. 602, 72 Pac. 148; Vinson v. Los Angeles Pac. R. R. Co., 141 Cal. 151, 74 Pac. 757. Some of these appeals from the judgment were taken within 60 days after the rendition of the judgment, and, as to them, the statement may be used for the purpose of determining the sufficiency of the evidence. Code Civ. Proc. § 939; Pease v. Fink (Cal. App.) 85 Pac. 657. Recognizing the soundness of this position of the appellants, which was not advanced when the appeals were submitted, we have carefully examined the evidence shown in the statement. This examination satisfies us that the findings complained of are fully supported by the evidence.

In view of this conclusion, there is no good reason for further considering the case, and the petition for rehearing is denied.

(Supreme Court of California. March 25, 1907. Rehearing Denied April 23, 1907.)

1. RAILROADS—NEGLIGENCE—CROSSING ACCIDENTS—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE—SUBMISSION TO JURY.

In an action against a railroad for injuries received in a collision at a crossing between the wagon wherein plaintiffs were riding and defendant's train, evidence held to justify the submission to the jury of the question of plaintiffs' contributory negligence.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, § 1166.]

2. SAME—CARE REQUIRED OF PERSON CROSSING TRACK.

One approaching a railroad crossing is not authorized to assume that the persons operating a train will not in any way be negligent in its operation.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 41, Railroads, §§ 1071–1074.]

3. NEGLIGENCE — INSTRUCTIONS — BURDEN OF PROOF.

In an action for injuries through negligence, an instruction that the burden of proving contributory negligence to the jury's satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence, etc., rested on defendant, was subject to criticism as tending to make the jury believe that something more than the weight of the evidence or preponderance of probability was required.

Shaw, J., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lucian Shaw, Judge.

Action by Albert Hutson and another against the Southern California Railway Company. Judgment for plaintiffs and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Rehearing denied; Beatty, C. J., and Shaw, J., dissenting.

J. N. Norton, E. W. Camp, Paul Burks, and E. E. Millikin, for appellant. J. H. Merriam and Hunsaker & Britt, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. When this case was in department, in the opinion there rendered it was said:

"This is an action for damages, wherein plaintiffs charge that, by the negligent operation of defendant's train, they were struck by it while crossing the track of defendant, and sustained the injuries for which the damages were sought. Plaintiffs were riding in a heavy wood wagon drawn by two horses, and were approaching the crossing at which there were two tracks, the tracks of the Terminal Railway and the tracks of the defendant's railway. They had passed over the track of the Terminal Road, and their horses were about to step onto defendant's track, when they discovered that the locomotive of a south-bound freight train on defendant's track was approaching within 150 feet of the crossing. Plaintiff Albert Hutson, who was driving, then made an effort to stop his horses, but did not apply the brake, and immediately thereafter urged his horses forward and across the track. The older boy of the two children who were in the wagon with him ran to the rear end of the vehicle and jumped out, and the father tossed the other boy to the ground. The engine collided with the rear half of the wagon, and both the plaintiffs were thrown to the ground and injured. The negligence of the defendant, as alleged, consisted in its failure to give any warning of the approach of the train by blowing the whistle or ringing the bell, and it was further charged that the train approached the crossing at a negligently high rate of speed. This speed was estimated by the various witnesses at from 16 to 20 miles an hour. The view of plaintiffs approaching the crossing was obstructed, though there was a place of safety near the track where plaintiffs could have stopped the team and had a clear view. It was first urged by appellant that, as matter of law, plaintiffs were guilty of such contributory negligence as to preclude recovery; but upon a review of the whole evidence we think that this question was fairly submissible to the jury.

"The court, however, erred in certain instructions given to the jury, and these errors demand a new trial of the case. The court instructed the jury as follows: '(6) You are instructed that the plaintiffs had a right to drive in the road or street where they were and to cross the defendant's track, and they are not chargeable with contributory negligence in endeavoring to cross the track, provided they adopted all reasonable precautions against injury from moving trains, and they are not chargeable with contributory negligence, unless they failed to take such precautions. In determining whether the plaintiffs took all reasonable precautions, the jury should consider the situation of the crossing and the circumstances attending the accident, bearing in mind that the plaintiffs had a right to rely on the performance by the defendant's employés of every act imposed by law upon them when approaching a crossing with their train. The plaintiffs, and each of them, were authorized to assume that the men in charge of the train would approach the crossing with due care, without running at an excessive or unreasonable rate of speed, and would cause the bell on the engine to be rung and kept ringing for the distance of 80 rods before reaching the crossing. The acts and conduct of the plaintiffs, and each of them, in looking out and listening for the approach of the train are therefore to be considered in connection with the assumption, which they had the right to make, that care in the management of the train would be exercised in the manner just indicated.'

"It is not the law of this state that a person approaching a railroad crossing is authorized to assume that the persons operating a train will not in any way be negligent in that operation. This doctrine has been asserted in some of the states, but it is opposed to the law as laid down in the decisions of this state and of the Supreme Court of the United States. Such a rule would abrogate the doctrine of contributory negligence in all such cases, and in the early case of Meeks v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 52 Cal. 604, this court said: 'The 486th section of the Civil Code, providing that a railroad corporation shall be liable for all damages sustained by any person and caused by the locomotive of the corporation when a bell is not sounded or a whistle blown as directed by that section, does not abrogate the doctrine of contributory negligence, or operate to give a right of action where the negligence of the plaintiff * * * materially and proximately contributed to the injury.' In Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651, this precise question was involved; this court saying: 'The only answer to this is that defendants' employés did not ring the bell or sound the whistle, and that the fireman was not at his place on the left side of the engine. The argument, of course, is that if the signals had been given plaintiff might have heard, and, not hearing them, he had the right to assume when he was about to make the crossing that the train had not then reached the whistling post, 1,325 feet above, and that the fireman might have seen him in time to have prevented the accident had he been on the lookout. It may be admitted that all this was culpable negligence on the part of defendants' employés. The defense of contributory negligence implies that defendant may have been guilty of such negligence as would justify a recovery by the plaintiff if he were not also in fault. This is no argument, therefore, against the position of the defendant.' In Green v. Southern California Ry. Co., 138 Cal. 1, 70 Pac. 926, the rule of law laid down in Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co. is reaffirmed; the chief justice placing his concurring opinion upon this precise ground. The same doctrine is also announced in Pepper v. Southern Pac. Co., 105 Cal. 398, 38 Pac. 974, and in Bilton v. S. P. Co., 83 Pac. 440, 148 Cal. 443. The rule is simply this: That a railroad crossing, from its very nature, is always a place of danger, and a traveler has no right to omit any of the care which the law demands of him, upon the assumption that due care will be exercised in the operation of the train. Says the Circuit Court of Appeals, in Erie Railway Co. v. Kane, 118 Fed. 234, 55 C. C. A. 129: 'Again, counsel for defendant in error urges that it was not negligence for decedent to be there, because he was not bound to anticipate Bowker's negligence through which the collision came about. It is never negligence, they say, for one not to anticipate negligence in anybody else. There is, however, no such general rule of law or prudent conduct. There are instances where as a matter of law it is negligence not to anticipate negligence in others. As, for instance, it is well settled in the federal courts that it is negligence for a highway traveler not to anticipate failure on the part of an engineer to give appropriate signals of approach of his train to a highway crossing. He has no right not to look or listen because he has heard no such signals.' This is in accord with the doctrine of the Supreme Court of the United States, as laid down in Railroad Co. v. Houston, 95 U. S. 697, 24 L. Ed. 542, where it is said: 'The failure of the engineer to sound the whistle or ring the bell, if such were the fact, did not relieve the deceased from the necessity of taking ordinary precautions for her safety. Negligence of the company's employés in these particulars was no excuse for negligence on her part. She was bound to listen or look before attempting to cross the railroad track in order to avoid an approaching train and, not to walk carelessly into a place of danger.'"

The foregoing language is adopted and adhered to. In contemplation of the new trial which must be ordered, it should be said that instruction 7, as given by the court, contains the same error of law as that in the instruction just discussed. Additionally, it dangerously approaches the forbidden territory of instructions upon the facts. The court also instructed the jury that: "As said above, the burden of proof of such contributory negligence rests upon the defendant, unless it proves the same to your satisfaction by a preponderance of the evidence," etc. It would be better to omit the words here italicized. In a civil case it is the weight of evidence or preponderance of probability which is sufficient to establish a fact. Murphy v. Waterhouse, 113 Cal. 467, 45 Pac. 866, 54 Am. St. Rep. 365. As given, the instruction might tend to confuse a jury into believing that something more than this was required.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment and order appealed from are reversed.

SHAW, J. (dissenting). The opinion of the court in this case did not come to my knowledge until several days after it was filed. I deem it proper at this time to state the reasons for my belief that it is erroneous.

The statement of facts in the opinion is both incomplete and incorrect. In this court those facts which the evidence fairly tends to prove in support of the verdict must be taken as true. The plaintiffs, at a point 50 feet from the tracks of the Terminal Road, stopped the wagon and looked and listened for a train. It was the best place from which to view the tracks of the two railroads for that purpose. A man passing them from the opposite direction told them no train was in sight. When on the farther side of the tracks he could see the track, in the direction from which the train was coming, for a much longer distance than it could be seen from where the plaintiffs stopped. Albert Hutson, who was driving, continued to look and listen after they again started, but neither saw nor heard the train until the wagon was on the Terminal track and within a few feet of the defendant's track and on a grade descending toward it. The train was then only about 150 feet distant. He could not safely stop on that track, on which another train might be coming. The emergency was sudden, and the danger great, and he could not be charged with negligence, as matter of law, under those circumstances, for any ordinary conduct. Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 521, 522, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85. In the necessary haste, he concluded to attempt crossing before the train reached the place, whipped his horses, and almost succeeded in his design. To have used the brake after whipping the horses would have been sheer folly. No bell was rung. No whistle was sounded. The train was coming at the unprecedented speed of 45 miles an hour. The statement that its speed was from 16 to 20 miles an hour is not justified by the evidence, as we must view it; nor can it be said to be sustained by a preponderance.

With regard to the supposed faulty instruction, for the giving of which the judgment is reversed, the court has curiously misconceived its subject, its effect, and its purpose. The law on the subject of the negligence of one about to cross the track of a steam railroad naturally falls into two divisions; one relating to his rights, the other to his duties. Both are equally clear and well settled. His duty is to look and listen for trains, and to stop for that purpose, if stopping is necessary to do it effectively. His right is to expect and assume that due care will be used in the operation of trains, and that signals required by law will be given; but, the lack of such care, the failure to give the legal signals, will not excuse him from the duty to stop, look, and listen, nor remove the effect of contributory negligence in barring his recovery, if he fails in his own duty. It is not necessary for the court to state the whole law in every instruction. It is practically impossible to state it in every sentence; and the division into paragraphs is a mere method of separating the sentences and subdivisions of a general subject. It is perfectly proper for the court to divide the general subject of the law of the case, and treat the respective divisions in separate paragraphs. This the court did in the present instance, treating chiefly of the rights of the plaintiffs in the instruction in question, and of their duty to be careful themselves in numerous other instructions asked by the defendant. This instruction tells the jury that, in judging whether or not the plaintiffs were guilty of contributory negligence, they should consider the fact that plaintiffs had the right to assume and rely upon the exercise of due care by the trainmen, in giving the required signals, and not running at excessive speed. Many decisions of this court support this proposition, as the following extracts will show: "Plaintiff was authorized to assume that all other persons using the street would do so with due care. It cannot be imputed as negligence that he did not anticipate culpable negligence on the part of the employés of the defendant." Strong v. S. P. R. R. Co., 61 Cal. 328. "The plaintiff had the right to assume that the required statutory signals would be given by the defendant." Orcutt

v. Pacific C. R. Co., 85 Cal. 299, 24 Pac. 661. "The plaintiff here was exercising an undoubted right, and she was authorized to assume that all other persons using the street would act with due care. It cannot be imputed as negligence that she did not anticipate culpable negligence on the part of the defendant." Robinson v. W. P. R. R. Co., 48 Cal. 421. "Ordinarily, the person operating the car has the right to assume that the one so approaching is able to and will care for himself, by taking all necessary precautions to observe the approach of the car, and that he will not place himself on its track at such a time as to be injured thereby." Harrington v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 140 Cal. 520, 74 Pac. 15, 63 L. R. A. 238, 98 Am. St. Rep. 85. "The deceased had a right to rely upon the usual and required signal of bell ringing when a car is approaching." Driscoll v. Cable R. R. Co., 97 Cal. 553, 32 Pac. 591, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203. The same rule has been stated in an endless number of decisions of other states, as well as in many decisions of this state where the right of railway employés to rely on the exercise of due care by others was involved. Solen v. Virginia, etc., Ry. Co., 13 Nev. 106; Grippen v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co., 40 N. Y. 42; Phil., etc., R. R. Co. v. Hummell, 44 Pa. 379, 84 Am. Dec. 457; Newson v. N. Y. Cent. R. Co.. 29 N. Y. 390; Tabor v. M. V. R. R. Co., 46 Mo. 353, 2 Am. Rep. 517; Tex. & Pac. Ry. Co. v. Cody, 166 U. S. 613, 17 Sup. Ct. 703, 41 L. Ed. 1132; 2 Thomp. on Neg. § 1582; Shearman & R. on Neg. § 473; 41 Am. Dig. cc. 2775–2784; 37 Am. Dig. c. 448; Green v. Los A., etc., Ry. Co., 143 Cal. 31, 76 Pac. 719, 101 Am. St. Rep. 68; Lambert v. S. P. R. R. Co., 79 Pac. 873, 146 Cal. 231. Many other citations could be given to the same effect.

The duty of the plaintiffs to exercise due care in looking and listening, and the fact that this duty rested on them, regardless of any failure of the trainmen to use due care or give signals, is a qualification of the rule stated in the instruction and established by the above authorities. The jury were fully instructed on this point. They were informed that, in ascertaining whether or not a train was coming, the plaintiffs were required to exercise "such care as a person of ordinary prudence would exercise under the circumstances"; that they must "make use of all their senses" in so doing; that they "must use vigilantly the senses of sight and hearing," and, if it was necessary to stop in order to hear well, then they must stop for that purpose; that any neglect on their part in these particulars would bar a recovery, if it contributed to the injury, notwithstanding the negligence of the defendant may have caused it. And with regard to the effect of their rights aforesaid upon their own duty, the court instructed the jury that, while travelers in a vehicle approaching a railroad crossing "have a right to rely upon the presumption that railway employés engaged in running trains toward such crossing will use precautions to prevent collisions, yet that such travelers have no right, on that account, to relax in any way the vigilance required of them by law in such circumstances and at such a place. They are under the duty of both listening and looking, and of listening and looking at points and places and in such circumstances that the listening and looking will give them protection." If the instruction quoted in the main opinion is subject to criticism on the ground that it does not state with sufficient clearness the duty of the plaintiff as a qualification of the rule regarding their rights, it is supplemented and fully cured in that respect by the instruction last quoted, which states clearly both the right and the duty of plaintiffs and the fact that negligence of the defendant does not excuse the plaintiffs from exercising due care. The true rule regarding this qualification is well stated in the main opinion to be that "a traveler has no right to omit any of the care which the law demands of him upon the assumption that due care will be exercised in the operation of the train." The authorities cited in the opinion fully sustain in this statement of the qualification; but the extracts given omit the context, and are consequently misleading, so far as they seem to lend support to the idea that it is not the law that the traveler, while not omitting the care due from him, may rely on the performance of duty by the defendant, so long as due care on his part does not disclose to him its failure to do so. The cases do not so declare. If the instruction declared erroneous had stated that the plaintiffs had the right to omit any of the care which the law demanded of them, because of their reliance on the care of the defendant, the criticisms would have been deserved; but it does nothing of the sort and, in view of the explicit instructions to the contrary, it could not have been so understood by the jury.

The criticism of the instruction that contributory negligence is to be proven by the defendant by a preponderance of the evidence and to the satisfaction of the jury is not warranted. The instruction is based on the rules of evidence as laid down by the positive mandate of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is conceded that the burden is on the defendant, and that a preponderance is necessary; but it is suggested that the jury need not be satisfied of the fact. The Code declares that they must be satisfied. "That evidence is deemed satisfactory which ordinarily produces moral certainty or conviction in an unprejudiced mind. Such evidence alone will justify a verdict." Code Civ. Proc. § 1835. The court seems to have feared that the words, "to your satisfaction," might be understood by the jury to mean "beyond a reasonable doubt"; but the jury must be presumed to understand words according to their ordinary meaning.

TINGLEY v. TIMES MIRROR CO. (L. A. 1,656.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 1, 1907. Rehearing Denied May 1, 1907.)

1. Pleading — Amendment of Complaint — Time for Amendment.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 472, providing that any pleading may be amended once by a party as of course at any time before answer or demurrer filed, or after demurrer and before trial of the issues of law thereon, the plaintiff has a right to amend his complaint as of course only while an issue of law on a demurrer is undetermined, or up to the time an answer is filed in case of no demurrer.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 594, 595.]

2. Same—Amendment of Answer—Time for Amendment as of Course.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 472, providing that any pleading may be amended once by a party as of course at any time before answer or demurrer filed, or after demurrer and before trial of the issues of law thereon, a defendant has a right to amend his answer as of course only during the time that a demurrer to the answer is undetermined, or up to the time when the right to demur expires.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, §§ 594, 595.]

3. Same — Leave to Amend — Discretion of Court.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 473, providing that the court may in furtherance of justice allow amendments to any pleading upon such terms as may be proper, where, after a jury was impaneled, a defendant asked leave to file an amended answer which set up, with other matter, pleas in abatement on the ground that plaintiff's husband was not joined as a party and that plaintiff had no legal capacity to sue, but made no showing as to why those pleas were not set up in the original answer, and the amended answer with the pleas in abatement eliminated therefrom was subsequently permitted to be filed, the refusal of leave to file as originally offered was not an abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 601.]

4. Same — Waiver of Objection to Complaint.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 430, providing that the defendant may demur when it appears on the face thereof that the plaintiff has not legal capacity to sue, and section 433 providing that when the matter does not appear on the face of the complaint objection may be taken by answer, and section 434 providing that if no objection be taken either by demurrer or answer the defendant must be deemed to have waived it, if a complaint does not show there is a defect of parties or that the plaintiff has not capacity to sue, and no objections are raised in the original answer, though not waived absolutely they are to that extent waived, so that in the absence of a showing of excuse refusal of leave to amend was proper.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 39, Pleading, § 783.]

5. Libel — Actions — Complaint — Exemplary Damages—Sufficiency of Allegation.

Where a complaint for libel alleged that defendant wickedly and maliciously, with intent and design to injure, disgrace, and defame plaintiff and to bring her into public discredit and obloquy, printed and published the defamatory article set forth, and that said publication was false, malicious, and defamatory, the allegations are sufficient to support a claim for exemplary damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 350.]

6. Same.

Under Civ. Code, § 3294, providing that the malice essential to recovery of exemplary damages may be either express or implied, when a publication actionable per se is set forth in a complaint for libel, the law presumes malice in fact from its publication, and in the absence of evidence rebutting this presumed malice plaintiff is entitled to an award of exemplary damages.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 329.]

7. Same—Evidence—Admissibility.

In an action for actual and exemplary damages for libel, evidence of prior and subsequent publication of articles similar in character to the article complained of are admissible to show malice.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, §§ 287, 288.]

8. Same — Susceptibility to Mental Suffering.

In an action for libel, where the plaintiff's testimony in chief was that she had a large acquaintance throughout the United States and foreign countries, and that she suffered very much mentally in consequence of the article complained of, cross-examination as to her family ties, past history, and occupation, public controversies with certain ministers, prior attacks on her and the institution of which she was the head by other newspapers, and habeas corpus proceedings involving the right to the custody of two minor children who were in the institution under her supervision, is not admissible for the purpose of determining her susceptibility to mental suffering.

9. Same—Pecuniary Condition of Defendant.

In a action for libel, where exemplary damages are claimed, evidence of the value of defendant's property is admissible, whether the defendant is a corporation or an individual.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, §§ 303, 305.]

10. Same — Evidence — Admissibility — Malice.

In an action for libel, evidence as to certain slanderous portions of an article being eliminated by the city editor before publication is not admissible to show want of malice.

11. Trial—Conduct of Trial—Remarks of Judge.

In an action for libel, where defendant's attorney objected to conduct of plaintiff's counsel as being prejudicial to defendant and known to counsel to be improper, the court was warranted in rebuking defendant's counsel by saying, "That is not a remark you should make; it is improper language."

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 316.]

12. Appeal — Review — Harmless Error — Conduct of Counsel—Comments.

In an action for libel, counsel for plaintiff called the attention of the court to an article in the defendant newspaper relating to the case then pending, and requested that the jury be interrogated as to whether they had read it, so as to ascertain if it had had the effect on them which he believed was intended by defendant. On objection to the remarks, the court instructed the jury not to heed any remark of counsel, nor any expression of belief as to any matter which might transpire on the trial outside of the courtroom. Subsequently plaintiff's counsel stated that he wanted to know whether defendant had succeeded in getting to the jury information that ought not to go to it. Held, that the misconduct was not so prejudicial as to warrant a reversal.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4135.]

13. Libel — Actions — Pleading — Answer—Justification.

In an action for libel, where a subdivision of the answer setting up an alleged plea in mitigation for the publication of the article complained of stated other matters and alleged facts relative to plaintiff's mistreatment of a certain person, but there was no allegation that the statements in the alleged libelous article were true and nothing was alleged meeting the sting of the libel, it is not a sufficient plea in justification to admit evidence offered by defendant as to the treatment of the person mentioned.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, §§ 219, 249½.]

14. Same.

A plea in justification in an action for libel to be sufficient must be as broad as the charge attempted to be justified, and, while it need not justify every word, it must meet the substantial imputations as the ordinary reader would understand it to be made.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 219.]

15. Same—Mitigation.

In order to constitute a good plea in mitigation in an action for libel, it is necessary to allege and prove that, prior to the publication, the pleader had knowledge of the facts set up in mitigation, or had ascertained them after due investigation and believed them to be true.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, §§ 162, 227.]

16. Same.

In an action for libel, a plea in mitigation which merely states that there were rumors of the matter set up in mitigation, but does not allege that defendant had any knowledge of them, or that he investigated and believed them, or had even heard of them, prior to the publication of the article complained of, is insufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, §§ 162, 227.]

17. Witnesses—Competency—Reputation of Parties—Knowledge of Facts.

Depositions as to the reputation of a plaintiff in an action for libel are not admissible unless they show that the witness knows the general reputation of the plaintiff in the community in which she lives and as to the traits in question.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 83.]

18. Same.

A witness cannot testify as to the reputation of any one unless he is a member of the community in which the person lives.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 50, Witnesses, § 83.]

19. Trial—Conduct of Counsel—Action of Court.

In an action for libel, where counsel for defendant in his argument to the jury erroneously insisted that certain issues were before the jury for consideration, the court may specifically instruct that those issues should not be considered by them.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 478.]

20. Libel — Actions — Evidence — Justification.

In an action for libel, where no particular justification is pleaded to which testimony is offered can be addressed, it is properly excluded.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 32, Libel and Slander, § 249½.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; E. S. Torrance, Judge.

Action by Katherine Tingley against the Times Mirror Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See 77 Pac. 918.

Eugene Daney and Hunsaker & Britt, for appellant. J. W. McKinley, W. R. Andrews, and A. B. Hotchkiss (F. R. Kellogg and J. E. Wadham, of counsel), for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover damages for libel. The complaint alleged that plaintiff was a resident of the county of San Diego, and the head of an institution known as the "Universal Brotherhood Headquarters, Loma Homestead," at Point Loma in said county; that the defendant corporation was the owner and publisher of the "Los Angeles Daily Times," a newspaper of general circulation; that on October 28, 1901, the defendant "wickedly and maliciously and with intent and design to injure, disgrace, and defame this plaintiff and to bring her into public discredit and obloquy," published in said paper of and concerning plaintiff the following "false, libelous, malicious, and defamatory article, to wit:

"Outrages at Point Loma.

"Exposed by an 'Escape' from Tingley. Startling Tales told in this City. Women and Children starved and treated like Convicts. Thrilling Rescue.

"Mrs. M. Leavitt, of No. 418 West Fourth street, a believer in what she terms 'the true school of theosophy,' who has recently removed to this city from San Diego, the capital city of theosophists, has some startling things to tell concerning the practices of Catherine Tingley, and her associates, who conduct the Universal Brotherhood Homestead on Point Loma. Mrs. Leavitt seems to be thoroughly informed on two of the latest outrages perpetrated at the spookery, the cases of Mrs. Neirsheimer and Mrs. Hollbrook, both well-to-do Eastern women. Mrs. Hollbrook, the wife of a railroad man and Freemason of the East, has been rescued from the roost on Point Loma by her husband with the aid of an officer and a gun, and now hovers at the point of death from the abuse she says she received while confined in the 'Homestead.' During the daytime she was worked in the field like a convict, forced to plant trees, hoe corn and perform all sorts of hard labor and at night she was shut up in a cell and guarded as if she were a raving maniac. When her husband found what a trap she had fallen into he hurried here and took her out by force.

"The other case on which Mrs. Leavitt is posted is that of Mrs. Neirsheimer, who has been forcibly separated from her husband, who is also in the Tingley clutches, and is not allowed to speak to him. She is forced to live alone in a little tent in the grounds that surround the crazy institution. Armed men guard this place of horror, and, Mrs. Leavitt says, solitary confinement, hard labor and starvation are resorted to by the Tingley managers as punishments upon those who disobey their iron rules.

"The woman who gives out this information is a personal friend of, and has talked with, Mrs. Hollbrook, the victim whose health has been forever destroyed by the ordeals she passed through while imprisoned on Point Loma.

"Mrs. Leavitt claims that through a strong hypnotic power Catherine Tingley works her will on sensible people. The Universal Brotherhood, or in other words, Catherine Tingley, is an offshoot of the theosophic society, which became disjointed some four or five years ago. Mrs. Tingley was formerly—the theosophists say, a common, dollar-taking spirit medium.

"She couldn't agree with the theosophists, so she branched off and set up her trap on Point Loma. She distributes literature throughout the East, and even in foreign countries, saying the Universal Brotherhood Homestead, located in the most beautiful spot on earth, offers to those who wish to retire into a quiet thoughtful life, a home in which they may live peacefully and an atmosphere of soul study and pure thought.

"Only people with money happen to get these pamphlets, says Mrs. Leavitt. When people answer her enticing advertisements in person Mrs. Tingley exerts her influence over such as are spookily inclined; and the almost incredible things which have taken place prove that once in the lair it is almost impossible to escape.

"Mrs. Leavitt says there is nothing taught at Point Loma but insane ceremonies; that the girls who are placed there to be educated are put to work at the most menial tasks, each one kept separate in a guarded cell and forbidden to speak to anybody else, and that the poor little children are quartered in a miserable building some distance from the main institution, and are continually on the verge of starvation—for Mrs. Tingley openly states that children are fed too much for their spiritual good, and must eat but little, so they will be more ethereal. Mrs. Leavitt says she knows personally of a case where both parents and children are victims, and the children have been taken away to the child pen and are never allowed to communicate in any way with mother or father. For, says Mrs. Tingley, they will grow up purer if away from bodily and affectionate influence of the parents.

"The children are never allowed to speak to anybody except when they are selling trinkets to the visitors who come to the gates. The young lady prisoners make fancy work, which they sell to the strangers. Purple robes are worn by the women, and a sort of khaki uniform by the men.

"On certain occasions a midnight pilgrimage is made by both men and women to a spot on the peninsula, which is termed sacred ground. They go in their nightrobes, each holding a torch.

"Before she had gotten well into the scheme, Mrs. Hollbrook says she saw that it was a fake, but having no idea of the horror of it she decided to go into the Homestead for awhile that she might expose the character of the crazy institution. Whether she will live to carry out the good work is doubtful. She can tell things, her friends say, more shocking than anything known yet.

"Mrs. Leavitt alleges that gross immoralities are practiced at Point Loma by some of the disciples of spookism as it is there exemplified, and that such things should not be tolerated in a civilized community."

It is then alleged that said publication was false, malicious, and defamatory; that plaintiff was not and had not been guilty of any of the matters so charged; and that all and every portion of said article charging plaintiff with improper practices, fraud, and immorality were false, malicious, libelous, and untrue, closing with a prayer for damages in the sum of $50,000. A demurrer to the complaint having been overruled, defendant on March 29, 1902, filed an answer. No demurrer to the answer was filed by plaintiff. Thereafter the case was set down for trial on December 16, 1902. On December 15, 1902, the day before the trial was to commence, defendant, without leave of the court, served upon plaintiff and filed an amended answer. When the case was called for trial on the 16th, the plaintiff moved the court to strike out the amended answer of the defendant filed the day before, on the ground that it had been filed without leave of court, or authority of law, and changed the issues made in the action by introducing pleas in abatement. These pleas in abatement were relative to the coverture of plaintiff and nonjoinder of her husband as a plaintiff in the action. The court granted the motion, defendant reserved an exception, and the trial of the cause was then proceeded with. After a jury had been impaneled defendant moved the court to be permitted to file the same answer as had been previously stricken out, which motion was denied. Defendant then eliminated from said answer the pleas in abatement, and, with the consent of plaintiff, the answer as so amended was filed, and the cause was thereupon tried under the issues made by the complaint and this amended answer. The amended answer of defendant set up as the main defense a plea in justification as to the greater portion of the charges in the publication, by alleging that these portions of the charges were true; as to other portions of the charges it set up no defense whatever, and as to one of the charges alleged facts purporting to state a plea in mitigation of damages. It is unnecessary to particularly detail these defenses. The court in its instructions took up all the charges made by defendant and claimed by plaintiff to have been libelous, and which defendant alleged in its answer was true, and instructed the jury that, practically as to all of them, there was no legal proof of their truth, and that the jury should regard them as false. The correctness of this instruction is not questioned on this appeal. Neither as to these charges upon which the jury were so specifically instructed, nor as to any other issue in the case, is it claimed that the evidence was insufficient to sustain them or the verdict. No point is at all made as to the sufficiency of the evidence. The trial of the cause resulted in a verdict in favor of plaintiff for $7,500. A motion of defendant for a new trial was denied, and this appeal is from the judgment entered on the verdict and the order denying the motion for a new trial; the record on these appeals consisting of the judgment roll and certain bills of exceptions.

In support of its appeals and as grounds for reversal it is insisted by appellant, first, that the court erred in striking defendant's amended answer from the files and in refusing it permission to refile the same until certain defenses had been eliminated therefrom; second, that the court erred in the admission and exclusion of evidence; third, that the action of the court and of counsel for plaintiff during the progress of the trial constituted misconduct and error prejudicial to the defendant; fourth, error in giving instructions to the jury and in the general hostile tenor of the court's charge; lastly, refusal of the court to give a certain instruction requested by defendant. The general points urged for a reversal are based (aside from questions relative to instructions) upon a vast number of exceptions grouped and classified under 20 heads in the brief of counsel for appellant. Under these circumstances we shall take up such as we deem merit special consideration.

1. As to the action of the court in striking out the amended answer of defendant. It is insisted by appellant that it had an absolute right to file said amended answer when it did, without leave of the court, and this claim is based upon section 472 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that: "Any pleading may be amended once by the party of course, and without costs, at any time before answer or demurrer filed, or after demurrer, and before the trial of the issue of law thereon, by filing the same as amended, and serving a copy on the adverse party, who may have ten days thereafter in which to answer or demur to the amended pleading." The precise point made by appellant has not heretofore been passed on by this court, and we are aided none by a consideration of the authorities cited by appellant from other jurisdictions, because, as we read these authorities, they deal with statutory provisions relating to amendments either giving an absolute right to amend, by express language, at any time, or providing that the amendment may be made at any time before trial. But under a most liberal construction of our statutory provision no such right is conferred. In fact, it is insisted by respondent that under the section the only right conferred is the right to amend the complaint before answer or demurrer is filed thereto, or while the issue raised by demurrer to it is undetermined. The obvious purpose of the section, however, negatives such a strict construction, even if the language used might warrant it. The provision is in aid and furtherance of the right of parties litigant to amend all pleadings with a view of presenting for trial the real merits of a controversy—assertive and defensive—and to that end it should be liberally construed. It would be eminently unjust, except where no other conclusion was warranted, to hold that it was the purpose of the section to confer a right upon the plaintiff to amend his pleadings, which was denied a defendant. But while the section is to be construed liberally, as conferring an equal right to amend upon both parties as to all pleadings, still, its terms are not to be enlarged by such construction so as to confer greater rights upon one in that respect than are accorded to the other, or to work a hardship on either party, or to interfere with the progress of a trial after the issues of fact have been made. This right to amend, while applying to the pleadings of both parties, has its limitation as to the time within which either may exercise it under the section, and such time is not extended in behalf of the defendant beyond final joinder on the issues of fact in the case. Appellant claims that it had a right to amend at any time before trial because plaintiff did not demur to the answer. Its position is that the terms of the section providing that "any pleading" may be amended at any time "before answer or demurrer filed" must be construed as extending the period for filing an amended answer up to the time of the trial, unless the plaintiff demurs to the original answer, and the demurrer is disposed of. Under this theory of appellant the right of defendant to amend is curtailed, or extended, as the plaintiff elects to demur or not to demur; that notwithstanding the answer is unassailable, plaintiff must still file a frivolous demurrer to it, and have such demurrer determined, in order to preclude defendant from amending. Certainly the Legislature never contemplated such an idle act. In providing that a pleading might be amended "before demurrer filed," it was intended to give the right to amend, within the legal time the adverse party had within which to demur, without waiting to have the defect in the pleading pointed out on demurrer, or without taking the hazard that his adversary would not demur, and so preclude him from amending as of course under the section. It was not intended to confer a special right on a defendant to amend because plaintiff had not gone through the idle ceremony of demurring to an apparently good and sufficient answer. The construction which, in our judgment, is to be given to the section, and which commends itself as a reasonable and consistent one, is that the right of plaintiff to amend his complaint as of course is extended only up to the time when the answer of defendant is filed, or if a demurrer is interposed by defendant, only while the issue of law raised thereby is undetermined. If the defendant answers without demurring, or if his demurrer to the complaint is overruled, the right of plaintiff under the section to amend as of course is gone. The right of defendant to amend can be exercised only during the time that a demurrer to the answer if interposed by plaintiff is undetermined, or should the plaintiff not demur, then the defendant is concluded from amending as of course, under the section, by the expiration of the time within which such demurrer might have been interposed. When the demurrer of the plaintiff to the answer is overruled, or the time has expired within which the plaintiff might have demurred to the answer, the issues of fact are then fully joined, and the right of defendant to amend under the section, as of course, is gone.

This we think is the reasonable construction to be placed on the section. Under this construction equal rights to amend are given to both parties. Each has a right to amend while the issue of law raised by demurrer to his pleading is undetermined. Where a demurrer is not interposed, the right of plaintiff to amend is concluded by the answer of defendant, and the right of defendant is concluded by the expiration of time within which plaintiff might have demurred to the answer. This construction is likewise fair and just to all parties and works no injury or hardship, which might in many instances otherwise follow if the construction contended for by appellant that he had an absolute right to amend his answer at any time before trial was to obtain. If this were true, then by filing his amended answer on the morning of the trial, after the case had been at issue for months, and when plaintiff was prepared for trial, and ready with his witnesses to proceed, defendant could compel plaintiff either to proceed with the case under new issues he was not prepared to try, or compel him to obtain a continuance of the cause, possibly at great expense. No relief could be granted plaintiff for the loss incurred by him under such circumstances. No terms could be imposed upon the defendant, though the filing of his amended answer at that time worked a continuance, because if, as contended by appellant, he had an absolute right to file his amended answer at that time, he was entitled to do so no matter what hardship was worked to his adversary, and as his right was absolute no terms or conditions could be imposed by the court on its exercise. It was never contemplated by the section that the right of defendant to amend should be extended so as to make such results possible. If the Legislature had intended that the defendant should have the right to amend at any time after issue of fact joined, and thus extend him a larger right than was accorded plaintiff, and one which might be exercised to plaintiff's injury, it would have been very easy to have said so instead of providing that amendments should be made "before answer or demurrer filed." Appellant does not claim that any express language of the section supports his contention. He claims from the language which is used that it was the intention of the Legislature to confer the right as he asserts it. The matter, therefore, resolves itself into a question of construction, and we think that the construction placed by the trial court on the section was clearly in accord with the intention of the Legislature, namely, that the time within which defendant might amend his answer, as of course, should not extend beyond the time when the issues of fact were definitely fixed by the expiration of the time within which the plaintiff could demur to the answer, but did not. This is not only a reasonable and fair construction, but is one which creates no hardship, because, even after issue joined, the trial court under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure is authorized to permit amendments to the pleadings in furtherance of justice.

2. Now as to the contention that the court erred in refusing to grant the subsequent motion of defendant to be permitted to file this same amended answer with the pleas in abatement set up therein. This the court refused, but as it allowed the defendant thereafter to file the amended answer with all the defenses, other than these pleas contained therein, and the defendant did so, the question is limited to whether it was error to refuse leave to interpose it with these pleas included. There were two of these pleas set up in the amended answer, and they had reference to the coverture of plaintiff. In the first it was alleged that at all of the times mentioned in the complaint plaintiff was and is yet a married woman, the wife of Philo B. Tingley, who is not joined with plaintiff as a party to the action, and in the second it was alleged that plaintiff had no legal capacity to bring or maintain the action for the same reason. We do not think the court erred in denying the application of defendant to be permitted to file its amended answer containing these pleas. The application for leave to do so was not made until after the trial had commenced, and was made under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure investing the court with discretion to allow amendments to any pleadings, in furtherance of justice. These pleas which defendant sought to avail itself of by amendment were dilatory pleas—pleas in abatement—and such pleas have never been favored in law. They did not concern the merits of the action, but were interposed to defeat its maintenance. Such pleas do not commend themselves, when application is made to amend a pleading so as to assert them, with the same favor as do amendments interposing defenses which go to the merits of the controversy. This disfavor in which they were held at common law is reflected in the provisions of our Code relative to their interposition, where it is provided that, unless they are asserted at the earliest opportunity, they are waived, and the Code declares what shall be the earliest opportunity. If there is a defect in parties plaintiff apparent upon the face of the complaint, or if it appear therefrom that plaintiff has not the legal capacity to sue, the objection on either of these grounds must be taken by demurrer, or is waived. If these matters do not appear on the face of the complaint, any objection or defense as to them must be taken advantage of by answer, or is deemed to be waived. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 430, 433, 434. Now the earliest opportunity available to the defendant, as these objections could not be argued on the face of the complaint, was to take advantage of them in the original answer, which it did not do; hence they were to that extent waived. It is insisted by respondent that this failure to set up these defenses in the original answer of defendant was a waiver of them "once for all," and that defendant could not be permitted to assert them by amended answer. We are not inclined to hold to that extent. As they were, however, apparently entirely waived by failure to set them up in the original answer, the court was not required, in the face of that waiver, to permit defendant subsequently to assert them, without some showing tending to relieve it from the effect of the waiver, and nothing was offered for that purpose. There was no showing whatever upon the subject. As far as the record is concerned there is nothing to show but that when the original answer was filed the defendant knew of the facts set up in their pleas, and deliberately waived asserting them. There is nothing to show that the defendant had acquired information of the facts subsequent to the filing of the original answer, or, if it then knew of them, its failure to interpose them was inadvertent. Having waived these defenses originally, and no showing being made to the court of any facts warranting relief from such waiver, and an application to amend in the respect sought being made after the trial had commenced, it cannot be said that there was any abuse of the discretion of the court in denying defendant's application to amend.

3. The next point made is that the court erred in admitting evidence in support of the claim of plaintiff for exemplary damages. In this regard it is insisted that the allegations of the complaint were not sufficient to support a claim for damages of that character, because there is no distinct averment of express malice—malice in fact—influencing defendant in making the publication. It is alleged, however, in the complaint that the defendant "wickedly and maliciously, and with intent and design to injure, disgrace, and defame plaintiff, and to bring her into public discredit and obloquy, printed and published" the article complained of, and "that said publication was false, malicious, and defamatory." We think the above allegation with reference to the character and nature of the publication, coupled with the further allegation declaratory of the purpose of the publisher in making it, amounts to more than a mere allegation of malice in law—a wrongful act done intentionally without just cause or excuse—which is essential to support every action for libel. The allegation that the publication was "wickedly" and "maliciously" made by defendant with "intent and design" to injure the reputation of plaintiff by the publication of the defamatory matter concerning her charges a malevolent disposition of mind towards plaintiff, inspiring and actuating the publication. It clearly declares an actual intent to defame amounting to malice in fact, which furnishes a basis for the imposition of exemplary damages as contradistinguished from malice in law, which will support a verdict for compensatory damages only. But, in addition to this, while it is the rule in this state that exemplary damages for libel can only be recovered on proof of malice in fact, such malice may be either actual or presumed, and may be proven by the article published itself. The article complained of by plaintiff is set forth fully in the complaint and is libelous per se. It imputes to the plaintiff fraudulent conduct, acts of cruelty, gross immoralities, and dishonest practices, which, if true, would bring her into public contempt and disgrace. When such a publication actionable per se, is set forth in the complaint, under the rule obtaining in this state it is not necessary to charge that the publication was actuated by malice in fact on the part of the publisher. Where the publication is libelous per se, the law presumes malice in fact in its publication, and, in the absence of evidence on the part of the defendant rebutting this presumed malice, plaintiff is entitled to an award of exemplary damages. In this regard it is said by this court: "Exemplary damages may be recovered when malice on the part of the defendant is established as a fact, and by the express provisions of section 3294 of the Civil Code this malice may be 'actual or presumed.' We assume that the word 'actual,' as used in this section of the Code, means 'express.' In criminal law malice is an element of murder, and this malice may be either express or implied. It is implied when no considerable provocation for the killing appears, or when the circumstances of the killing show an abandoned and malignant heart. We are inclined to believe that the presumed malice of section 3294 closely assimilates to the implied malice of the criminal law. It is an inference of fact to be drawn from the libelous character of the publication; and, if the article is libelous per se, we see no reason why the law should not declare that upon its introduction in evidence a prima facie case of malice in fact is established; for, even though it be presumed malice, it is malice in fact, and has all the dignity and gravity of express or actual malice, proven aliunde. We conclude that presumed malice is equally a question of fact with actual malice, and upon being established equally forms the foundation for the recovery of exemplary damages." Childers v. San José Mercury P. & P. Co., 105 Cal. 284, 38 Pac. 903, 45 Am. St. Rep. 40; Taylor v. Hearst, 107 Cal. 262, 40 Pac. 392. Certainly under these authorities the allegations in the complaint were sufficient to warrant the introduction of evidence on the part of plaintiff to prove malice in fact, either actual or presumed, as a basis for an award of exemplary damages. The evidence admitted over defendant's objection were publications by defendant of a number of other articles relative to plaintiff of the same character as the article set forth in the complaint, and made prior and subsequent to its publication, and we are satisfied they were properly admitted.

4. It is contended that the court erred in prohibiting cross-examination of plaintiff as to her family ties, past history, and occupation; also as to public controversies engaged in by her with certain ministers involving the relative merits of theosophy and christianity; also concerning attacks made on her and the institution of which she was the official head, in newspapers other than that of defendant, and prior to the publication of the articles sued on; and relative to habeas corpus proceedings involving the right to the custody of two minor children who were in the institution at Point Loma under the supervision of plaintiff. There was no error committed by the court in its rulings in this respect. The plaintiff testified on her examination in chief simply that she was the official head of the Universal Brotherhood, residing at the Homestead at Point Loma, that she had a very large acquaintance and correspondence with persons throughout the United States and in foreign countries, and that she suffered very much mentally in consequence of the article published by defendant. It is quite apparent from this statement of her testimony on the direct examination that there was not even a remote reference made in it to any of the matters to which the cross-examination was directed. But it is said by appellant that, because the plaintiff testified that she suffered greatly mentally by the publication of the defamatory matter concerning her, this opened the door for inquiry by the defendant into her capacity for suffering and the sources whence the same came. The "sources whence the same came" have reference to the litigation, public controversies, and newspaper articles, other than the publication of defendant, concerning her engagement in, and knowledge of, which defendant sought to make inquires of plaintiff. Under no theory could any inquiry or evidence concerning them be permissible or admissible. Certainly the defendant in the presentation of its defense could not have introduced evidence upon these matters in mitigation of damages or for any other purpose. Such an offer could only be supported and sustained upon the theory that defendant had a right to show that, notwithstanding the publication made by it was libelous and otherwise calculated to cause mental anguish to plaintiff, still that she had been so involved in litigation and public controversies, and been so greatly libeled by other articles pubished in newspapers, that thereby her capacity for mental suffering had been so exhausted or repleted that when defendant made its libelous contribution the plaintiff could not have been affected by it, or if such capacity had not been exhausted that the jury by some psychological standard, not suggested by appellant, could measure the extent of the suffering of plaintiff by the libelous article of defendant, distinct from her suffering by reason of these other matters and libels, and make its award against defendant accordingly. In all the law relative to libel—text-book or decision—no authority is cited in support of the claim of defendant, and obviously none could be.

Neither was the defendant entitled to examine plaintiff as to her family ties, past history, and past occupation in aid of the same asserted purpose—to throw light upon her susceptibility to mental suffering. Certainly if the defendant did not have the right to cross-examine her as to these matters for that particular purpose, it had no right to examine her as to them at all, because plaintiff had not testified on any of these subjects in her direct examination. She had not testified why she had suffered greatly from the article published by defendant, nor testified that it was intensified because of her family ties, nor on account of her past or present mode of living or occupation. It is true that in Cahill v. Murphy, 94 Cal. 29, 30 Pac. 195, 28 Am. St. Rep. 88, cited by appellant, it is held that in an action of slander a married woman might testify to the number and respective ages of her children for the purpose of showing increased mental suffering by reason of the fact that the members of her family would suffer on account of the disgrace visited upon her by the slanderous charge, and as bearing on her right to enhanced damages therefor. But, as plaintiff did not testify as to any family ties on direct examination, the case cited furnished no authority for defendant to go into the subject on cross-examination. Neither did she testify as to her past history or past occupation. No such testimony would have been admitted on her part on any theory. She could not have related it for the purpose of showing that she was more sensitive to attack in newspapers and suffered greater mental anguish from them than the ordinary woman, and in the absence not only of any testimony by her on these subjects, but likewise the absence of any right on her part to offer it, certainly the defendant was not warranted in cross-examining her for the purpose of ascertaining it. As to the broad proposition that these inquiries were proper as bearing on the susceptibility of plaintiff to mental suffering, we think it absolutely untenable. We are not now considering the question of the right of a defendant to show the general reputation of a person suing to recover damages for libel, or his general bad reputation with reference to particular traits involved in the alleged libel. It is admitted that general bad character may be shown for the purpose of decreasing the damages, or entirely defeating their recovery. The inquiries and questions here, however, do not go to the subject of general reputation as bearing on the question of damages, but are directed toward developing the past history of the plaintiff, as a history, for the purpose of showing the degree of her susceptibility to suffering from the alleged libel, as one of the elements to be considered by the jury in support of her claim for damages. The theory of the defendant appears to be that, because a plaintiff testifies that a libelous article has caused him great mental suffering, the whole course of his past life—its entire history—is thereby subject to investigation; that the defendant may proceed to develop on cross-examination his whole career from infancy to the date of the alleged libel; inquire into the extent of his education, the environments of his youth and age, his habits, predilections, vocation, natural and moral instincts, his views upon religious, social, moral, or ethical questions, in fact, investigate his physical, social, and moral life for the purpose of having the jury determine to what extent he was capable of or susceptible to mental suffering from a given libelous publication. We have examined all the authorities which counsel for appellant have cited in support of this theory, and find not one which gives it the slightest countenance. They deal with the right to show general reputation. None of them sanction, or suggest even, the right to inquire into the past history of the plaintiff for the purpose of enlightening the jury as to her susceptibility to mental suffering. As to such susceptibility the question for the jury in this, as in any other similar case, is whether such a libelous publication as is complained of was such as would naturally occasion mental suffering to an ordinary person occupying the same position as plaintiff did at the time the libelous article was published. Individuals are of different temperaments, emotions, and susceptibilities. Whether one under given circumstances would be more susceptible to mental pain than another is purely a metaphysical question. In the administration of human justice there exist no psychological scales whereby capacity for mental pain can be measured. A life history itself could furnish no criterion, for a history which in one would render him acutely susceptible to mental suffering from defamatory accusation would with another produce no such result. The law will not permit the defendant, upon the theory of determining his susceptibility to suffering, to go into the life history of a plaintiff and present it in detail before a jury. Capacity for mental suffering cannot be determined from such a detailed history. It is too indefinite and uncertain; there are no scales of justice capable of measuring it, and practically it can only be determined by the jury from a consideration of the susceptibility, in general, of the average person to mental suffering.

5. It was not error for the court to admit evidence of the value of the property of defendant. Evidence of that character is admissible where exemplary damages are claimed, and we do not understand the rule is any different whether the defendant is a corporation or an individual. Barclay v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 5, 15 Pac. 307, 5 Am. St. Rep. 413; Greenberg v. Western Turf Ass'n, 140 Cal. 358, 73 Pac. 1050. We do not understand appellant to seriously question this rule, but only to insist that under the pleadings proof of exemplary damages were inadmissible. As we have already disposed of this point adversely to that contention, nothing need further be said on the subject.

6. Neither was it error to deny appellant the right insisted on of showing that certain matter derogatory to plaintiff was eliminated by the city editor of defendant from the article prepared by the reporter before its publication. The reporter testified that the matter eliminated from his report of the interview with Mrs. Leavitt reflected on the plaintiff and was derogatory of her. We think this was as far as appellant was entitled to go. The reporter testified to his entire interview with Mrs. Leavitt, upon whose statement the article was prepared, so the jury had the benefit of all she had to say relative to plaintiff, and could therefore judge of what was left out. Neither do we think that slanderous portions of a particular article which are eliminated before the article is published are ever admissible on the question of malice. It does not tend to show a want of malice that the publisher did not charge, in a slanderous article, as much derogatory matter as the article before publication originally contained.

7. It is claimed that there was prejudicial misconduct on the part of the attorney for plaintiff, and error committed by the court in rebuking counsel for defendant. This is predicated on proceedings occurring during the trial. On Monday, December 22, 1902, at 10 a. m., following an adjournment of court to that date and hour, counsel and the jury being present, and the further trial of the cause being about to proceed, one of the counsel for plaintiff, Mr. Andrews, stated to the court that he desired to call the attention of the court to a partial report in the Los Angeles Times of proceedings supposed to have occurred during the session of the court on the preceding Saturday, and in that behalf stated that accommodations in court had been provided for the reporters of the various papers, including the Times' correspondent, and that while no objection could be conceived of their right to report the testimony which had been submitted to the jury by the court, he considered that they had transcended the bounds of propriety when they published matter which had not been read to the jury or which would probably be excluded by the court should it be presented; that without reading the publication he desired to call the attention of the court to part of the report in the Los Angeles Times, and to request the court to take such steps in the matter as it deemed appropriate under the circumstances. Counsel for defendant objected to the court taking up the matter at that time as not a proper proceeding; that if any offense had been committed it was not committed in the presence of the court, and the Code provided, under such circumstances, a method for presentation of the matter to the court, which was not being pursued. The court agreed with counsel for defendant, and suggested that if the counsel for plaintiff wished to pursue the matter he would give them an opportunity to present it during the noon recess; that he did not think it proper to take it up in the presence of the jury. Counsel for plaintiff then stated that he presented the matter, not to call the attention of the jury to the publication, but to request that the jury be interrogated as to whether or not they had read the publication, to ascertain if it has had the effect on the jury which he believed "was intended by the defendant." Exception was taken to these remarks by counsel for defendant as constituting misconduct. The court thereupon promptly instructed the jury that they were not to heed any remarks of counsel, nor any statements or expressions of belief as to any matter which might transpire on the trial outside of the courtroom; not to be influenced in the least degree by any remarks which counsel may make in argument, or by way of suggestion, or in any other way. Subsequently, during argument upon the right to interrogate the jury as to whether they had read the article purported to have been published, and in response to the objection of the attorneys for defendant that it was not proper to interrogate them as to whether they had violated their duty or not, counsel for plaintiff replied that he had not assumed any juryman had violated his duty; that he had no thought of that kind, but he simply "wanted to know whether or not defendant had succeeded in getting to the jury information that ought not to go to it." The jurors were then, by permission of the court, interrogated as to whether they had seen the published report referred to, and declared that they had not. After the first juror had been interrogated and had answered, Mr. Shortridge, one of the counsel for defendant, objected to the whole proceeding, and specially objected to the conduct of counsel "as misconduct which is calculated to be and is prejudicial to defendant and known to counsel to be improper." At the conclusion of his objection the court stated to him: "That is not a remark you should make, Mr. Shortridge. It is improper language." This statement of the proceedings presents the points made by appellant.

As to the rebuke of counsel by the court. It is couched in courteous language, and was warranted by the improper statement of counsel for defendant that the attorneys for plaintiff knew that they were guilty of misconduct in the proceeding they were taking. It is reprehensible for an attorney to pursue a course before a court with the knowledge that it is misconduct on his part to do so. There is no claim made here, and from the record none could be, but that counsel for plaintiff was proceeding in good faith, and with the sanction of the court, to ascertain solely whether the jurors had read the article in question; and, while the counsel for defendant had a right to object that their action in that regard constituted misconduct, he had no right to charge them with knowledge that the course they were pursuing was an improper one. In the heat of forensic controversy, arguments and objections made by the most courteous attorneys to meet points or rulings suddenly presented may unwittingly contain language or expressions which they would not contain if more deliberately presented. This probably was the case at bar, but this could only furnish an excuse for the use of the language. It could not affect the right of a court to rebuke counsel for indulging in it.

Now as to prejudicial misconduct on the part of counsel for plaintiff. This is based on the remarks of counsel in discussing the action to be taken by the court and the right of plaintiff to interrogate the jury on the publication. It is claimed that these remarks amounted to a statement that defendant was seeking to indirectly and improperly influence the jury through illegitimate channels, and that such remarks were calculated to and naturally did prejudice the jury against the defendant. Undoubtedly when conduct upon the part of counsel produces this result, or naturally or reasonably tends to do so, it will constitute misconduct warranting a new trial. The mere fact, however, that the action of counsel is improper will not suffice. It rarely occurs in any case, which is of moment and sharply contested, that counsel on both sides in their zeal and partisan devotion to their clients do not indulge in arguments, remarks, insinuations, or suggestions which find neither support in, nor are referable or applicable to, the testimony, or warranted by any fair theory upon which the case is being presented. If such impropriety of counsel always afforded ground for a new trial, there would be little prospect of any litigation becoming finally determined. It is only when the conduct of counsel consists of a willful or persistent effort to place before a jury clearly incompetent evidence, or the statements or remarks of counsel are of such a character as to manifest a design on his part to awake the resentment of the jury, to excite their prejudices or passions against the opposite party, or to enlist their sympathies in favor of his client or against the cause of his adversary, and the instructions of the court to the jury to disregard such offered evidence, or objectionable remarks of counsel, could not serve to remove the effect or cure the evil, that prejudicial error is committed. It is only in extreme cases that the court, when acting promptly and speaking clearly and directly on the subject, cannot, by instructing the jury to disregard such matters, correct the impropriety of the act of counsel and remove any effect his conduct or remarks would otherwise have. Conceding, as it must be conceded, that it was improper for counsel for plaintiff in addressing himself to the publication to have stated in the presence of the jury his belief as to the intention of defendant relative to it, or that it was the purpose of counsel to ascertain whether defendant had succeeded in getting information to the jury which should not go to it, still these remarks did not constitute that degree of impropriety that its effect must have been so indelibly impressed on the minds of the jury that the instruction of the court to disregard them was ineffectual. The publication had not been read by any members of the jury, nor were its contents declared to them during the proceeding relative to it; counsel in fact disclaiming any intention of doing so. No statement of fact concerning it was made by counsel. He stated only his purpose in calling the attention of the court to it, and expressed his opinion as to the object of the defendant in publishing it. There was nothing in the remarks of counsel so improper that the prompt action of the court in directing the jury not to heed or be influenced in any degree by them did not remove the effect, if any, which in the absence of such instructions might be claimed to have been prejudicial.

8. It is claimed that the court erred in excluding evidence offered by defendant as to the treatment of Mrs. Neirsheimer at the institution of plaintiff at Point Loma. She is mentioned in the published article complained of. The evidence was offered by defendant, and error in its exclusion is predicated, upon the theory that the answer pleaded justification of the alleged libel relative to the treatment of Mrs. Neirsheimer by plaintiff. But it is clearly apparent from an examination of the answer that no such plea was made. If anything, there was an attempt to set up a plea in mitigation as to this charge in the published article. The answer stating a separate defense in three subdivisions set forth that "defendant for further answer to plaintiff's complaint in mitigation for the publication of the article complained of alleges." In subdivision 2 the facts relative to Mrs. Neirsheimer are stated, being in effect that before the publication of said article her husband, an officer of the Universal Brotherhood residing at Point Loma Homestead, was under the influence and domination of the plaintiff; that Mrs. Neirsheimer was not a believer in the doctrines taught and the practices indulged in by said plaintiff and her said husband, and that Mrs. Neirsheimer, through the influence of plaintiff, was cut off from the usual and ordinary association and communication with her husband, was not allowed to eat at the same table with him, and that such was the husband's infatuation with the teaching and practices of plaintiff at said Homestead that he informed his wife that if she did not accept his beliefs and obey his orders he would drive her out in the world alone; that on account of the interference and influence of plaintiff over the husband Mrs. Neirsheimer saw him only on such occasions as pleased him to be seen by her; that she was falsely reported by plaintiff and Neirsheimer and his friends to be crazy and dangerous, and was secretly watched and spied on and accused of lying and duplicity; that other members of the Universal Brotherhood were by plaintiff, or at her instance, warned against having anything to do with Mrs. Neirsheimer. Then immediately follows this allegation: "That the foregoing facts before the publication of said article by the defendant had been communicated by said Mrs. Neirsheimer and others to divers and sundry persons in the city of San Diego, and that the same had become and were matters of public notoriety in said city of San Diego." The answer then proceeds in subdivision 3 to specifically set forth other charges made in the article published and pleaded in justification of their truth, but nothing is said as to the charge concerning Mrs. Neirsheimer.

In subdivision 2 of the answer just referred to charging the facts relative to Mrs. Neirsheimer there is no allegation that the matters charged in the libel were true. And from an examination of the facts alleged in the subdivision of the answer referred to it is apparent that they do not constitute a plea in justification. The sting of the libel relative to Mrs. Neirsheimer in the article published was that she was by plaintiff forcibly separated from her husband, who was in the clutches of plaintiff and was not allowed to speak to him; that she was forced to live alone in a little tent in the grounds that surrounded the crazy institution. The facts stated do not meet the gist of the libel. They do not amount to an allegation that in truth force of any kind was used by plaintiff; that Mrs. Neirsheimer was forced by plaintiff to live apart from her husband or forced to occupy a tent upon the grounds. Several facts are alleged of offenses other than the published article charged relative to Mrs. Neirsheimer, but nothing is alleged meeting the sting of the libel. It is laid down that, in order to constitute a sufficient plea in justification "the justification must always be as broad as the charge and of the very charge attempted to be justified." Townsend on Libel and Slander, § 212. This rule is too familiar to need further citation. While it is not necessary to justify every word of a defamatory charge, still the plea must meet the substantial imputation—the sting of the charge—as an ordinary reader of the article would understand it to have been made. This plea does not do so. As it was neither alleged directly, or in effect, that the charge relative to plaintiff's treatment of Mrs. Neirsheimer was true, the plea was insufficient as a justification and must be treated, as the answer declared it was interposed, as a plea in mitigation. But as a plea in mitigation it is radically insufficient. In order to have constituted a good plea in mitigation it was necessary for the defendant to have alleged and proven that it had knowledge of the facts set up in mitigation prior to the publication of the article from reliable sources, or had ascertained them after due investigation, and believed them to be true. Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 363; Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 3, 15 Pac. 307, 5 Am. St. Rep. 413; Edwards v. San José P. & P. Society, 99 Cal. 437, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70.

Now the only allegation in this plea is that which we have quoted above, namely, that Mrs. Neirsheimer and others had communicated the facts alleged in the subdivision of the answer in question to various persons in the city of San Diego, and that they were matters of public notoriety in that city. This did not constitute a good plea in mitigation. It is simply an allegation that there were rumors of the matters set up in the plea. But an allegation of rumors, or proof of them, would not constitute or support a plea in mitigation. Wilson v. Fitch, 41 Cal. 384; Edwards v. S. J. P. & P. S., 99 Cal. 437, 34 Pac. 128, 37 Am. St. Rep. 70. It is not alleged that defendant had any knowledge on any rumored matters, or that it ever investigated them, or if so that it believed them to be true and in good faith made the publication of them. In fact, it is not even alleged by the defendant that at the time of the publication it had ever heard of the rumors. Under the authorities, in the absence of such allegations no sufficient plea in mitigation is stated. As there was no plea in justification, and no sufficient plea in mitigation, the court properly excluded the evidence bearing on the facts set up in this subdivision of the answer.

9. No error was committed in the rulings of the court as to evidence of the general reputation of plaintiff. This was offered to be proven by the depositions of three witnesses taken on behalf of defendant—two in New York and one in Boston. The testimony of the New York witnesses was properly excluded, because they were not shown to have any knowledge of the general reputation of plaintiff in the community in which she resided in New York, nor did the questions indicate what, if any, kind of reputation was being inquired into, whether general reputation for traits of honesty and integrity, or specific traits involved in the action. "Whatever form of inquiry be adopted, the witness must first show his competency to testify by saying whether or not he knows the general reputation of the person whose character is in issue in the given community, and as to the trait or qualification in question." Ency. of Evidence, vol. 3, p. 44.

The testimony of the Boston witness, also taken by deposition, was properly excluded for the same, and another, reason. This party, in 1899, went to Newburyport, Mass., presumably from Arkansas, at the request of some friends, and stopped there a few days "to make inquiry as to her [plaintiff's] career there," and talked with some 20 persons about her. Over objection of plaintiff, and as the result of this inquiry, he testified as to the reputation of plaintiff. Such testimony was clearly inadmissible. As general reputation consists of the estimation in which one is held in the community in which he resides, it can only properly and safely be testified to by a member of the community; it is the opinion of a member of a community as to the estimation in which another, who moves in it, is held generally by that community. Such member has the means of knowing what that general reputation is, and can properly speak of it. It would be extremely dangerous to enlarge the rule, so as to permit a stranger to a community, entering into it with special bias against another (as this Boston witness showed he was against plaintiff), to testify as to his opinion of the reputation of that other, based upon an interview with a limited number of persons in the community, possibly equally as prejudiced with himself. Under such circumstances it could not be said that he was testifying from his knowledge of the general reputation of the party, or that he was expressing his own opinion on the subject. He would be but stating his conclusion from the statements of others, derived from specific inquiry—a conclusion which would amount to but hearsay evidence at most. State v. Forshner, 43 N. H. 89, 80 Am. Dec. 134; Douglass v. Tousey, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 352, 20 Am. Dec. 616.

10. As to the instructions. No particular instruction of the court to the jury is specifically complained of. It is insisted, however, that the general tenor and temper of the charge of the court disclosed a bias in the mind of the court against the cause of defendant. It is not claimed that there is any particular instruction which supports this contention, but the claim is that, taking the trend of the instructions as a whole, it indicates it. We perceive no valid basis for this complaint. The instructions of the court were clear, concise, and correctly stated all the law applicable to the issues involved. It is true that in declaring what issues were before the jury the court also stated that certain other issues were not involved. Ordinarily it is sufficient for the court to instruct a jury as to the law applicable to the issues involved, but it by no means follows that a court is precluded from calling their attention to matters which are not involved, or that it is improper to do so. Excerpts in the transcript, from the argument of one of the counsel for defendant to the jury, show that he insisted that various issues were before the jury for consideration and determination, with which it is very clear they had nothing to do, and which were not involved in the case. The court instructed the jury specifically that these were not issues, and that they should not be considered in their deliberations. This was entirely proper.

11. There are other points made on this appeal, all relating to alleged errors on the part of the court in the exclusion of evidence offered on the part of defendant in support of the truth of the charges made. We do not think they merit particular discussion. We have examined them carefully, and are satisfied that the rulings of the court in rejecting the offered evidence were correct. Much of it was inadmissible, because there was no particular justification pleaded to which it could be addressed, and the rest of it was immaterial to any issue involved in the case.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

SCHOONOVER v. BIRNBAUM. (L. A. 1,661.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

PARTITION—GROUNDS FOR POSTPONING SALE.

It is not ground for postponing sale in a partition suit brought by a trustee in bankruptcy, in which it is found that he is the owner of an undivided one-half interest, that an appeal by the bankrupt is pending from the judgment for the trustee in an action against the bankrupt to recover such interest.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; J. W. Taggart, Judge.

Action by Ralph W. Schoonover, trustee of the estate of Mary E. Birnbaum, bankrupt, against James Birnbaum. Decree for plaintiff. Defendant appeals. Affirmed.

See 83 Pac. 999.

B. F. Thomas, for appellant. Ralph W. Schoonover (Richards & Carrier, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOSS, J. The plaintiff is trustee of the estate of Mary E. Birnbaum, a bankrupt. Claiming, as such trustee, to own the undivided one-half of certain premises, he brought this action for partition. The defendant appeals from an interlocutory decree directing a sale of the premises.

The allegations of the complaint were all found by the court to be true. Taken alone, they were sufficient to justify the granting of the interlocutory decree, and the only question is whether the relief sought should have been withheld by reason of further findings in favor of affirmative allegations made by the answer. The answer alleged that, prior to the making of the order adjudging Mary E. Birnbaum a bankrupt, she and defendant were the owners of the premises in question as tenants in common; that, while they were such owners and in possession, said Mary E. Birnbaum executed and recorded a declaration of homestead upon said premises; that after the adjudication of bankruptcy, and before the commencement of this action, the plaintiff, as trustee, had commenced an action against said Mary E. Birnbaum to recover the undivided one-half of said premises; that in that action the plaintiff had recovered judgment, from which Mary E. Birnbaum had appealed, her appeal being, as alleged in the answer, still pending, and not likely to be determined within two years.

It is not claimed that these allegations constituted any defense to the action. The extent of appellant's contention is that the matter set up in his answer furnished ground for postponing a sale in the present suit until the action of the plaintiff against Mary E. Birnbaum should be finally determined. But we see no ground for upholding this view. The court found that plaintiff was the owner of an undivided interest in the property, and such ownership entitled him to partition. The findings as to the former suit, and the facts upon which it was based, are not inconsistent with the finding of plaintiff's ownership. At most the title was in dispute between plaintiff and a third party. It may be remarked, incidentally, that, since the making of the interlocutory decree here appealed from, this court has affirmed the judgment in the suit between plaintiff and Mary E. Birnbaum, holding that the latter's claim of homestead was invalid because attempted to be attached to an undivided interest. Schoonover v. Birnbaum, 83 Pac. 999, 148 Cal. 548. The fact that the plaintiff's claim of title was being litigated between himself and a third party had no bearing upon his right to the relief here sought. The pendency of such other action was not available as ground for a plea in abatement, since neither parties nor subject-matter were the same in the two actions. Heilbron v. Canal Co., 75 Cal. 426, 17 Pac. 535, 7 Am. St. Rep. 183. Nor is there any force in the argument that the effect of the pending litigation would be to greatly lessen the price which the property would bring at partition sale. Whether litigation affecting the title of one co-tenant would have this effect is matter of conjecture; but, if it should have this result, all parties are fully protected without delaying the sale. No sale made would be valid until reported to and confirmed by the court (Code Civ. Proc. §§ 784 and 785), and if, for any reason, the price realized was so low as to justify the court in concluding that the sale had not been fair to all parties concerned, confirmation would be refused, and a resale ordered. Cf. Dunn v. Dunn, 137 Cal. 51, 69 Pac. 847.

In this discussion we have not noticed the allegations of defendant's answer, to the effect that, if there were a sale of the property prior to the final determination of the litigation between plaintiff and Mary E. Birnbaum, the property would bring no more than one-half of its actual value. The court made no finding on these allegations. We do not decide that, if findings had been made sustaining these averments, they would have furnished ground for postponing the sale; but, on this appeal, which is on the judgment roll alone, these allegations cannot, in the absence of a finding, be considered. The judgment will be affirmed if supported by findings actually made, and the want of a finding on an issue will be presumed, in the absense of a showing to the contrary, to be the result of a failure to offer any evidence in support of such issue. Himmelman v. Henry, 84 Cal. 104, 23 Pac. 1098; Hawes v. Clark, 84 Cal. 272, 24 Pac. 116; Winslow v. Gohransen, 88 Cal. 450, 26 Pac. 504; Dedmon v. Moffitt, 89 Cal. 211, 26 Pac. 800; Dolliver v. Dolliver, 94 Cal. 642, 30 Pac. 4; Stewart v. Hollingsworth, 129 Cal. 177, 61 Pac. 936.

The decree appealed from is affirmed.

HAMLIN v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.

(L. A. 1,781.)

1. Street Railroads—Bicyclists—Care Required.

Though a bicyclist riding along a street railway track is bound to exercise such care to protect himself from injury as is appropriate to the case, a failure to maintain a constant watch and to listen for cars approaching in either direction is not negligence as a matter of law; he being required to use reasonable care in the exercise of his faculties, and whether he did so being a question of fact.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Street Railroads, §§ 204, 255–257.]

2. Same—Collision—Contributory Negligence.

Where in daytime a bicyclist rode about a block and a half along a straight street car track, though there was ample room for him in the roadway, and was struck by a car, he was guilty of contributory negligence barring recovery, it appearing his failure to see or hear the car resulted from absolute inattention to his situation and surroundings, and through his failure to exercise any care whatever.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Street Railroads, §§ 204–209.]

3. Appeal — Review—Harmless Error—Instruction.

In an action for injury to a bicyclist struck by a street car, error in instructing as to the degree of care required of bicyclists riding along tracks was harmless, where the undisputed evidence showed he was guilty of contributory negligence, barring his right to recover.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4035, 4036.]

4. Same—Burden of Showing Prejudice.

It is incumbent upon appellant to show, not only abstract error, but prejudicial error on the facts in evidence, and to avail himself of the point that an instruction was erroneous he must bring sufficient evidence to show that upon a proper instruction there might have been a finding for him.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 4047–4051.]

5. Trial — Instructions — Matter Covered by Other Instructions.

In an action for injury to a bicyclist struck by a street car, an instruction on the degree of care required of bicyclists riding along tracks was not erroneous for failing to instruct on the last clear doctrine, where it was covered in another part of the charge.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 651–659.]

6. Street Railroads — Hypothetical Instruction.

It was not error in an action for injury to a bicyclist to instruct that if the motorman when about a block away saw the plaintiff riding between two tracks and far enough away from the track on which the car was running so that the car could have passed him safely, and that the motorman gave warning of the car's approach, and the front of the car did pass him and plaintiff then, either through excitement or otherwise, lost his balance, veered towards the car, and the rear step of the car struck him, and that the car was running on a straight track, the jury should find for defendant; there being evidence to sustain the hypothesis.

7. Trial—Refusal to Instruct—Inapplicability.

An instruction inapplicable to the facts presented is properly refused.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 596–612.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by B. W. Hamlin against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

J. H. Ardis and Hendrick & Knott, for appellant. Bicknell, Gibson, Trask, Dunn & Crutcher (Norman S. Sterry, of counsel), for respondent.

SLOSS, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by him. Plaintiff was riding on a bicycle along a street in the city of Los Angeles, when he was overtaken and struck by an electric car operated by the defendant. The verdict was in favor of the defendant, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment upon this verdict and from an order denying his motion for a new trial. The only points made by appellant are that the court erred in giving two instructions to the jury, and in refusing to give a third one upon the request of the plaintiff.

1. Complaint is made of the following instruction given by the court: "The tracks of a street railway company are in themselves a sign of danger, and one riding along or between the tracks of a street railway company must exercise his faculties of sight and hearing to watch and listen for cars going in either direction; and if, by exercising his sight and hearing, he could see or hear the car approaching either in front or behind him and he fails to see or hear such car and is injured thereby, and his failure to see or to hear the car contributes in the slightest degree or in any manner whatever directly or proximately to the collision between himself and the car, then I charge you that he cannot recover for any injuries he may sustain by such a collision." No particular criticism is directed against the first part of the instruction. The contention is that the italicized portion is erroneous, in that it requires one riding along or between the tracks of a street railroad company to exercise more than reasonable care to avoid injury, and debars him from recovery if it was at all possible for him, under any circumstances, to have seen or heard an approaching car. In other words, the instruction, in effect, requires one upon the track to maintain a constant watch in every direction, and declares that if, by maintaining such watch, and at the same time using his faculty of hearing, he could have seen or heard an approaching car in time to avoid a collision, his failure to see or hear it is as a matter of law negligence. As a statement of an abstract legal proposition, we think this instruction laid down too stringent a rule as applied to the conduct of persons proceeding along a street railroad track. Generally, whether a party has been negligent is a question of fact depending upon a consideration of all the circumstances surrounding the case. And this, like other questions of fact, is to be determined by the jury under proper instructions from the court. "The rule is that negligence is a question of fact for the jury, even when there is no conflict in the evidence, if different conclusions can be rationally drawn from the evidence." Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., 121 Cal. 227, 53 Pac. 651. There are, however, certain classes of cases which have occurred so frequently that a definite standard of care required in particular circumstances has been laid down by the courts, and in each of such classes there has been developed a rule declaring that a failure to comply with such standard is, as a matter of law, negligence. Thus it is well settled that the "railroad track of a steam railway must itself be regarded as a sign of danger, and one intending to cross must avail himself of every opportunity to look and to listen for approaching trains." Herbert v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. "His failure to so act is negligence which, notwithstanding the negligence of the defendant, the law regards as such a contributory cause on his part as will make the injury his own misfortune, and relieve the other party from liability therefor." Glascock v. Central Pacific R. R. Co., 73 Cal. 137, 14 Pac. 518. It follows that, while as an ordinary rule the question of whether a party has or has not exercised due care should be left to the jury, yet, where the standard of conduct required of persons under given circumstances is so obvious as to be applicable to all persons under such circumstances, the court may properly instruct the jury that a failure to conform to that standard is in itself negligence. Undoubtedly the rule requiring a person about to step upon the track of a steam railroad to use his faculties in order to ascertain whether a train is approaching, where the use of such faculties would have revealed to him the approach of the train, applies with equal force to a person who has entered upon and is proceeding along that track. A failure to employ such precautions while in this position of danger is negligence. Holmes v. South Pac. Coast Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 161, 31 Pac. 834.

The situation as to street railroads differs so materially that the same rule should not be applied to one proceeding along the streets of a city upon or in proximity to the tracks of a street railroad company operating thereon. From the very nature of the operation of steam railroads, it is not to be expected that a train of great weight and propelled at a high rate of speed can be readily stopped in order to avoid collision with persons who may be upon its tracks. It is essential that any one seeking to use the space occupied by the tracks should give way to trains operated thereon. But in the case of street railroads in cities the use of the streets must to a certain extent be common to both the street railroad company and other persons having occasion to use the streets. Bailey v. Market Street Cable Railway Company, 110 Cal. 320, 42 Pac. 914. It is a matter of every day observation that the portion of the street occupied by street railroad tracks is continually used, and must be used, by other vehicles and by foot passengers. While the street car has, from the necessities of the case, a right of way upon the street superior to that of others, its better right is not exclusive. Bailey v. Market Street Ry. Co., supra. No doubt one who has entered upon the portion of the street occupied by the tracks of a street railroad company, and proceeding along said tracks, is bound to exercise such care to protect himself from injury as is appropriate to the case, but it cannot, as a matter of law, be said that a failure to maintain a constant watch and to listen for cars approaching in either direction is in itself negligence. Mahoney v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 471, 42 Pac. 968. Manifestly it is impossible for one driving a vehicle along a street to look in both directions at once, and it should ordinarily be left to the jury to determine, under the circumstances of each particular case, what amount of vigilance was requisite in order to constitute due care.

But it is urged that the contrary has been definitely decided by this court in Everett v. L. A., etc., Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 105, 43 Pac. 207, 46 Pac. 889, 34 L. R. A. 350; and that the rule as there declared supports the instruction given in the case at bar. There, as here, a bicycle rider upon the railroad track was struck by a car going in the same direction. It was held that there being nothing to prevent his seeing or hearing the car, if he had looked or listened for it, he was as matter of law guilty of contributory negligence. After referring to the rule, applicable to persons crossing the tracks of steam railway companies, requiring them to "listen and look to ascertain whether danger is threatened," the court says: "With greater reason does the principle of this rule apply to one who is traveling laterally along the route of a railroad, and knows that engines will soon follow. It is negligence for a person to walk upon the track of a railroad, whether laid in the street or upon the open field, and he who deliberately does so will be presumed to assume the risk of the perils he may encounter." After citing cases in support of this rule, the court goes on to say: "Nor is there any distinction, in the application of this doctrine, between an electric or cable line operated upon the public streets of a city, and that of an ordinary steam railroad operated upon the right of way of the corporation. While the deceased had the undoubted right to a reasonable use of the public streets, notwithstanding its occupancy by defendant's tracks, he could not ignore or disregard the rights of the latter in the premises, nor neglect to take reasonable precautions for his own safety. If he chose to make use of the part of the street occupied by the tracks, it was his duty to look out for and endeavor to avoid the dangers incident to such use." In the Everett Case the court was not dealing with the correctness of an instruction purporting to declare a rule of law for the guidance of a jury. It was passing upon the question whether, on the undisputed facts shown by the evidence, it appeared so clearly that the person injured had taken no precautions whatever to insure his own safety that it could be said, as matter of law, that he had been guilty of negligence. In answering this question in the affirmative, language was used, which, while it was appropriate enough to the discussion of the particular facts presented, should not be taken as declaring a rule of law applicable to the cases of all persons proceeding along the tracks of a street railway company. This is pointed out in Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 55 Pac. 908, where McFarland, J., one of the justices participating in the decision of the Everett Case, says that "that case * * * came here upon an exception to a denial of the court below of a motion for a nonsuit, and no question was presented touching the giving or refusal of instructions." See, also, concurring opinion of Henshaw, J., in same case. In cases of this character we think the correct rule is that one riding or walking along the tracks of a street railway company must use reasonable care in the exercise of his faculties of sight and hearing to watch and listen for cars going in either direction. A failure to hear or see the car is not per se proof of negligence in all cases. Whether such exercise of the faculties as, under all the circumstances of the case, was reasonable, would have averted the injury, is a question of fact. The degree of vigilance to be exercised by the person on the track is to be determined by the jury, and not laid down as matter of law, wherever the question of contributory negligence is proper to be submitted to the jury at all.

But in the case at bar the fact that the instruction complained of went beyond the proper limits was not prejudicial to the appellant, for the reason that under any view of the law the undisputed evidence showed his conduct to be so lacking in every element of proper care for his own safety that the court would have been bound to set aside any verdict based upon a finding that he had not been guilty of contributory negligence. According to plaintiff's own testimony, he mounted his bicycle on Pasadena avenue, and started in a southerly direction along said avenue. He was riding either upon the westerly track or between the two tracks of the defendant, when a car of the defendant came up behind him and struck him, inflicting the injuries complained of. He did not remember anything that occurred after he started to ride. The accident occurred in the daytime. A witness called by plaintiff testified, and this is not contradicted by any one, that plaintiff rode about a block and a half along the track before he was struck. There was ample room for him to ride on the street, outside of the track. At the place where the accident occurred, the track was straight. As has been stated, plaintiff was riding a bicycle which, as he himself said, is "a very easy thing to turn from one point to another." All the evidence in the case, the plaintiff's as well as that introduced by the defendant, shows that the plaintiff was not aware of the approaching car till it was practically upon him. His health and hearing were good. Under these circumstances it is perfectly plain that his failure to see or hear the car must have been the result of absolute inattention to his situation and surroundings, and that he exercised no care whatever. To this phase of the case the decision in Everett v. Los Angeles Ry. Co. is applicable, and it is as true here, as it was there, that as matter of law the appellant was guilty of contributory negligence. See, also, Robards v. Indianapolis Street Ry. Co. (Ind. App.) 66 N. E. 66; Morrissey v. Bridgeport Traction Co., 35 Atl. 1126, 68 Conn. 215; Beerman v. Union R. Co., 52 Atl. 190, 24 R. I. 275; McClellan v. Chippewa V. E. Ry. Co., 85 N. W. 1018, 110 Wis. 326. On the evidence the court would have been justified in instructing the jury that appellant was guilty of negligence contributing directly to the injury. He was therefore not harmed by the action of the court in submitting this question to the jury on erroneous instructions, since there was no evidence which would have sustained a finding in his favor under the view of the law most advantageous to him. Under these circumstances, error in the instructions furnishes no ground for reversal. Green v. Ophir, etc., Co., 45 Cal. 522; In re Briswalter, 72 Cal. 109, 13 Pac. 164; Hughes v. Wheeler, 76 Cal. 230, 18 Pac. 386; Edwards v. Wagner, 121 Cal. 376, 53 Pac. 821. It is no answer to this position to say that the record does not show all the evidence given at the trial, but only so much as is necessary to present the errors assigned. It is incumbent upon the party appealing to show, not only abstract error, but error prejudicial to him upon the facts in evidence, and, to avail himself of the point that an instruction was erroneous, he must bring before the court sufficient evidence to show that, upon a proper instruction, there might have been a finding in his favor. If he does less than this, he presents for consideration a mere question of abstract error.

It is further urged that the instruction quoted is erroneous, for the reason that it deprives plaintiff of the right to recover, even though the defendant may have failed to avail itself of an opportunity to avoid the injury after having discovered the dangers of the position in which the plaintiff was. But the instructions given by the court are to be taken as a whole. The jury was fully instructed as to the law of the "last clear chance" doctrine, and the charge, read in its entirety, could not have failed to convey a full understanding of the rights of the plaintiff in this regard, if, indeed, the facts of the case were such as to make this doctrine applicable. Everett v. L. A. Ry. Co., supra.

2. The appellant also claims that the court erred in giving the following charge: "If you find from the evidence that the motorman in charge of defendant's car, when about a block away from the point of the accident, saw the plaintiff riding upon his bicycle between the inner rails of the defendant's east and west tracks, and far enough away from the track on which he was propelling his car so that his said car could have passed the said plaintiff safely, and that he gave warning of his approach, and that the front of his car did pass the plaintiff and that the plaintiff then, either through excitement or otherwise, lost his balance, veered in towards the car, and that the hind step of said car struck plaintiff and that the said car was traveling upon a straight track at the time of the accident, then I charge you, gentlemen, that your verdict must be for the defendant." There was evidence in the record, which, if believed by the jury, sustained each element of the hypothesis stated in this instruction, and, if the facts were found by the jury to be as stated, it is perfectly clear that the injury sustained was not the result of any fault of the defendant. While it is generally the better practice to merely instruct the jury as to the governing rules of law, rather than to attempt to apply these rules concretely to the various complicated states of facts that may be contended for by the respective parties, there was no error in the instruction given, and the appellant cannot have been prejudiced by it.

3. The third point relied on by the appellant is that the court erred in refusing to give the following instruction requested by him: "The court instructs the jury that, if there is no evidence to the contrary, the law presumes that the plaintiff looked and listened to ascertain whether a car was approaching him from the rear, before getting upon the defendant's street car track, if they believe from the evidence that he did get upon said track." It is not necessary to decide in this case whether there is or is not any such presumption of law. The instruction in question was properly refused because it had no application to the facts of the case here presented. All of the evidence shows that the plaintiff had been riding along or upon the track (in whichever position he was) for a block and a half before he was struck by the defendant's car. The only material question is whether he was guilty of negligence at the time of the injury. Whether he had exercised due care at the time he started to ride along the street, a block and a half back of the point of collision, is of no consequence in determining whether he was exercising due care at the time the car struck him.

The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

WOOD v. THOMPSON. (Civ. 341.)

(Court of Appeal, First District. California. March 20, 1907.)

VENUE—CONTRACTS—SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE—CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISIONS.

A suit for the specific performance of a contract to convey an interest in mining claims is not one to recover possession of, quiet title to, or enforce a lien on, realty within the Constitution, requiring such actions to be brought in the county where the realty is situated, and the superior court of a county other than that in which the claims are situated has jurisdiction.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 48, Venue, §§ 4-16.]

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John Hunt, Judge.

Action by J. P. Wood against J. A. Thompson. From an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Vincent Neale, for appellant. Devoto & Richardson, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. This action was brought in the city and county of San Francisco to compel the specific performance of a contract by defendant to convey to plaintiff an undivided one-eighth interest in certain mining claims known as "King Solomon's Mines," situated in Siskiyou county, either by the execution of a good and sufficient deed, or by a decree giving to plaintiff shares of the stock of the Fidelity Investment & Development Company, a corporation, sufficient to represent the one-eighth interest. A demurrer was sustained to the complaint, without leave to amend, upon the ground that the action should have been commenced in Siskiyou county, and that the superior court of San Francisco had no jurisdiction.

In this the court erred. The superior courts are courts of general jurisdiction, and their process extends to all parts of the state unless expressly limited by the statute or the Constitution. Our Constitution contains the following express limitation upon which the defendant relies: "All actions for the recovery of the possession of, quieting title to, or for the enforcement of liens upon real estate, shall be commenced in the county in which the real estate, or any part thereof, affected by such action or actions, is situated." The above provision, being a limitation upon the general jurisdiction of the superior courts, is to be strictly construed. It prohibits the commencement of certain enumerated actions, but its prohibition must be confined to the actions enumerated therein. Miller & Lux v. Kern Co. Land Co., 140 Cal. 132, 73 Pac. 836, 98 Am. St. Rep. 63. Measured by the above rule the prohibition does not extend to this case. The purpose of the action is not to recover possession of, quiet title to, or enforce a lien upon, "King Solomon's Mines." It is to enforce the specific performance of a contract. If the court should determine that the plaintiff is entitled to a specific performance by a conveyance of an undivided one-eighth interest, that would not of itself entitle the plaintiff to the possession of the real estate.

In Le Breton v. Superior Court, 66 Cal. 27, 4 Pac. 777, it was held that the quoted provision of the Constitution has no application to an action for the settlement of a trust in regard to real estate. In Beach v. Hodgdon, 66 Cal. 187, 5 Pac. 77, it was held that the provision did not apply to a creditors' bill to set aside a conveyance of real estate on the ground of fraud. If the superior court has jurisdiction to set aside a conveyance of land situate in another county, it certainly would have jurisdiction to compel a conveyance of such land. Nor would such action be one for the recovery of possession of real estate.

The order is reversed.

2. ACTION—NATURE—CONTRACT—TORT.

Where defendant was sued for an accounting of the proceeds of a sale of certain personal property, the action was not changed into one in tort by an allegation that defendant appropriated a part of the property to its own use.

3. TROVER AND CONVERSION—ELEMENTS—REPUDIATION OF AGENCY.

Defendant, having undertaken to sell certain property for plaintiff as his agent, returned some of the property to persons from whom it was purchased, receiving credit therefor, and placed the remainder in its own stock, so that its identity was substantially lost. Defendant thereafter sold the property as its own, without keeping any account of its transactions, though it had agreed to dispose of the property as rapidly as possible and to report the sales as they were made. Held, that defendant thereby converted the property and was liable for its value as of the date it assumed control over the same.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trover and Conversion, §§ 84, 86.]

4. PRINCIPAL AND AGENT — CONVERSION BY AGENT—ACTION FOR ACCOUNTING—DEMAND.

Where, in an action for an accounting of certain property which defendant had agreed to sell as plaintiff's agent, there was proof that defendant had repudiated the agency and converted the property to its own use, plaintiff was not required to prove a demand for the goods to sustain his right to an accounting.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 40, Principal and Agent, § 165.]

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—ACCOUNTING.

An action for an accounting is limited by Code Civ. Proc. § 343, providing that an action for relief not otherwise provided for must be commenced within four years after the cause of action shall have accrued.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, § 200.]

6. TROVER AND CONVERSION—ACTION—LIMITATIONS.

An action for conversion is governed by Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 3, requiring an action for taking, detaining, or injuring any goods or chattels to be brought within three years.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trover and Conversion, §§ 186-188.]

7. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS—EXPRESS TRUSTS—ACCOUNTING.

Where defendant received plaintiff's goods to be sold by defendant as plaintiff's agent and accounted for, defendant was a trustee of an express trust, and hence limitations did not run against defendant's obligation to account until after defendant had repudiated its agency.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Limitation of Actions, §§ 506–510.]

8. TRUSTS — ACCOUNTING — VALUE OF PROPERTY—EVIDENCE.

Where defendant received plaintiff's property for sale and account, and defendant's president testified that the fair market value of the property when so received was the same as when previously sold to plaintiff for $5,050, the evidence was sufficient to sustain a finding that the property when received by defendant was worth $4,040, under Civ.Code, §§ 2228, 2237, declaring that a trustee who wrongfully uses or disposes of trust property may, at the option of the beneficiary, be required to account for all profits so made, or to pay the value of its use, and if he disposes thereof to replace it, with its fruits, or account for its proceeds with interest.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; M. C. Sloss, Judge.

Action by F. Ernest Allsopp against the Joshua Hendy Machine Works. From a judgment for plaintiff, and from an order denying defendant a new trial and refusing to strike from the cost bill certain percentage fees, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. B. Young, for appellant. Chas. W. Slack, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. The complaint alleges that on or about June 17, 1897, the plaintiff and the defendant entered into a contract, whereby the defendant agreed to sell to the plaintiff a five-stamp mill, with certain accessories, for the sum of $5,000; that thereafter by agreement the price was increased to $5,050; that thereafter on or about the 23d day of September, A. D. 1897, the defendant offered to deliver the said property to the plaintiff, and he accepted the said offer, and thereupon he paid defendant the sum of $5,050. There is no denial of these allegations. It is further alleged that on or about October 4, 1897, the defendant agreed with the plaintiff to resell for him the said property and to account for the sales as they were made, and thereupon defendant took possession of the property for said purpose. The answer admits the agreement, but denies that the defendant took possession for the purpose of resale, but alleges that it always had possession, and that no part of the property was ever delivered to plaintiff, but had been left with defendant at the request of plaintiff. The finding of the court in that behalf was in accordance with the foregoing allegations and admissions of the answer. It is further alleged in the complaint that the defendant resold different portions of the property for sums exceeding $3,500, and appropriated to its own use the remainder of the property; that the defendant has never accounted to the plaintiff for the property or the proceeds of the sales thereof, nor has the defendant paid to the plaintiff any of the proceeds, except the sum of $3,500; and that on or about April 4, 1902, the plaintiff demanded an accounting of defendant, and the prayer is for an accounting for the property and the proceeds of the sale. The answer denies that the defendant resold any of the property for any sum in excess of $3,500, denies that it appropriated to its own use any of the property, denies that it has never accounted to the plaintiff for the property or the proceeds of the sales thereof, admits the demand for the accounting, denies its refusal to account, and alleges the payment to plaintiff of all the proceeds of the sales of the property. The finding of the court on this issue is: That the defendant resold a portion of the said property, but the defendant is unable to account for the moneys received from such resales, and that the defendant has never accounted to the plaintiff for the said property, or for the proceeds of the resales thereof. That the defendant, on or about the said 4th day of October, 1897, appropriated to its own use all of the said property, and that the value of said property at said date was and is the sum of $4,040. That the defendant has not paid to the plaintiff any of the proceeds of the resales of the property, except the sum of $3,500, paid as follows: $1,000, April 6, 1899; $1,000, August 10, 1899; $500, November 24, 1899; and $1,000, April 21, 1900." There is also a finding that the defendant failed and refused to account to plaintiff. The court also finds that the action is not barred by the statute of limitations as pleaded by defendant, and the judgment is in favor of plaintiff for the sum of $1,417.57.

The judgment is manifestly just and finds ample support in the evidence. The zeal and sincerity with which they are urged, however, are probably justification for the specific consideration of the points made by appellant. It is contended that the evidence is insufficient to justify the decision, and that said decision is against the law and the evidence. The argument is that the action is for an accounting, and the court finds the property was converted by appellant and bases its judgment upon the rule of damages for conversion, as provided in section 3336, Civ. Code; whereas, it is urged, the evidence does not justify the conclusion that the appellant appropriated the property to its own use. Both parties agree that the action is for an accounting. The gist of such an action is the failure to account. The finding that the defendant "appropriated to its own use all of the said property" is obviously broader than the allegation of the complaint "and has appropriated to its own use the remainder of the said property"; but this is immaterial, and the contention of the insufficiency of the evidence to show any conversion is of no consequence, in view of the fact that a cause of action for an accounting is sufficiently pleaded and supported by the evidence, and the allegation and finding of conversion may be disregarded as surplusage. The allegation of an appropriation of the property by the defendant was unnecessary and did not change the action into one of tort. State v. Chadwick, 10 Or. 423; Segelken v. Meyer, 94 N. Y. 473. But, as pointed out by respondent, there is abundant evidence to show—if it be deemed important—that the property was converted by appellant. The evidence satisfies the requirement of the rule laid down in Steele v. Marsicano, 102 Cal. 666, 36 Pac. 920, to the effect that, "in order to charge the defendant with the conversion of the plaintiff's goods, he must be shown to have done some act implying the exercise or assumption of title, or of a dominion over the goods, or some act inconsistent with the plaintiff's right of ownership, or in the repudiation of such right." It is not apparent what other act could have been done by appellant in respect to the property that would more fully carry with it the implication of the assumption of title to and dominion over the property, or repudiation of any right of respondent in and to the ownership of said property. The defendant having undertaken as an agent to sell the property for plaintiff, having returned some of the property to the persons from whom it was purchased and receiving credit therefor, and having placed the remainder with its own stock so that its identity was substantially lost, and having used and sold the property as its own without keeping any account of its transactions is hardly in a position to urge that it should not be held liable for the value of the machinery as of the date of October 4, 1897, when it agreed in writing to dispose of the machinery as rapidly as possible and report the sales as they were made. As an agent, appellant was charged with the duty of acting in the utmost good faith for the promotion of the interests of the principal. Its conduct was hardly compatible with the requirements of the elemental principles of its trust and the canons of honorable dealing. Section 2228, Civ. Code, provides that: "In all matters connected with his trust, a trustee is bound to act in the highest good faith toward his beneficiary and may not obtain any advantage therein over the latter by the slightest misrepresentation, concealment, threat, or adverse pressure of any kind." And the doctrine is universally recognized that "the paramount and vital principle of all agencies is good faith, for without it the relation of principal and agent could not very well exist. So sedulously is this principle guarded that all departures from it are esteemed frauds upon the confidence bestowed." 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1071. For further illustrations of the same doctrine we may cite: Sterling v. Smith, 97 Cal. 343, 32 Pac. 320; San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 53 Pac. 410; Calmon v. Sarraille, 142 Cal. 638, 76 Pac. 486; Burke v. Bours, 92 Cal. 108, 28 Pac. 57.

In view of the foregoing, the trial court, with some justification at least, might have charged the defendant with the full price paid for the machinery by the plaintiff; but assuredly, the corporation could not expect a more generous concession than the reduction from the price of 20 per cent. which was made by the court. The defendant, being unable to account for the property and its proceeds, could not complain at the action of the court in taking $4,040 as the amount due October 4, 1897, and, according to the well-settled rule of partial payments, computing interest and applying the payments made, and thus determining that the indebtedness of defendant was as found in the judgment. Estate of Den, 35 Cal. 692; 16 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1036.

Appellant's contention that a demand for the delivery of the property was required is likewise destitute of any merit. The appellant answers its own contention by asserting that "this is not an action for conversion, but one for an accounting." But even if it were an action for conversion, under the facts and circumstances of the case no demand would be required. This is apparent from the cases cited by appellant: Wood v. McDonald, 66 Cal. 547, 6 Pac. 452; Remy v. Olds, 88 Cal. 537, 26 Pac. 355; Merrill v. Merrill, 95 Cal. 334, 30 Pac. 542. In the Wood Case it is said: "Proof of any circumstance which would satisfy a jury that a demand would be unavailing, as a refusal by defendant to listen to one, or a statement in advance that he will not deliver, will be sufficient to excuse proof of a demand. If there is proof that defendant had converted the property before or independent of the demand, such conversion—the material matter—will render the defendant liable." "If there is an actual conversion, no demand need be made." Cooley on Torts, p. 530. "Where, however, the agent has been guilty of a breach of duty, as where he fails to render an account of sales, or to notify the principal of the collection of money within a reasonable time, or has converted the property to his own use, there is no necessity for demand before suit." 1 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 1092. As before seen, the action was for an accounting, and plaintiff alleged and proved that he demanded that an account be made to him by defendant and its failure and refusal to do so. In that behalf he satisfied the requirements of the law. In support of its plea of the bar of the statute, appellant says: "If the facts stated in the complaint constitute a case of wrongful conversion of personal property by appellant, * * * then the claim of respondent is barred by the statute of limitations, because the conversion is found to have been committed on the 4th day of October, 1897, and his suit was instituted on the 29th day of April, 1902." But it is a sufficient answer to say that the wrong sections of the Code of Civil Procedure were pleaded by defendant, viz., section 337 and subdivision 1 of section 339. The section applicable to conversion is section 338, subd. 3. Lowe v. Ozmun, 137 Cal. 257, 70 Pac. 87, and Horton v. Jack (Cal.) 37 Pac. 652. And the section applicable to causes of action for an accounting is section 343. West v. Russell, 74 Cal. 544, 16 Pac. 392. But, again, there was an express trust created by the transaction between the parties, and the statute of limitations would not begin to run until there was brought home to plaintiff knowledge of the repudiation of the trust or the violation of its terms on the part of defendant. In San Pedro Lumber Co. v. Reynolds, 121 Cal. 74, 53 Pac. 410, it is said: "The statute of limitations cannot be successfully invoked. Reynolds was acting in a fiduciary capacity. Such of his acts as resulted in loss to the corporation were concealed breaches of trust. The statute of limitations would not begin to run in his favor, so as to enable him to escape the results of an accounting, until after knowledge by his principal of his derelictions. In this case the accounting was promptly demanded after discovery." And likewise it may be said here that plaintiff acted speedily and without unnecessary delay. In 19 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, p. 187, it is declared: "As long as the relation of principal and agent continues, there is a privity between the parties, and there is nothing to set the statute in operation as to claims and accounts between them. The position of the agent is that of a trustee, and claims against him are governed by a rule similar to that controlling trustees. The assertion by the agent of an adverse right, or his failure to discharge a duty to his principal arising out of his agency, does not set the statute in motion until called to the attention of the principal, or until he knows, or with reasonable diligence might have known, thereof." In 2 Perry on Trusts, § 863, the rule is stated as follows: "As between trustee and cestui que trust, in the case of an express trust, the statute of limitations has no application, and no length of time is a bar. Against an express and continuing trust time does not run until repudiation or adverse possession by the trustee and knowledge thereof on the part of the cestui. * * * The trustee must clearly repudiate the trust and assume an adverse position, with notice to the cestui, before the statute can begin to run." But the principle is too well established to need further citation of authorities.

In its closing brief, appellant seems to have abandoned all the contentions of the opening brief, and to have planted itself firmly upon the proposition that "there is no evidence to support finding 6 of the trial court, 'that the value of the said property at the last-mentioned date (October, 1897) was and is the sum of $4,040'; nor the judgment of said court that respondent recover from appellant a sum of $1,417.57, or any sum." The argument in which appellant indulges is more curious than convincing. Upon general considerations of equity it would seem that appellant should be estopped from contending that the property was worth less than $5,050, the amount paid for it by respondent. But there is evidence to sustain the finding within the rule prescribed by section 2237, Civ. Code, that "a trustee who uses or disposes of the trust property contrary to section 2229 may, at the option of the beneficiary, be required to account for all profits so made, or to pay the value of its use, and, if he disposed thereof, to replace it, with its fruits, or to account for its proceeds with interest." The testimony of the president of the corporation is sufficient support for the finding of the court. He said that the machinery was sold to Mr. Allsopp for the fair market value, and, when asked if that was not the value at the time it was taken back for resale, his answer was: "I could not say positively. I don't know as there was any particular difference. I don't think there was any appreciable difference." There are other circumstances justifying the court's conclusion, but the foregoing is sufficient.

In addition to the appeal from the judgment and order denying the motion for a new trial, there is also an appeal from an order of the court refusing to strike from the cost bill the amount of $20.88, percentage allowed under an act of the Legislature entitled "An act to regulate fees in the city and county of San Francisco." St. 1865–66, p. 66, c. 91. In the recent case of Doyle v. Eschen et al., we had occasion to consider the question whether the provision involved herein is still in force, and we reached the conclusion that it had not been repealed. We see no reason to modify the views therein expressed.

The judgment and orders are affirmed.

AMESTOY ESTATE CO. et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (Civ. 333.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 26, 1907.)

1. Appeal—Review—Scope—Dismissal.

Where a demurrer was sustained to the complaint, and judgment of dismissal was entered thereon upon the merits, the appeal from the judgment involves the action of the court in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, §§ 3450–3452; vol. 2, Appeal and Error, § 420.]

2. Judgment — Equitable Relief — Limitations.

Code Civ. Proc. § 473, relating to the relief from judgments by a court of equity, and providing that the application must be made within a reasonable time, not exceeding six months, an action to set aside a judgment brought a year after the judgment was rendered does not come within the statute.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 363-366.]

3. SAME—EXCUSE FOR FAILURE TO INTERPOSE DEFENSE—IGNORANCE OF FACTS.

Plaintiff began an action against defendant, and served upon it a copy of the complaint, showing that plaintiff claimed the right to the flow in a water course, which comprehended the right to have the flow continue, and was a servitude upon the land of defendant and an interest affecting its real property. An issue in relation thereto was tendered, and the claim was one of the matters examined and determined in the action. Held, that the judgment cannot be set aside on the ground that plaintiff's claim was fraudulent, since this was an issue tendered by the complaint, and not extrinsic or collateral to the questions examined and determined in the action.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 785.]

4. SAME—NEGLIGENCE OF COUNSEL.

A judgment rendered against defendant because it failed to appear and defend in the action cannot be set aside, on the ground that it acted on the advice of counsel, where there was no mistake of fact upon its part, and the selection of the counsel was not induced by any act of plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 821-827.]

5. SAME—COLLATERAL ATTACK.

Where a judgment rendered against plaintiff in a former action appears to be one ordered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, presumably upon competent evidence, in a proceeding to set aside the judgment, plaintiff cannot question the sufficiency of the evidence to warrant the judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, § 948.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by the Amestoy Estate Company against the City of Los Angeles. From a judgment sustaining a demurrer to the complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. M. Widney, for appellants. W. B. Mathews, H. T. Lee, and J. R. Scott, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action to vacate a judgment of the superior court and to enjoin defendant from asserting rights thereunder. The complaint alleges ownership by plaintiff of a large ranch in Los Angeles county, traversed by the Los Angeles river, a nonnavigable stream; that said lands are riparian to said stream, and the waters thereof are necessary for the irrigation of said lands, and have been so used for more than 50 years; that heretofore, in April, 1903, while plaintiff was so seised, the defendant commenced an action against plaintiff in the superior court of Los Angeles county to determine conflicting interests as to such water and its use. That service of summons was duly made upon plaintiff in June following; that after said service plaintiff correctly and fully stated all the facts involved in said litigation to its attorney, who advised it that it could not successfully defend against said action, and against further expense or litigation in reference thereto; that plaintiff, acting upon such advice, permitted its default to be entered, and on September 11, 1903, judgment was ordered by the court in accordance with the prayer of the complaint and duly entered, by which it was adjudged that the city was the owner in fee of the paramount right to the use of all of the water of said river so far as may be reasonably necessary from time to time to give an ample supply of water for the use of its inhabitants, and for all municipal and public uses; and that the rights of the plaintiff herein were subordinate to the rights of said city. It is alleged that this judgment was ordered upon an unverified complaint, and no evidence was offered additional in its support. Plaintiff in the complaint under consideration alleges, further, that the claim of right asserted by said city in its complaint was unfounded; that the said city possessed no rights to said water, and it well knew such fact and falsely stated that it had title thereto, well knowing that plaintiff herein was the owner of said lands and the riparian rights incident thereto; that plaintiff herein did not discover the mistake and error of its attorney for more than a year after the entry of the judgment aforesaid, nor until January, 1905; that, had plaintiff known of the error and mistake of its counsel, it would have appeared and defended said action and by its answer presented a good and complete defense upon the merits. The complaint further alleges that the riparian rights of the plaintiff are of large value, and without which the value of its lands is destroyed. A general demurrer of the city to the complaint was sustained by the court, and, the plaintiff not desiring to further amend, judgment was entered dismissing the plaintiff's action. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The judgment of dismissal, not being for one of the causes provided in section 581, Code Civ. Proc., must be held a judgment upon the merits under section 582; and this appeal therefore involves the action of the court in sustaining the demurrer of the defendant to the complaint. The facts admitted by the demurrer would entitle plaintiff to relief under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., had application been made to the court within a reasonable time, not exceeding six months. Parsons v. Weis, 144 Cal. 410, 77 Pac. 1007; Douglass v. Todd, 96 Cal. 657, 31 Pac. 623, 31 Am. St. Rep. 247. "When the time within which a motion may be made has expired, and no laches or want of diligence is imputable to the party asking relief, there is nothing in reason or propriety preventing the interference of equity." Brackett v. Banegas, 116 Cal. 285, 48 Pac. 90, 58 Am. St. Rep. 164. But there is a marked distinction between the powers of the court in the first instance, wherein discretion is given to the court to relieve a party from a mistake, fraud, or from excusable neglect, under section 473, Code Civ. Proc., and those powers exercised by a court of equity after the lapse of such time when proceedings are instituted by an original bill to vacate the judgment of another court. That a former judgment may be set aside by a court of equity on the ground of fraud, it must be fraud extrinsic or collateral to the questions examined and determined in the action. United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93; Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 27 Pac. 537, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159; Langdon v. Blackburn, 109 Cal. 26, 41 Pac. 814; Hanley v. Hanley, 114 Cal. 692, 46 Pac. 736.

When the city instituted its original action against plaintiff and served upon it a copy of the complaint, plaintiff had notice of the pendency of the action, was by the service required to appear and answer, and by the Code required to set up any claim of right which it possessed to the property described in the complaint. There is no suggestion in the complaint that plaintiff was prevented by any act of the defendant from appearing and making a proper defense. Conceding the false and fraudulent character of the city's claim, an issue in relation thereto was tendered by the complaint, and such claim was one of the questions examined and determined in the action. Such claim was in no sense collateral. The judgment is conclusive, unless it is shown that the jurisdiction of the court has been imposed upon, or that the prevailing party, by some extrinsic or collateral fraud, has prevented a fair submission of the controversy. Fealey v. Fealy, 104 Cal. 360, 38 Pac. 49, 43 Am. St. Rep. 111. There was no concealment or imposition upon the court. The claim asserted by the city may have been one which the plaintiff herein could have successfully resisted; but it was nevertheless a claim, and under section 738, Code Civ. Proc., an action may be brought by any person against another who claims an interest in real property adverse to him. The claim of the city was to the flow in a water course. This comprehends the right to have such flow continue in such water course over the lands affected, and such right claimed was a servitude upon the land of the plaintiff herein, and, to the extent of the easement, an interest claimed by the city affecting real property described in the complaint. Standart v. Round Valley Water Co., 77 Cal. 399, 19 Pac. 689.

The selection of the attorney upon whose advice plaintiff acted was not induced by any act of the city. It is apparent from plaintiff's complaint that there was no mistake of fact upon its part. It knew of the claim of the city to the water in the river, knew it was a nonnavigable stream, and knew that it owned the land over which the water course extended and the incidental riparian rights appurtenant to such land. Its only mistake, if any, was in accepting the opinion of its attorney that, as a matter of law, the claim of right upon the part of the city was superior to that of the plaintiff as a riparian owner. "It is undoubtedly the true rule that neither the ignorance, the blunders, nor the misapprehension of counsel, not occasioned by the adverse party, is any ground for vacating a judgment or decree." Freeman on Judgments, § 508; Black on Judgments, § 375. The facts involved in Bacon v. Bacon, 89 Pac. 317, were such as justified the conclusion that the plaintiff did not know of her own rights, which clearly distinguishes that case from the one under consideration.

A different rule obtains when the proceedings are under section 473, Code Civ. Proc. That section is broad enough to justify the action of the court in relieving a party from a mistake of law upon the part of his attorney when from reliance thereon he was prevented from making a defense. Douglass v. Todd, supra. The broad provisions of that section are available, however, only to those seeking relief thereunder. It cannot be construed as an attempt to broaden the powers of a court of equity in determining its jurisdiction in an independent proceeding. The reason for applying different rules is obvious. In the one case, the motion is directed to the discretion of a trial court within a limited time and before the judgment has become final; in the other, it is the exercise of equitable powers by an independent court based upon established rules. The restricted power of equity is founded upon the proposition that the verity of a judgment should under all circumstances be maintained when the attack is only upon those matters considered by the court upon the original hearing, without which rule there would be no end to litigation, and no permanent rights could be established by judgments and decrees.

It is alleged in the complaint, although not urged in the briefs, that the judgment was by default and on its face void as unauthorized by section 751 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Were it conceded that section 751 applies to cases other than those where unknown owners are defendants, an inspection of the judgment incorporated in the complaint develops that it was not by default, but was a judgment ordered in accordance with the prayer of the complaint, presumably upon competent evidence. In this proceeding the plaintiff cannot be heard to question the sufficiency of the evidence, presumably before the court, which was by it determined to warrant the judgment.

We find no error in the record, and the judgment is affirmed.

GOOD v. COMMON COUNCIL OF CITY OF SAN DIEGO et al. (Civ. 306.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 26, 1907.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—OFFICERS—REMOVAL.

By chapter 4, § 4, amending article 1, of the charter of San Diego, as approved by resolution of the Legislature February 3, 1905, 25 per cent. of the electors may by petition express their disapproval of the action of any municipal officer whose successor would be elected by such electors, and demand that he be sustained by a vote of confidence or retire, and the charter provides that the petition must contain a statement of the grounds on which removal is sought. A petition stated that the councilman supported a certain ordinance regulating the licensing and sale of liquors in the city of San Diego; that he voted to disregard a former petition for his recall; that he repeatedly voted to disregard petitions to refer to the vote of the people ordinances passed by the council filed in conformity to the provisions of the charter; and that he voted for a false certification of an ordinance to prevent a referendum. Held, that the petition was sufficient.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 36, Municipal Corporations, § 354.]

2. SAME—MODE OF REMOVAL—PETITION—SUFFICIENCY.

A certificate of the clerk of the city that he had compared the names on the pétition with the great register, and found the petition sufficient, was a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring the certificate to show the "result" of the clerk's examination.

3. MANDAMUS—PARTIES.

One of the petitioners may maintain an action for mandamus to compel the calling of an election.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 33, Mandamus, § 151.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS—OFFICERS—REMOVAL.

Where a petition bears the proper number of names of electors as shown by the clerks' certificate, no discretion remains with the council, but it is its duty to call an election.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Mandamus by Charles L. Good to compel the common council of the city of San Diego to order an election for the recall of J. N. Reynolds as member of such council. From a judgment awarding the writ, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Eugene Daney and E. Swift Torrance, for appellants. Luce, Sloane & Luce, for respondent. Anderson & Anderson, amici curiæ.

TAGGART, J. This is an appeal from an order and judgment of the superior court directing a writ of mandate to issue commanding the defendants to order an election for the recall and removal of Jay N. Reynolds, one of the defendants, from the office of councilman of the city of San Diego, to fix date for such election, and to make, or cause to be made, all necessary arrangements for the holding of such election.

Plaintiff was one of 105 signers of a petition presented to the common council of the city of San Diego demanding that an election be called for the removal of said defendant Jay N. Reynolds from the office of member of the common council of the city of San Diego for the Seventh Ward, and the election of his successor, under and by virtue of the provisions of section 4 of chapter 4, adopted as an amendment to article 1 of the charter of that city by vote of the electors thereof on January 7, 1905, which amendment was approved by resolution of the Legislature of the state on February 3, 1905. Statutes and Amendments to Codes Cal. pp. 901–922. The petition was signed and verified by one of the signers, as required by the charter, regularly filed with the city clerk, who within 10 days thereafter submitted to the common council at its regular meeting said petition, accompanied by the certificate of said clerk in the words and figures following, to wit: "San Diego, Cal., March 30, 1906. To the Honorable Common Council of the City of San Diego, California: This is to certify that the foregoing petition of the electors of the Seventh Ward of the City of San Diego, California, for the recall of Councilman Jay N. Reynolds, has been examined by me, and the names on the said petition compared with the Great Register of the County of San Diego, State of California, for the year 1905, and I find said petition to be sufficient. J. F. Butler, City Clerk. [Seal.]" The common council refused to act upon the petition, but "voted to disregard said petition and to table and file the same without action." Plaintiff brings this action as a resident and elector of the Seventh Ward, a qualified signer of said petition, and a property owner and taxpayer in said city, and sets forth the petition for recall in full in his "Affidavit and Petition" in the proceeding before the superior court. Defendant moved to quash the alternative writ issued ex parte, and demurred to plaintiff's affidavit and petition upon which the writ issued. The motion was denied and the demurrer overruled, and, defendants declining to answer, judgment was entered in favor of plaintiff, making the alternative writ peremptory.

These rulings of the court were excepted to, and are assigned as error because (1) the affidavit and petition does not show the petitioner to be a party beneficially interested in the issuance of the writ; (2) the petition for recall does not state grounds sufficient in law; (3) the clerk's certificate attached to the recall petition does not comply with the charter provision by "showing the result of said examination" of the great register; (4) the determination of the sufficiency of the recall petition rests in the discretion of the common council, and cannot be controlled by the mandate of the courts; and (5) the time within which the election should have been held under the provisions of the charter having already expired, no election could be called by the said common council, and the court had no jurisdiction to order an election at a later date. The fixing of the tenure of office of the officers of a municipality subject to removal by the body that elected them is comparatively new in our system of government, and the interpretative branch of the law is in rather an undeveloped state on the subject. A responsible government, however, is the very foundation of the republican system, and there appears no reason why a representative should not be made to retire at any time at the request of the people, as well as at the end of a fixed period. This is not deemed incompatible with a republican form of government in France and several of the South American states. It is similar in principle and application to the custom or rule which makes the ministry or real government of Great Britain answerable at all times for its failure to meet the approval of the electorate of that country on some measure or question of policy. It was evidently the purpose of the framers of the section of the San Diego charter under which the petition in this case was filed to ingraft this principle upon the charter of that city. In the operation of this charter the question is not whether there was cause for the removal of the councilman from office as the word "cause" has heretofore been used in this connection. The fitness of the incumbent, or the propriety or impropriety of his conduct, is not alone involved. Malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office may call for the exercise of the right conferred by this section, but it includes more than these. The charter provides for an answerable or responsible tenure in all elective offices, and "the holder of any elective office may be removed at any time by the electors qualified to vote for a successor of such incumbent." By virtue of this provision every elective officer elected after the adoption of the amendment holds office subject to the condition subsequent that 25 per cent. of the electorate of the district from which he was elected may by petition express their disapproval of his action upon some measure or as to some policy, and demand that he be sustained by a vote of confidence or retire. A clear conception of the purpose of this proceeding as distinguished from an ordinary "removal for cause" is necessary in the consideration of the questions here presented. The power to remove a corporate officer from office, for reasonable and just cause, is one of the common-law incidents of all corporations, and this extends to elective as well as appointive officers (Richards v. Clarksburg, 30 W. Va. 491, 4 S. E. 774; Dillon on Municipal Corporations, §§ 242, 243); and it is competent for the charter of a city to so provide (Croly v. Sacramento, 119 Cal. 234, 51 Pac. 323). In such cases the "just cause" is to be construed as something more than the mere wish of that part of the sovereign people which elected the officer whom it is attempting to remove.

A case of "removal for just cause" in this sense implies some misconduct upon the part of the officer, or imputes to him some violation of the law. Under such circumstances it is necessary that the charges against him shall be based upon some refusal to obey or intention to violate the law prescribing his duties. There are often such penalties attached to proceedings for the removal of officers "for cause shown" that they are and should be carefully guarded from abuse (Croly v. Sacramento, 119 Cal. 234, 51 Pac. 323); but, as to the right to the office as against the people, it is a well-recognized rule that the agency may be terminated at any time by the sovereign power without reason given (Matter of Carter, 141 Cal. 319, 74 Pac. 997). Offices are created by the people for administration of public affairs, and not for the benefit of the officeholder, and revocable at the pleasure of the authority creating them, unless such authority is limited by the power which conferred it. Atty. Gen. v. Jochim, 99 Mich. 358, 58 N. W. 614, 23 L. R. A. 699, 41 Am. St. Rep. 606. There is no doubt that the provision here under consideration, and similar ones in other city charters, are intended to check a growing forgetfulness on the part of officeholders of the principle that the duties of their offices are to be discharged in the interest of the public, and not their own. In the consideration of a freeholder's charter the intention of the people in its adoption is to be considered as a rule of construction. Provisions for the summary removal of appointive officers for cause shown are made by the charter. The general law and the common-law power of a motion, as well as the provisions of the charter, provide for removals of this kind. The purpose of section 4, however, is the reservation, by the people, of the right to remove any elective officer of the city whenever a majority of the electors shall so determine.

The reason why the removal is asked in this case, and the grounds upon which the petition for recall rests, are that the councilman whom it is sought to remove voted for and supported a certain ordinance regulating the licensing and sale of liquors in the city of San Diego, that he voted to diregard a former petition for his recall; that he repeatedly voted to disregard petitions to refer to the vote of the people ordinances passed by the council of said city filed in conformity to the provisions of the charter; and that he voted for a false certification of an ordinance to prevent a referendum. The only reference in the recall petition to the wishes or desires of the councilman's constituents in regard to the matters mentioned, and the only allegation in relation thereto in the "Affidavit and Petition" for the writ of mandate, is found in the following language in the recall petition: "That the official conduct and action of said Jay N. Reynolds ever since he entered upon the duties of said office has been in opposition to the will and preferences of his constituents, and obstructive to the best interests of the city of San Diego." If there be enough of substance in the grounds as stated, the proceeding should not be held to have failed because of lack of detailed and specific statement. The charter provides for a general statement only of the grounds on which the removal is sought, and we think the petition sufficient to cover this provision and to indicate to the officer whose removal is sought why his successor is asked to be elected. The certificate of the city clerk is that he had compared the names on the petition with the great register and found the petition to be sufficient. This was the "result of his examination." Findings that there were 393 votes cast at the last election, and that the 105 names on the petition were on the great register, could have added nothing to this. That it was sufficient, implied "that it fulfilled the requirements of the law." There was nothing to be done by the common council in this connection if the petition had not been sufficient, as the law provided that, if the petition be found insufficient by the clerk, he should return it to the petitioners. In Davenport v. Los Angeles, 146 Cal. 508, 80 Pac. 684, in a similar proceeding, the certificate of the clerk was held to be insufficient because it was ambiguous and on its face showed that the city clerk had not complied with the charter provision contained in the charter of the city of Los Angeles. This provision is the same as that in the San Diego charter. Section 198c, Amendments, Los Angeles Charter; Statutes and Amendments to Codes Cal. 1903, p. 574. By these charter provisions the right to petition for the removal of a public officer is vested in "the electors entitled to vote for a successor to the incumbent sought to be removed." This being the foundation of the right, those who are entitled to demand that the common council call the election can certainly maintain the action to protect the right granted. There is but one question, then, as to how the action must be brought. Must all the petitioners join, must one sue on behalf of himself and others, or may one sue alone? We think the authorities sustain the right of one or more of the petitioners to maintain the proceeding for a writ of mandate. Windsor v. Polk Co., 87 N. W. 705, 115 Iowa, 738; Kimberly v. Morris, 87 Tex. 637, 31 S. W. 808; Frederick v. San Luis Obispo, 118 Cal. 391, 50 Pac. 661.

There is no discretion vested in the common council in connection with the calling of this election. That body's functions are purely ministerial, but, if it be conceded that it was vested with some discretion, it does not follow that it can refuse to act. The duty of determining whether or not the petition contains the proper number of signatures and the comparing of them with the great register devolved upon the city clerk. He is the person given authority to hear and determine the question of sufficiency of the petition, and no appeal therefrom is provided and none apparently intended to be given. This is evident from the provision of the act requiring the return of the petition by the city clerk to the petitioners if found insufficient, and which, in effect, negatives petitioners' right of appeal. Whenever any board, tribunal, or person is by law vested with authority to decide a question, such decision, when made, is res judicata, and as conclusive of the issues involved in the decision as though the adjudication had been made by a court of general jurisdiction." Freeman on Judgments, § 531, cited and affirmed in People v. Los Angeles, 133 Cal. 342, 65 Pac. 749, and People v. Ontario, 148 Cal. 637, 84 Pac. 205. But conceding that the council had supervisory power and refused to order an election in the face of a sufficient petition, mandamus will lie to compel it to act. Sansom v. Mercer, 68 Tex. 488, 5 S. W. 62, 2 Am. St. Rep. 505; Keller v. Hewitt, 109 Cal. 146, 41 Pac. 871; Wood v. Strother, 76 Cal. 545, 18 Pac. 766, 9 Am. St. Rep. 249. It would be a strange perversion of the law if the common council in order to defeat one of the provisions of the charter, could, merely by dilatory action, not only refuse to comply with the directions of the charter, but prevent the courts from furnishing a remedy for the wrong done by its act. This would furnish the exception to section 3523 of the Civil Code that "for every wrong there is a remedy." Such a result is to be avoided, if possible. Conceding that provisions of the election law are mandatory, they are yet to be liberally construed to accomplish the purpose intended by the law. Jennings v. Brown, 114 Cal. 307, 46 Pac. 77, 34 L. R. A. 45; Packwood v. Brownell, 121 Cal. 480, 53 Pac. 1079. We find nothing in any of the cases cited that calls for a construction of the law that would defeat its purpose entirely, when there is one which would enable it to be enforced or carried out in the manner provided by its terms. The policy of the law and its effect are both much discussed in the briefs of counsel for both parties, as well as those of the amici curiæ, and the latter and the respondent have strenuously defended the constitutionality of the charter provision, although appellant disclaims any intention of raising this question. The policy of the law has been considered by us only in so far as it was necessary to determine the purpose and intention of the people of the city of San Diego in adopting the section involved. Whether, as applied, "their new scheme of reform will result in disastrous consequences" or not, is a matter that should have been considered by the people in adopting the amendment to the charter, but it cannot affect the action of this court on the question before it.

The constitutionality of the charter provision, not being presented by the appellant, has not been considered. The recent decision of the Supreme Court in Re Pfahler (Cal.) 88 Pac. 270, discusses many of the propositions of law presented by respondent in his brief in relation to the constitutionality of the section of the charter here being considered, as applied to other provisions of the charter of Los Angeles city, and is conclusive as to some of them; but this matter is not before us.

Judgment of the superior court affirmed.

VIRGINIA TIMBER & LUMBER CO. v. GLENWOOD LUMBER CO. (Civ. 207.)

(Court of Appeals, First District, California. March 25, 1907.)

1. TROVER AND CONVERSION — PLEADING — ISSUES AND PROOF—FRAUD.

Plaintiff, having sold lumber to a third person, who transferred it to defendant, in an action against defendant for its conversion, plaintiff could not show that the sale to the third person was obtained through his fraud; the alleged fraud not having been pleaded.

2. SALES — BONA FIDE PURCHASER — PRE-EXISTING DEBT.

A transfer of property in consideration of a pre-existing debt is a transfer for a valuable consideration sufficient to render the buyer a bona fide purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Clara County; M. H. Hyland, Judge.

Action by the Virginia Timber & Lumber Company against the Glenwood Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Jackson Hatch and Walter H. Linforth, for appellant. Corbet & Goodwin, B. A. Herrington, and Louis H. Brownstone, for respondent.

COOPER, P. J. Action to recover damages for the alleged wrongful conversion of personal property. The action was tried with a jury, and a verdict rendered for plaintiff in the sum of $1,625.59, for which judgment was entered. This is an appeal from the judgment on the judgment roll and a bill of exceptions.

The plaintiff alleges that on or about the 15th day of July, 1903, it was the owner and entitled to the possession of a lot of lumber described in the complaint, and that defendant at said time wrongfully converted the same to its use, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $2,000, for which amount judgment is prayed. In support of the complaint, the plaintiff, under proper objections on the part of defendant, was allowed to introduce evidence tending to show that, between the 1st day of May and the 1st day of July, 1903, it sold and delivered the lumber to one Routt on credit, and that it has not been paid for said lumber; that at the time Routt purchased the lumber he was doing business under the name of the San José Lumber Company, and had his office with defendant, and used its yard in which to pile the lumber; that the lumber was hauled from the railroad depot with defendant's teams, and was, when placed in defendant's yard, turned over to and became, so far as Routt was concerned, the property of defendant; that in March, 1903, before any of the lumber had been sold or delivered to Routt, he had entered into a writen contract with defendant to purchase its entire stock of lumber in its yards for the sum of about $39,000, of which sum the said Routt paid $3,000, and no more; that, under the contract so made by Routt with defendant, the entire stock of lumber in defendant's yard was to remain the property of defendant until fully paid for by Routt, but the business was to be carried on as before, a correct account of the expenses and of all sales to be kept, and Routt to be credited on the purchase price with the net proceeds of such sales; that Routt was to keep up the stock of lumber, so as to keep the business going; that Routt agreed with defendant to keep up at his own cost and charge all such lumber and supplies incident to the proper carrying on of defendant's business in connection with said lumber yard, an account of all transactions and sales to be kept; that the lumber in controversy was sold and delivered to defendant by Routt under such arrangement; that prior to selling the lumber to Routt plaintiff had asked him for references as to his honesty and financial standing; and that plaintiff communicated with the persons to whom it was referred, and received from them replies highly favorable to Routt. In other words, the plaintiff's theory of the case upon the trial was that the sale made by it to Routt was made through fraud, consisting of false representations made by Routt as to his financial standing and his ability to pay, and that defendant was not an innocent purchaser for value, for the reason that the consideration of the transfer to defendant was a prior indebtedness of Routt to defendant. Routt was not made a party defendant. It is conceded that the lumber was sold and delivered to him by plaintiff. The complaint contains not a word as to any fraud, or as to any attempt by plaintiff to rescind.

The question, then, is as to whether or not the plaintiff having sold and delivered the lumber to Routt, can, under the complaint in conversion, notwithstanding defendant's objection, prove facts to show that the sale to Routt was fraudulent, and therefore void. We are clearly of the opinion that the evidence was not admissible under the pleadings. The complaint must state the facts upon which it is sought to recover. In order to have enabled the plaintiff to introduce evidence of fraud in this case, it must have alleged the facts and circumstances with sufficient particularity to show that the sale to Routt was fraudulent. It alleged that it was the owner and entitled to the possession of the property at the time it claims that the defendant converted it, but the evidence shows that it had prior to that time sold and delivered it to Routt. Plaintiff, in order to have been entitled to any relief, must necessarily have proven the sale to Routt, and that it was fraudulent. The cause of action depended upon the proof of fraud. If it was necessary to prove fraud in this case, it was necessary to allege it. The defendant was entitled to know the facts upon which the plaintiff relied so that it might prepare itself to meet them. Defendant was charged with having wrongfully converted the property, but it appears that it purchased the property from Routt, to whom it had been sold by plaintiff. Plaintiff having sold the property to Routt, and delivered him the possession of it, enabled Routt to sell to defendant with an apparently good title. If the plaintiff would relieve itself of its sale to Routt, it must state the facts constituting the fraud with sufficient particularity to enable the defendant to meet them. The object of pleading is to arrive at the issue and give fair warning to the adversary. The issue to be tried in this case was as to whether or not the sale to Routt was procured by fraud. The reasoning of Burris v. Adams, 96 Cal. 664, 31 Pac. 565, seems to dispose of the case at bar. That was an action in which the plaintiff claimed to be the owner and desired his title quieted to an undivided one-eighth of certain land. His cause of action depended upon proof of fraud at a certain probate sale, but he did not allege the facts constituting the fraud upon which he relied. The court below sustained the objection to the evidence, upon the ground that there was no averment in the complaint of the acts constituting the fraud. The court sustained the ruling, and in the opinion said: "The complaint contains only the averments usually employed in an ordinary action to quiet title. Where the cause of action depends upon the proof of fraud, the facts constituting the fraud must be averred. * * * He knew from the start that the respondent had a perfect legal title, which he could overthrow by proving her guilty of a certain fraud, and he did not aver fraud even in general terms." In the case at bar the plaintiff knew that it, at least, had parted with the legal title to the lumber by a sale thereof, and that it could not recover without overthrowing that sale. It did not aver the fraud, or even mention the sale. It knew it had sold the lumber, but alleged that it was the owner thereof.

In Wetherly v. Straus, 93 Cal. 283, 28 Pac. 1045, the defendant claimed that the money deposited was the property of the husband of plaintiff, and that the intent of the deposit in the wife's name was to defraud creditors. The court said: "If the appellant had intended to avoid such gift, he should have made proper averments therefor in his answer, in order that the plaintiff might meet them at the trial. Fraud is never to be presumed, and whenever it constitutes an element of a cause of action, or of a defense which is of an affirmative nature, and invoked as conferring a right against the plaintiff, it must be alleged. In Capuro v. Builders' Ins. Co., 39 Cal. 124, the court said: "The rule is, undoubtedly, as stated by appellant, that when a party relies upon fraud, either to support his cause of action or in defense, he must set up the facts which constitute the fraud. It follows, as a necessary consequence of that proposition, that he can prove only those facts which he has set up." To the same effect, see Kent v. Snyder, 30 Cal. 666; Sterling v. Smith, 97 Cal. 343, 32 Pac. 320; Moore v. Copp, 119 Cal. 429, 51 Pac. 630; Burris v. Kennedy et al., 108 Cal. 331, 41 Pac. 458; Albertoli v. Branham, 80 Cal. 631, 22 Pac. 404, 13 Am. St. Rep. 200; Glazer v. Clift, 10 Cal. 303; Leszinsky v. White, 45 Cal. 278. Plaintiff does not cite any California case in support of its contention, but it cites four cases from other states, in which it is claimed the rule is different. Two of them are from Nebraska. Phenix Iron Works v. McEvony, 47 Neb. 228, 66 N. W. 290, 53 Am. St. Rep. 527, and Pekin Plow Co. v. Wilson, 92 N. W. 176, 66 Neb. 115. They were actions in replevin, and the court held that "The Code takes actions of replevin out of the general rule in regard to pleadings."

Even if this were an action in replevin, we have no such Code provision. Benesch et al. v. Waggner, 12 Colo. 534, 21 Pac. 706, 13 Am. St. Rep. 254, was an action in replevin, and proceeds upon the theory that in such action, where a delivery of the property is claimed, an affidavit must be made by the plaintiff showing "the alleged cause of the detention thereof according to his best knowledge and belief," which it would seem would inform the defendant sufficiently as to the acts claimed to be fraudulent. Salisbury v. Barton, 66 Pac. 618, 63 Kan. 552. The action was in replevin. The facts are not very fully stated in the opinion. The court said that the plaintiff pleaded three elements which, if proved, would entitle him to recover—"ownership, right of possession, and wrongful detention by the defendants." In the case at bar the plaintiff claimed that it had parted with the ownership by reason of a sale, that such sale was the result of fraud, and that it rescinded the sale. Having parted with the ownership, its right of action depended upon proving facts showing that by reason of fraud it was induced to part with such ownership, so as to entitle it to be relieved of the effect of the transfer of such ownership. It was not entitled to prove such facts without alleging them.

The court, at the request of plaintiff, gave instructions numbered 5, 6, 7, and 8, in regard to the question of an innocent purchaser for value. The sixth instruction is as follows: "I instruct you that a pre-existing debt is not a sufficient consideration for the transfer of property, to warrant the person securing such property to hold it as against the right of the one from whom the buyer has obtained such goods by fraud in the purchase." Instructions 5, 7, and 8 contain the same proposition expressed and repeated in different words. The eighth instruction expressly states that the "crediting of the value of said lumber to the account of said Routt by the Glenwood Lumber Company, pursuant to the contract made between the Glenwood Lumber Company and said Routt March 31, 1903, would not make said Glenwood Lumber Company an innocent purchaser for the value of said lumber." No evidence was offered in any way to connect the defendant with any fraud, or the knowledge of any fraud on the part of Routt, and hence it is evident that the proposition as stated to the jury by the instructions was that the payment of a prior indebtedness was not a valuable consideration for the sale of the lumber to defendant. Such is not the law in this state, and the giving of the instructions was error. A conveyance or transfer of property in consideration of a preexisting indebtedness is a conveyance for a valuable consideration. Frey v. Clifford, 44 Cal. 342; Davis v. Russell, 52 Cal. 611, 28 Am. Rep. 647; Sackett v. Johnson, 54 Cal. 107; Foorman v. Wallace, 75 Cal. 552, 17 Pac. 680; Duff v. Randall, 116 Cal. 226, 48 Pac. 66, 58 Am. St. Rep. 158.

The judgment is reversed.

RIGHETTI v. RIGHETTI. (Civ. 329.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 22, 1907. Rehearing Denied April 20, 1907.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES — MODIFICATION — ORAL CHANGE.

Where there was an agreement that, if the maker of a note would withhold payment until certain proceedings instituted against the payee were settled, no interest would be charged thereon after maturity, and the maker retained the money until such proceedings were settled, the agreement, though oral, having been executed, had the effect to change the stipulation of the note as to interest.

2. TENDER — SUFFICIENCY — KEEPING TENDER GOOD.

A deposit in a bank of the balance due on a note to be paid upon the surrender of that note and another was not a deposit, within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1500, providing that an obligation for the payment of money is extinguished by a due offer of payment, if the amount is immediately deposited in the name of the creditor, with some bank of deposit.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Luis Obispo County; E. P. Unangst, Judge.

Action by Tognina Righetti against Orazio Righetti. From a judgment for defendant and an order denying a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Judgment and order reversed, and cause remanded, with instructions to the trial court to order a judgment entered for plaintiff.

S. V. Wright and Albert Nelson, for appellant. W. H. Spencer and William Shipsey, for respondent.

ALLEN, P. J. Action upon a promissory note. Judgment for defendant. Appeal by plaintiff therefrom, and from an order denying a new trial.

The findings of the court—all of which, except as hereinafter noted, have some support in the evidence—and the evidence in the record together establish the following facts: The note sued on was executed by defendant as consideration for the purchase of an interest in a business theretofore conducted by plaintiff's husband and defendant. Before its maturity the husband was adjudged a bankrupt, and a trustee in bankruptcy instituted proceedings to have the note declared a part of the estate of the bankrupt, for its possession, or the value thereof, and procured an injunctional order that the plaintiff be restrained from selling or disposing of the note pending the action. During all of the period involved in this action, the husband of the plaintiff acted as her agent with full authority in the premises. At the maturity of the note defendant notified the husband as such agent that he intended to deposit the money in bank in extinguishment of the note. Thereupon it was agreed that, if the defendant would retain the money until the proceedings instituted by the trustee against the wife were settled, no interest would be charged thereon after maturity. Acting upon this agreement, the defendant retained the money until such proceedings were settled, except that for the purpose of procuring an adjustment with the creditors of the husband, who was then in jail upon a charge of fraud, defendant advanced $1,800, which was received as part payment of such note, which sum, together with $50 paid as interest, constituted the only payments thereon; and a balance remained unpaid of $296.70. After the dismissal of the action by the trustee, defendant offered to pay this balance, but it was refused, and a claim made that a much larger sum was due. Through threats and by duress the husband of the plaintiff procured a check from defendant for $600 and a new note for $300 in settlement of the balance of $296.70. This check and the old note were left in escrow; the latter to be surrendered upon payment of the check. The defendant stopped payment of the check, and through his attorneys deposited $296.70 in the Commercial Bank of San Luis Obispo, to be paid plaintiff or her agent upon surrender of the old note and the note for $300. This plaintiff declined to accept.

It is contended that the agreement waiving interest, being oral, could not have the effect to change the written contract of the parties; but, while oral, it was fully executed. Under the terms of the injunctional order, the plaintiff had a right to enforce collection, and the defendant, under the Code, a right to deposit the money in extinguishment of the debt. The oral agreement in relation to the retention of the money and waiver of proceedings to collect, being fully executed, had the effect to change the stipulation as to interest.

It is contended, further, that the allegations of the complaint in relation to the coercion claimed in procuring the check and note of $300 are insufficient. In view of the fact that the fruits of the attempted settlement were voluntarily surrendered by plaintiff to defendant upon the trial, further consideration of the questions involved would serve no useful purpose. We find no evidence in support of the finding that the deposit of $296.70 was made in the Commercial Bank to the credit either of the plaintiff or her agent. On the contrary, it was deposited in the bank, to be paid conditionally upon the surrender of the two notes. The deposit contemplated by section 1500 of the Civil Code, the effect of which is an extinguishment of the obligation, is an unconditional deposit to the credit of the holder or owner of the obligation. This unconditional deposit was not made, and the court erred in treating the same as an extinguishment of the obligation. In addition to this, had it been a deposit resulting in an extinguishment, the court possessed no right to direct the manner of its distribution, either as to costs or otherwise. Money deposited under the provisions of section 1500, Civ. Code, becomes at once the property of the person to whose credit it is placed, and is no more subject to such an order than any other deposit in the bank.

A careful examination of the record discloses no error, other than the one last above referred to. It plainly appears from the record that it was the duty of the court to have entered a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the $296.70, the admitted balance unpaid upon the note.

It is therefore ordered that the judgment and order be reversed, and the cause remanded, with instructions to the trial court to order a judgment entered in favor of the plaintiff and against defendant for $296.70, without costs to either party.

WOOD, CURTIS & CO. v. SCURICH. (Civ. 292.)

(Court of Appeal, First District, California. March 22, 1907. Rehearing Denied by Supreme Court May 21, 1907.)

1. SALES—CONTRACTS—RECOVERY FOR BREACH—NONPERFORMANCE BY PLAINTIFF.

Where plaintiff has failed to accept and pay for apples properly delivered under a contract, he cannot recover for defendant's failure to make further deliveries thereunder.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 434.]

2. CONTRACTS—NOTICE OF RESCISSION UNNECESSARY.

In an action for breach of contract, where plaintiff himself had failed to perform and the defense is based on that fact, notice of rescission is unnecessary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 11, Contracts, § 1191.]

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—PARTY NOT ENTITLED TO RECOVER IN ANY EVENT.

Where plaintiff is not entitled to recover on a contract because of his own breach, rulings of the court and failure to find on the question of damages are immaterial.

Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Cruz County; Lucas F. Smith, Judge.

Action by Wood, Curtis & Co. against Luke Scurich. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

W. T. Jeter, C. M. Cassin, and L. T. Hatfield, for appellant. Wyckoff & Gardner, for respondent.

HALL, J. Plaintiff brought this action to recover damages for failure of defendant to deliver three car loads of apples under a contract, whereby defendant agreed to deliver to plaintiff ten car loads of Bellflower apples of a specified quality for a specified price, shipment to be made between September 15 and November 15, 1903, at the convenience of buyer, say one car load per week. Each car to be paid for upon delivery. Plaintiff's claim for damages is for the alleged failure of defendant to deliver the eighth, ninth, and tenth car loads of apples.

Defendant pleaded as a defense that plaintiff did not comply with the terms of the contract upon its part, in this: That defendant delivered a car load of apples (the fifth car load) on the 7th day of October, 1903, which were in all respects in accordance with the requirements of the contract, but that plaintiff refused to pay therefor until the 14th day of November, 1903, and that on the 27th day of October, 1903, defendant delivered a car load of apples to plaintiff (eighth car load), which were in all respects in accordance with the requirements of the contract, but that plaintiff refused to accept or to pay for the same, and never has paid for the same. Plaintiff attempted to justify its refusal to pay for the fifth car load upon delivery, upon the ground that they were not of the quality required by the contract, but upon confessedly sufficient evidence the court found that they were of such quality. Plaintiff also attempted to justify its refusal to accept the eighth car load, upon the ground that they were not of the quality stipulated for by the contract, but the court also, upon confessedly sufficient evidence, found that they were of such quality. The eighth car load was tendered on the 27th day of October, 1903, and, as the evidence of plaintiff discloses, was rejected after inspection by plaintiff upon the alleged ground that the apples were not of the quality called for by the contract. As we have just said, the court found upon sufficient evidence that the apples were of the quality called for by the terms of the contract. This justified the finding or conclusion of the court that defendant was excused from further performance by the defaults and failures of plaintiff.

"One who refuses or fails to perform the conditions imposed on him by the terms of a contract, and shows no excuse for such refusal or failure cannot recover for a breach of the contract by the other party." 11 Cent. Dig. § 1207, citing The Alida (C. C.) 12 Fed. 343; Baird v. Evans, 20 Ill. 30; Bishop v. Newton, 20 Ill. 175; Schoonover v. Christy, 20 Ill. 426; Heaston v. Colgrove, 3 Ind. 265; Morton v. App. (Tex.) § 265; Warren v. Bean, 6 Wis. 120.

In Azema v. Levy, 5 N. Y. Supp. 418, under a contract to sell and deliver 500 bags of beans, to be delivered in two lots of 250 bags each, it was held that a refusal of the buyer to accept the first shipment of 250 bags released the seller of the obligation to make any further tender. In Providence Coal Co. v. Coxe, 35 Atl. 210, 19 R. I. 380, 582, plaintiff sued for breach of contract to sell and deliver 10,000 tons of coal, the shipments to be distributed equally over a period of several months. It was held that the refusal of plaintiff to take the agreed portions of the coal during the earlier months precluded recovery of damages for refusal of defendant to supply coal during the latter months. So also in Canda v. Wick, 100 N. Y. 127, 2 N. E. 381, it was held that the refusal of the buyer to receive one boat load of bricks on a contract calling for the delivery of 400,000 bricks to be delivered from time to time absolved the seller from making any further deliveries; the grounds of the refusal to accept being found to be untrue in fact. It has also been held that the refusal of one party to a contract to make payment as called for by the terms of a contract excuses the other party from further performance on his part. Johnson v. Tyng, 37 N. Y. Supp. 516, 1 App. Div. 610; Schwartz v. Saunders, 46 Ill. 15; Hale v. Sheehan, 71 N. W. 1019, 52 Neb. 184; Minaker v. Cal. Canneries Co., 138 Cal. 239, 71 Pac. 110. In Minaker v. Cal. Canneries Co., supra, defendant refused to make payments required by custom on a contract for sale of fruit, and, on being sued for the fruit that had been delivered, counterclaimed for damages because of refusal of plaintiff to deliver the balance of the fruit. The court said: "Of course, defendant was not entitled to recover damages as for breach of the contract on the part of plaintiffs without showing performance on its part of its own agreement. This it failed to do; but, on the contrary, it was the first party to disregard and violate the conditions of the contract. It was just as important that payment should be made as agreed upon as it was that deliveries should be made according to the contract, and, when one of the parties flatly declared that it would not pay as agreed, the other party had the right to refuse to further deliver."

In the case at bar it is not necessary for us to determine that the delay in making payment for the fifth car load of apples was such a breach as excused the defendant from further performing. It is sufficient to say that the refusal to accept or to pay for the eighth car load of apples was such a breach on the part of plaintiff as precludes it from the recovery of any damages because of the refusal of defendant to make any further deliveries. It signed and was bound by the terms of the contract. It was just as much its duty to accept the apples when delivered under the contract, if of the stipulated quality, as it was the duty of defendant to deliver the apples. Being the first to refuse to perform, it cannot complain because the defendant refused to further perform on his part. See cases cited supra, and also to the same effect Dunn v. Daly, 78 Cal. 644, 21 Pac. 377; Twomey v. People's Ice Co., 66 Cal. 233, 5 Pac. 158; Johnson v. Moss, 45 Cal. 515.

The point urged by appellant that defendant did not show that he had given notice of a rescission of the contract cannot avail appellant. Defendant's defense is not predicated upon a rescission of the contract on his part, but rests upon the proposition that one party to a contract who has refused to perform his part of the contract cannot recover damages for a refusal of the other party to perform after such breach. The rule that one who wrongfully refuses to perform the conditions of the contract on his part cannot recover for a breach of the contract by the other party is akin to the rule in equity that one who asks equity must do equity. The plaintiff not being entitled to recover at all because of its own breach of the contract, any rulings that the court made concerning the admission of evidence on the question of damages, as well as its failure to find upon any such questions, become immaterial.

We find no errors prejudicial to the plaintiff.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

JOHN v. SUPERIOR COURT IN AND FOR LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (Civ. 369.)

(Court of Appeal, Second District, California. March 25, 1907.)

1. DIVORCE—DECREE—EXTENT OF RELIEF.

Civ. Code, § 147, requires the court, in rendering a decree of divorce, to make disposition of the homestead. Section 146 provides that, if a homestead has been selected from the property of either spouse, it shall on divorce be assigned to the former owner. Section 131 provides that all issues shall be tried and determined at the time when the court determines whether the divorce should be granted. Held, that it was proper for the court to include in the interlocutory judgment adjudging a divorce a determination as to the disposition of the homestead; such question having been an issue in the case.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Divorce, §§ 701, 705–708.]

2. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL — DEATH OF PLAINTIFF—DEATH AFTER DECISION—EFFECT —ENTRY OF JUDGMENT.

In an action for divorce, the court had jurisdiction to enter final judgment for plaintiff after his death, the same not having impaired the power of the court by the express provisions of Civ. Code, § 132, and Code Civ. Proc. § 669, providing that if a party die after a verdict or decision upon any issue of fact, and before judgment, the court may nevertheless render judgment thereon.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 1, Abatement and Revival, §§ 335–337.]

Application by Lydia M. John for a writ of certiorari to review the action of the superior court in Los Angeles county in granting a decree of divorce in an action by Joseph S. John against the applicant. Application denied.

T. M. Stewart, for petitioner. A. C. Lawson, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an application for a writ of certiorari.

In an action for divorce brought by Joseph S. John against the petitioner, Lydia M. John, it was alleged that certain real property therein described was the separate property of the plaintiff in said action, and that plaintiff had declared a homestead thereon. The default of the defendant was duly entered, followed on January 31, 1905, by an interlocutory judgment, whereby it was adjudged that plaintiff was entitled to a divorce and that the homestead set out in the complaint was the separate property of the plaintiff and should be set aside and awarded to him. Nearly one year after the entry of this judgment the defendant, who is petitioner here, interposed certain motions having for their object the reopening of the case so far as it disposed of the real estate, all of which motions were denied, and on May 26, 1906, and after the death of the plaintiff, Joseph S. John, which occurred March 8, 1906, the court rendered its final decree in accordance with the interlocutory judgment and decision had upon the trial of the case.

Petitioner contends, first, that that part of the interlocutory judgment adjudging the real property to be the separate estate of the plaintiff was and is in excess of the jurisdiction of the court; second, that the final decree, by reason of the fact that it was rendered after the death of Joseph S. John, the plaintiff in said action, was and is void. Neither position is tenable. It appears from the complaint that certain real estate therein described constituted the homestead of the parties, and it was alleged that the said real estate so homesteaded was the separate property of the plaintiff. Section 147, Civ. Code, requires that "the court in rendering a decree of divorce, must make such order for the disposition of the * * * homestead, as in this chapter provided." And section 146, Civ. Code, provides: "In case of the dissolution of the marriage, * * * the homestead shall be assigned as follows: * * * (4) If a homestead has been selected from the separate property of either, it shall be assigned to the former owner of such property. * * *" It clearly appears from the above-quoted provisions of the Code that it was the duty of the court to determine whether or not the real estate described in the complaint was the separate property of the plaintiff as therein alleged. It was an issue in the case, and section 131, Civ. Code, contemplates that all issues embraced in the pleadings shall be tried and determined at the time when, and upon the trial wherein, the court determines whether or not "the divorce ought to be granted." It is at this time that the court is required to "file its decision and conclusions of law as in other cases," and this decision must respond to all the issues involved in the action. Glass v. Glass (decided at the October terms of this court) 88 Pac. 734. In this case one of the issues was whether or not the real property upon which the homestead was impressed was the separate property of the plaintiff. Section 132 gives the court the power of its own motion to enter final judgment at the expiration of one year from the entry of the interlocutory judgment; and the fact that this authority is given the court would seem to exclude the idea that a trial was contemplated at the time of entering this last judgment. It has been said that there are three parties to an action for the dissolution of the bonds of matrimony; that the state by reason of its interest in maintaining the marriage relation is an interested third party. Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 482, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73. The real parties are not allowed to control the subject of the action as they may dispose of property rights. "The Legislature has complete control of the subject and may impose whatever restrictions or delays it pleases either in regard to the time for beginning the action, or the method and order of procedure after the action is begun." Grannis v. Superior Court, 146 Cal. 256, 79 Pac. 891, 106 Am. St. Rep. 23. And it may likewise, upon a dissolution of the marriage, when property rights of the parties to a divorce suit are involved, require that such rights and property interests shall be determined by the court at the time when the court determines whether "the divorce ought to be granted." The decision of the court, both as to the granting of the divorce and the disposition of the property, is subject to review on appeal; and certainly it was never intended that there should be a delay of a year, or possibly a longer period in case of an appeal from an interlocutory judgment, and then another trial as to issues involving the property rights of the parties, followed by the delay of another appeal from a decision of the court thereon and judgment disposing of the same.

It appears that at the expiration of the year the plaintiff made a motion for final judgment. This was opposed by the defendant, and pending the disposition of defendant's motions the plaintiff died, and final judgment was not entered until May 26th. His death, according to the express provisions of section 132, Civ. Code, did not impair the power of the court to enter final judgment. Section 669, Code Civ. Proc., provides that if a party die after a verdict or decision upon any issue of fact, and before judgment, the court may nevertheless render judgment thereon. There had been a decision of all the issues of fact at the time of entering the interlocutory judgment, and both section 132, Civ. Code, and section 669, Code Civ. Proc., constitute authority for the action taken by the court in this case.

The application is denied.

HEALY et al. v. ANGLO-CALIFORNIAN BANK, Limited, et al. (Civ. 251.)

(Court of Appeal, Third District, California. March 27, 1907.)

WATERS AND WATER COURSES — IRRIGATION DISTRICTS—POWERS AND PROCEEDINGS—CONSTRUCTION WORK.

St. 1897, pp. 254, 272, c. 189, provides that an irrigation district, after adopting a plan, shall give notice calling for bids for the construction of the work or any portion thereof, and that, if less than the whole of the work is advertised, the portion so advertised must be "particularly described" in such notice, which shall set forth that plans and specifications can be seen at the office of the board, and that the board will receive sealed proposals therefor. A notice for bids for a portion of the work did not refer to flumes, trestles, and chutes included in the plans and specifications, the notice called for railroad crossings not shown by the plans, and in various other respects there were discrepancies between the plans and notice. Held, that an attempted acceptance and award to a bidder was void, as the statute requires that, in the case of the construction of a part of the work, the work, described in the notice must agree substantially with the work described in the plans and specifications.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; J. C. B. Hebbard, Judge.

Action by William H. Healy and another against the Anglo-Californian Bank and others. From a judgment for plaintiffs, and from an order denying a new trial, defendants appeal. Affirmed.

W. H. Hatton and L. L. Dennett, for appellants. Alex. G. Eells, for respondents.

CHIPMAN, P. J. Plaintiffs allege in their complaint that on November 29, 1902, they caused to be delivered to defendant irrigation district a sealed proposal in writing to do certain work for it upon its canal system, and, accompanying said proposal, placed in the possession of said defendant irrigation district their check for $6,000, upon the face of which check was written, "Not to be cashed unless forfeited." That said check was certified by said defendant bank and was so delivered under an express agreement between said defendant irrigation district and plaintiff that, "if said proposal were not by said Modesto Irrigation District accepted, said check should be returned to plaintiffs." That said proposal was never accepted by defendant district, nor was it ever in fact forfeited to said district. That, "notwithstanding the premises, the defendants Modesto Irrigation District and F. C. Davis as its president as aforesaid, threatens to collect the amount of said check * * * and will do so unless prevented by the injunction of this court, to the great and irreparable injury of these plaintiffs. And the said defendant Anglo-Californian Bank * * * and its managers as aforesaid threaten to cash and pay the amount of said check * * * to said defendant Modesto Irrigation District, * * * and will do so unless prevented," etc. An injunction is prayed for, and also that defendant district be directed to surrender said check to plaintiffs.

The defendant bank made default. Defendant district, answering the complaint, alleged that on November 5, 1902, defendant gave notice by publication, as required by law, calling for bids for constructing a certain portion of the irrigation work of said district, a copy of which said notice is made part of the answer. Among other things said notice set forth the following, to wit: "Sealed proposals will be received * * * on the 29th day of November, 1902, for the construction of bridges, drops, railroad crossings and headgates hereafter particularly described and according to the plans and specifications of said work and instructions to bidders, which can be seen at the office of said board. The contract will be let to the lowest responsible bidders, but the board may reject any or all bids. The proposals must be in writing and signed by the bidder and must be upon forms furnished by the board, with blanks properly filled out, and be enclosed in a sealed envelope. * * * Said proposals must be accompanied by a certified check, * * * and if such bid is accepted and the contract awarded to such bidder, and he fails to enter into such contract and to furnish such bond, then his check and the money payable thereon, shall be and remain the property of said district. * * * Any person to whom a contract shall be awarded shall, within ten days' notice of such award, make, execute and deliver to said board a written contract, in form satisfactory to said board, for the performance of said work, at the time to be specified, in the manner according to and upon the terms prescribed by this notice, such proposal, and said plans and specifications. * * * Said work is particularly described as follows: The construction of the drops, headgates, bridges and railroad crossings within the boundaries and said irrigation district according to the plans as aforesaid. Said bids should specify the price per thousand of lumber, the price of concrete per cubic yard and of syphon pipe per foot, all in place. The work will comprise about 75 drops, 34 bridges, 8 railroad crossings and 5 headgates. Full details of the requirements can be obtained from the said plans and specifications on file at the office of the said board of directors."

It is further averred that on November 29, 1902, the several bids or proposals were opened by defendant, and plaintiffs presented and delivered to said defendant a bid in writing for the construction of the work advertised in said notice, "which said bid was accompanied by a certified check hereinbefore mentioned, which said certified check is for the amount required in said notice"; that defendant "duly accepted the said bid or proposal in writing of said plaintiffs * * * and awarded the said plaintiffs the contract for the construction of such portion of irrigation work of said district as was set forth in said bid or proposal in writing of said plaintiffs, and thereafter duly notified said plaintiffs of the said acceptance of their said bid and of the awarding to plaintiffs of said contract"; that by said bid plaintiffs agreed that if not accepted and said contract awarded to them, and in case there was any default on the part of plaintiffs in executing the contract and bond required by said notice, the said check and the money payable thereon should be and remain the property of said district; that plaintiffs have failed and refused to enter into such contract and to furnish the required bond.

The court found "that each and all the facts alleged in the complaint of plaintiffs herein are true as alleged," and "that all the denials in the answer of defendants as appearing are untrue." The court also found "that it is not a fact that said board of directors * * * duly or at all accepted said bid or proposal of plaintiffs. That it is not a fact that said board ever duly or at all awarded to plaintiffs the contract mentioned in said answer, nor any other contract." As conclusion of law the court found that plaintiffs are entitled to judgment as prayed for, and judgment was accordingly entered. Defendants appeal from the judgment and from the order denying their motion for a new trial.

The findings are challenged as unsupported by the evidence, and, in point of fact, rightly so. The evidence is undisputed that plaintiffs submitted a bid pursuant to the proposals of defendants and put up their certified check as there required, and that the bid of plaintiffs was accepted by defendants, and plaintiffs notified thereof, but that plaintiffs refused to proceed further in the matter. The findings and judgment can be sustained only upon the proposition advanced by plaintiffs "that the court found that, in contemplation of law, the whole proceeding was null and void and the attempted acceptance and award simply nugatory," as, it is claimed, "was the case in Perine Co. v. Pasadena, 116 Cal. 6, 47 Pac. 777." The argument is that appellant is a public municipal corporation, and its officers are public officers (In re Madera Irrigation District, 92 Cal. 297, 319, 323, 28 Pac. 272, 675, 14 L. R. A. 755, 27 Am. St. Rep. 106; Fallbrook Irr. Dist. v. Bradley, 164 U. S. 174, 17 Sup. Ct. 56, 41 L. Ed. 369), and that, "if any of the essential proceedings prescribed by the statute for investing the officers of such a corporation with power to contract be dispensed with, no liability is upon the corporation, by reason of such a contract," citing Forest v. Levee Ditch (C. C.) 77 Fed. 555; City v. Morgan, 62 N. E. 127, 65 Ohio St. 219. Admittedly, the power given the defendants is found in section 53 of the so-called "Wright Act." St. 1897, pp. 254, 272, c. 189. Section 53 is as follows: "After adopting a plan for such canal or canals, storage reservoirs and works as in this act provided for, the board of directors shall give notice, by publication thereof * * * calling for bids for the construction of such work, or of any portion thereof; if less than the whole of the work is advertised, then the portion so advertised must be particularly described in such notice. Said notice shall set forth that plans and specifications can be seen at the office of the board, and that the board will receive sealed proposals therefor, and that the contract will be let to the lowest responsible bidder; * * * and as soon as convenient thereafter the board shall let said work, either in portions or as a whole, to the lowest responsible bidder; or they may reject any or all bids and readvertise for proposals, or may proceed to construct the work under their own superintendence." In Perine Co. v. Pasadena, supra, a contractor bid for certain work under the street law, and, as required by that law, accompanied his bid by a check subject to forfeiture in case he refused or neglected to enter into a contract, if his bid was accepted. He was awarded the contract, but refused to proceed further and brought suit to recover his deposit. It was held that the street law contemplates forfeiture for a failure to enter into a contract based upon legal proceedings of the municipal authorities, but if they are illegal the provision of the contract relating to a deposit is a naked offer without consideration, and the bidder is not estopped thereby. It was held, also, that a discretion lodged in the board of supervisors alone could not be delegated to the superintendent or city surveyor; and, where the specifications of a contemplated street improvement leave it to them to designate what extra concrete shall be put in, thus giving them power to increase the price indefinitely to be paid by the property owner without his having the means of knowing the ultimate cost of the finished work, the proceedings for the improvement are rendered invalid.

Respondents contend that the notice of proposals is jurisdictional by analogy to the notice of intention in the case of street work under the street law, and that the description of the proposed work must be at least as certain as is required under the street law, and, as held in Partridge v. Lucas, 99 Cal. 521, 33 Pac. 1082, it must enumerate the different classes of work and enumerate them correctly, and it must, by definite and certain references to specifications, put intending bidders in a position to ascertain definitely what is intended to be required of them. Appellants contend that there is a wide difference between the object of the notice of intention in the street law and the advertisement or notice for bids in the Wright irrigation law; that the only object of the advertisement is to give notice to intending bidders, and does not concern owners of irrigated land in the district. Furthermore, it is claimed that the notice is in no sense jurisdictional, but that the adoption of the plans is the source of the jurisdiction to be exercised. It is perhaps, not necessary to decide just how far in all cases the advertisement for bids is jurisdictional, or how closely the analogy may be drawn between the notices referred to in the two acts. This much, however, we think may be safely affirmed: That while section 53 of the Wright act provides for calling for bids for the entire work "after adopting a plan," and does not require in terms that in such case the work shall be particularly described, the act does specifically provide that, "if less than the whole work is advertised (which is the case here), then the portion so advertised must be particularly described in such notice." It will be observed that the statute requires that the notice shall set forth that the plans and specifications can be seen at the office of the board "and that the board will receive sealed proposals therefor and that the contract will be let to the lowest responsible bidder * * * and thereafter the board shall let said work." Clearly, the act contemplates that the work "particularly described in such notice" must agree substantially with the work described in the plans and specifications, and must relate to the same work, otherwise the bidders might be misled to their disadvantage by reason of doubts as to which of the two descriptions of the work should be followed.

Whether there be uncertainty in the specifications as to the substantial terms of the proposed contract or a substantial variance as to such terms between the notice to bidders and the plans and specifications, the result would be the same, as is set forth in Packard v. Hayes, 51 Atl. 34, 94 Md. 233, where the court said: "Necessarily, then, all the essentials that the municipality designs that the contract proposed to be made shall contain is to be determined before proposals are invited, and are to be placed before the bidder as the basis of his bid; otherwise there would be no standard by which bidding could be made with the definiteness and precision which would leave nothing to be done except to ascertain the lowest bid. And it may be said there could be no effective competition in bidding, which it was the evident design of the provisions of the charter we are considering to secure. That proposals for contracts under these provisions should be made by bidders with knowledge of, and with reference to, all the essential elements of the contract into which they are invited to enter is enforced by other considerations. The object of the provisions of the municipal charter we are considering is to prevent favoritism and extravagance in the making of municipal contracts. The effect of those provisions to produce the result intended would be greatly impaired, and the purpose of them might be entirely defeated, if the method of awarding contracts under them which was pursued in this case could be sustained. The absence of any definite and precise basis for competition among the bidders, the allowing of each bidder to submit his own independent proposition as to what would form an important element of the contract, and the reservation of a discretion to be exercised by a municipal authority as to an essential of the contract after bids had been submitted, make the contract here the subject of controversy violative of the intent and purpose of the provisions of law in question as well as of the essential character of competitive bidding." See, also, Hardware Co. v. Erb, 17 S. W. 7, 54 Ark. 645, 13 L. R. A. 353. In Hardware Co. v. Erb, the court stated certain principles deemed to be indispensable to competitive bidding: (1) An offering to the public; (2) opportunity for competition; (3) basis for exact comparison of bids, i. e., "bidding for the same particular thing to be done according to the same specifications." It is immaterial that fraud be shown. It is the opportunity for fraud or favoritism that is forbidden. Bolton v. Gilleran, 105 Cal. 244, 252, 38 Pac. 881, 45 Am. St. Rep. 33.

What, then, do the facts show? The notice reads: "Said work is particularly described as follows: The construction of the drops, headgates, bridges and railroad crossings * * * according to the plans aforesaid." The plans and specifications included "flumes," "trestles," and "chutes" not mentioned in the notice. The notice called for certain railroad crossings, but the plans showed no such crossings. As to these crossings, it is explained that after the notice was published, and before the bids were submitted, the bidders were told not to include the railroad crossings in their bids, and plaintiffs did not, in fact, include them in their bid, although one bidder did include them in his offer. The notice speaks of concrete and syphon pipe, no details of which are mentioned in the specifications; nor did the form of bid furnished by defendants provide for them, although one of the bidders included these items in his bid. The drops were the most expensive part of the work, but the plans showed only what was called a "typical drop." This showed the manner of construction, but gave no suggestion as to the amount of excavation in the 73 required or of the nature of the land or its contour where the drops were to be placed. There was a profile of the work, but it was not referred to in the notice as part of the plans, and was not furnished with the "set" furnished for plaintiffs' examination. Attention is called, also, to the omission in the notice to state any time within which the work was to be performed. The notice read "at the time to be specified." The specifications required the successful bidder to execute the contract within 10 days from acceptance of his proposal, and called for prompt and vigorous work to "the time fixed for the completion of the contract," subject to certain penalties; but nowhere is this time stated. Apparently, the time of completion was left entirely discretionary with defendants, and might have been so fixed as to greatly increase the bidders' burdens. It has been held that the time for completing the work should have been stated in the notice. Kneeland v. Furlong, 20 Wis. 460; Manley B. Co. v. Newton, 40 S. E. 277, 114 Ga. 245. It was not stated either in the notice or plans.

The notice stated that the bids should specify the price of certain materials, to wit, concrete and syphon pipe, all in place; but the form of bid furnished by defendants, as already noticed, omitted mention of these materials, from which it appears that the bids were not permitted to include the work advertised for. Andrews v. Board (Idaho) 63 Pac. 593, is cited, where the court held that where proposals for a two-span, 500-foot bridge were called for, and a three-span bridge, less than 500 feet long, was let under the call, the bidding was not competitive. The bid admittedly refers to the notice as well as to the plans, and is an offer to construct all the work advertised, including, as we have seen, work which was omitted from the plans. To say the least of these provisions, it is scarcely possible to determine whether the contract should be confined to the work mentioned in the notice, or the proposals or the plans. Packard v. Hayes et al., 51 Atl. 32, 34, 94 Md. 233, supra.

Attention is also invited to certain uncertainties in the specifications. Some principles governing in such case have already been adverted to. There being no time fixed for completion of the work opened a wide door for favoritism and precluded the probability, if not the possibility, of a letting to the lowest responsible bidder. It is irreconcilable with fair dealing to leave it in the power of defendants to fix a time different for a favored bidder from that fixed for one not favored, which might be done in advance of the bidding. It is no answer, as appellants contend, that we must not presume that the officers of the district will violate law. It is not a question of presumption of official honesty and integrity, but a question of opportunity to do wrong, that the law guards against. Bolton v. Gilleran, supra.

Turning to specifications numbered 16 and 17, we find an irreconcilable conflict. In 16 provision is made for a change of work from that described in the specifications, but "no material change shall be made unless first agreed on in writing by the board and contractors." In 17 the unqualified right is retained in the district "to change at any time during the progress of the work, the alignment, grades and width of the canal or any part thereof, and also the limits of all sections; or alter the character, vary the dimensions or change of location of structures, or substitute one kind of work or material for another [and many other like powers], * * * without the contract price being thereby affected unless the aggregate value of all work contemplated by the contract be changed fully twenty (20) per cent., in which case a fair allowance either to the district or contractor shall be made [not by the district but] by the engineer." The contractor, however, may "throw up said contract," and the district "may settle with the contractor on the measure of damages he may suffer." Probably these contradictory provisions crept in through an inadvertent commingling of the form of specifications for the entire work with specifications for a part of the whole work. However this may be, the provisions stand unexplained, under which it is hard to conceive how a bidder could safely enter into a contract.

It is also provided in the specifications that "bidders may also submit their own plans and specifications for the whole or any portion thereof," etc. This provision probably came from the form to be used where the whole work under a general plan, or some part of it, was to be bid for; but it is used here, and is not explained. In the case of Ertle v. Leary, 114 Cal. 238, 46 Pac. 1, it was held that, where the law required the contract to be let to the lowest bidder upon plans previously adopted by the board of supervisors, there is no authority to let a contract upon plans to be submitted by the bidders, thereby preventing competition in the bidding and giving the board an opportunity for favoritism.

In the specifications for "drops," the right was reserved to the engineer "to modify or change the detail of construction." Like reservation was provided as to headgates, "and no extra expense allowed for the same." Bolton v. Gilleran, supra; Perine Co. v. Pasadena, supra; Chase v. Scheerer, 136 Cal. 248, 68 Pac. 768; Packard v. Hayes, 51 Atl. 32, 94 Md. 233, supra.

In view of the foregoing facts, we think the conclusion of law arrived at by the trial court was correct.

MILTIMORE v. NOFZIGER BROS. LUMBER CO. et al. (L. A. 1,789.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

MECHANICS' LIENS—CLAIMANTS—PRIORITIES—STATUTES—VALIDITY.

Const. art. 20, § 15, providing that "mechanics, materialmen, artisans and laborers of every class," etc., shall have a lien for labor or material furnished, secures liens to mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers and places them on an equality, and Code Civ. Proc. § 1194, determining the priority of liens so as to give a priority to persons performing manual labor, is void so far as it creates priorities between persons performing manual labor and materialmen.

Shaw, Sloss, and Angellotti, JJ., dissenting.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Waldo M. York, Judge.

Action by Mrs. Paul Miltimore against the Nofziger Bros. Lumber Company and others, in which some of the defendants began independent actions and others filed cross-complaints. From a judgment settling the rights of the defendants in the actions consolidated in the trial court, certain of the defendants appeal. Reversed.

G. D. Garmo, Scarborough & Bowen, Ed. G. Kuster, and Chas. L. Batcheller, for appellant. M. W. Conkling, for respondent Frank James, amicus curiæ.

PER CURIAM. The plaintiff was the owner of a lot upon which she had caused a building to be erected. When it was completed, there remained unpaid a portion of the contract price which she had agreed to pay for the erection of the building. The other parties to the several appeals here under consideration, except the original contractor, are persons claiming liens on the property for labor done or materials furnished in the building. The unpaid balance was not sufficient to pay all the liens, and, the owner being unable to determine with certainty the amount or priority of the respective liens, and there being some dispute among the lien claimants concerning their respective claims and rights of priority, she began the main action, bringing the money unpaid into court, summoning all parties claiming an interest therein to appear and interplead as to their respective rights to the fund and asking to be relieved from further responsibility in the matter. Some of the parties began independent actions to foreclose their liens, and some appeared in the main action and filed cross-complaints therein for such foreclosure. The actions were, however, all consolidated in the lower court and tried together. Judgment was given in favor of the owner as prayed for in her complaint. The rights of the several lien claimants to the fund were declared by the judgment in accordance with their rank, as provided by section 1194 of the Code of Civil Procedure; the laborers being given the first right, the materialmen the second right, the residue, if any, being given to the subcontractors. There were among the several claimants representatives of each of these classes.

The subcontractors contend that all the claimants are entitled to share alike in the fund, without preference of one over the other, this claim being founded on the proposition that section 1194, aforesaid, so far as it declares that one class of lienholders shall have priority over another, is unconstitutional. The materialmen contend that, at all events, it is invalid so far as it gives the laborers preference to the persons who furnish materials for the building. It is stipulated that these comprise the only questions to be determined upon the respective appeals, there being separate appeals on behalf of the materialmen and subcontractors, respectively.

Section 1194, so far as material, is as follows: "In every case in which different liens are asserted against any property, the court in the judgment must declare the rank of each lien, or class of liens, which shall be in the following order: (1) All persons performing manual labor in, on or about the same. (2) Persons furnishing materials. (3) Sub-contractors. (4) Original contractors. And the proceeds of the sale of the property must be applied to each lien or class of liens in the order of its rank." Section 15 of article 20 of the Constitution reads thus: "Mechanics, materialmen, artisans and laborers of every class, shall have a lien upon the property upon which they have bestowed labor or furnished material for the value of such labor done and material furnished; and the Legislature shall provide by law for the speedy and efficient enforcement of such liens." The court is of the opinion that the constitutional provision designating the persons entitled to liens as "mechanics, materialmen, artisans and laborers of every class," was intended to secure liens to these classes of persons for claims accruing to them for work done or materials furnished by them personally, and that it does not give a lien to contractors or subcontractors, as such. If a contractor or subcontractor personally labors in the erection of a building or improvement or furnishes materials used therein, it may be that he would have a lien, under the Constitution, for the value of such labor or material, but it would not be given by virtue of his contract, or to the amount of the contract price. His right to a lien under the contract is given solely by the statutory provisions in his behalf. The Constitution does not provide for him as contractor or subcontractor. It follows that section 1194, in so far as it prefers the laborers and materialmen to contractors and subcontractors, and in so far as it prefers subcontractors to contractors, does not violate the Constitution.

The effect of the constitutional provision, above quoted, is to place mechanics, materialmen, artisans, and laborers in the same class. They are each to have a lien, the mechanic, laborer, and artisan, for the value of his personal work or services bestowed, and the materialman for the value of materials furnished by him, and no preference is given to the one over the other. Their equality is thus established by the Constitution, and it cannot be impaired or destroyed by the Legislature. The Constitution is self-executing to the extent that it confers upon these classes of persons a lien, and makes them equal, in point of rank, with regard to each other. The provision of the Code that persons performing manual labor shall be first paid out of the proceeds of the property, and, in effect, that the materialman shall have no lien, except upon such balance of the proceeds as may remain after the laborers are fully paid, clearly impairs, and in many cases will destroy, the right of materialmen given by the Constitution. To that extent the statute is void. The court below should have directed that the laborers and materialmen should share alike in the proceeds of the property in proportion to the amount of their respective liens.

The judgment is reversed.

SHAW, SLOSS, and ANGELLOTTI, JJ. We dissent from the opinion of the court filed on April 2, 1907. We think, under the Constitution, the Legislature has power to provide a different order of priority with respect to laborers and materialmen, as well as with respect to contractors, subcontractors and other classes of lien claimants.

BLOOM v. GORDAN et al. (S. F. 4,701.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

PARTITION — INTERLOCUTORY JUDGMENT — APPEAL—PERFECTING APPEAL IN TIME.

Code Civ. Proc. § 939, subd. 3, provides that an appeal may be taken from an interlocutory judgment in actions for partition of real estate within 60 days after the order of interlocutory judgment is made and entered in the minutes of the court, or filed with the clerk. The order was entered in the minutes December 23, 1905, and filed with the clerk of the court on January 9, 1906. Held, that an appeal taken upon March 18, 1906, was too late.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank H. Kerrigan, Judge.

Action by Rosa Bloom against Pauline Gordan and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Dismissed.

William T. Kearney, for appellants. Otto I. Wise, for respondent.

PER CURIAM. This is a motion to dismiss the appeal of certain defendants from the interlocutory judgment given in an action for the partition of real property. It is shown by the affidavit of the county clerk that the interlocutory decree in partition and order of sale were entered in the minutes of the court upon December 23, 1905. The interlocutory decree in partition and order of sale were filed with the clerk of the said superior court upon the 9th day of January, 1906. Admittedly, the appeal was not taken until the 18th of March, 1906. Subdivision 3 of section 939 of the Code of Civil Procedure declares that an appeal may be taken from an interlocutory judgment in actions for partition of real estate within 60 days after the order of (or) interlocutory judgment is made and entered in the minutes of the court, or filed with the clerk. The only answer made to this motion is the affidavit of W. T. Kearney, attorney for appellants, who declares "that an interlocutory order or decree in partition and order of sale and accounting in the above-entitled action was entered January 28, 1906." From the explanation which was given upon the argument we conclude that the affiant here means the date of the entry in the judgment book, and not the date of entry in the minutes; but, if there be a conflict in the evidence upon this point, it must be resolved in favor of the positive testimony of the clerk of the superior court, with the corroborative affidavit of attorney for respondent. Whether the time for appeal be considered as beginning to run from the date of the entry in the minutes (December 23, 1905), or from the date of the filing with the clerk of the court (January 9, 1906), from either point of time the appeal taken upon March 18, 1906, was too late. Bartlett v. Mackey, 130 Cal. 181, 62 Pac. 482.

The appeal is therefore dismissed.

HEMENWAY v. THAXTER et al. (L. A. 1,658.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES — CONSIDERATION—EVIDENCE—SUFFICIENCY.

In a suit to restrain the sale of certain land under an execution against plaintiff's husband, evidence held to sustain a finding that a conveyance of the property to plaintiff was voluntary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, §§ 896, 898–900.]

2. SAME—FRAUD.

Where a debtor admitted that, by the conveyance of certain land to his mother-in-law for the benefit of his wife, he divested himself of all property liable to execution and became thereby and has ever since remained insolvent, the conveyance being voluntary, was fraudulent as to his creditors, as provided by Civ. Code, § 3442.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, § 138.]

3. SAME—SUBSEQUENT CREDITORS.

Where a conveyance of land by a debtor was made with intent to defraud existing creditors, proof of such fact was sufficient prima facie evidence of fraud as against subsequent creditors to entitle them to avoid the conveyance.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 24, Fraudulent Conveyances, § 895.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Action by Sarah M. Hemenway against Mabel Thaxter and others. From a judgment for defendants, and from an order denying plaintiff's motion for a new trial, she appeals. On certificate from the District Court of Appeal of the Second District. Affirmed.

Tom C. Thornton and Clarence Thompson, for appellant. F. C. Austin and W. P. L. Stafford, for respondents.

PER CURIAM. This cause was certified to this court upon the disagreement of the justices of the District Court of Appeal of the Second District. While the action was pending before that court, the following opinion was prepared by Allen, J., and that opinion is hereby adopted as the opinion of this court:

"Action by plaintiff to enjoin the defendants from selling under execution certain real property. Findings and judgment for the defendants; a new trial denied, and from the judgment and order denying a new trial plaintiff appeals.

"Plaintiff in her complaint alleges ownership as her separate estate of a tract of land in San Bernardino county, which defendants were threatening to sell under execution to satisfy a judgment against her husband.

"The material facts involved in this appeal may be summarized as follows: Mrs. Alvira Brown, the mother of the plaintiff, loaned to the plaintiff's husband, about the year 1865, the sum of $3,000, for which plaintiff's husband executed his note. A portion of this money was invested in real property in Illinois, which was sold and $5,000 realized by plaintiff's husband therefrom. This money was reinvested by the husband in certain real property in San Bernardino county, the subject of this action, in the name of the plaintiff's husband, who with plaintiff, his wife, on January 1, 1898, signed a conveyance of such property to Alvira Brown, plaintiff's mother. At the time this deed was signed Mrs. Brown was absent from California and knew nothing about its execution, although previously it had been agreed between plaintiff, her husband, and Mrs. Brown that the property should be conveyed to Mrs. Brown, who was to fix the property in plaintiff's hands so there should be no trouble if anything should happen suddenly to the husband. Afterwards, on June 28, 1898, Hemenway and his wife acknowledged this deed, so as to entitle the same to record, and the same was placed by Hemenway on record June 29, 1898. At the time these last two conveyances were delivered Mr. Hemenway owed one Simonsen about $1,600. Simonsen brought two suits against Hemenway to recover this indebtedness, in one of which actions an attachment was issued, and on June 24, 1898, the same was levied upon the property involved in this action. In the other, which involved the $600 indebtedness, no attachment was issued. Judgments in these actions were subsequently rendered, one for $1,000 and one for $600. Execution was issued out of the $1,000 judgment, and the premises described in the complaint were sold and redeemed. The judgment for $600 in favor of Simonsen was and is unpaid. At the time of the conveyances mentioned Hemenway owed no other debts other than the debt to Simonsen and a debt claimed by him to be due Mrs. Brown on account of the original $3,000 loan and accumulated interest. Afterwards, in September of 1900, Hemenway contracted an obligation in favor of defendant Thaxter for $2,500, on account of which judgment was rendered in July of 1902, out of which judgment the execution, the enforcement of which is sought to be restrained, issued.

"Upon the trial of this action, the court found: That plaintiff was not the owner as her separate estate of the premises; that the said premises were purchased with community funds; that the conveyance by Hemenway and his wife to Mrs. Brown was a voluntary conveyance, made with intent to hinder, delay, and defraud existing and subsequent creditors; that Hemenway had existing creditors at the time; that the conveyance by Mrs. Brown to Mrs. Hemenway was voluntary and without consideration, and was made to her in furtherance of the intent of said Hemenway to hinder, delay, and defraud creditors; that Hemenway by such conveyance became insolvent and has not at any time since said conveyance had any property not exempt from execution; that the claimed indebtedness of Hemenway to Alvira Brown was a pretext only for the conveyance; that Hemenway has continued in possession ever since the conveyance; that the judgment in favor of Mrs. Thaxter is wholly unpaid. And, as a conclusion of law, the court found that Mrs. Thaxter, the subsequent creditor, is not defeated of her right to attack the fraudulent transfer, and that restraining order theretofore granted should be dissolved. A decree was entered accordingly.

"It is insisted by appellant that there is no evidence warranting the finding of the court that the deed from Hemenway to Mrs. Brown, and the deed from Mrs. Brown to Mrs. Hemenway, were in either case fraudulent, voluntary, or without consideration, or that the same was in fraud of creditors and void; and, further, that, were it to be conceded that the conveyances were in fraud of the existing creditor Simonsen, subsequent creditors could not successfully attack such conveyances under sections 3441, 3442 of the Civil Code.

"As to the voluntary character of the conveyances, there was much conflict between the testimony and the circumstances connected with the transaction, and an examination of the record indicates to us that the finding of the court that the conveyances were voluntary should not be disturbed. A trial court may very properly determine that direct evidence is successfully rebutted by circumstances and conduct of parties inconsistent with such direct evidence. There is much in the record indicating that the claimed indebtedness of Hemenway to Mrs. Brown was a pretense only, and that the true intent of the parties by the conveyance was to vest the title in plaintiff without valuable consideration being paid therefor. There is, in fact, much in the direct testimony of Hemenway indicating this fact. He testifies that it was agreed between himself and Mrs. Brown that the property should go to the plaintiff. He further testifies that he does not know how long Mrs. Brown kept the note for $3,000 originally executed by him to her, and does not know whether it was taken up and destroyed in 5, 25, or 30 years; that he executed to Mrs. Brown many notes for other loans and had various settlements, and his only statement connecting the note with the conveyance to Mrs. Brown is that a note was surrendered by Mrs. Brown when the deed was executed, but what note it was, for what amount, and whether it was then a subsisting obligation or not, is not disclosed. That the conveyance, if voluntary, was in fraud of Simonsen scarcely requires argument. Section 3442 of the Civil Code proves that 'any transfer * * * made or given voluntarily, or without valuable consideration, by a party while insolvent or in contemplation of insolvency, shall be fraudulent, and void as to existing creditors.' Hemenway admits that by this conveyance he divested himself of all property liable to execution; that he became thereby, and has ever since remained, insolvent. The consequence of this conveyance being, then, to render Hemenway insolvent, he will be presumed to have intended its natural consequence, from which follows an intent to become insolvent, or contemplated insolvency, in the language of the act. The finding of the court as to the insolvency of Hemenway is sufficient in its terms to establish that fact.

"There remains, therefore, only the question as to the right of a subsequent creditor to attach such conveyance upon the ground that it is also in fraud of him. The rule laid down in Horn v. Volcano Water Co., 13 Cal. 62, 73 Am. Dec. 569, approved in Banning v. Marleau, 133 Cal. 488, 65 Pac. 964, that 'evidence of an intent to defraud existing creditors is deemed sufficient prima facie evidence of fraud against subsequent creditors,' has never been criticised or modified, to our knowledge. Applying this rule, therefore, we must conclude that, even though fraudulent intent is a question of fact and not of law, as laid down in section 3442 of the Civil Code, where the fraud as to existing creditors is established as a question of fact, it is also established prima facie as to subsequent creditors. It was for the trial court to say whether this prima facie case had been overcome by other testimony. It determined the matter adversely to the appellant, and under the familiar rule must be accepted. The finding of the court that the conveyance was fraudulent and void, if warranted, effectually disposes of the claim of plaintiff that such conveyance vested the property in her as her own separate estate; for, being void, it was not effectual for the conveyance of any estate."

It is therefore ordered that the judgment and order be affirmed.

BELL v. ADAMS et al. (L. A. 1,682.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

1. CONTRACTS — JOINT AND SEVERAL CONTRACTS—STATUTES.

A contract whereby owners of mines employed one to operate the mines, for which services the owners agreed to pay him the reasonable value thereof whenever they sold the mines, is joint and several within Civ. Code, § 1659, providing that, where the parties who unite in a promise receive benefit from the consideration, their promise is presumed to be joint and several.

2. JUDGMENT—CO-PARTIES.

Owners of mines employed one to operate them, and agreed to pay him for his services the reasonable value thereof when the mines were sold. The mines were sold, but the services were not paid for. The employé sued the owners, one of whom appeared and answered separately, denying the contract. No objection was made to proceeding with the trial as against the answering defendant alone. Held, that under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 414, 579, providing that in an action against several defendants the court may render judgment against one or more of them, etc., the court was authorized to render judgment against the answering defendant.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 30, Judgment, §§ 416, 419.]

3. TRIAL—FINDINGS—ISSUES.

Where, in an action for services performed under a contract of employment, the admitted facts establish the conclusion that the statute of limitations has not run against the claim, a finding on the issue raised by a plea of limitations is not necessary to support a judgment for plaintiff.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, § 911.]

4. SAME.

The findings must respond to the issues, and there must be a finding on every material fact alleged in the complaint and controverted by the answer necessary to support the judgment rendered.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 46, Trial, §§ 911, 914.]

5. SAME.

In an action for services rendered under a joint and several contract, whereby three persons employed plaintiff to perform the services and agreed to pay him therefor, the complaint alleged that "the defendants agreed to pay plaintiff" for the services. The separate answer of one of the defendants denied that he so agreed, but was silent in regard to the fact that the other defendants agreed to pay. The court found that the answering defendant agreed to pay plaintiff. Held, that the finding covered the issue of whether the answering defendant agreed to pay, and it, together with the admission in the answer that the other defendants had agreed to pay, proved that all the defendants had agreed to pay as alleged in the complaint, authorizing a judgment against the answering defendant alone.

6. SAME.

Where, in an action against several defendants for services rendered under a joint and several contract with them, one of the defendants appeared and answered separately, and the court found that the answering defendant had paid for no part of the services, a judgment against him for the services was authorized; the finding implying that the debt due to plaintiff remained unpaid.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by G. S. Bell against Samuel B. Adams and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant Samuel B. Adams appeals. Affirmed.

Hubert T. Morrow, Oscar C. Mueller, and Sidney J. Parsons, for appellant. C. C. De Garmo and E. H. Wilson, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This case was transferred to the District Court of Appeal of the Second District, and, that court being unable to agree upon a decision, it was again transferred to this court. The following opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Allen of that court meets with our approval, and is adopted as the opinion of this court:

"Appeal by defendant Samuel B. Adams from a money judgment rendered against him alone in favor of the plaintiff.

"The complaint alleges a contract between plaintiff and defendants, by which plaintiff was to manage and operate certain mines belonging to the defendants, for which services defendants agreed to pay the reasonable value thereof, which is alleged to be $4,000, whenever the defendants sold the mines. It is further alleged that within a year preceding the bringing of the action defendants sold said mines. Nonpayment of such claim for services is alleged. Service of process does not appear from the record to have been made upon any of the defendants. Defendant Adams, however, appeared and answered separately, denying the contract as set out, and denying that he ever agreed to pay for such services, or that such services were ever rendered, or that the same were of the value alleged or any value in excess of $710, which amount is claimed to have been paid, admits the sale of the mines as alleged. A plea of the statute of limitations is also interposed. The trial court found that the contract set out was entered into between plaintiff and defendant Adams, and that Adams agreed to pay therefor the reasonable value of the services rendered when the mines were sold; that the same were rendered as alleged in the complaint, and were of the value of $4,000; and that said Adams had paid no part thereof. Judgment was rendered accordingly.

"The principal point relied upon by the appellant is that, the action being against all defendants jointly, the findings do not respond to the case made by the pleadings, in that they do not find as to the making of a contract, or the performance of services, or nonpayment as alleged; nor is there any finding upon the issue of the statute of limitations. The joint ownership by defendants of the mines, their sale, and the agreement of defendants to pay for the services of the plaintiff is not denied; the denial in the last regard being merely that Adams did not agree to pay therefor. The contract set out in the complaint was joint and several. Civ. Code, § 1659. Section 414, Code Civ. Proc., provides that when the action is against two or more defendants, jointly or severally liable on a contract, and the summons is served on one or more but not on all of them, the plaintiff may proceed to judgment against the defendant served, etc. No objection appears from the record to have been made in the court below to proceeding with the trial as against the answering defendant alone; and under section 579, Code Civ. Proc., the court was authorized to render judgment. Kelley v. Plover, 103 Cal. 36, 36 Pac. 1020. The precise question involved here was decided adversely to appellant's contention by this court in McKee v. Cunningham, 84 Pac. 260. Nor is such decision in conflict with the various decisions cited by appellant which have reference to the character of the action as applied to its subject-matter. The admitted facts demonstrate that the findings as to the statute of limitations could not have been otherwise than against appellant. They establish the conclusion that the statute has not run, and a finding thereon was not necessary to support a judgment. Lewis v. Adams, 70 Cal. 403, 11 Pac. 833, 59 Am. Rep. 423; Winslow v. Gohransen, 88 Cal. 451, 26 Pac. 504. The finding of the court as to nonpayment is positive as to the appellant-defendant, which must be taken as including payment by him, or by any other person for him or for his benefit, either associated with him in the joint enterprise or otherwise."

A more particular statement than is made in the foregoing opinion will show that there is no variance with respect to the contract alleged and that stated in the findings. It is not necessary in every case that there should be findings upon all the allegations of the complaint. The findings must respond to the issues only, and the true rule is that there must be a finding upon every material fact alleged in the complaint and controverted by the answer, provided it is necessary to support the judgment rendered in the action. The findings in this case conform to this requirement. The complaint alleges that "the defendants agreed to pay plaintiffs" for the services; that is, in effect, that all three defendants so agreed. The answer denies that the defendant Adams so agreed, and is silent in regard to the fact that the other defendants agreed to pay. Every fact not denied by the answer is admitted to be true, and hence the case was submitted with the admission that the other two defendants had agreed as alleged, leaving the court to find only as to whether or not Adams had agreed. The finding that Adams did agree to pay the plaintiff exactly covered the issue in this respect, so that, together with the admission, it was fully established that all the defendants had agreed as alleged in the complaint. As Adams alone had then appeared, judgment was properly given against him alone.

With respect to the finding of nonpayment, the rule applies that upon an appeal from the judgment roll alone the language of the findings is to be given the broadest possible meaning, whenever it is necessary to do so in order to support the judgment. If, by any usage of the English language, the finding that Adams has not paid for the plaintiff's services can be construed to imply that the debt to the plaintiff remains unpaid, then, upon this appeal, the finding is sufficient on that point. A payment by one joint obligor is, in contemplation of law and so far as the obligee is concerned, a payment by all. Each joint obligee is, in law, the agent of the others to make such payment. If one of the others had in fact paid the plaintiff, he would have paid for Adams, as well as himself, and it would be a legal truth that Adams had paid. So the statement that Adams has not paid, in its broadest sense, is a statement that he has not paid, either in person, or by his co-obligors. So understood, it means that none of them has paid and that the debt remains unpaid. This form of statement might be insufficient in a pleading, if the objection were raised by demurrer, but it is sufficient in a finding upon an appeal from the judgment roll alone.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILLER v. KERN COUNTY. (L. A. 1,741, 1,762.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1907.)

1. TAXATION—RECOVERY OF TAXES PAID—INTEREST.

In an action to recover invalid taxes paid under protest, under Pol. Code, § 3819, interest could only be allowed against the county from the time of the judgment declaring the money due.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1015.]

2. SAME — ASSESSMENT ROLLS OR BOOKS — STATUTORY PROVISIONS—AFFIDAVITS.

Pol. Code, § 3885, provides that no assessment or act relating to assessment or collection of taxes is illegal on account of informality, nor because the same was not completed within the time required by law. The clerk of the board of supervisors delivered the corrected assessment book to the county auditor, but did not affix to it an affidavit, as required by Pol. Code, § 3682, and the auditor delivered it to the tax collector, but also failed to attach his affidavit, as required by Pol. Code, § 3732. Held, that where the clerk and the auditor, respectively, made and attached the affidavits required by them before plaintiff made his protest or paid any taxes, and no injury was caused to him by the delay, the assessment was not invalid because of the delay.

3. SAME—NOTICE TO TAXPAYERS.

In an action to recover invalid taxes paid under protest, where on a former appeal it was decided that the failure of the tax collector to give notice to the taxpayers would not make the tax invalid, the giving of this notice before the affidavits of the clerk of the board of supervisors and the auditor were affixed to the assessment book, as required by Pol. Code, §§ 3682, 3732, did not render the tax invalid.

4. Appeal—Determination and Disposition of Cause—New Trial.

Where the facts upon which the decision of a case depends were agreed upon by the parties, and are fully set forth in the findings, there is no necessity for a new trial.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4597.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by Henry Miller against Kern county. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed and modified.

U. S. Webb, Atty Gen., J. W. P. Laird, and Rowen Irwin, for appellant. Isaac Frohman and Frohman & Jacobs, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This case is docketed under the above numbers; No. 1,741 being an appeal from the judgment, and No. 1,762 an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion for a new trial. We have concluded that the judgment must be reversed, with directions to enter a modified judgment on the findings. The action is brought under section 3819 of the Political Code, to recover taxes claimed to be illegal and paid under protest. The case was before this court upon a former appeal by the plaintiff from a judgment given in favor of the defendant, upon a demurrer to the complaint. Upon that appeal the judgment was reversed. Miller v. County of Kern, 137 Cal. 516, 70 Pac. 549. Many questions arising in the case were decided against the plaintiff on that appeal, and are not now argued. After the case again reached the lower court, an answer was filed denying the facts upon which the reversal was based. Upon the trial, an agreed statement of facts was filed, from which the court made findings and gave judgment in favor of plaintiff as prayed for.

1. Upon the former appeal it was decided that growing alfalfa is not subject to taxation, and hence that the item of $1,110, paid by plaintiff as taxes levied on certain growing alfalfa assessed at $60,000, was invalid. The court below, upon the subsequent trial, declared the entire tax invalid, and gave judgment for the taxes paid, with interest thereon from the date of payment to the time of trial. The appellant concedes the invalidity of the tax as to the sum of $1,110, levied upon growing alfalfa, but insists that no interest should have been allowed thereon, until after judgment. In this the appellant is correct. In Sav. & L. Soc. v. San Francisco, 131 Cal. 356, 63 Pac. 1013, and Columbia Sav. Bank v. Los Angeles, 137 Cal. 471, 70 Pac. 308, it was, in substance, held that in an action to recover taxes paid under protest, under section 3819 of the Political Code, interest after payment and before trial was not allowable, and that interest could only be allowed against the county and state from the time of the adjudication declaring the money due. The judgment now appealed from was rendered on November 22, 1904. It was correct to the extent of $1,110, and no more. Upon the going down of the remittitur the plaintiff will be entitled to judgment for that sum with legal interest from the date above given. Columbia Sav. Bank v. Los Angeles, supra.

2. The only points upon which it is now claimed that the balance of the tax paid was invalid are: First, that although the clerk of the board of supervisors deliverd the corrected assessment book for the year 1895 to the county auditor on the first Monday of August, 1895, the time required by section 3682, Pol. Code, he did not affix to it, nor accompany it with, an affidavit, as required by that section, that the affidavit was made and affixed to the book on November 1, 1895, and not before; and, second, that the auditor, after computing and extending the taxes on the book, delivered it to the tax collector on the second Monday of October, 1895, as required by section 3732 of the Political Code, and did not then, nor at all, until November 1, 1895, make or attach to the book his affidavit in authentication thereof, as required by that section, and that, in the meantime, the tax collector had published the notice to taxpayers, as required by section 3746, Pol. Code. The allegations of the complaint are that the corrected assessment book, when it was delivered by the clerk of the board of supervisors to the auditor, and thereafter when delivered by the auditor to the tax collector, was not accompanied by the affidavit required by section 3682, nor by any affidavit, nor was any affidavit of the auditor attached thereto, as required by section 3732, when it was delivered to the tax collector. In the decision upon the former appeal, these allegations were admitted by the demurrer, and as it did not appear, and was not presumed, that the affidavits had been attached after delivery, the case was decided upon the theory that they had never been attached, and were entirely lacking. Upon that assumption, the taxes were said to be void; but the question of their validity in case it should afterwards be shown that the proper affidavits were attached after the respective deliveries of the book was expressly left open and undecided. Upon the subsequent trial in the lower court, in response to the allegations of the answer, the court made findings that on November 1, 1895, after the assessment book was delivered to the tax collector, and after publication by him of the notice to taxpayers, the clerk of the board of supervisors and county auditor, respectively, made and attached to the book the affidavits required of them, respectively, by sections 3682 and 3732 aforesaid. The plaintiff did not make his protest, nor pay any taxes, until November 25, 1895. At that time the affidavits were attached as required. There is no claim that the delay in attaching them, or their absence prior to November 1st, caused any injury to the plaintiff or affected him in any manner. We are of the opinion that the defect previously existing in the assessment, by reason of the lack of these affidavits, was cured by the facts as above found by the court. The making and attaching of these affidavits to the assessment book is required, as stated by this court upon the former appeal, for the purpose of authentication. They are "acts relating to the assessment or collection of taxes," beyond doubt. Section 3885 of the Political Code is as follows: "No assessment or act relating to assessment or collection of taxes is illegal on account of informality, nor because the same was not completed within the time required by law." There was not an entire failure to perform the acts of making and affixing the affidavits. They were properly made and affixed, but not within the time specified in the Code. No injury was caused, and we cannot see that any injury could be caused, by the delay. By the express language of section 3885 the delay did not make the affidavits or the assessment in question illegal. They were lawfully made and attached, and if the assessment was previously invalid for lack of them, as had been, in effect, decided for the purposes of this case, it became valid and lawful the moment they became attached to the book on November 1, 1895. This is a reasonable doctrine, and we perceive no benefit, public or private, to be derived from holding the contrary. It is fully supported by the decisions in similar cases. Buswell v. Supervisors, 116 Cal. 354, 48 Pac. 226; People v. Eureka, etc., Co., 48 Cal. 146; Hart v. Plum, 14 Cal. 155; Payne v. San Francisco, 3 Cal. 126; State v. Mining Co., 15 Nev. 388; State v. Western U. T. Co., 4 Nev. 344; Walker v. Edmunds, 197 Pa. 647, 47 Atl. 868; Hooker v. Bond, 118 Mich. 257, 76 N. W. 405; 1 Cooley on Taxation (3d Ed.) 486.

It is suggested that the fact that the tax collector had given the notice to the taxpayers, as required by section 3746, before these affidavits were attached, made the defect incurable, unless a new notice was given thereafter, which does not appear to have been done. This proposition is sufficiently answered by the decision upon the former appeal in this case, wherein it was held that an entire failure to give this notice would not make the tax invalid. 137 Cal. 524, 70 Pac. 549. Conceding, therefore, that the tax could not lawfully have been collected prior to November 1st, and assuming that then, for the first time, the tax collector received a valid assessment book for that year, and that his previous notice to taxpayers was ineffectual, his subsequent failure to give the notice would not affect the validity of the tax, nor authorize its recovery after payment under protest.

The facts upon which the decision of this case depends, having been agreed upon by the parties, and being fully set forth in the findings, there is no necessity for another trial. The order denying the new trial is affirmed without costs to either party. The judgment is reversed, with costs, and the cause remanded to the superior court, with directions to that court to enter judgment in favor of the plaintiff against the defendant for the amount of $1,110, and legal interest thereon from November 22, 1904, to the date of such judgment, with costs of suit, other than the costs of the appeals.

KERN VALLEY WATER CO. v. KERN COUNTY. (L. A. 1,742.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 3, 1907.)

1. TAXATION — RECOVERY OF TAX PAID — INTEREST.

In an action to recover invalid taxes paid under protest, under Pol. Code, § 3819, interest is not recoverable on the amount paid before judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 45, Taxation, § 1015.]

2. APPEAL — DISPOSITION OF CAUSE — NEW TRIAL—NECESSITY.

Where, in a proceeding to recover taxes paid under protest, the findings of the court are in accordance with an agreed statement of facts signed by the parties, and the rights are fully disclosed thereby so that justice can be done by a modification of the judgment which includes items not authorized by the findings, no further proceedings are necessary.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4484.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; J. W. Mahon, Judge.

Action by the Kern Valley Water Company against the county of Kern. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Modified and affirmed.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., J. W. P. Laird, and Rowen Irwin, for appellant. Isaac Frohman and Frohman & Jacobs, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from the judgment upon the judgment roll. The action is brought under section 3819 of the Political Code, to recover taxes alleged to be illegal and paid under protest.

1. So far as the claim of illegality is founded upon the failure of the clerk of the board of supervisors and the county auditor, respectively, to attach an affidavit to the assessment book, as required of them, respectively, by sections 3682 and 3732 of the Political Code prior to November 1, 1895, the decision must be against the plaintiff, upon the authority of the opinion in the case of Miller v. County of Kern (L. A. No. 1,741) 90 Pac. 119, decided concurrently with the present case, wherein the question is sufficiently discussed.

2. The judgment for the plaintiff was for the sum of $1,900.96. The items composing this sum were $1,110, assessed upon a certain canal; $67.52, assessed upon certain lands; and $723.44, allowed by the court as interest on the first two items from the time of payment thereof under protest, until November 22, 1904, the date of the judgment. Upon the authority of Sav. & Loan Soc. v. San Francisco, 131 Cal. 363, 63 Pac. 665, Columbia Sav. Bank v. Los Angeles, 137 Cal. 471, 70 Pac. 308, and Miller v. County of Kern, supra, the allowance of interest thus made must be held erroneous.

3. The canal above mentioned was situated in more than one school district, and also in more than one road district. The assessment, however, did not show in what school districts and road districts it was thus situated, nor were the respective parts of the canal situated in the respective road districts separately assessed, or otherwise designated, so that the tax due in each district could be ascertained therefrom. This rendered the tax on that item of the assessment void. It was so decided in Kern V. W. Co. v. County of Kern, 137 Cal. 511, 70 Pac. 476, which was a former appeal in this case. The item of $67.52 was claimed to be void for the same reasons, and the facts were so alleged in the complaint. When the cause again came up in the lower court after the reversal on the former appeal, issue was taken on these allegations by the answer, and the court in response thereto made findings that the allegations of the complaint were untrue, and that the assessment book did show in what school districts and road districts, respectively, the lands were situated, and that they were separately assessed accordingly. We are at a loss to understand the reason for including this item in the judgment, and, as the respondent advances none, we presume it was an inadvertence. The judgment is to this extent erroneous. The facts were found by the court in accordance with an agreed statement thereof signed by the parties, and the rights are fully disclosed thereby. No further proceedings appear to be necessary. The appellant does not claim that the judgment is erroneous in any other particulars than those above given. Justice can be done by a modification of the judgment by this court.

The judgment of the superior court appealed from is modified by striking therefrom the item of $723.44, allowed as interest, and the further sum of $67.52, included therein for taxes paid on property of the plaintiff other than the canal. The judgment as thus modified will be for the sum of $1,110, and will stand as a judgment of its date, November 22, 1904, and is to bear interest from and after that date at the legal rate of 7 per cent. per annum, and as so modified the judgment is affirmed. The appellant will recover the costs of appeal.

JACKSON v. PORTER LAND & WATER CO. (L. A. 1761.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 4, 1907. Rehearing Denied May 4, 1907.)

SALES—ACCEPTANCE—WAIVER OF DEFECTS.

Where a purchaser under an executory contract for the sale of personal property finds from examination that the property does not conform to the contract, he must promptly reject it, and a delay of nearly three months in rejecting a pumping plant, during which time the purchaser operated the plant for his own benefit, without notice to the seller of any insufficiency, was equivalent to an acceptance of the plant, and a waiver of any defect therein.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 43, Sales, § 457.]

Department 1. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; M. T. Allen, Judge.

Action by Byron Jackson against the Porter Land & Water Company. From a judgment for plaintiff and an order denying a new trial, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Ward Chapman and J. G. Chapman, for appellant. John D. Pope, for respondent.

LORIGAN, J. This action was brought to recover the contract price for furnishing and erecting pumping machinery.

The trial court found: That the parties entered into a contract on June 2, 1902, whereby plaintiff was to erect on the premises of defendant a pumping plant consisting of a 35 actual horse power Olds distillate engine with a 110-gallon oil tank, together with a horizontal centrifugal pump of a capacity to elevate 350 inches of water 24 feet high, said plant, and all connections to be first class and connected with defendant's 15 wells, the plant to be completed within 30 days and guarantied to perform the work as specified. the purchase price being $3,250. The time provided in the agreement for installing the pumping plant was waived by the defendant. That plaintiff performed all the conditions of the agreement except that he did not erect or furnish a 35 actual horse power engine as provided in the contract, but, on the contrary, the engine erected by plaintiff on said premises and as part of said pumping plant was materially less than 35 horse power. That said engine was not capable of providing the necessary power to raise the amount of water in said contract required. That on the 12th of August, 1902, the pumping plant including the engine, was received by defendant, but was not to be considered accepted till examined by an expert to be called by defendant. That said pumping plant was operated by defendant continuously from the 12th day of August, 1902, to the 7th day of September, 1902, when an expert called by defendant examined the same and found only a trivial defect in the governor attached to the engine, which was promptly remedied, and thereafter defendant continued to operate said pumping plant in pumping water for its irrigating system until about the 5th day of November, 1902, at which last date defendant discontinued the use of the engine and pump, constituting part of said pumping plant, but did not notify plaintiff that it had done so until somewhere between the 15th and 30th days of that month. That some time during the latter half of the month of November, 1902, defendant notified plaintiff that the said engine was not of the horse power provided for in the contract. That during the entire time defendant was using said pumping plant it knew the engine was not of the horse power provided in the contract. That after November 5, 1902, when defendant ceased operating said engine and pump, it detached from nearly all of its 15 wells the horizontal pipe furnished by plaintiff as part of the pumping plant and which was about 1,600 feet in length, and had been laid in an open trench with suction pipes on each side of said 15 wells from which the said pumping plant was designed and intended to draw water, but left said 1,600 feet of pipe in the trench with openings made by detaching the suction pipe leading down into the wells, through which openings water from defendant's flowing wells and seepage waters coming into said trench were allowed to enter said pipe, and defendant removed the plug from the lower end of said pipe so as to permit water to flow through the same into defendant's irrigating system, and thereby continuously supplied water to the customers of defendant from the time when it ceased to operate said engine and pump. That without the knowledge or consent of plaintiff in October, 1903, defendant caused said engine to be operated by an hydraulic engineer for the portions of two days for the purpose of testing and ascertaining the horse power of said engine. In addition the court found that by taking the pumping plant, including the said engine, into its possession on the 12th of August, 1902, and by operating the same for a period of nearly three months, to wit, until the 5th day of November, 1902, without any notice to the plaintiff of the inefficiency of said machinery, or that the same was not satisfactory, the defendant accepted the said plant, notwithstanding it was not in accordance with the contract. Upon these findings judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the full amount of the purchase price. This appeal is taken by the defendant from the judgment and the order of the court denying its motion for a new trial.

It is insisted by appellant that the evidence is insufficient to justify the finding that defendant accepted the plant as furnished by the plaintiff, and that the judgment was not warranted by the findings.

The point that the findings were not justified by the evidence is, we think, untenable. The evidence on the question of acceptance, as upon all the other facts in issue, except the terms of the contract and the incapacity of the engine to raise the amount of water required by the agreement, is conflicting, but there was certainly sufficient evidence to be gathered from the conflict supporting all the findings made by the court. It is true that the court was in error as to some dates mentioned in the findings and in some minor particulars, but we do not consider that these substantially affect the sufficiency of the findings.

There was evidence in the case showing that under the contract between them the plaintiff set up on the premises of defendant, in connection with its irrigating system, a pumping plant claimed by plaintiff to be of the character called for in the agreement. The defendant had fifteen wells to be operated by this plant, and, the machinery having been installed, pipes laid, and connections made with all of these wells, a test operation of the plant was commenced by the plaintiff on August 1, 1902. It was provided in the contract that the plant should be installed by plaintiff in complete running order, and that he should leave his expert with it for six days to instruct the engineer of defendant how to operate the plant, and it was in harmony with this provision of the agreement and to test the plant that a six days' run by the expert of plaintiff was commenced on August 1, 1902. The evidence of plaintiff shows that at the end of that time the engine, pump, suction pipe, and other connections worked perfectly, and that the only difficulty which arose with the machinery during that period, but which was overcome, was in the circulating pump, the pulley of which had to be changed several times. The run during these six days, however, demonstrated that the engine furnished and operated by plaintiff as part of the plant was not of 35 actual horse power as provided in the contract, but of very much less power; that it was incapable of raising the quantity of water called for and incapable of raising more than a little over one-fourth of the amount. This was known to the defendant at that time. After this run of six days plaintiff saw the superintendent of the defendant company and told him that the plant had been run six days and was alright. The superintendent insisted that it had not been run six days without touching the plant, and that plaintiff would have to have his expert run it another six days. This plaintiff did, commencing on August 6th, and ran it to the 12th of August. The engine, pump, and connections worked perfectly, but this operation still demonstrated that the engine was incapable of lifting a greater quantity than previously pumped. On August 12, 1902, plaintiff again sought the superintendent of defendant and asked him to accept the plant or take it under his charge. The superintendent said that the plaintiff could turn the plant over to him, but, as to acceptance, replied "that he would have his own expert go out to the plant at some future time—at some time in the near future, immediately—and look over the ground and see if all the conditions of the contract were fulfilled." Plaintiff immediately turned the plant over to defendant, whose engineer thereafter, and while it was in operation, handled it. About August 26, 1902, while the engineer of defendant was operating the plant, some trouble with the pump was reported to plaintiff, who sent a man out to inspect it. He found that for lack of oil the babbitting had melted and stuck onto the shaft of the pump. The shaft was taken out, repaired, and placed back. Thereafter, and towards the end of August, 1902, defendant engaged an expert and sent him out to the plant to examine it. The expert made the examination and made a written report to defendant, stating that he had examined the pumping plant, "and found it to be in good working order, with the exception of the gas engine. That is out of adjustment. When this is adjusted I think the plant will work satisfactorily." This expert, called as a witness, testified that the adjustment of the engine referred to in his report had relation to the governor on the engine, which needed repairing. Plaintiff, having been notified that the governor needed adjustment, sent on September 6, 1902, one of his machinists to see what was at fault. He examined the engine and on the trial testified that he found the distillate they were using in the engine was very poor; that it tended to cause the electrodes—that is, the sparking points—to become corroded in a very short space of time; that it was so with the engine he was examining; that, when he came back from the inspection, he sent out another electrode. The court was warranted from the evidence in finding that these two matters—the corroding of the electrodes and the babbitting of the pumping shaft—were the only faults found in the perfect operation of the machinery; that they were not incident to any defects of the machinery itself, but the result of either a use of poor distillate, or proceeded from carelessness or want of familiarity on the part of defendant's engineer with the operation of this make of engine installed by plaintiff; that these were the only matters affecting the operation of the engine which were called to plaintiff's attention, were trivial and promptly remedied, and hence the court was justified in finding that all the conditions of the contract with plaintiff, save as to the capacity of the engine to be furnished, were performed.

Referring to the findings in the light of the evidence thus far recited, it is apparent that the court was in error in finding that the examination of the pumping plant by the expert of defendant was made on September 7, 1902—it is apparent from the date of the expert's report to defendant that it was as early at least as August 29, 1902—and the finding that a defective governor on the engine was repaired, it apparently was a defective electrode; but these are immaterial errors, and we mention them only because appellant refers to them.

Proceeding now to a further consideration of the evidence: It shows that aside from these defects referred to no complaint of the operation of the pumping machine was made to plaintiff; that from the time the plant was received by the plaintiff on August 12th, though not then accepted, and from the time the expert of defendant reported upon it towards the end of August, 1902, down to October 5, 1902, the plant was operated by the engineer of defendant, was used in the business of defendant in pumping water for its irrigation system, with full knowledge on the part of the defendant that it was not nearly the horse power capacity which plaintiff had contracted to furnish, and was not and could not be operated so as to lift the amount of water it was agreed it should; that with this knowledge of its incapacity to perform the work the defendant used it to pump such water as its capacity would furnish, and at no time during that period while it was so using it made any objection or complaint that it was not as contracted for, nor notified the plaintiff that it would not be accepted until long after October 5, 1902, the date when the engine and pump were received by defendant.

Defendant, it is true, contends that during all this period it was experimenting with the plant and endeavored to make the plant work successfully. But as there was evidence that at the first test, with the machinery working perfectly, it was demonstrated that the engine did not have nearly the capacity contracted for, it is apparent that no amount of experimental work could increase such capacity, and it was demonstrated during its entire operation, at the original test, after the defendant had taken it in charge, when its expert reported upon it, and all during the month or more thereafter while defendant continued operating it, that it was incapable of at all pumping the water it was contracted to do. The trouble with the engine was of such a character that no amount of experimenting, repairing, or adjusting of machinery could remedy it. It did not have the horse power which was contracted for, and there was nothing that could be done with it to give it that power. It was impossible to have it operate to the capacity it was agreed it should. The only remedy for this defect was to remove the engine and obtain another that did have the requisite horse power. Defendant knew this from the very start—the very first test—and when it continued to use and operate the plant with this engine, particularly for over a month after it had sent this expert to examine and report on it with a view of either accepting or rejecting it, and with knowledge that the engine could not possibly develop the horse power agreed to, and without any notice to plaintiff that the engine was insufficient or unsatisfactory, or that it would not be accepted, the court was justified in finding from the evidence that defendant had, in fact, accepted the engine, notwithstanding it was not in accordance with the contract. It is true that the court was in error in finding that the defendant actually used the engine and pump up to November 5, 1902. The insertion of the month of "November" was probably a clerical error. The evidence showed they were used up to October 5, 1902, when defendant removed it. However, we think this is not a material error. Eliminating dates and leaving the finding stand as a general one of acceptance of the plant, it is still sustained by the evidence.

And the finding that defendant accepted the plant, though not as contracted for, being sustained by the evidence, the judgment rendered for plaintiff was proper. The rule is elementary as to the respective rights of the parties under an executory contract for the sale of personal property. As to the purchaser he is bound to accept the property, provided it conforms to the terms of the contract, or, if not according to the contract, he may reject or refuse to accept it. Although the property may not be of the quality or description contracted for, he may nevertheless, if he so elect, waive the defect, and acceptance of the property offered constitutes such a waiver. When personal property is tendered or delivered to a purchaser in fulfillment of a contract for the purchase thereof, the duty devolves upon him to make an examination of the property tendered or delivered for the purpose of determining whether it fills the contract, and, if from such examination he finds it does not, he must promptly reject it. This duty of inspection for the purpose of determining whether the property complies with the contract must be exercised within a reasonable time, and what is a reasonable time depends upon the circumstances of each particular case.

Applying these general rules to the matter at bar: The engine to operate the pumping plant was to be of a certain description and of certain specified effective power, to be installed and put in running order by plaintiff. He furnished an engine and plant, and put it in running order. This did not vest the title in defendant. It was not required to accept the engine unless it conformed to the contract. This could only be determined upon trial. Upon trial as early as August 12, 1902, it was demonstrated that the engine was absolutely incapable of pumping the quantity of water stipulated for, and, as early as that date defendant knew it. It was the duty of the defendant after such demonstration to then act promptly and refuse to accept the engine. Instead of doing this, it went on using the engine in the regular conduct of its business, and for its own advantage, for almost two months before it notified plaintiff that it would not accept it. This was not only not acting promptly, but it was an unreasonable and unwarranted delay amounting to an election to accept the engine, though it was not of the capacity which had been contracted for. And the defendant, having thus accepted the engine, was precluded from claiming that it was not of the character provided for in the contract, and plaintiff was entitled to a judgment for the purchase price as if the engine contracted for had actually been installed.

As generally sustaining these views, we cite Reed v. Randall, 29 N. Y. 358, 86 Am. Dec. 305; Boughton v. Standish, 48 Vt. 595; McBride v. McClure, 49 Ill. App. 612; Boothby v. The judgment and order appealed from are affirmed.

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

1. CARRIERS—CARRIAGE OF PASSENGERS—CARE REQUIRED OF CARRIER.

A common carrier of passengers must exercise the utmost care, diligence, and foresight of a very cautious person, and is responsible for any injury to a passenger except that occasioned by inevitable casualty or some other cause which human foresight could not prevent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 9, Carriers, § 1087.]

2. DAMAGES—ELEMENTS OF DAMAGES—INJURIES TO PERSON.

Where a person injured in a street car accident was rendered to some extent unable to care for herself, and her injury necessitated the hiring of somebody to care for her, such result was an element to be considered in assessing her damages.

3. APPEAL—REVIEW—HARMLESS ERROR—EVIDENCE INADMISSIBLE UNDER PLEADINGS.

The introduction of evidence in a personal injury case as to the extent and permanence of plaintiff's injuries, although inadmissible under the pleadings, was harmless error where the plaintiff had submitted before the trial to a physical examination by surgeons selected by the defendant to ascertain what her injuries were, since the evidence could not have operated as a surprise.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4153.]

4. SAME—MOTION TO STRIKE OUT—REFUSAL.

The error in refusing to strike out an opinion of a witness, in a suit for injuries caused by a street car, that the car was moving at "an unpardonable high rate of speed," was not prejudicial where it was conceded that the car had escaped all control and had descended a grade at a dangerous rate of speed.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4161.]

5. EVIDENCE — SUBJECTS OF EXPERT TESTIMONY—MATTERS OF COMMON KNOWLEDGE.

It does not require an expert to testify as to the suffering of an injured person, but the testimony of any one of ordinary intelligence and experience is competent.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 20, Evidence, § 2240.]

6. APPEAL—REVIEW—EXCLUDING PROPER EVIDENCE—HARMLESS ERROR.

The improper rejecting of hypothetical questions was harmless error where, by a mere change in the form of the questions, all the evidence sought to be obtained by the rejected questions was introduced.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 3, Appeal and Error, § 4194.]

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Santa Barbara County; Felix W. Ewing, Judge.

Action by Clemence Kline against the Santa Barbara Consolidated Railway Company. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

H. H. Trowbridge and Henley C. Booth, for appellant. W. S. Day and John J. Squier, for respondent.

BEATTY, C. J. On July 26, 1903, the defendant, a street railway corporation engaged in operating electric cars in the city of Santa Barbara, received the plaintiff, a woman 65 years of age, as a passenger in one of its cars at the terminus of the line immediately in front of the old Franciscan Mission in said city. When the plaintiff boarded the car, she seated herself on one of the rear outside seats, which was long enough to seat three persons comfortably, and which ran parallel with the axis of the car. Immediately in front of her was a standard carrying a handrail, and extending from the side steps of the car to the roof. After the car had been under way a few yards it gained speed despite the fact that the motorman and conductor applied the brakes, which were of the hand-lever pattern, and when the car—the speed having become greatly accelerated—reached a curve 974 feet from the mission, the lurch of the car in rounding the curve threw the plaintiff from her seat to the ground, causing the injuries for which this action was brought. The action was defended upon two grounds: First. That the loss of control of the car was due to the fact that the county of Santa Barbara shortly before the date of the accident, in applying crude oil to the roadway, had left a puddle of oil at the extreme end of the track, which had become covered with dust; that the car on which plaintiff became a passenger, being an excursion car, was run out to the end of the track to avoid interruption to the regular cars; and that thereby, without the knowledge of defendant, its officers, or the car crew, its wheels and brake blocks had become saturated with oil, and useless as a means of controlling the car on the down grade from the mission to the curve. Second. That the plaintiff was warned of the situation in time to have secured herself from any danger of being thrown off the car by simply grasping the standard post in front of her, and that, having neglected this precaution, she was guilty of contributory negligence. In mitigation of damages the defendant offered to prove that the injuries resulting from the accident would have been much less serious if the plaintiff had been properly treated by the surgeon employed by her. The case was tried by jury and a verdict returned in favor of plaintiff for $8,000. Defendant appeals from the judgment. The record here includes a bill of exceptions embodying the evidence, and the exceptions taken at the trial to the rulings of the court upon objections to evidence, and in giving and refusing requests to charge.

The cause was originally transferred for hearing to the District Court of Appeal, where the judgment of the superior court was affirmed. Upon petition of appellant it was ordered to a rehearing in this court, principally for the purpose of giving further consideration to the questions raised as to the correctness of two instructions given to the jury by the trial judge, and approved by the District Court of Appeal. Besides these questions, counsel for appellant insisted at the rehearing, as they did in their petition, upon further consideration of some of their assignments of error, not expressly dealt with in the opinion of the district court of appeal. The most important of these questions in its bearing upon this case, and upon other cases likely to arise in which it will be invoked as a precedent, relates to the degree of care required to be exercised by common carriers of passengers, and the duty imposed upon such carriers in the exercise of that care.

In submitting the case to the jury the judge of the superior court gave, among others, the following instruction: "Contributory negligence on the part of a passenger cannot be presumed from the mere fact of injury, but must be proved. On the other hand, the proof of an injury to a passenger on the car of a common carrier casts upon the common carrier the burden of proving that the injury was occasioned by inevitable casualty, or some other cause which human care and foresight could not prevent, or by contributory negligence of the plaintiff, unless the proof on the part of the plaintiff tends to show that the injury was occasioned by the contributory negligence of the passenger or by inevitable casualty, or by some other cause which human care and foresight could not prevent." The objection to this instruction is directed to the words: "Occasioned by inevitable casualty or some other cause which human foresight could not prevent." This is construed by counsel as requiring a degree of care which would be the utmost that the human mind is capable of imagining, and such they contend is not the law. But, whatever the instruction may be held to mean, it cannot be denied that this court, in a number of instances, has approved it as a correct statement of the law, so that either counsel are mistaken in their construction, or the rule of law is as stringent as their construction makes it. As long ago as 1859 in deciding the case of Fairchild v. California Stage Co., 13 Cal. 604, Justice Baldwin, delivering the opinion of the court, quoted with entire approval the unanimous decision of the Virginia Court of Appeals that "passenger carriers bind themselves to carry safely those whom they admit into their coaches, as far as human care and foresight will go—that is, for the utmost care and diligence of very cautious persons—and, of course, they are responsible for any, even the slightest, neglect"; citing Story on Bailments, §§ 601, 601a, where that author uses this language: "And the onus probandi is on the proprietors of the coach to establish that there has been no negligence whatsoever, and that the damage or injury has been occasioned by inevitable casualty or by some cause which human care and foresight could not prevent."

This decision has since been approved and followed in several other similar cases, and as to the point under consideration remains unquestioned. In substance the rule there affirmed has been made statute law in section 2100 of the Civil Code, which requires of the carrier of passengers the use of the "utmost care and diligence." And this as appears from the passage quoted from the Virginia case (Farish v. Reigle, 11 Grat. 711, 62 Am. Dec. 666), and approved by this court, is construed to mean all the care which human foresight will suggest. In another case which was decided before the adoption of the Civil Code, this court cited section 601 of Story on Bailments as authority for the rule that "carriers of passengers bind themselves to carry safely those whom they take into their coaches or cars as far as human care and foresight will go; that is, for the utmost care and diligence of very cautious persons." Wheaton v. N. B. & M. R. R. Co., 36 Cal. 593. And in that case, the court, after stating the rule proceeded to explain it as follows: "Whether in case of injury they have exercised such care and diligence is to be determined in view of the facts and circumstances which existed prior to the accident, and they cannot be held not to have done so because, after the accident, it may appear that it could have been avoided by precaution which a very cautious person, not knowing that the accident was about to occur, would not have taken. But this form of expressing the rule is not more clear than the bare statement that the carrier must exercise the utmost care, diligence and foresight of a very cautious person." These extracts from the opinions of this court in a stagecoach case, and a street railway case, decided before the adoption of our Civil Code, show that the language of instruction 7 given in this case had not only been approved as a correct statement of the rule of law, but had been explained and construed as the equivalent and no more than the equivalent of the rule enacted in section 2100 of that Code. It cannot be error, therefore, for a trial court, in submitting a case of this kind to the jury, to state the rule in its approved form, and, if counsel have reason to fear that the jury may understand the rule so expressed as requiring more than the utmost caution of very cautious persons, in view of the circumstances known or imputed to the knowledge of the carrier before the accident, they have the right to propose an instruction embodying the proper qualification. Other cases decided since the adoption of the Code rule are in perfect accord with those previously decided. See Jamison v. S. J. & S. Co., 55 Cal. 593. In Treadwell v. Whittier, 80 Cal. 574, 22 Pac. 266, 5 L. R. A. 498, 13 Am. St. Rep. 175, there is a very full review of the authorities on this point, citing not only Story on Bailments, but Cooley on Torts, and a large number of decisions of courts in other jurisdictions, all supporting the rule in terms or substance, as it was given in this case. It was approved in terms in Mitchell v. S. P. R. R. Co., 87 Cal. 64, 75, 25 Pac. 245, 11 L. R. A. 130, and in the very recent case of Boone v. Oakland Traction Co., 139 Cal. 494, 73 Pac. 243. Counsel contends that what was said in the two cases last cited was dictum, because the judgments against the carriers were reversed on other grounds. But it was not dictum—the point was involved in each case, and was certain to arise on the new trial which was ordered. It was therefore a point to be decided, and, being decided, became in each instance the law of the case. Instructions couched in terms similar to those in question may have been disapproved in other jurisdictions, but here the form in which the rule was stated has been so often approved, and the means of preventing its misconstruction or misapplication are so entirely within the power of the defense in actions for damages that this court could not with any consistency or justice set aside its previous rulings in this class of cases. The propriety of this conclusion could not be more clearly illustrated than it is by the fact that in this case counsel for the defendant asked, and the court gave, the following instruction to the jury: "(5) You are instructed that, while a street railway company does not insure the absolute safety of its passengers, it is the duty of the street railway company, and was the duty of the defendant in this case, to do all that human care, vigilance, and foresight could under the circumstances, considering the character and mode of conveyance, to prevent accident to passengers; and you are instructed that if the injury to the plaintiff was caused solely by the brakes not working and the reason of the brakes not working was oil on the track, and that the defendant did not know that such oil was on the track at the time of the accident and should not have known in the exercise of such care, vigilance, and foresight, then the injury to the plaintiff was caused by a mere accident for which the defendant is not responsible and your verdict should be for the defendant." From which it appears that so far from questioning the rule at the trial counsel for the defendant requested the court to give it in the very words complained of, with an explanation which freed it completely from the construction which they say renders it erroneous.

The following is the eighth instruction, given to the jury at the request of the plaintiff: "(8) If the plaintiff is entitled to recover, the measure of her recovery is what is denominated compensatory damages; that is, such sum as will compensate her for any injury she has sustained. The elements entering into such damages are the following: (1) Such sum as will compensate her for the expenses, if any, she has incurred in caring for and nursing herself during any period she was disabled by the injury, not exceeding the sum of $497; (2) the value of her time while she will necessarily be disabled as the result of the injury; and (3) such reasonable sum as the jury shall award her on account of any pain and anxiety she may have suffered, or will necessarily suffer, by reason of her injury. The first of these elements is the subject of direct proof, and is to be determined by the jury on the evidence they have before them; but the second and third elements are from necessity left to the sound discretion of the jury, however the damages in all cannot exceed the amounts alleged in the complaint." It is contended that the second clause of this instruction contains an erroneous and misleading statement of the law, and that it must have led the jury to render what appellant views as a verdict excessive in amount. The evidence to be considered in determining the propriety of this instruction was to the effect that the plaintiff was a woman, 65 years of age, engaged in no gainful occupation, but capable, before the accident, of taking care of herself, and accustomed to active outdoor exercise. She lived with her married daughters, part of the time in Santa Barbara, with one, and at other times in Alameda with another. The effect of the injuries sustained at the time of the accident was to make her permanently lame, and to render her to some extent unable to care for herself—a disability continuing up to the time of the trial, and, according to the testimony of her surgeon, likely to be permanent. This would probably impose upon her the necessity of hiring the services of some one to do for her what she could no longer do for herself, and this was an element of damage which she had a right to ask the jury to consider. The value of a person's time is the equivalent of his power to earn money, in a gainful occupation, when he is so engaged, and ordinarily means nothing more. But it is not doing violence to language to say that the ability of a person to care for himself, and the practice of doing so, instead of hiring the services of others, gives a value to his time, even if he is earning nothing, and, if so, the deprivation of such ability by the wrongful act of another imposes upon the wrongdoer the obligation to compensate him for the value of the time he can no longer employ in his own service. Construed in this light the instruction was not erroneous, though it might have been more clearly expressed. The decision in Storrs v. L. A. Traction Co., 134 Cal. 91, 66 Pac. 72, is not authority for or against the point here decided. The instruction sustained in that case was different from that here in question, but it does not follow that this instruction is therefore wrong. Whether this element of damage was sufficiently pleaded, in view of the special demurrer of defendant, may admit of doubt. But if so, the error in admitting evidence as to the extent and permanence of the injuries sustained by plaintiff cannot have operated as a surprise to the defendant, for it appears that she had submitted before the trial to a physical examination by surgeons selected by the defendant for the purpose of ascertaining what her injuries were, and whether they had been properly treated. The error, if any, was therefore harmless.

The court did err in refusing to strike out the opinion of the witness Lutgen that the car was moving at "an unpardonable high rate of speed," but this error could have had no prejudicial effect in view of the conceded fact that the car escaped all control and descended the grade at a dangerous rate of speed, which the combined efforts of motorman and conductor were insufficient to arrest or moderate.

Numerous exceptions were taken by defendant to the admission of evidence, and refusals to strike out evidence of the suffering endured by the plaintiff in consequence of her injuries. A bystander testified that immediately after the accident she was unable to stand and suffered intensely. Her daughter testified that, when she was brought home, she was unable to walk, and was suffering intensely, and that she continued for days to suffer, could not be moved, etc. A trained nurse in charge of the case testified to the same thing, and the attending surgeon testified that her sufferings, were severe. The objections to this line of testimony are that nonexpert witnesses were allowed to give their opinions as to her inability to stand and walk, and as to her suffering, and that it was error to permit them to testify to anything beyond her acts and exclamations indicative of present pain. The witness who testified she could not stand was one of those who assisted in lifting her from the ground and placing her on the car after the accident. Her daughter saw her carried by four men from the car to her house. The trained nurse and the surgeon had nursed and attended her during the progress of her partial recovery. All of the evidence on the part of the defendant, as well as that of the plaintiff, was to the effect that the injury to plaintiff consisted, in addition to superficial bruises, of a fracture of the neck of the femur. In view of this undisputed evidence as to the nature of the principal injury to plaintiff, the evidence that she could not stand or walk after the accident must have been harmless, for a court ought to take judicial notice of the fact that a woman with a broken thigh-bone will scarcely be able to walk or stand alone. As to the suffering, that also would necessarily follow from such an injury. But the evidence was not incompetent. It does not require an expert to tell whether a person suffers. The appearance of a person who suffers severely is sufficient to manifest his condition to anyone of ordinary intelligence and experience. These witnesses had all observed her, and heard her groans and complaints, and were competent to give an opinion as to her suffering.

There was a conflict of evidence as to whether plaintiff sustained an impacted or unimpacted fracture of the neck of the femur. The surgeon who attended her testified that it was impacted, and it appeared that he had treated her according to that diagnosis. The surgeons who examined her for defendant testified that the fracture was unimpacted, and for the purpose of showing that the treatment she had received aggravated her injury one of these surgeons was asked two hypothetical questions, to each of which the court sustained objections. These objections, in my opinion, should have been overruled, but here again the error was harmless, for, by a mere change in the form of his questions, the defendant's counsel brought out fully the opinion of the witness as to the nature of the injury, the error in treating it, and the injurious results of the treatment.

Appellant, not claiming that plaintiff's instruction No. 7 above quoted is erroneous in any particular except that which has been already considered, makes the point that instructions were given at its request which conflict with No. 7 in other material particulars. If this was so, it would not be a reason for setting aside the verdict, but there is no conflict. Defendant's instructions merely stated, rather too favorably to it, certain qualifications of the rule announced in No. 7.

We have here considered all the points to which our attention has been directed in the petition for a rehearing, and do not deem it necessary to notice particularly other points made prior to the hearing in the district court of appeal.

We think the record presents no material error, and the judgment is therefore affirmed.

151 Cal. 40

ROBINSON v. KERRIGAN, Judge. (S. F. 4,659.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 5, 1907. Rehearing Denied May 4, 1907.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW—DUE PROCESS OF LAW—SERVICE OF PROCESS.

Act March 17, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 138, c. 110), provides for the registration of land titles through proceedings in the superior court, whereby the official certificate will always show the state of title. Under section 13, notice of the hearing of the petition must be given by publication, and also in the manner prescribed for the service of ordinary process to all parties shown by the petition or abstract of title to be interested, etc. Section 17 provides the final decree shall be conclusive of the title against all persons, known or unknown, whether named in the proceedings or not. Held, that the law is not unconstitutional as depriving persons of property without due process of law, because precluding persons who may have interest in the land, but whose names are not specified in the proceedings.

2. SAME — DESTRUCTION OF GOVERNMENTAL FUNCTIONS—JUDICIAL POWERS.

The proceedings authorized by the statute are judicial, and not administrative, and hence do not infringe the constitutional provision for the division of governmental functions.

3. STATUTES—SPECIAL—VALIDITY.

The act is not invalid as special legislation, because it makes special provision regarding the statute of limitations and the rights of purchasers in good faith of land registered under the act.

4. SAME—POWER OF STATE—LAND TITLES.

The state has full control of the mode of transferring and establishing land titles, may provide a special proceeding in rem to fix the status of land, and declare the nature of the titles and interests therein, and the persons in whom such titles and interests are then vested, and may do this whenever it may be considered necessary or likely to promote the general welfare.

5. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW — EXECUTIVE OFFICERS—EXERCISE OF JUDICIAL FUNCTION.

Act March 17, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 138, c. 110), providing for the registration of land titles, and providing that the registrar shall note upon the duplicate certificate of title in his office the existence and general character of instruments creating liens, trusts, etc., affecting the land described in the certificate, does not violate the constitutional inhibition against the executive department exercising the functions of another department, though the registrar is called upon to determine the legal effect of such instruments.

6. STATUTES—TITLE—EXPRESSION OF SUBJECT.

Act March 17, 1897 (St. 1897, p. 138, c. 110), "An act for the certification of land titles and the simplification of the transfer of real estate," does not violate Const. art. 4, § 24, requiring every act to embrace but one subject, which shall be expressed in its title, because the act makes it a felony to fraudulently procure a false certificate, because the county recorder is made registrar, because the registrar is prohibited from practicing law, etc.; all of such provisions being germane to the general subject expressed in the title.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 44, Statutes, §§ 136–150.]

In Bank. Application by Charlotte Robinson for a writ of mandamus to the superior court of the city and county of San Francisco, and Frank H. Kerrigan, judge thereof. Granted.

Walter H. Robinson (Robert T. Devlin, of counsel), for petitioner. Lent & Humphrey, for respondent. Page, McClutchen & Knight, amicus curiæ.

SHAW, J. This is an original proceeding in this court for a writ of mandate. The plaintiff asks a writ to compel the defendant, as judge of the superior court, to make an order appointing a time for the hearing of a petition filed in the superior court to obtain registration of certain lands, as provided in the act of March 17, 1897, entitled "An act for the certification of land titles and the simplification of the transfer of real estate," known as the "Torrens Law." St. 1897, p. 138, c. 110. The defendant refused to make the order, basing his refusal upon the ground that the act above mentioned is unconstitutional and void. The validity of the act is the sole question presented for our consideration.

The object of the act is well stated in the title. It purports to establish a system for the registration of title to land, whereby the official certificate will always show the state of the title and the person in whom it is vested, and to provide that, after the original registration, transfers of the land may be made in the manner prescribed in detail in the act. As a foundation for the system it is necessary to have the title established. To that end a proceeding is authorized whereby such title may be settled and declared by a decree of the superior court. The title, thus established, is to be certified by the county recorder, and the certificate is made conclusive evidence of title in the person therein named as the owner. The principal point urged in opposition to the issuance of the writ is that the proceeding thus provided for is unconstitutional, because, first, it would deprive persons of property without due process of law; second, it would deprive persons of the equal protection of the laws; and, third, it commits to the judicial department of the state functions which are not judicial in character, but purely administrative and executive, contrary to section 1 of article 3 of the state Constitution, prohibiting one department of state from exercising functions belonging to another.

It is necessary to give a brief statement of the essential features of the proceeding to establish and register titles. Any person owning land which he desires to bring within the operation of the act must avail himself of this proceeding. He is required to file in the superior court a verified petition, setting forth his name, occupation, residence, and post office address; whether married or single, and, if married, the name and residence of the husband or wife; the description of the land and a statement of his estate or interest in it; that the land is occupied or unoccupied, as the case may be, and if occupied, the name and post office address of each occupant and the interest or estate such occupant has or claims in the land; the liens and incumbrances thereon and easements therein, with the name and address of the holder thereof, if known; whether or not any other person has or claims any estate or interest of any character in the land, and the name and address, if known, of every such person and the nature of the estate or interest owned or claimed by him; and the names and addresses of all the owners of adjoining lands, so far as the same can be ascertained. The petition must be accompanied by a plat of a survey of the land, made by a county surveyor, or a licensed surveyor, with a verified or certified abstract of title, made by some person or corporation thereunto authorized as specially provided in the act. Section 6. The court must examine and determine, from the abstract of title, whether or not it shows the title to be in the petitioner as alleged, and, if it so determine, it shall thereupon appoint a day for the hearing of the petition. Section 12. Notice of the time and place of the hearing must be given by four weeks' publication in some designated newspaper of general circulation. Notice thereof must also be served in the manner prescribed for service of summons in a civil action, either personal or by publication, as the facts may require, upon all the parties shown by the petition, or by the abstract of title, to be interested, and also upon the husband or wife of the petitioner and upon the owners of the adjoining lands. Section 13. We construe this provision for service of notice to mean that the service to be thus made on these persons must be personal service, except in those cases wherein, under sections 412 and 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure, service may be made by publication, and that service upon such parties by publication must be made upon affidavit and order, as in those sections provided, and for the period and in the manner there required. Upon the hearing, if the court finds in accordance with the petition, it must make and enter a decree that the petitioner is the owner of the land, accurately describing it, attaching thereto a diagram thereof, and setting forth the particulars of the liens, incumbrances, and easements, and an appeal may be taken therefrom as in civil actions. Section 15. The decree, when it becomes final, is made conclusive of the title and estate therein declared and described, against the rights of all persons, known or unknown, whether named in the proceedings or not. Section 17. A certified copy of the decree is to be filed with the county recorder, who is designated as "registrar" for the purposes of the act, and upon it he is to issue a certificate of title to the person named in the decree as owner, and enter a duplicate thereof in a book kept in his office for that purpose. Sections 22, 23. The land thereupon becomes "registered land," and the owner named in the certificate thereupon holds it free from every claim except those noted in the certificate. Subsequent transfers of such "registered land" are to be made and entered in the manner prescribed in the act, and certificates thereof are to be issued by the registrar to the transferee, which shall be conclusive evidence of his title as therein stated. Any person who has been, or would be, defrauded by the decree, and who had no actual notice of the proceeding, may maintain an action to establish his right, against the registered owner, at any time within five years after the first registration.

1. It is conceded, as a matter of course, that there would be no want of due process of law, if the proceedings affected only those persons who are named in the petition, and who, consequently, must be served with notice, either personal or by publication, in the same manner as in the case of a summons in a civil action. The objection in this respect is that the decree, by the terms of the act, will preclude persons who are not named, persons who really own the land, or an interest therein, but who, because of the fact that their claims or their existence, are unknown to the petitioner, are not named in the petition, and who, consequently, will not receive any notice except that afforded by the four weeks' publication required by the act, and who may have no actual knowledge of the proceeding or of the decree. The proceeding is, in all important particulars, of similar character to that provided by the act of 1906, known as the "McEnerney Act." St. 1906, p. 78. In that act it was expressly provided that the proceeding to establish title therein authorized should be had against all persons claiming any interest in, or lien on, the land, whether known or unknown, and that, if the required notices were given and served, the decree should be conclusive and binding upon all persons, whether named or not, although, as to those not named and unknown, the act required no notice except by publication. In the case of Title & Document Restoration Company v. Kerrigan (Cal. Sup.) 88 Pac. 356, that act was attacked as unconstitutional in the same particulars as those here urged against the Torrens law, and it was declared to be valid and constitutional. The reasons for holding that act valid are set forth at length in the elaborate opinion of Justice Sloss, rendered in that case. They are fully applicable to the case now under consideration, and we refer to that opinion for a full answer to the objection that the Torrens law does not provide for due process of law, nor afford to all persons the equal protection of the law. Similar laws have been enacted in Illinois, Minnesota and Massachusetts. These laws were attacked in the Supreme Courts of those states, on similar constitutional grounds, and have been declared valid. These decisions fully support the conclusion that the act in question does not deprive persons of property without due process of law, nor withhold from them the equal protection of law. People v. Simon, 176 Ill. 165, 52 N. E. 910, 44 L. R. A. 801, 68 Am. St. Rep. 175; State v. Westfall, 85 Minn. 437, 89 N. W. 175, 57 L. R. A. 297, 89 Am. St. Rep. 571; Tyler v. Judges, 175 Mass. 71, 55 N. E. 812, 51 L. R. A. 433. The state has full control over the subject of the mode of transferring and establishing titles to property within its limits. For these purposes the state has power to provide a special proceeding, in the nature of a proceeding in rem, to fix the status of the land and declare the nature of the titles and interests therein, and the person or persons in whom such titles and interests are, at the time, vested. It may do this whenever it may be considered necessary, or likely to promote the general welfare. Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 321, 10 Sup. Ct. 557, 33 L. Ed. 918; People v. Simon, supra; Hamilton v. Brown, 161 U. S. 256, 16 Sup. Ct. 585, 40 L. Ed. 691.

2. The proposition that the proceeding is judicial and not administrative, that it is properly a matter for the judicial department, was also fully considered and established in Title, etc., Company v. Kerrigan, supra, and the reasons there given apply here. The claim on behalf of the defendant in this particular seems to be based on the theory that there is or may be no adverse party to the proceeding; that it may be had where there is, in fact, no adverse claim, lien, or incumbrance to or upon the land; and hence that it is not adversary in character. That it may not become adversary in this sense, is, of course, conceded. It would not necessarily follow that the proceeding was not judicial. It needs no citation of authority to establish the proposition that the power of a court to entertain an action does not depend upon the appearance of the defendant and his active opposition to the claims of the plaintiff.

The contention is further made, in this connection, that judicial power can be exercised only to settle existing disputes and controversies, and that, if none exist, the act of merely describing and declaring an undisputed title is necessarily administrative, and cannot be performed by the judicial department. This argument does not fully meet the case. It may be admitted that the existence of controversies which could not be settled by the interested parties, and the necessity of some other means of determining such controversies, were the primal causes for the institution of courts with power to adjudge between the parties to the strife, and, consequently, that, originally, the exercise of judicial power implied the existence of an actual present controversy to be determined. But the refinements of civilized life, and the necessity for the orderly regulation, determination, and protection of human affairs and rights of property, have long required the extension of the judicial power beyond the settlement of controversies which have actually arisen, so as to include the function of providing security against disputes and claims which may arise. Hence, in modern times, the power of the courts may be, and often is, exerted to protect property and rights from possible, though at the time unknown, hostile claims and pretensions, or to merely declare a status or right, and thereby to forestall and prevent controversies which, but for the judicial declaration, might arise in the course of future transactions or proceedings. In the case provided for by the McEnerney act, the total destruction of all the public records and muniments of title had endangered all real property, had exposed land titles to any sort of false claims, and had made it impossible for any landowner to prove or exhibit his title in the usual manner, if he wished to dispose of or mortgage his land, or defend his title in court. It therefore became necessary to provide for the establishment of a new record title. In the case of the Torrens law, the plan for a new method of registering and transferring title made it necessary that the absolute title should first be established and declared. In each case a status or right was to be established, declared, and made conclusive, as the foundation for subsequent proceedings and transactions. This was a sufficient cause for placing the property to be thus affected within the jurisdiction of the court as a res, the ultimate right and title to which could be there adjudicated, after reasonable notice to all possible claimants to appear and assert their claims. Whether or not this is strictly an exercise of judicial power, as originally instituted, it cannot be denied that it is a power of the class which, from time immemorial, has been committed to and exercised by the courts. At the time the Constitution was adopted this class of powers had long been usually exercised by the courts alone. It must be presumed that in providing therein for the division of governmental power into three departments, legislative, executive, and judicial, and declaring that no person charged with the exercise of the powers belonging to one of them should exercise functions appertaining to either of the others, this usual power of the courts was in mind, and that it was intended that the courts should continue to exercise these quasi judicial powers, as they had previously been accustomed to do. A law which merely creates a new occasion and provides a new procedure for the exercise of this power cannot be said to transgress this clause of the Constitution.

Furthermore, in such matters, there is always a possiblity that there may be a hostile claim or dispute as to the right to be established. If it were necessary to find further justification for classing this power as judicial, this circumstance would be sufficient. A hostile claim being possible, there is, in contemplation of law, an adverse claim to be settled, a right to be protected against the possible claimant, for which a judicial decree is the only practicable and effectual remedy.

3. The claim is made, although not argued, that by sections 48, 49, 55, 58, 59, 60, 61, 64, 67 and 68 of the act, the registrar is given judicial powers. These sections require the registrar to note upon the duplicate certificate of title in his office the existence and general character of instruments creating liens, incumbrances, trusts, powers, or leases affecting the land described in the certificate. The point is that the registrar is required to determine the legal effect of these instruments, and that this is a judicial function which can be given only to a judicial officer. There is no force to the objection. Every administrative officer is frequently called upon, in the discharge of his duties, to decide questions of law relating thereto. The recorder is required to determine whether an instrument presented for record is a deed, a mortgage, a lease, a notice of action, or what not, so as to record it in its proper book. The sheriff must often determine, for his own guidance in making a levy, the ownership of property. The clerk must determine the nature and legal effect of papers filed with him, and perform the appropriate duty respecting them. The duties required of the registrar by these sections are of the same nature. His decision in the matter is not conclusive. If he decides wrongfully and refuses to perform the appropriate duty in the premises, he may be compelled to act properly by means of a writ of mandamus, the same as any other ministerial officer who mistakes his duty under the law and refuses to perform it. The exercise of such powers by ministerial officers is a necessary function of the executive department, and, although it may require similar deliberation to that involved in the exercise of judicial power, the bestowal of such powers upon the executive department does not violate the provisions of the Constitution forbidding that department to exercise the functions of any other department. People v. Simon, supra; Owners v. People, 113 Ill. 296; 1 Story on Const. (5th Ed.) § 525.

4. It is claimed that the act is special because it makes special provisions regarding the statute of limitations, the rights of purchasers in good faith of land registered under the act, and other matters peculiar to the lands which are brought within its provisions. We perceive no merit in this contention. The fact that the land thus registered may be conveyed and transferred by means different from that required as to other lands, and the necessity of a special proceeding as a foundation for the system, creates a separate class of such registered lands and authorizes special provisions of law on the subject, applying only to such registered lands, the owners thereof or persons interested therein, or to the procedure whereby the system is to be inaugurated.

5. The claim is also made that the act violates the provision of section 24, art. 4, of the Constitution, that "Every act shall embrace but one subject, which subject shall be expressed in its title." The title of the act is "An act for the certification of land titles and the simplification of the transfer of real estate." St. 1897, p. 138, c. 110. The act makes it a felony to fraudulently procure a false certificate of title under the act, or to fraudulently obtain any false entry thereunder. Sections 111, 112. The county recorder is constituted the registrar, under the act, and required to perform the duties of registrar. Section 1. The official bond of the recorder is made to cover his duties as registrar. Section 2. The registrar is prohibited from practicing law. Section 4. The filing of the petition to establish title operates as a lis pendens. Section 11. The decree is made final and conclusive. Section 17. Liens are not to become effective on registered land until their entry on the duplicate certificate in the recorder's office. Sections 91, 92, 93, 94, and 95. Claims to registered lands cannot be obtained by adverse possession. Section 35. Four weeks' constructive notice is all that is required with respect to persons who are unknown. Section 13. These provisions relate to the subjects of felonies, county officers, county government, principal and surety, attorneys at law, judgments, liens, procedure, and adverse claims, respectively, and it is claimed that the act is void because none of them are mentioned in the title; and it is intimated that, if they were mentioned, the law would be contrary to the mandate of the Constitution that the act shall embrace but one subject. If the first proposition is well taken, it is certain that the second is also established; but the mere statement of the objection is almost sufficient to refute it. While it is true that none of the subjects thus designated are expressed in the title, they are all germane to the general subject there expressed, and, taken together, they compose a part of the general scheme and are appropriate to effect the main object of the law. Further examination would have disclosed a large number of such "subjects" in the body of the act, which are not mentioned in the title. The same criticism might be made of many acts on a general subject which have always been considered as valid. The act establishing the scheme is the appropriate place for provisions necessary to make it effective and symmetrical. If it were necessary to mention every subdivision of the general subject of an act in the title, to the extent here claimed, our statutes would present a somewhat ludicrous appearance. The statement of the subject in the title would generally occupy almost as much space as the act itself. Furthermore, if subjects, as intended by the Constitution, must be so minutely subdivided, it would be impracticable to enact any comprehensive law on any general subject, by reason of the necessity of dividing it into so many separate acts. The provision must receive, and it has received, a more liberal construction. The word "subject" is given a broader meaning. People v. Mullender, 132 Cal. 217, 64 Pac. 299. All the provisions objected to as constituting a different subject are reasonably necessary as means for attaining the object of the act indicated by the subject which is expressed, and hence they are considered as included in the title, as subdivisions of the general subject there stated. People v. Parks, 58 Cal. 636; Ex parte Liddell, 93 Cal. 633, 29 Pac. 251; Hellman v. Schoulters, 114 Cal. 136, 44 Pac. 915, 45 Pac. 1057; People v. Linda Vista Irr. Dist., 128 Cal. 477, 61 Pac. 86; Deyoe v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 476, 488, 74 Pac. 28, 98 Am. St. Rep. 73. We think the title to the act sufficiently expresses the subject to which it relates, and that it embraces but one general subject. We find no sufficient ground for holding the law unconstitutional.

Let the writ of mandate issue as prayed for.

PEOPLE'S HOME SAVINGS BANK v. SHERMAN. (L. A. 1,610.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

1. DISMISSAL AND NONSUIT—INVOLUNTARY DISMISSAL—FAILURE TO PROSECUTE.

In an action by a bank against a stockholder to collect a call for the balance of a subscription, it appeared that the bank continued in business for more than three years after its officers knew of its insolvency, without questioning the validity of the transfer by defendant of his shares to another, to be held in trust for defendant; that after the call was made plaintiff delayed until the last day possible to bring the action, in order to avoid the bar of the statute; that the action was brought in the wrong county, and plaintiff then waited three years before pressing for hearing a motion by defendant to transfer to the proper county, and more than a year after issue joined before taking any steps to bring the case to trial, during which time efforts were being made to adjust the case—a dismissal of the action was no abuse of discretion.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 17, Dismissal and Nonsuit, §§ 104, 140, 141.]

2. SAME—HEARING AND DETERMINATION.

The superior court, in ruling on a motion to dismiss an action for want of diligence in prosecuting the same, might properly consider any facts appearing in the record of the case, whether the same occurred before the action was commenced or afterward.

3. Appeal and Error — Review — Scope of Review.

In reviewing the action of the superior court on a motion to dismiss an action for want of diligence in prosecution thereof, the appellate court may take into consideration all facts appearing in the record of the case, whether the same occurred before the action was commenced or afterward.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; D. K. Trask, Judge.

Action by the People's Home Savings Bank against M. H. Sherman. Appeal by plaintiff from a judgment dismissing the action. Affirmed.

Stratton & Kaufman and F. G. Finlayson, for appellant. John D. Pope, for respondent.

SHAW, J. On April 24, 1906, this cause, and a number of others, which had been decided by the district court of appeal, were transferred to this court for decision. The order was a general one, applying to all the cases, and was made in consequence of the fact that the destruction of the records of this court in San Francisco by the fire of April 18th, of that year, made it impossible for the court to examine a case within the time limited for making such order. In the district court an opinion was rendered, in part as follows: "Appeal from a judgment dismissing the plaintiff's action for want of diligent prosecution. On December 10, 1902, the defendant joined issue in the cause by filing his answer. The motion to dismiss was made December 22, 1903, one year and twelve days after issue joined. It is made to appear from the record that defendant became a stockholder in plaintiff corporation on the 29th of May, 1890, by subscribing for 300 shares of the capital stock of the par value of $100, of which subscription price he paid one-third, agreeing to pay the remaining two-thirds upon call. It further appears that on September 30, 1891, the corporation became insolvent, a fact well known to its directors and to defendant; but, notwithstanding this insolvency, the bank continued to do business until the 9th day of January, 1895, at which date it went into liquidation in accordance with the bank commissioners' act; that on the 30th day of September, 1891, when the bank was so insolvent, defendant transferred his shares of stock to one B. N. Pratt, without consideration, and Pratt thereafter held the stock in trust for defendant; that on September 30, 1895, plaintiff through its board of directors made a call upon the stockholders for the unpaid subscription; and that neither defendant nor Pratt paid the $20,000 unpaid upon the stock so standing in the name of Pratt. It further appears that on the 29th day of September, 1897, the complaint in this proceeding was filed against defendant in the city and county of San Francisco. It does not appear from the record that any summons was ever issued or served; but on the 7th of February, 1899, defendant entered an appearance to said proceeding by general demurrer, and moved for a change of place of trial; that no proceedings were had upon said demurrer or said motion until the 17th day of June, 1902, on which date an order was made transferring the cause to Los Angeles county, the proper county, for trial; that thereafter, on October 3, 1902, the demurrer was overruled, and on December 10, 1902, issue was joined; that during the whole time from the commencement of the action up until September, 1903, persistent effort was being made by plaintiff, through its attorneys and officers, to effect a settlement and adjustment of their alleged claim, on which last-named date the terms of settlement were practically agreed upon by the parties, but never finally consummated, and on December 22, 1903, defendant gave notice of his intention to move for an order dismissing the action for failure of plaintiff to prosecute the same with reasonable diligence. This motion was heard on the 2d day of February, 1904, and granted. The question presented upon this appeal is whether the court abused its discretion in granting such order. Were the length of time between the negotiations for settlement and the granting of the motion alone to be considered, we should have no hesitancy in saying that the short lapse of time would not have justified the action of the court. In all of the cases cited, and of which we have made examination, notably Simmons v. Keller, 50 Cal. 38, and Kornahrens v. His Creditors, 64 Cal. 492, 3 Pac. 126, a much greater time elapsed between the joining of issue and the order of dismissal; and in Kornahrens v. His Creditors, supra, while only nine months had elapsed, there were circumstances taken into consideration in connection therewith which justified the court in its action. An examination of the entire record impresses us with the conviction that the court did not abuse its discretion in dismissing this proceeding under the circumstances of this case. The fact that a banking corporation continued to do business for more than three years after its officers knew of its insolvency, without questioning the validity of the transfer of stock to a third party, that after a call had been made it should delay until the last day possible to bring the action in order to avoid the bar of the statute, and then to bring such action in the wrong county, thereafter to wait three years before pressing for hearing the motion to transfer to the proper county, and more than a year after issue joined before taking any steps to bring the cause to trial, during all of which time constant and repeated efforts were being made to settle and adjust the case, may well have indicated to the trial court that the action was not brought in good faith, nor maintained with a view to having the court pass upon the rights of the parties, but that the process of the court was being used for the purpose of inducing or compelling a compromise and adjustment of a disputed liability. That this court would be warranted in reversing the judgment of the court in this case, a gross abuse of discretion should be made to appear, which, in our opinion, is not disclosed in this record. Allen, J."

Upon a reconsideration of the case, we are satisfied with the foregoing, and adopt it as a part of the opinion of this court. In response to the chief objection made in the petition for transfer to this court, we add the statement that the superior court, in ruling upon the motion to dismiss the action for want of diligence in prosecuting the same, could properly consider any facts appearing in the record of the case and bearing upon the question of diligence and good faith, whether the same occurred before the action was begun or afterwards, and that in reviewing the action of the superior court, and considering whether or not its discretion was properly exercised, the appellate court should also take such circumstances into consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: McFARLAND, J.; HENSHAW, J.; SLOSS, J.; ANGELLOTTI, J.; LORIGAN, J.

KOYER v. WILLMON. (L. A. 1,575.)

(Supreme Court of California. April 2, 1907.)

1. Partnership — Purchase of Land — Contract.

Where plaintiff and defendant agreed to purchase certain real property, including the lot in question, on joint account, and to take the title in the name of S., who should hold it for the joint benefit of plaintiff and defendant, each paying one-half of the price, and each being the owner of an undivided one-half interest therein, the agreement constituted plaintiff and defendant partners in the enterprise.

2. Same—Oral Agreement.

A partnership to buy, hold, and sell lands may be validly formed by parol.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 38, Partnership, § 2.]

3. Trust — Constructive Trust — Partnership Agreement—Breach.

Where plaintiff and defendant were partners in the purchase and sale of certain land for their joint benefit, and defendant improperly purchased the lot in controversy, which was within the partnership agreement, in his own name, and with his own funds, over plaintiff's protest, plaintiff having furnished money for a portion of the expenses, and having agreed to pay his share of the purchase price, defendant held the land as trustee of a constructive trust for the benefit of the firm.

[Ed. Note.—For cases in point, see Cent. Dig. vol. 47, Trusts, §§ 153, 154.]

4. Same—Enforcement—Conditions Precedent—Tender.

Where defendant purchased a lot in controversy in his own name, in violation of an agreement to purchase as the property of a firm of which plaintiff and defendant were members, and refused to recognize plaintiff's interest in the property, plaintiff was not bound to make a formal tender of one-half of the purchase price as a condition precedent to his right to enforce a trust in the property.

5. Partnership — Capacity of Partners — Outside Business.

Where plaintiff and defendant agreed to purchase, hold, and sell certain land on joint account, the fact that plaintiff had a general partner, with whom he was engaged in the real estate business, did not disqualify him from entering into a particular partnership with defendant for the purchase and sale of the land in controversy for their joint benefit.

In Bank. Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; N. P. Conrey, Judge.

Action by A. S. Koyer against J. C. Willmon. From a judgment in favor of defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed and remanded.

Jones & Weller (J. S. Chapman, of counsel), for appellant. O. B. Carter, for respondent.

SHAW, J. Plaintiff began this action to obtain a decree declaring that the defendant holds title to an undivided one-half of a certain lot 14, in block 93, fully described in the complaint, in trust for the plaintiff, for an accounting of the money advanced by the defendant in the purchase thereof, and to compel the defendant, upon payment to him by the plaintiff of the amount advanced on behalf of the plaintiff by him, to convey to plaintiff said one-half interest. The court below granted a nonsuit at the close of the plaintiff's evidence, and rendered judgment thereon in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff appeals.

The evidence is contained in a bill of exceptions. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff and defendant entered into an agreement to purchase certain real property situated in San Pedro, in Los Angeles county, including the said lot 14, and that it was agreed between them that all of said property should be purchased on joint account and title thereto taken by one Lydia B. Shields, who should hold the same for the joint benefit of the plaintiff and defendant; that each should pay one-half of the purchase price therefor, and each should be the owner of an undivided one-half interest therein; that the lands consisted of two parcels, both of which it was agreed were necessary for the purpose for which the lands were to be purchased, one parcel being the said lot 14, and the other the remaining lands. It is further alleged that, in pursuance of the agreement, the plaintiff and defendant purchased the second parcel, and each paid one-half of the price thereof; that the defendant went to San Pedro to buy the lot 14, in pursuance of the agreement; that he did purchase it and paid the price therefor, but that, instead of taking the title in the name of Lydia B. Shields for their joint use, as agreed, the defendant caused the title to be conveyed to himself alone, and thereupon claimed the same as his own property, and has ever since claimed the whole of said lot as his own and asserted that the plaintiff has no interest therein, or in any part thereof. It is also averred that the plaintiff has at all times been ready, able, and willing to repay to the defendant the one-half of the money expended by the defendant in buying said lot, that he tendered the same to the defendant before suit, and that plaintiff offers to deposit the same in court, upon the conveyance to him of an undivided one-half of the lot.

The effect of the agreement alleged was to make the plaintiff and defendant partners in the enterprise of buying and holding the property which was the subject of the agreement. It is not alleged that the agreement was in writing, and the evidence shows that it was made by parol, and not in writing. It is settled by the decisions in this state that a partnership for the purpose of buying, holding, and selling lands may be formed by an agreement resting in parol, only, and that such parol agreement is valid.
